[19] Ver. 33. Be of good comfort, I have overcome the world.] Being prepared to suffer that death, by which I am to be freed from all the injuries of the world, and to be crowned with glory, and you shall also do it by faith in me, which is your victory over the world, (1 John v. 4, 5.) and by my strength, which shall enable you to do all things, (Phil. iv. 13.) of which you cannot doubt after so many tokens of my love. (Rom. viii. 35—37.)

CHAP. XVII.

1. THESE words spake Jesus, and lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, Father, the hour is come (that my work on earth by my sufferings now instant should be finished, ver. 4.) [1] glorify (now) thy Son (by his advancement to the right hand of majesty and power), that thy Son also may glorify thee, (by propagating the knowledge of thee and of thy gospel through the world. See Examen Millii.)

2. [2] As thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him (so instate him in that kingdom in which he shall exercise that power in bringing many to the faith, and so fitting them for life eternal).

3. And this is (the true way) to life eternal, that they may [3] know thee (to be) the only true God (in opposition to those false gods they now ignorantly worship), and (may know and believe in) Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent (to reveal this life to them).

4. I have glorified thee on the earth (by declaring thy will to the Jews): I have finished the work (the prophetical office) which thou gavest me to do (on earth).

5. And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self (by exalting even my human nature to the right hand of glory, and crowning me) with [4] that glory which (as to my Divine nature) I had with thee before the world was.

6. I have manifested thy name (and doctrine) to [5] the men which thou gavest me out of the world: thine they were (by faith in thee before), and thou gavest them me (by causing them to believe in me); and they have kept thy word.

7. [6] Now they have (fully) known that all things whatsoever thou hast given (i. e. authorized) me (to do or say), are of thee (i. e. were indeed thy words and works):

* Οὐδενὶ τῶν γενητῶν προσευκτέον ἐστὶν, οὐδὲ αὐτῷ τῷ Χριστῷ, ἀλλὰ τῷ Θεῷ τῶν ὅλων καὶ πατρὶ, περὶ εὐχῆς, p. 48.

8. For I have given (i. e. declared) to them the words, which thou gavest (in commission to) me (to speak); and they have received them (as thine), and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didst send me.

9. I pray for them: [7] I pray not (in this address) for the world, but for them which thou hast (already) given me (out of it), for they are mine (having thee for their Father).

10. And all mine are thine (thy children), and thine are mine (having me for their teacher and guide); and I am glorified in them (by the miracles done by them in my name, and by the converts they make to the Christian faith).

11. And now I am no more in the world, [8] but these (my apostles) are (to continue) in the world, and I (am to) come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine [9] own name (or power) those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one as we are (by the participation of the Spirit. See Examen Millii.)

12. While I was with them in the world, I have kept them in thy name: (and by thy power imparted to me,) those that thou gavest me, I have kept, and [10] none of them is lost (hath perished, or fallen off from me), but the son of perdition (and this it was thy pleasure to permit); that the Scriptures might be fulfilled. (See Examen Millii.)

13. And now come I to thee; and these things I speak (in their audience, while I am) in the world, [11] that they might have my joy (the joy which I have promised them, xv. 11.) fulfilled in themselves (by the presence of the Spirit, whose fruits are joy and peace).

14. I have given (i. e. taught) them thy word; and the [12] world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. (See xv. 18, 19.)

15. I pray thee not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou wouldest keep them [13] from the evil (of the world.

16. And thus I pray, because) they are not of the world (and so will certainly be hated by it), even as (I have been, because) I am not of the world.

17. Sanctify [14] them through (Gr. in, or for the propagation of) thy truth (by sending the Holy Ghost upon them): thy word (they are to preach to the world) is (the) truth.

18. As thou hast sent me into the world (to deliver thy mind to it), even so have I also sent them into the world (on the same errand: see note on xx. 21.)

19. And [15] for their sakes I sanctify (i. e. offer up) myself (a piacular victim), that they also (being justified through faith in me) might be sanctified through (Gr. in or for) the truth. (See ver. 17.)

20. Neither pray I for [16] these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word;

21. [17] That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us (by the participation of that Spirit which is in me): that the world (by the powerful operations of this Spirit in them) may (be induced to) believe that thou hast sent me.

22. And [18] the glory which thou gavest me (i. e. the power of doing miracles by the Spirit of God), I have given them; that they may be one, as we are one: (ver. 21.)

23. I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one (spirit, working in them as it did in me); and that (so) the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me.

24. Father, [19] I will that they also whom thou hast given me (when they have finished their course on earth) be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me: for (because) thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world.

25. O righteous Father, (the men of) the world have not known thee: but I have known thee, and these have known that thou hast sent me.

26. And I have declared to them thy name, and (farther) will declare it (by the illuminations of the Holy Spirit): that (so) [20] the love wherewith thou hast loved me (which moved thee to give the Holy Spirit without measure to me, John iii. 34, 35.) might be in them, and I in them (by the same Spirit).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVII.

[1] Ver. 1. GLORIFY thy Son.] Not only by his advancement to a state of glory, but by such wonders attending his sufferings, and such a glorious resurrection, as may entirely remove the scandal of the cross. In answer to which request, some were forced, even by what they saw at his death, to say, Surely this man was the Son of God; and others, who had clamoured for his death, to smite their breasts; and God soon after declared, that he had made him Lord and Christ, a Prince and Saviour. (Acts ii. 36.)

[2] Ver. 2. Καθὼς ἔδωκας, As thou hast given him power over all flesh.] In destination and promise only, say most interpreters. But since the Baptist said δέδωκεν, he hath given all things into his hands, (iii. 35.) seeing the evangelist saith the same, xiii. 3. seeing Christ himself saith, the Father δέδωκε he hath given all judgment to the Son, (v. 22.) and promiseth to raise the dead, because ἔδωκε, he had given him power to judge all men, and Christ himself saith not, Matt. xxviii. 18. all power is now given me, but ἐδόθη, hath been given me in heaven and in earth; I see no reason for this restriction or limitation of the word; only it may be granted, that as he only exercised this power upon earth, whilst he was in it, so was he to exercise it from heaven more fully after his resurrection.

[3] Ver. 3. To know thee, τὸν μόνον ἀληθινὸν Θεὸν, the only true God, and him whom thou hast sent, Jesus Christ.] i. e. That the gentiles, quitting their dumb idols and false gods, may own thee alone to be the living, (1 Thess. i. 9.) and true God, who madest heaven and earth, (Acts xiv. 15.) and that the Jews may own me to be thy Son sent to them from heaven, and that Messiah, which, according to thy promise made to Abraham and David, thou hast sent to them; for by knowing thee fully, they will know me also, whom all men are to worship as they worship the Father, and whom he that doth not worship, doth not truly honour the Father: (v. 23.) for I and the Father are one; (x. 30.) whom no man knoweth who he is, but the Father, and he to whom the Father will reveal him; (Luke x. 22.) whom he that denies hath not the Father; (1 John ii. 23.) doth not know him, and he that seeth, sees the Father also, (xiv. 9. xv. 21. xvi. 3.)

Obj. Here the Socinians say, that these words plainly prove that the Father alone is the true God, and that by the words μόνον τὸν ἀληθινὸν, the only true God, Christ must be excluded from being true God, since otherwise the Father would not be only so. But to this we answer,

Ans. 1. That these words cannot be reasonably supposed to exclude him from a true Divinity, who is in Scripture styled ὁ ἀληθινὸς Θεὸς, the true God: now that Christ is so styled, see the note on 1 John v. 20. True therefore is the gloss of Grotius, that he is styled the only true God, in exclusion of those, " quos falsa gentium persuasio introduxerat," whom the false persuasion of the gentiles had introduced; not so as to exclude the other persons, but κατ' ἀντιδιαστολὴν τῆς πολυθείας, in opposition to polytheism; as Epiphanius,* or εἰς ἀναίρεσιν τῶν μὴ πεφυκότων εἶναι ἀληθινῶν, for the removal of those which by nature are not true gods, as Athanasius saith.† Hence the Pseudo-Ignatius‡ observes, that the evangelists saying, the Father is the only true God, did not omit what belonged to our Lord, but premised this saying, In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was God. And in this sense the word only is frequently applied to God in the Old Testament: so Deut. xxxii. 12. Κύριος μόνος, the Lord only was their guide, and there was no Θεὸς ἀλλότριος, false God with them, and yet the angel in whom his name was, (Exod. xxiii. 21.) went with them; the angel of his presence saved them, (Isa. lxviii. 9.) and was the captain of their host: (Josh. v. 14.) so also Isa. xliii. 11. I am the Lord, and there is no Saviour besides me; and ver. 12. I am the Lord your God, and there is no ἀλλότριος, strange God with me: (see Judg. x. 16. 1 Sam. vii. 3. Psal. lxxxi. 9.) see also the word solus, so used by Irenæus often; as when he saith of the Maker of the world, that he is solus Deus,§ and solus Dominus, and solus Conditor, and solus Pater, and solus continens omnia, and yet puts into the symbol of faith owned by all Christians, that Christ‖ is ὁ Κύριος ἡμῶν καὶ Θεὸς. (See the note on 1 Cor. viii. 3.)

Woltzogenius saith, this place proves Christ is not God in the most perfect sense, in which he is to be understood to be God, " qui est auctor et origo omnis Deitatis, et qui Deitatem à seipso habet, non ab alio," who is the author and original of the whole Deity, and who hath his Divinity from himself, and not from another: and if this be all they contend for, we, who believe that Christ is God of God, may grant this, and yet maintain that he is God, not by title only, as angels and magistrates are styled Elohim, but by communication of the Divine nature, as being the true God, and having the name of God distributively given, and the Divine attributes ascribed to him only; i. e. in opposition to them who are only called gods, but are not by nature so.

2. We answer, that the exclusive particle only, is not in construction to be joined with the true God thus, to know thee only to be the true God: for the words run not thus, σὲ μόνον τὸν ἀληθινὸν Θεὸν· but thus, σὲ τὸν μόνον ἀληθινὸν Θεὸν, who only art true, or the God who alone art true; and whereas against this Crellius objects, that the word ἀληθινὸς, being an adjective, cannot be here the predicate; this is confuted by many instances in this Gospel; for φῶς τὸ ἀληθινὸν is the light which is truly so, i. 9. and so is the true bread, vi. 32. and the true vine, xv. 1. it being manifest that in all these places, true is the attribute, or the thing predicated, of light, bread, the vine.

And whereas they urge farther, that the word solus, only, added to it, excludes all other things from any communion with that of which it is predicated, and so imports, that the Father alone is a true God; this assertion may be confuted from many instances both of the Old and the New Testament. As when Jacob says of Benjamin he is left alone, (Gen. xlii. 38.) viz. in respect of Joseph, not of his ten brethren; and of Christ, that he was left alone, viz. in respect of the multitude, when yet his disciples were with him, (Luke ix. 18. 36. John viii. 10.) and when he saith, Ye shall leave me alone: and yet I am not alone, for the Father is with me, (xvi. 32.) But to proceed to instances more apposite, we read of the blessed and only Potentate, King of kings, and Lord of lords, ὁ μόνος ἔχων ἀθανασίαν, who only hath immortality. (1 Tim. vi. 15, 16.) Now if this be said of God the Father, as the Socinians must assert, or allow Christ to be truly God, yet must they allow that Christ, who is styled King of kings, and Lord of lords, by reason of his powerful victories over the enemies of his church, (Rev. xvii. 14. xix. 15, 16.) is also δυνάστης, a Potentate; that he who hath life in himself, and of whose kingdom there shall be no end, (John v. 26. Luke i. 33.) hath also immortality; and he who is exalted to God's right hand, dwells also in light inaccessible: they therefore must allow that neither the word only, before Potentate, nor before immortality, excludes Christ from a communion in those attributes. Solomon saith of God, i. e. according to the Socinians, of the Father, (1 Kings viii. 39.) σὺ μονώτατος, thou only knowest the hearts of all men; and yet Christ saith, that all the church shall know, that he is the searcher of the hearts and reins, viz. of all men, that being necessary, that, as it follows, he might give to all men according to their works: (Rev. ii. 23.) and St. Jude speaks of some wicked men, who denied τὸν μόνον Δεσπότην, Θεὸν, καὶ Κύριον ἡμῶν, our only Master, God, and Lord, (ver. 4.) If they say this is meant of Christ, as probably it is, all these words being put by apposition with one only article prefixed, and the same persons being by St. Peter said to deny the Lord that bought them, (2 Pet. ii. 1.) surely they will not say, these words exclude the Father from being our Master, God, and Lord; or if they do interpret them of God the Father, they cannot deny, against express Scripture, that Christ is our Lord and Master. (See John xiii. 13, 14. 1 Cor. viii. 6. Eph. iv. 5.) All these instances therefore shewing the falsehood of that assertion, do also shew the weakness of the Socinians' arguments from these words against the Deity of Christ, and of the Holy Ghost.

[4] Ver. 5. And now, Father, glorify me with the glory which I had with thee before the world was.] Having shewed in the note on Phil. ii. 6. that Christ had a glory with God the Father, before he took upon him our nature; that, when he did so, he laid aside this glory, and took upon him the form of a servant, and that after his ascension he resumed this glory, and appeared in it, and says, that he will come hereafter, sometimes, in the glory of the Father, as Matt. xvi. 27. sometimes, in his own glory, Matt. xxv. 31. and sometimes, in the glory of both, Luke ix. 26. this glory he now desires to be given him, not only as the Word, as it was before, but as the Word made flesh also: and therefore Theophylact gives the sense thus, τὴν ἀνθρωπίνην μου φύσιν ἄγαγε εἰς τὴν δόξαν ἣν εἶχον παρὰ σοὶ ἐγὼ Λόγος, bring my human nature into a participation of the glory which I the Λόγος had with thee before the beginning of the world. But this plain and obvious exposition of the words demonstrating his Divinity, as I have shewed in the note recited, the Socinians will not admit of, and therefore say that he requests that the glory which he had before in the appoint- ment, or designation of the Father only to it hereafter, he might now actually enjoy; and Grotius joins with them in this exposition. But,

First, It seems unreasonable to say absolutely he had any thing before he had a being to have, supposing a subject in which that is contained which he is said to have. The first place cited by Grotius as parallel, viz. that Christ was foreknown before the foundation of the world, (1 Pet. i. 2.) is plainly impertinent, there being no hint in the words of Christ here of any such foreknowledge, but a plain assertion that he had this glory before the foundation of the world. So are the words cited from Eph. i. 4. He hath elected us in Christ before the foundation of the world, to be holy: for the apostle saith not, as Christ doth of his glory, that we had any holiness before the foundation of the world, but only that we were chose to it. His third instance, from Rev. xiii. 8. where we read thus, Whose names were not written in the book of life, of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, seems only pertinent, because it is ill translated; for that the true translation should be thus, Whose names were not written from the foundation of the world, (i. e. were not written) in the book of life of the Lamb slain, is evident from xvii. 8. where we read thus, Whose names are not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world. And, lastly, the citation from 2 Tim. i. 9. He hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, according to his own purpose, and grace given to us in Christ Jesus, before all ages, seems only to be pertinent on the same account; translate the words thus, According to his own purpose before all ages, and the grace given us in Jesus Christ; and there is in them no appearance of any likeness to Christ's words: and this translation is sufficiently confirmed from the parallel places, Tit. i. 2, 3. Eph. i. 3, 4.

Secondly, Christ here saith, Glorify me with the glory which I had παρὰ σοὶ, with thee; now that phrase signifies as much as with thee, or in thy presence, in the perpetual use of Scripture. So Numb. xxii. 9. Who are the men that are παρὰ σοὶ, with thee? 1 Sam. xxii. 3. Let my father and mother be παρὰ σοὶ, with thee: now he that hath no being cannot, without the greatest catachresis, be said to be with another. And, lastly, Christ speaks of a glory, which the Father had given him, because he loved him before the foundation of the world: now sure it is improper to say any thing is beloved when it is nothing; or, when it hath no being.

[5] Ver. 6. I have manifested thy name to those whom thou hast given me out of the world.] i. e. To my disciples, whom thou hast given to me, by causing them to believe in me; I have by my doctrine taught them, and by my miracles, done before their eyes, given them the clearest prospect of thy power, wisdom, holiness, and goodness.

[6] Ver. 7. Now they have known,] By my Divine doctrine and miracles, which they have heard and seen, that I derived both from thee.

[7] Ver. 9. I pray not for the world.] These things which follow respecting only my apostles, which are to preach my gospel to all nations, I request not for that world, which hath no knowledge of me. They who hence argue, that Christ died not for the world, nor sought the salvation of it, but of some few persons in it, because he here prays not for it, must be mistaken; for,

First, They plainly contradict both Christ and his apostles, for Christ saith, he came not to condemn the world, but that it might be saved, John xii. 47. that God sent his Son into the world, that the world, through him, might be saved, iii. 17. Hence this evangelist assures us, he was the propitiation for the sins of the whole world, 1 John ii. 2. and others of them, that he came to seek and to save that which was lost, as doubtless all the world was. (Matt. xviii. 11.)

Secondly, They vainly argue, that Christ never prayed for the world, because he saith here, I do not do it now, which is arguing against plain matter of fact: for how oft doth he say to the Jews, Ye are of the world, (John viii. 23.) and of his apostles chosen out of them, that they were called out of the world? as here, ver. 6. 14. 16. and yet he saith to them, Luke xix. 42. εἰ ἔγνως, How do I wish that thou hadst known, in this thy day, the things which belong to thy peace! And, hanging on the cross, he said, Father, forgive them, Luke xxiii. 34. making intercession for those transgressors, Isa. liii. 12. He therefore saith, that, in this address, he prayed not for them, because he was asking those things which could not agree to them, but to his apostles only, or to those whom God had given him out of the world; viz. that they might be consecrated to their apostolical functions or by that Spirit which the world could not receive, John xiv. 17. that their joy, from his presence with them, might be full; nor is there any thing in this whole prayer which is not proper to believers only. And,

Thirdly, This very prayer for them is made for the sake of the world, and with respect to their saving faith; i. e. for them who should believe through his word, ver. 20. that the world might believe and know that the Father hath sent him, ver. 23. So that he prayed for his apostles for this very end, that the world by their means might believe, and believing might have life through his name: it is therefore plain he made this prayer, in which he saith, I pray not for the world, out of affection to the world, and with this design, that the preaching of the apostles to them might be more effectual for their conversion and salvation.

[8] Ver. 11. Καὶ οὗτοι, But they are in the world.] Καὶ here signifies but, as Gen. xxxi. 7. Exod. i. 17. vii. 12. Numb. iv. 20. v. 28. Deut. i. 43. iii. 7. iv. 9. viii. 18. Josh. i. 8. 1 Sam. i. 13. Psal. iv. 3. Matt. i. 25. xi. 17. xii. 39. xvii. 12. John v. 40.

[9] Keep them in thy name.] i. e. By thy power; so name is used, 1 Sam. xvii. 45. 2 Chron. xiv. 11. Psal. xliv. 5. lxxxix. 24. Matt. vii. 22. Acts iv. 7.

Οὓς ἔδωκάς μοι; see Examen Millii in locum.

[10] Ver. 12. And none of them is lost.] i. e. Either by temporal death, (xviii. 9.) or by falling off from me, but ὁ υἱὸς τῆς ἀπωλείας, the son of perdition, i. e. Judas, worthy of perdition. So a son of death is one worthy of it, 2 Sam. xii. 5. and ἔθνος ἀπωλείας is a nation fit to be destroyed, Ecclus. xvi. 9. (See Matt. xxiii. 15. and the note on Eph. ii. 3.)

[11] Ver. 13. That they may have my joy fulfilled in them.] i. e. That the joy they had hitherto from my love to them, (v. 11.) my presence with them, and care of them, may, in my absence, be increased by the presence of that Spirit with them, who will supply my bodily absence, (xvi. 7.) and whose fruits are joy and peace; (Gal. v. 22.) yea, by whom I, though absent in body, am still present with them, (xiv. 11.)

of thy protection and assistance is needful to them, who will be certainly exposed to great hatred from the world; and fit to be granted by thee, seeing they will be thus hated for preaching thy word to the world.

[13] Ver. 15. But that thou shouldest keep them ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ from the evil.] i. e. From the evil men of the world, and from Satan, the prince of the world, who by their means endeavours, by fiery persecutions, to suppress the truth, and destroy or discourage the preachers of it; whence their persecutions are ascribed not to them but to Satan, Luke xxii. 31. 1 Thess. ii. 18. iii. 5. Rev. ii. 10. From the eleventh to the sixteenth verse we learn, how necessary Divine aid is to our preservation and success, even in pious enterprises, and so how necessary it is to seek it by fervent prayer; and also from our Saviour's affection to them, care of them, and prayer for them, how certain they who sincerely devote themselves to his service may be of his aid in it, and his protection while they are so employed.

[14] Ver. 17. Ἁγίαζον, &c. Sanctify them by thy truth.] i. e. Consecrate and set them apart, for the propagation of thy truth. Now this sanctification to the priesthood under the old testament, was made, first, with a sacrifice offered for them. So Moses receives a command, ἁγιάζειν, to sanctify the priests, ὥστε ἱερατεύειν μοι αὐτούς, that they might serve or offer to God, by the oblation of a bullock or a ram, Exod. xxix. 1. and thus Christ sanctified his apostles by offering up himself for them, ver. 19. Secondly, By anointing them with holy oil; (ver. 7.) and in this sense, Christ desires here the Father to sanctify them to their office, by the descent of the Holy Spirit, styled, the oil of gladness, and the promise of the Father, on them, and by whose assistance they became able ministers of the new testament, (2 Cor. iii. 6.) which before they were not; and are therefore bid not to begin their preaching to the world, till this Spirit from on high was come upon them. (Luke xxiv. 49. Acts i. 8.)

[15] Ver. 19. Καὶ ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν, And for them I sanctify myself.] i. e. I offer up myself to be slain, as a piacular victim, as Chrysostom saith here; in which sense, the word ἁγιάζειν is often used, as I have shewed, note on Heb. ii. 11. Nor do these words admit of the sense which some give them, thus, For their sakes I shall, by my resurrection, shew myself to be the Holy One; for, as that is not to sanctify himself, so neither was it so needful for their sakes, who believed this already, saith our Lord, ver. 7, 8.

[16] Ver. 20. Neither pray I for these alone, but for them that shall believe, &c.] As Christ (ver. 17.) had prayed for his apostles, that they might be filled with the Spirit, so here he asks the same thing for those that should believe through their word, that they also might be replenished with the gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to the prediction of the Baptist, Matt. iii. 11. and his own promise, vii. 38, 39. and as it after came to pass. That these words, viz. That they may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee; are to be interpreted not of a union of concord, but by the participation of the Spirit, of the Father, and the Son, is proved; see note on xiv. 20. Add that Christ declares, he did his miracles by the Holy Spirit, (Matt. xii. 28.) that the Spirit was given to him without measure, (iii. 34.) that thereby he was anointed to preach the gospel. (Luke iv. 18, 19.) Christ also says, that the Father, abiding in him, did these miracles, (xiv. 10.) and that the Jews, by the doctrine thus preached, by virtue of this unction, and the miracles thus done by the Spirit of God, might and ought to know, that the Father was in him, and he in the Father: (x. 38.) and he promises, that they who believed in him should do greater works than he had done, because, going to the Father, he would send the Holy Spirit to them to abide ever with them; (xiv. 12. 16—18.) and then adds, that in that day they should know that I am in the Father, and you in me, and I in you, (ver. 20.) All which things prove, that the Father was in Christ, and he in him; not only by the union of the Divine nature with the human, but by union of the same Spirit also residing in him; and consequently the union of believers with them both must be by the same Spirit: whence it is said, that he that is joined to the Lord, is ἓν πνεῦμα, one spirit with him, 1 Cor. vi. 17. that their bodies are made the temples of the Holy Ghost, ver. 19. and they are a habitation of God through the Spirit, Eph. ii. 2. This farther will appear from the end of this union, which is, saith Christ, that the world may believe and know that thou hast sent me: for this the apostles testified, and made known to the world, not by their concord, but by virtue of that Spirit with which they were endowed from on high, and which God gave to them that believe: (Acts v. 32.) and this interpretation we may learn from the words of Irenæus,* to the same effect. This also will be still more evident from the words following.

[17] Ver. 21. Ἵνα πάντες ἓν ὦσι, That all may be one.] Origen here saith, the apostles and the prophets shall then know the Father, ὅταν γένωνται ἕν, ὡς υἱὸς καὶ πατὴρ ἓν εἶσιν, when they are become one, as the Son and Father are one, which he thus explains in his commentary on these words, Rom. v. 5. The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts, by the Spirit that he hath given us; "ut per istud spiritus sancti donum compleatur ille sermo quem Dominus dixit, sicut tu pater in me, et ego in te, et isti in nobis unum sint, Divinæ scilicet naturæ participes effecti in abundantia charitatis per Spiritum Sanctum ministratæ;" That by this gift might be fulfilled that saying of the Lord, That they may be one in us, as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, being made partakers of the Divine nature, in the abundance of love ministered to them by the Holy Spirit: and in this sense the fathers often say, that at the resurrection we shall be Θεοποιούμενοι, as being then completely made partakers of the Divine nature, by the Spirit of God, then more fully dwelling in us, and so God will be all in all in his glorified saints.

[18] Ver. 22. And I have given them the glory which thou gavest me, &c.] By this glory we are to understand Christ's power of working miracles; which power was given to the apostles, and those who believed through their preaching, by virtue of the Holy Spirit, which came down upon them: for, by the power of this Spirit, Christ wrought his miracles, and so manifested τὴν δόξαν αὐτοῦ, his glory, chap. ii. And the administration of the gospel is upon this account said to be ἐν δόξῃ, in or with glory, 2 Cor. iii. 7. 11. and the apostles are said to have seen the glory of the Lord, and to have been transformed into the likeness of it, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord, ver. 18. (See the note there.) This glory Christ is here said to have given his apostles, not only that they might be one with the Father and the Son, but also that the world might know the Father had loved them, as he had loved Christ, whom he had so loved as to give the Spirit without measure to him.

[19] Ver. 24. I will that those whom thou hast given me, may be with me, &c.] i. e. I will that they may be received up after the resurrection into heaven, as I was; for it seems probable, that none of the saints, no, not the apostles, are to be received into the supreme heaven, to enjoy the beatific vision, before that time. (See note on xiv. 3.)

[20] Ver. 26. That the love wherewith thou hast loved me, may be in them.] i. e. That thou mayest love them, as being thy sons by adoption, so as to make them partakers of an eternal inheritance, (Rom. viii. 17.) and so as to fill them with thy Spirit, (Gal. iv. 6.) and, raising them from the dead, mayest crown them with eternal glory.

CHAP. XVIII.

1. WHEN Jesus had spoken these words, he [1] went forth (of the city) with his disciples, (and went) over the brook Cedron, where was a garden, into which he entered, and his disciples.

2. And Judas also, which betrayed him, knew the place: for Jesus ofttimes resorted thither with his disciples.

3. Judas then, having received a band of men and officers from the chief priests and pharisees, cometh thither (it being night) with lanterns, and torches, and weapons (to apprehend him).

4. Jesus therefore, [2] knowing all things which should come upon him, went forth, and said to them, Whom seek ye?

5. They answered him, (We seek) Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus saith to them, I am he. And Judas also, who betrayed him, stood with them (when he said this).

6. As soon then as he had said to them, I am he, they went backward, and fell to the ground.

7. Then (when they were risen up) asked he them again, Whom seek ye? And they said, Jesus of Nazareth.

8. Jesus answered, I have told you that I am he: if therefore ye seek me (only), let these (my disciples) go their way.

9. (And this he said) [3] that the saying might be fulfilled, which he spake, Of them (apostles) which thou hast given me, have I lost none (i. e. I have suffered none to perish).

10. Then Simon Peter having a sword drew it, and smote the high-priest's servant, and cut off his right ear. (And) the servant's name was Malchus.

11. Then said Jesus to Peter, [4] Put up thy sword into the sheath: (for) the cup which my Father hath given me (to drink), shall I not drink it?

12. Then [5] the band, and the captain, and officers of the Jews, took Jesus, and bound him,

13. And led him away to [6] Annas first; for he was father-in-law to Caiaphas, which (Caiaphas) was the high-priest that same year (that Jesus was crucified).

14. Now Caiaphas was he (Gr. and it was that Caiaphas) which gave counsel to the Jews, that it was expedient that one man should die (Gr. perish) for the (preservation of the) people.

15. And Simon Peter followed Jesus, and [7] (so did) another disciple: that disciple was known to the high-priest, and went in with Jesus into the palace of the high-priest.

16. But Peter stood at the door without. Then went out that other disciple, which was known to the high-priest, and spake to her that kept the door, and brought in Peter.

17. Then said the damsel that kept the door to Peter, Art not thou also one of this man's disciples? He saith, I am not.

18. And the servants and officers stood there, who had made a fire of coals; for it [8] was cold: and they warmed themselves: and Peter stood with them, and warmed himself.

19. The high-priest then (Annas having sent Jesus to him) asked Jesus of his disciples, and of his doctrine.

20. Jesus answered him, I spake (my doctrine) openly to the world; I ever taught (it) in [9] the synagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing.

21. Why (then) askest thou me (of my doctrine)? ask (rather) them which heard me, what I have said to them: behold, they know what I said.

22. And when he had thus spoken, one of the officers which stood by struck Jesus (on the cheek) with the palm of his hand, saying, Answerest thou the high-priest so (rudely)?

23. Jesus answered him, If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil: but if (I have said) well, [10] why smitest thou me?

24. (This he said to him,) now (that) Annas [11] had sent him bound to Caiaphas the high-priest.

25. And Simon Peter stood and warmed himself (with the servants). They said therefore to him, (see note on Matt. xxvi. 69.) Art not thou also one of his disciples? He denied it, and said, I am not.

26. One of the servants of the high-priest, being his kinsman whose ear Peter cut off, saith, Did not I see thee in the garden with him?

27. Peter then denied (it) again: and immediately the cock crew.

28. Then led they Jesus from Caiaphas to the hall of judgment: and it was early; and (but) they [12] themselves went not into the judgment-hall (among the heathens), lest they should be defiled (by them); but (stayed without) that they might eat the passover (i. e. the other paschal offerings, clean and undefiled).

29. Pilate then went out to them, and said, What accusation bring you against this man?

30. They answered and said to him, If he were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered him up to thee.

31. Then said Pilate to them, Take ye him, and judge him according to your law. The Jews therefore said to him, [13] It is not lawful for us to put any man to death: (and this they said not, that they might not have done this after such licence given, but)

32. That the saying of Jesus might be fulfilled, which he spake, signifying what death he should die (viz. by being lifted up upon the cross).

33. Then Pilate entered into the judgment-hall again, and called Jesus, and said to him, Art thou the King of the Jews?

34. Jesus answered him, Sayest thou this thing (makest thou this inquiry) of thyself, (from a desire to know the truth?) or (because) others did tell it thee of me? (laying it to my charge as a crime, that I profess myself Messiah their King.)

35. Pilate answered, Am I a Jew, (that I should ask this for my own satisfaction? The men of) thine own nation and the chief priests have delivered thee to me: what hast thou done (to incense them thus against thee, and cause them to lay this crime to thy charge)?

36. Jesus answered, (True it is that I am a king; but) [14] my kingdom is not of this world, (nor to be propagated by force of arms: for) if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews; but now (this being not done, it appears that) my kingdom is not from hence.

37. Pilate therefore said to him, Art thou a king then? Jesus answered, Thou sayest that (which is true, for) I am a king. To this end was [15] I born, (that I might reign over the house of Jacob for ever, Luke i. 33.) and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness to the truth. Every one that is (a lover and believer) of the truth, heareth my voice.

38. Pilate said to him, What is truth? And when he had said this, he went out again to the Jews, and saith to them, I find in him no fault at all.

39. But ye have a custom, that I should release to you one at the Passover: will ye therefore that I (should) release to you the King of the Jews?

40. Then cried they all again, saying, (Release to us) not this man, but Barabbas. Now Barabbas was a robber.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVIII.

[1] Ver. 1. ΕΞΗΛΘΕ, He went out with his disciples.] Not only out of the chamber where he supped with them, for that he did when he said, Arise, let us go hence, (xiv. 31.) but out of the city; the gates, in such a time of peace, and of such a congress to the Passover, as the city could not well contain, being not shut. The evangelist adds, that he went over the brook Cedron to a place where was a garden; that, as the sin of the first Adam, which brought destruction upon his posterity, was committed in a garden, so that salutary passion of the second Adam, which was to rescue us from that destruction, might begin in the like place: so the fathers. Into this garden he went with the eleven disciples; though going farther into it, to his agony, he took with him only Peter, James, and John. (Matt. xxvi. 37.)

[2] Ver. 4. Jesus therefore knowing all things that were to come upon him.] This the apostle notes, to shew, that Christ fell not into the hands of the Jews, for want either of power, as he shews, ver. 6. by striking them all to the ground with a word that came to apprehend him, the providence of God not suffering him to die without these marks of a Divine majesty and power; or, for want of wisdom, to foresee their machinations against him; but as freely giving up himself to the death for the welfare of mankind. Vain therefore is the saying of Celsus,* that a wise man, had he foreseen the danger, would have avoided it, if he could do it: for, if kings and captains have given up themselves freely to death, and the utmost perils, for the temporary safety of their country, much more might our blessed Lord do this for the salvation of the whole world.

[3] Ver. 9. Ἵνα πληρωθῇ ὁ λόγος, &c. That the saying might be fulfilled, which he spake, Of those which thou hast given me have I lost none.] That this saying could not relate to the eternal state of Judas, or our Lord's apostles, appears, (1.) from the precedent words, Let then those go away; for, saith the evangelist, these very words were spoken, that the saying of Christ, xvii. 12. might be fulfilled; and yet Christ's desire that they might quietly be dismissed, was designed only to secure their temporal preservation. (2.) From the words themselves recorded, xvii. 12. Of those that thou hast given me, I have lost none but the son of perdition, that the Scripture might be fulfilled, viz. Psal. cix. 8. Now this Scripture St. Peter interprets of the temporal death of Judas, Acts i. 16. 20. It is no objection against this interpretation, that the apostles were not always preserved from a violent death, most of them being taken away by martyrdom: for this our Lord could not intend, since he himself had told them, before he spake these words, that some of them should be put to death, and some should drink of his cup; (Matt. xx. 23. xxiv. 9.) but only that he being present with them had thus lost none of them; and hence he prays, that in his absence his Father would thus keep them: and accordingly the apostle testifies, that when they were engaged in their apostolical function, they were wonderfully preserved by the Divine providence, insomuch that even this was a testimony of the life and power of Jesus, (2 Cor. i. 10. iv. 10, 11. xiii. 4.) and especially they were so preserved, that none of them fell from their apostolic office, as Judas did. (Acts i. 25.)

[4] Ver. 11. Put up thy sword into the sheath.] Vain here is the inference of Bernard, in his epistle to pope Eugenius, from these words, That both the spiritual and the material sword belonged to the church, telling him, the material sword is his, though it be not to be wielded by his hand, but by the hand of the soldier, yet so as he is to do it "ad nutum sacerdotis," at the will of the priest. For, with what sense can it be gathered from Christ's reprehension of St. Peter for using this sword, even before he was made a priest, according to the doctrine of the Romanists; or from Christ's command to put it up into the sheath, that it belonged to the priest; or because Peter had a sword, which belonged not at all to his office as an apostle, that the pope must have a title to that more than to his net or fishing-boat? The two swords, of which Christ spake, were both material, and of them Christ said, It is enough; not to combat with their adversaries, but to shew the peril of that present time. (See the note on Luke xxii. 38.)

[5] Ver. 12. Ἡ οὖν σπεῖρα καὶ ὁ χιλίαρχος, The band and the captain.] At the time of the Passover, it was customary for the Roman president to send a whole band of a thousand men for a guard to the temple; the captain of which band is here called χιλίαρχος.

[6] Ver. 13. And they led him away to Annas first.] That by him, who was more aged and better experienced in the law, Caiaphas might be directed what to do in the case, or because he was the prince of the Sanhedrin; from him he was sent bound to Caiaphas the high-priest, as appears from ver. 24. (See the note there.) Of his being sent to Annas the other evangelists say nothing, because nothing was done to Christ there, but all was performed at the palace of the high-priest; there was Christ examined, (ver. 19.) and there Peter denied him. (Matt. xxvi. 57. 69.)

[7] Ver. 15. Καὶ ὁ ἄλλος μαθητὴς, And the other disciple.] He seems not to be John: for he being a Galilean, as well as Peter, they might have equally suspected him on that account.

[8] Ver. 18. Ὅτι ψύχος ἦν, For it was cold.] The Jews, saith Dr. Lightfoot, testify, that there might be snow or frost at the Passover; and Radulphus, that great dews fell then, which made the air cold till the sun had exhaled them.

[9] Ver. 20. I taught always in the synagogue, καὶ ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, and in the temple.] This confutes them who say, Christ came not to Jerusalem, lest the Romans should suspect him of affecting a kingdom; for here he testifies, that he taught daily in the temple: after his first miracle done in Cana of Galilee, we find him going up to Jerusalem to keep the Passover, where he abode at least eight days; and many seeing the miracles that he did believed on him, v. 1. and vi. 4. he ascends again to the feast; so that we have reason to believe he never declined that feast. He also went up to the feast of tabernacles, (vii. 10.) and preached to the people in the temple, (ver. 13.) and wrought such wonders, that the Jews cried out, When Christ cometh, will he do more miracles than these? (ver. 31.) This feast being ended, he goes to the Mount of Olives, and returns the next day to preach in the temple, (viii. 1, 2.) At the feast of dedication, we find him again walking in Solomon's porch, (x. 23.) and there declaring himself to be the Son of God. Chap. xi. he is at Bethany, but two miles distant from Jerusalem, where he raises Lazarus from the dead; and from Bethany he goes to Jerusalem, the people going before him, and crying, Hosanna to the Son of David.

[10] Ver. 23. Why smitest thou me?] Hence we learn, that we are not literally to understand the precept of turning the other cheek to him that smites us; for Christ himself did not this, but defends the innocency of his words; which also shews, that to stand up in the defence of our own innocency, cannot be contrary to the Christian duties of patience and forgiveness. It is the observation of Suidas and Phavorinus, that δέρω signifies τὸ ἐκδέρω, to excoriate, δαίρω δὲ τὸ τύπτω, but δείρω to smite; but it is certain that δέρω bears the sense of smiting in the New Testament; thus ἀέρα δέρων is smiting of the air, 1 Cor. ix. 26. εἰς πρόσωπον δέρειν, to smite on the face, 2 Cor. xi. 20. (see Mark xii. 3. Acts xvi. 37.) and also in profane authors; so δέρεσθαι καὶ δέρειν δι' ἡμέρας, is daily to beat, or to be beaten, scholiast. Aristoph. in Vespis, p. 463. F. (See Examen Millii.)

[11] Ver. 24. Ἀπέστειλεν οὖν, Annas had sent him bound to Caiaphas.] Ἀπέστειλεν, here the perfect is put for the pluperfect tense: so ἔδησεν αὐτὸν, he had bound him, Matt. xiv. 3. and ver. 4. ἔλεγε, he had said: so ἐκράτησε, ἔδησε, ἔλεγε, he had apprehended, and bound, had said, Mark vi. 17, 18. and ver. 26. ἀπέκοψε, he had cut off.

[12] Ver. 28. They went not out into the judgment-hall,] Among the gentiles, whom they esteemed as unclean, (Acts x. 28.) lest by touching them they should be unclean, as the law pronounces him that touches an unclean person, (Numb. xix. 22.) and so should be unfit to eat the chagigah, or paschal sacrifices, which began to be eaten on the fifteenth day, and being holy things, might not be eaten in their defilement. That these are also called the passover, and that the paschal lamb was eaten the evening before, and that there was no translation of it to another day, either by reason of the sabbath, or the uncleanness of the congregation, see the appendix to Mark xiv. and Dr. Lightfoot.

[13] Ver. 31. Ἡμῖν οὐκ ἔξεστιν ἀποκτεῖναι οὐδένα, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death.] The Jews say, that the power of inflicting capital punishments upon offenders was taken from them by the Romans forty years before the destruction of their city and temple: so we read in the Jerusalem Talmud, L. Sanhedrin, cap. 7. in that of Babylon, Sanhedr. fol. 41. in Aboda Zara, fol. 2. in Maimonides, Tr. Sanhedr. cap. 14. sect. 13. And if it had remained with them at this time, it is supposed they would have been more speedy in cutting off our Saviour. But yet it seemeth evident that the Jews still retained the power of judging and condemning those to death, who were Jews by nature and original, and by their laws deserved to die: for after they were reduced to a Roman province, this privilege, saith Josephus,* was still granted to them, τοῖς πατρῴοις ἔθεσι καὶ ἱεροῖς χρῆσθαι, to use the sacred institutions and customs derived to them from their fathers. And it was granted to Hyrcanus their high-priest, that if any controversy arose, περὶ τῆς Ἰουδαίων ἀγωγῆς, touching the discipline of the Jews,† κρίσιν γένεσθαι παρ' αὐτοῦ, the judgment of it should be referred to him. Accordingly we find the high-priest and his council stoning Stephen, not "jure zelotarum," by the rage of zealots, as some conceive, but according to the law, that the blasphemer should be stoned: (Lev. xxiv. 16. Deut. xvii. 6, 7.) for he is brought before the high-priest and his council, (Acts vi. 15. vii. 1.) who were the proper judges in this case; witnesses are produced, who testify before them that he had spoken blasphemous words against the temple and the law, against Moses and against God; (Acts vi. 11. 13.) these witnesses do also stone him first, according as the law required. Thus also Saul, armed with the power of the high-priests and elders, persecuted the Jewish Christians, ἀχρὶ θανάτου, unto death, and led them bound to Jerusalem to be punished; (Acts xxii. 4, 5.) thus also would they have judged Paul after their own law, (Acts xxiv. 6.) and would have killed him, (Acts xxiii. 37.) had not Lysias the chief captain rescued him from their hands; this, say they, he did by violence, i. e. by an invasion of their rights; this, saith he, I did, knowing that he was a Roman, and so would not have done it, had he been a Jew only. They therefore seem to say they could not do this in the case of Christ, because they had accused him before Pilate, not of crimes committed against their law, but of sedition, and aspiring to a kingdom in prejudice to Cæsar and the Roman government, of which things it belonged to Pilate, not to them, to judge. But perhaps this matter may be compounded by reflecting on Ananus the high-priest, who killed James the brother of our Lord, and stoned many other Christians, ὡς παρανομήσαντας, as being transgressors of the law; this, saith Josephus, οἱ περὶ τοὺς νόμους ἀκριβεῖς, they who best understood their laws disliked, saying, that Ananus should not have called a council concerning life and death, without licence from Albinus the Roman president; whence I infer, that the power of inflicting capital punishments, even upon the Jews converted to the Christian faith, was then so taken from them, that they could not ὀρθῶς, regularly do it, without leave first obtained from the Roman president; but with his leave they might inflict upon them any capital punishment denounced against malefactors by their law. And if it be here said that Pilate gave them leave to inflict this death on our Lord, by saying, Take ye him, and crucify him: (xix. 6.) to this the answer is, (1.) that Pilate had given them no such licence when he spake these words; (2.) that crucifixion was none of the kinds of death assigned by their law; and, (3.) that Pilate by these words seems not to authorize them to do this, but rather to say to them, Do it at your peril, for I judge him innocent. (See the note there.)

[14] Ver. 36. My kingdom is not of this world.] And so hath nothing to do with, or opposite to, the Roman government; it is not of human or mundane original, but from heaven, and so it meddles not with the affairs of this world; it hath none of the pomp or splendour of the world; none to fight for it with any carnal weapons; (Luke ix. 56.) it exercises no dominion over men's bodies, but their souls only. So the phrase ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου οὐκ εἶναι, not to be of this world, signifies, John viii. 23. xv. 19. xvii. 14. especially when it is opposed to being ἐκ τοῦ πατρὸς, from the Father, 1 John ii. 16. and ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, from God, 1 John iv. 4—6. So when Domitian inquired of the kingdom of Christ, of what nature it was, and when and where it was to be set up; the nephews of that Judas, who was the brother of our Lord, answered, It was * not an earthly but a heavenly kingdom, to be set up at the end of the world.

[15] Ver. 37. For this cause was I born, and for this cause came I into the world.] Hence the Socinians infer, that Christ was born before he came into the world; and that this latter phrase denotes only his entrance on his public ministry, (iii. 17. 19. ix. 39. xi. 27.) But this follows not from these words, which only may import the same thing; viz. that Christ was born, and came into the world to this end, that he might bear witness to the truth. (See the notes upon the places cited.)

CHAP. XIX.

1. THEN Pilate therefore (to satisfy the clamours of the Jews) took Jesus, and [1] scourged him.

2. And the soldiers platted a crown of thorns, and put it upon his head, and they put upon him a purple robe,

3. And said, Hail, King of the Jews! and they smote him with their hands.

4. Pilate therefore went forth again, and saith to them, Behold, I bring him forth to you, that ye may know that I find no fault in him (let it therefore suffice that I have scourged him).

5. Then came Jesus forth, wearing the crown of thorns, and the purple robe. And Pilate saith to them, Behold the man! (how despicable he is, and how ridiculous it is to think of his affecting a kingdom, or attempting any thing against Cæsar's government.)

6. When the chief priests therefore and officers saw him, they cried out, saying, Crucify him, crucify him. Pilate saith to them, (If ye will have it so) [2] take ye him, and crucify him: for I find no fault in him (and therefore cannot do it myself).

7. The Jews answered him, We have a law, and [3] by our law he ought to die (as being guilty of blasphemy), because he made himself the Son of God. (John x. 33.)

8. When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he was the more afraid (to crucify him);

9. And went again into the judgment-hall, and saith to Jesus, Whence art thou? But Jesus gave him no answer.

10. Then saith Pilate to him, Speakest thou not to me? knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to release thee?

11. Jesus answered, Thou (mayest have this power over malefactors and ordinary men, but thou) couldest have [4] no power at all against me (the Son of God, and wholly innocent), except (through the wise counsel of God appointing me to die for the salvation of mankind) it were given (i. e. permitted) thee from above (to put me to death): therefore he that delivered me (the Son of God) to thee (that I might be crucified as a malefactor) hath the greater sin (though thy sin in condemning him in whom thou findeth no fault at all cannot be little).

12. And from thenceforth Pilate sought to release him: but the Jews cried out, saying, [5] If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend: (for) whosoever maketh himself a king, (he by so doing) speaketh against Cæsar (as saying in effect he is not the rightful king over us).

13. When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he brought Jesus forth (of the judgment-hall), and sat down in the judgment-seat, in a place that is called the Pavement, but in the Hebrew, Gabbatha.

14. And it was the preparation of the Passover, (i. e. Friday in the paschal week, ver. 31. 42. see the appendix to Mark xiv.) and about the sixth hour: he saith to the Jews, Behold your King!

15. But they cried out, Away with him, away with him, crucify him. Pilate saith to them, Shall I crucify your King? The chief priests answered, [6] We have no (person we own as our) king but Cæsar.

16. Then [7] delivered he him therefore to them to be crucified. And they (i. e. the soldiers) took Jesus, and led him away.

17. And he bearing his cross (part of the way, see note on Luke xxiii. 26.) went forth to a place called the place of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew, Golgotha;

18. Where they crucified him, and two others with him, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst.

19. And Pilate wrote a title, and put it on the cross. And the writing was, (This is) JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS.

20. This title then read many of the Jews: for the place where Jesus was crucified was nigh to the city: and it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin.

21. Then said the chief priests of the Jews to Pilate, Write not, The King of the Jews; but that he said, I am the King of the Jews.

22. Pilate answered, What I have written I have written (i. e. the inscription shall not be changed).

23. Then the soldiers, when they had crucified Jesus, took his (other) garments and made four parts (out of them), to every soldier a part; and (they took) also his coat: now the coat was without seam, woven from the top throughout.

* Ὅτι οὐ κοσμικὴ μὲν οὐδ' ἐπίγειος, οὐράνιος δὲ καὶ ἀγγελικὴ τυγχάνει ἐπὶ συντελείᾳ τοῦ αἰῶνος γενησομένη. Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 20.

24. They said therefore among themselves, [8] Let us not rend it (it being all of one piece), but cast lots for it, whose it shall be: (and this was done) that the Scripture might be fulfilled, which saith, (Psal. xx. 19.) They parted my raiment among them, and for my vesture they did cast lots. These things therefore the soldiers did.

25. Now there stood by the cross of Jesus his mother, and his mother's sister, [9] Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene.

26. When Jesus therefore saw his mother, and the disciple standing by, whom he loved, he said to his mother, [10] Woman, behold (him who is to take care of thee, as if he were) thy son!

27. Then saith he to the disciple, Behold (her whom thou must henceforth treat as) thy mother! And from that time that disciple (St. John) took her to his own home.

28. After this, Jesus knowing that all things (else relating to his life on earth) were now accomplished, that the Scripture might (in this also) be fulfilled, saith, I thirst.

29. Now there was set (for the soldiers) a vessel full of vinegar: and they filled a sponge with vinegar, and put it upon hyssop, and put it to his mouth.

30. When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, he saith, It (i. e. my work on earth) is finished: and (then) he bowed his head and gave [11] up the ghost.

31. The Jews therefore, because it was the preparation (i. e. Friday), that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the sabbath-day, for that sabbath-day was a high day, (as being not a sabbath only, but the second day of unleavened bread, from whence they reckoned their sabbath till Pentecost, and the day of presenting or waving the sheaf-offering, Lev. xxiii. 11. 15. and so a triple festival), besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away.

32. Then came the soldiers, and brake the legs of the first, and of the other (thief) which was crucified with him.

33. But when they came to Jesus, and saw that he was dead already, they [12] broke not his legs:

34. But one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came thereout [13] blood and water.

35. And he that (standing by the cross, ver. 26.) saw it bare record, and his record is true: and he knoweth that he saith true, (and testifies it) that ye might believe.

36. For these things were done (according to foregoing prophecies concerning him), that the Scripture should be fulfilled, (which saith, Psal. xxxiv. 20.) A bone of him shall not be broken.

37. And again (that) [14] another Scripture (might be fulfilled, which) saith, (Zech. xii. 10.) They shall look on him whom they pierced.

38. And after this Joseph of Arimathea (being a disciple of Jesus, but secretly for fear of (offending) the Jews), besought Pilate that he might take away the body of Jesus: and Pilate gave him leave. He came therefore, and took the body of Jesus.

39. And there came also Nicodemus, which at the first came to Jesus by night, and brought a mixture of myrrh and aloes, about a [15] hundred pound weight.

40. Then took they the body of Jesus, and wound it in linen clothes with the spices, as the manner of the Jews is to bury.

41. Now in (or near) the place where he was crucified, there was a garden; and in the garden a new sepulchre, wherein was never man yet laid.

42. There laid they Jesus therefore because of the Jews' preparation-day; for the sepulchre was nigh at hand.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIX.

[1] Ver. 1. ΚΑΙ᾽ ἐμαστίγωσε, And scourged him,] After the manner of the Romans, who chastised them first with whips, who were to be crucified, though Pilate did this not with an intent to crucify him, in whom he found no fault, but hoping that their rage might be satisfied with it. (See note on Luke xxiii. 16.)

[2] Ver. 6. Take ye him, and crucify him.] Pontius Pilate does not here give them leave to do this, but rather saith, if you will have it so, do it yourselves at your peril, for I cannot condemn a man without a fault. (So Grotius.)

[3] Ver. 7. By our law he ought to die, ὅτι ἑαυτὸν υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐποίησεν, because he made himself the Son of God.] The Jews could not here mean the law against false prophets, Deut. xviii. 20. partly because the reason here assigned doth not prove Christ a false prophet, partly because Christ neither tempted them to worship himself, and much less to worship false gods; nor did he give them any false sign; which are the only reasons assigned in that chapter for putting the false prophet to death; how much more probable is it that they meant the law against blasphemy? Lev. xxiv. 16. because they do not only seek to kill him as a blasphemer, for these very words, John v. 18. but to stone him, which was the very kind of death assigned by that law to the blasphemer: see John x. 33. 36. Hence in the other evangelists they charge him with blasphemy, and judge him worthy of death for this confession, that he was the Son of God, Matt. xxvi. 64—66. Mark xiv. 61. 64. Luke xxii. 71, 72. as judging that by this assertion, he being a man made himself equal with God. Schlictingius owns this, but then adds, that the Jews misunderstood and calumniated him in this inference, Christ meaning no more by this assertion, than that he was the true Messiah. But against this mitigation of the import of the words there lies a plain objection, that though Christ was so much concerned for the honour of his Father, whose honour must be much impaired by the advancement of the best of men to an equality with it; and though this blasphemy, if truly laid to his charge, was a sufficient evidence that he was not the Christ: yet neither in the fifth nor tenth of John, doth he ever plainly say he was not God, or that he never did intend to signify, by this expression, that he was equal with God, as is shewed in the notes on those two places; which yet, had he been only man, seems more necessary to have been done, for the honour of God, and for the removal of so just a prejudice against him, than to remove any other calumny they falsely charged upon him.

[4] Ver. 11. Οὐκ εἶχες ἐξουσίαν οὐδεμίαν κατ᾽ ἐμοῦ, Thou couldest have no power against me, &c.] This seems to be a Jewish phrase importing a power to take away the life of another; as when Saul saith to Doeg, 1 Sam. xxii. 18. fall upon the priests exercise authority among them, saith the

Chaldee; and the same expression is there used when David bids his servant fall on the Amalekite, 2 Sam. i. 15. and when king Solomon sent Benaiah to fall upon Adonijah, 1 Kings ii. 25. and upon Joab, ver. 29, 30. and upon Shimei. (See the paraphrase here.)

[5] Ver. 12. If thou lettest this man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend.] This chiefly moved Pilate, because, as Tacitus and Suetonius observe, Tiberius was apt to suspect the worst; and the least crimes with him made a man guilty of death, if they related to the government: he durst not therefore venture that this charge should be laid against him by the Jews.

[6] Ver. 15. We have no king but Cæsar.] By this how plainly do they condemn themselves as guilty of rebellion in all their attempts by war and tumults to free themselves from the government of Cæsar, and own that the terrible destruction, which at last came upon them, was from themselves!

[7] Ver. 16. Then Pilate delivered him to them.] Not to the Jews, but to the soldiers, that he might be crucified, as he was, by them; though he, who was delivered to the soldiers to be crucified only at their request, and to satisfy their restless clamours, that he might be crucified, may be well said to be delivered up to them who brought him to Pilate for this end, and prevailed with him thus to give him up.

[8] Ver. 24. Let us not rend it, but let us cast lots for it.] They divided his other garments into four parts, and then cast lots what part each of them should choose, (Matt. xxvii. 35. Mark xv. 24. Luke xxiii. 34.) but they cast lots for his coat who should have the whole.

[9] Ver. 25. Μαρία ἡ τοῦ Κλωπᾶ, Mary the wife of Cleophas,] Or, Alpheus; חלפי being inflexible into Alphai or Cleophi, here it is to be rendered Alpheus, for this Mary was the mother of James the less, (Mark xv. 40.) whose father was Alpheus. (Matt. x. 3.)

[10] Ver. 26. Woman, behold thy son!] Hence it is gathered, that Joseph her husband was then dead; whence Christ takes care she should not be destitute, and therefore charges his beloved disciple to treat her as his mother; and he accordingly takes her home to his own house.

[11] Ver. 30. Παρέδωκε τὸ πνεῦμα, He gave up his Spirit.] Into his Father's hands. (Luke xxiii. 46.) The Jews, saith Grotius, who believed a judgment to come, used this phrase to signify that the soul, leaving the body at the time of death, returned to God that gave it, (Eccles. xii. 7.) to receive its sentence from him.

[12] Ver. 33. They brake not his bones: Ver. 36. And this was done that the Scripture might be fulfilled, (which saith) ὀστοῦν οὐ συντριβήσεται αὐτοῦ, A bone of him (or, it) shall not be broken.] This is usually referred to the command touching the paschal lamb, Thou shalt not break a bone of it, Exod. xii. 46. Numb. ix. 12. where the Greek saith, ὀστοῦν οὐ συντρίψετε ἀφ' αὐτοῦ. But David being also a type of Christ, we may as probably refer this to the words, Psal. xxxiv. 20. He keepeth all their bones, ἓν ἐξ αὐτῶν οὐ συντριβήσεται, one of them shall not be broken: that promise, which respects all righteous persons, being more especially to be fulfilled in this Just One.

[13] Ver. 34. Καὶ εὐθὺς ἐξῆλθεν αἷμα καὶ ὕδωρ, And forthwith came there out blood and water.] The covenant of the old law was confirmed by blood mixed with water to keep it from congealing: (Heb. ix. 19.) so also was the covenant of the new testament. (1 John v. 6.) Dr. Lightfoot farther saith, that, according to the tradition of the Jewish rabbins, when Moses smote the rock, there came forth first blood, and then water; now that rock was Christ. (1 Cor. x. 4.)

[14] Ver. 37. And again another Scripture saith, They shall look upon him whom they have pierced.] The application of these words to Christ agrees with the opinion of the ancient Jews, who interpret, Zech. xii. 10. of Messiah the son of David, as Moses Haddarson in Gen. xxviii. though R. Solomon Jarchi, R. David, and Abarbanel, refer it to the death of Messiah the son of Joseph. Hence also note, that what the Romans did by the instigation of the Jews, is fitly ascribed to the Jews themselves.

[15] Ver. 39. About a hundred pound weight.] Which was an indication, not only of the wealth, but also of the great affection of Nicodemus to the blessed Jesus: hence also, they not only anoint him, as they commonly used to do others, but bury him with so great a mixture of spices as was done at the funerals of great men. So Jacob was embalmed after the Egyptian manner, Gen. l. 2. Asa with spices and sweet odours, 2 Chron. xvi. 14.

CHAP. XX.

1. THE first day of the week cometh [1] Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, to the sepulchre (other women being with her), and seeth the stone taken away from the sepulchre.

2. Then (seeing this) she (instantly) [2] runneth, and cometh (not to all the disciples, but) to Simon Peter, and to the other disciple, whom Jesus loved, and saith to them, They have taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre, and we know not where they have laid him.

3. Peter therefore went forth, and that other disciple, and came to (-wards) the sepulchre.

4. So they ran both together: and (but) the other disciple did outrun Peter, and came first to the sepulchre.

5. And he stooping down, and looking in, saw the linen clothes lying; yet went he not in.

6. Then cometh Simon Peter following him, and went into the sepulchre, and seeth the linen clothes lie,

7. And the napkin, that was about his head, not lying with the linen clothes, but wrapped together in a place by itself.

8. Then went in also that other disciple, which came first to the sepulchre, and [3] he saw, and believed (either the report of the women, or our Lord's resurrection, which they believed not before).

9. For as yet [4] they knew not (the import of) the Scriptures, (which said) that he must rise again from the dead.

10. Then (these two) disciples went again to their own home.

11. But Mary (returning with them) stood without at the sepulchre weeping: and as she wept, she stooped down, and looked into the sepulchre,

12. And seeth two angels in white sitting, the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain.

13. And they say to her, Woman, why weepest thou?

She saith to them, Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him.

14. And when she had thus said, she turned herself back, and saw Jesus standing, and (but she) knew not that it was Jesus.

15. Jesus saith to her, Woman, why weepest thou? whom seekest thou? She, supposing him to be the gardener, saith to him, Sir, if thou hast taken him away hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away.

16. Jesus saith to her, Mary. She turneth herself, and saith to him, Rabboni: which is to say, Master.

17. Jesus saith to her, [5] Touch me not (spend not now thy time in touching my body); for I am not yet ascended (I shall not presently ascend) to my Father: but go (first) to my brethren, and say to them, I (am shortly to) ascend to my Father, and to your Father; [6] and to my God, and to your God, (to do for you the things of which I spake, xiv. 16.)

18. Mary Magdalene (then) came and told the disciples that she had seen the Lord, and that he had spoken these things to her.

19. Then the same (Lord's) day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the [7] doors were shut where the disciples were assembled, (and kept themselves close) for fear of the Jews, came Jesus, and (opening silently the doors) stood in the midst (of them), and saith to them, Peace be to you.

20. And when he had so said, he shewed them his (pierced) hands and his side. Then were the disciples glad, when they saw the Lord.

21. Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be to you: [8] as my Father hath sent me (to preach in his name), even so send I you (to preach in my name).

22. And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith to them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost (to enable you for this office):

23. [9] Whose soever sins ye (thus commissionated, and thus assisted by the Holy Ghost, declaratively shall) remit, they are (and shall under the gospel-covenant be) remitted to them; and whose soever sins ye (declaratively in your gospel shall) retain, they are (and shall in heaven be) retained.

24. But Thomas, one of the twelve, called Didymus, was not with them when Jesus came.

25. The other disciples therefore said to him, We have seen the Lord. But he said to them, Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe.

26. And after eight days (i. e. the next Lord's-day) again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them: then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be to you.

27. Then saith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side: and be not faithless, but believing.

28. And Thomas answered and said to him, (Dost thou know what I said in thy absence? And hast thou raised thyself from the dead? Thou art) [10] my Lord and my God.

29. Jesus saith to him, Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed; (but more) [11] blessed are they who have not seen, and yet have believed.

30. And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book:

31. But these are written, that ye might [12] believe that Jesus is the Christ, the (only-begotten) Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XX.

[1] Ver. 1. Mary Magdalene.] More women and more Maries came to the sepulchre, (Luke xxiii. 55. xxiv. 1.) but the other evangelists beginning still with her, St. John, by naming her who only spake, and only looked down into the sepulchre, left the rest to be understood.

[2] Ver. 2. She runneth before, and cometh to Simon Peter.] All the interpreters that I have met with say, that Mary ran not presently to Peter and John, but only after she had seen the Lord: (ver. 18.) and this they prove from Luke xxiv. 10, 11. But this cannot consist with the words of St. John, who saith, she came to Peter and John only; whereas St. Luke and the other evangelists say, she came to all the rest of the apostles. (Matt. xxviii. 8. Mark xvi. 10.) When she came to St. Peter and St. John she came alone, and complained to them that Christ's body was taken away, not thinking that he was risen; so here: when she came to the rest of the apostles, she came with the message from the angel, and from Christ himself, that he was risen, Matt. xxviii. 7, 8. 10. and was seen of her, Mark xvi. 10, 11. Luke xxiv. 23. so here, ver. 18.: which plainly shews, that all the other evangelists speak only of this second coming, mentioned ver. 18.

Obj. St. Luke saith, they came to the apostles; and then adds, xxiv. 12. that Peter ἔδραμεν ran to the sepulchre.

Ans. That word may be thus rendered, Peter had run, and stooping down had seen; as if he should have said, The woman told the words of the angels to the disciples; and Peter also, to his admiration, had seen the body gone, and the linen clothes wrapped up by themselves: which, by the way, is an evidence that Christ's body was not stolen away by his disciples, since they would have carried it away, embalmed as it was, and not have stayed to wrap up the napkins.

[3] Ver. 8. And he saw, and believed.] Peter only saw and admired at what was done, (Luke xxiv. 12.) but St. John saw, and believed, not the words of Mary, for we find not that either of them suspected her of falsehood, but the resurrection of Jesus, or the words of Christ, After three days I will rise again: this, John saith, was the reason of his faith, not the predictions of the Old Testament: for, as for the apostles,

[4] Ver. 9. As yet they knew not the Scripture (which saith) that he ought to rise from the dead.] So infirm was the faith, not only of the Jews in general in that age, but of the apostles also, that they believed not the two fundamental articles of the Christian faith, the death and resurrection of the Messiah: as for the Jews, a contrary tradition had obtained among them, that their Messiah should not die: (John xii. 34.) and though our Saviour spake oft to his disciples of his death and resurrection, this tradition and thoughts of his temporal kingdom were so fixed in their heads, that his disciples understood not what he said: and this saying was concealed from them. (Mark ix. 32. Luke ix. 45. xviii. 34.) Whence Christ, after his resurrection, upbraids them with their slowness to believe the Scriptures, and shews them from them, that Christ ought to suffer, and rise again the third day, Luke xxiv. 25. 44, 45. And hence it follows, that the Jews then understood not that any of their sacrifices were types of our Saviour's passion, or availed to procure the remission of their sins on that account, and so could have no explicate faith in his blood, or expect justification by it. Whence St. Paul in that whole chapter, Heb. xi. in which he speaks so much of the faith of the patriarchs, hath not the least intimation of any relation that it had to the death of the Messiah.

[5] Ver. 17. Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father.] I was once inclined from these words to think, that as the sacrifice was not only to be slain, but the blood was to be brought into the sanctuary, and there presented before God to obtain the remission of sins; so Christ here intimated, that having offered up his body to the death, he, to complete his priestly office, and procure the full pardon of our sins, was immediately to ascend into the heavenly sanctuary, to present there his blood before God: for why else doth he say, Hold, or detain, me not; for I have not yet ascended? Why doth he add these words, Go, tell my disciples, I ascend? But finding that no evangelist ever speaks of any such immediate ascent after his resurrection, and that no commentator, ancient or modern, ever thought of such a thing, I think it better to refer these words to what Christ said to his disciples not long before his passion: for he had told them for their comfort, that he was shortly to go to his Father, (xiv. 12.) and that then he would enable them to do greater works than he himself had done; and that this was just matter of their joy, (ver. 28.) and was more expedient for them than his presence with them, (xvi. 7.) because then he would send the Comforter, and whatsoever they should ask the Father in his name, should be done to them, (ver. 23.) because the Father himself loved them, (ver. 26, 27.) Go (saith he) therefore, and tell my disciples, that now they shortly may expect these gracious promises should be made good to them by my ascent to the Father: and as for thee, thou needest not to be solicitous to touch or hold me now, thou wilt have time sufficient to converse with me, and to experiment the truth of my resurrection; for I shall not immediately ascend, but stay some time with you here on earth. Against this it may be objected, that ἀναβέβηκα is an aorist, and so οὔπω ἀναβέβηκα should be rendered, I have not yet ascended; not, I do, or I shall, not yet ascend. But to this I answer, that grammarians observe, that the aorist is often put both for the present tense and the future: (see Glassius de Verbo, lib. iii. Tr. 3. can. 47.) so is this word used in this very Gospel; as when Christ saith, He that believeth in me shall not come into condemnation, but μεταβέβηκεν shall pass from death to life. (John v. 24.)

[6] Πρὸς Θεόν μου καὶ Θεὸν ὑμῶν, To my God, and your God.] Seeing Christ styles God his God, hence, say the Socinians, it is evident, that Christ is not God; but from these words it only follows, that he was not God according to that nature which ascended: thus God, even thy God, hath anointed thee, saith the Psalmist of Christ; and yet he adds of the same person, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever, Psal. xlv. (See note on Heb. i. 8, 9.)

[7] Ver. 19. Τῶν θυρῶν κεκλεισμένων, The doors being shut.] Though it be an ancient opinion, that Christ made his body penetrate through the doors, yet it is both groundless and absurd, and contrary to the very design of Christ in coming to them. It is groundless: for why might not he, by his power, secretly open the doors, his disciples not perceiving it, as the angel opened the prison-doors and gates to let out Peter? (Acts xii. 10.) It is absurd: for since Christ rose in that natural body, which was crucified and laid in the grave, philosophy informs us, that such a body could not penetrate through another more solid body. And to this agree those words of Cyril of Alexandria, ἀδύνατον σῶμα διὰ σώματος διήκειν μὴ τέμνον καὶ τεμνόμενον, It is impossible that one body should go through another without cutting it, or being cut. And, thirdly, this fancy destroys not only the end of Christ's then coming to them, but of all that he had said and done, to convince them it was the same body that was crucified, in which he appeared to them: when he came the first time, his disciples were troubled, supposing they had seen a spirit; now, to convince them of the contrary, Christ saith, See my hands and my feet, that it is even I; handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have: his second appearance, when the doors were shut, was to convince Thomas of the truth of the resurrection of his body; and this he does, by calling him to put his finger into his pierced hands, and his hands into his pierced side; and yet this supposed penetration through the doors destroys both these arguments; it being as certain, that flesh and bones cannot penetrate though a door, as that a spirit hath not flesh and bones; and that his body must have passed though the doors after the manner of a spirit, as that it afterward appeared after the manner of a body; and that the same power which made a natural body penetrate through a door, could make a phantasm or aerial body appear like flesh and bones to the touch, and seem to have the marks and prints of a crucified body: so that unless our Saviour designed to invalidate the strength of what he said and did to convince them of the truth of his resurrection, he could not at the same time do a thing known to them, which did evacuate the force of all his proofs. Nor would the evangelist have twice recorded this circumstance, when speaking of the resurrection, had he imagined the words bore such a sense, as turned his body into a spirit, and ministered occasion to all that read it, to suspect the strength of any of these arguments to confirm this fundamental article.

[8] Ver. 21. As my Father hath sent me, so send I you.] Not only to preach in my name, as I did in his, but as he sending me baptized me with the Holy Ghost, and so anointed me to my office, (Luke iv. 18. John x. 36.) so will I send you, baptizing you also with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, (Luke xxiv. 49.) and so anoint you also for your office; (2 Cor. i. 21, 22.) and in testimony of this, I say to you now, receive the Holy Ghost, (ver. 22.) and will soon after my ascension send him more plentifully down upon you.

[9] Ver. 23. Whose sins ye do remit, they are remitted,—retain, &c.] Christ sent them to preach repentance and remission of sins in his name, to Jew and gentile, Luke xxiv. 47. and here he adds, that whose soever sins they, thus assisted by the Holy Ghost, declared remitted by virtue of the gospel-covenant, ratified in his blood shed for the remission of sins, should be remitted: and hence they preached remission of sins to all that believed in his name, and justification or exemption from the guilt of them. (Acts ii. 38. xiii. 38, 39.) And whose sins soever you retain, declaring to them, that according to the tenor of the gospel they still lie under the guilt of them, they shall be retained; and hence they declared to all that believed not on him, or lived not according to his laws, and sought not for justification by faith in his blood, that they were yet in their sins, (1 Cor. xv. 17.) and could not be justified. (Rom. ix. 32. x. 4.)

[10] Ver. 28. Ὁ Κύριός μου, καὶ ὁ Θεός μου, And Thomas answered and said to him, My Lord and my God.] Here,

First, Let it be noted from Woltzogenius the Socinian, that they are not to be hearkened to, who say, Thomas spake these words not to Christ, but by way of admiration to God the Father: for the apostle could not say, that Thomas answered, and much less that he answered and said to him, unless he had directed his words to him, who said unto him in the precedent verse, Be not faithless, but believe: and if he said to him, Thou art my Lord and my God, he must acknowledge him as fully and as truly to be his God as his Lord. And,

Secondly, Since Thomas had learned from the law, there was one God alone, he could not own Christ as another God, but as the same in essence with him. Note,

Thirdly, That though Christ was still concerned for the honour of the Father, he doth not reprehend Thomas for thus owning him as his God, but doth attest that he believed aright concerning him; which shews that he did not mistake in owning the Divinity of Christ. And whereas Woltzogenius here notes, that Christ was never called God before his resurrection, when he was to be worshipped as a Divine Lord; as it is evident that his resurrection could not make him God, if he had been a creature only, nor justify the worship of a creature as God: so is the reason of this evident, because he acted as a prophet whilst he was on earth, speaking still in his Father's name, and as one sent from him, it being essential to a prophet to speak in the name of him whose prophet he is. (See the preface to this Gospel, and the note on Mark xiii. 32.)

[11] Ver. 29. Blessed are they who have not seen, and yet have believed.] For faith is not praiseworthy, upon this account, that we believe what we see with our eyes, and therefore can no longer doubt of; but on this account, that we yield to arguments highly probable, and against which we have nothing solid to object, and such evidence as wise men consent to, and act by, in the most important concernments of this present life; because this shews a greater affection to the objects of our faith, and a better inclination to obey the will of God.

[12] Ver. 31. But these things were written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ.] Hence the Socinians argue, that they must err who think it was the intendment of this Gospel to shew that Jesus Christ was the Word of God, begotten of the Father before all worlds, and therefore a Divine person; whereas the apostle here plainly speaks only of the miracles wrought by Christ, which we acknowledge to be done to prove him the Messiah promised to the Jews, and that Prophet which was to come into the world, as St. John here speaks; but yet this hinders not his being God, or the Word of God, coexistent with the Father before all worlds. Moreover, the apostle adds, these things were done to prove he was the Son of God: now this even the Jews interpreted as a form of words by which Christ made himself equal with God. (See the notes on x. 33. xix. 7.) Some also think, that St. John ended here his Gospel, and that the following chapter was written by some other hands; but these words give no ground for this imagination, since other apostles, after they seemed to have concluded their epistles, add some new matter, as may be seen in the conclusions of the Epistles to the Romans and to the Hebrews. (See the note on xxi. 24.)

CHAP. XXI.

1. [1] AFTER these things Jesus shewed himself again to the (greatest part of the) disciples at the sea of Tiberias; and on this wise shewed he himself.

2. There were together Simon Peter, and Thomas called Didymus, and Nathanael of Cana in Galilee, and the sons of Zebedee, and two other (in all seven) of his disciples.

3. Simon Peter saith to them, I (will) go a fishing. They say to him, We also (will) go with thee. They (then) went forth, and entered into a ship immediately; [2] and that night they caught nothing.

4. But when the morning was now come, Jesus stood on the shore: but the disciples (then) knew not that it was Jesus (who stood there).

5. Then Jesus saith to them, Children, have you any meat? They answered him, No.

6. And he said to them, Cast the net on the right side of the ship, and ye shall find (fishes). They cast therefore (the net as he had said), and now (the draught was so great, that) they were not (well) able to draw it (along) for the multitude of fishes (enclosed in the net).

7. Therefore that disciple whom Jesus loved saith to Peter, It is the Lord (Jesus who hath done this). Now when Simon Peter heard that it was the Lord, he girt his [3] fisher's coat upon him, for he was naked (to his shirt), and did cast himself into the sea (to swim first to Jesus).

8. And the other disciples came in a little ship; for they were not far from land, but as it were two hundred cubits, dragging the net with (the) fishes (in it.

9. And) as soon then as they were come to land, they saw a fire of coals there, and fish laid thereon, and bread (by it, all provided miraculously by Christ).

10. Jesus saith to them, Bring of the fish which ye have now caught.

11. Simon Peter went up (into the boat), and drew the net to the land full of great fishes, a hundred and fifty and three. And for all there were so many, yet was not the net broken.

12. Jesus saith to them, Come and dine. And none of the disciples durst ask him, Who art thou? (as) knowing that it was the Lord.

13. [4] Jesus then cometh, and taketh bread, and giveth them, and fish likewise.

14. This is now the third time that Jesus shewed himself to (the body of) his disciples, after that he was risen from the dead.

15. So when they had dined, Jesus saith to Simon Peter, Simon, son of Jonas, [5] lovest thou me more than these (occupations thou art now employed in)? He saith to him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith to him, (Leave then these things and employments, and) feed my lambs (my church, shortly to be set up by new converts both of Jews and gentiles).

16. He saith to him again the second time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? He saith to him (again), Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith to him, Feed my sheep (i. e. my church thus gathered).

17. He saith to him the third time (that his threefold denial of him before unbelievers might be atoned for by a threefold confession of his affection to him before his disciples), Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Peter was grieved because he said to him the third time, Lovest thou me? And he said to him, [6] Lord, thou knowest all things; (and therefore) thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith to him, Feed my sheep.

18. Verily, verily, I say to thee, When thou wast young thou girdedst thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldest (without restraint): but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee (to the pillar where thou shalt be scourged), and (then) carry thee (to the cross), where (according to thy natural desires) thou would not (be).

19. This spake he (Jesus), signifying by what (kind of) death he should glorify God (by this confirmation of the Christian faith). And when he had spoken this, he (rose up and walked, and) saith to him, Follow me: (to intimate to him that he was to follow him in that kind of death he had suffered.)

20. Then Peter (who followed him) turning (his head) about, seeth (St. John) the disciple which Jesus loved following (also; viz.) which also leaned on his breast at supper, and said, Lord, who is he that betrayeth thee? (John xiii. 25.)

21. Peter seeing him saith to Jesus, Lord, and (Gr. but) what shall this man do? (how shall it fare with him?)

22. Jesus saith to him, [7] If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me.

23. Then went this saying abroad among the brethren (who afterward understood that this was spoken of his departure from this life), that that disciple should not die: yet Jesus said not to him, He shall not die; but, If I will that he tarry till I come (in judgment against Jerusalem, to destroy it by the Romans), what is that to thee?

24. [8] This is the disciple which testifies of these things, and wrote these things: and we know (sure I am) that his testimony is true.

25. And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I [9] suppose that even the world itself would not contain the books which should be written (i. e. they would be so many that they would seem incredible to the world to be done by one man). Amen.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXI.

[1] Ver. 1. ΜΕΤΑ᾽ ταῦτα, After these things.] i. e. After his first apparition, mentioned xx. 20. and his second, mentioned ver. 26. he appeared now τρίτον, the third time, ver. 14.

[2] Ver. 3. In that night they caught nothing.] Christ being then absent; but when he is present, they, having his command, enclose a very great multitude of fishes, to teach them, that though in preaching of the gospel they were insufficient to do any thing of themselves; (2 Cor. iii. 5.) yet, having his command to go and teach all nations, and the promise of his presence with them, they should be wonderful successful in bringing many to the faith. It is also very likely they went then a fishing to supply their own want of necessaries; Christ therefore by this draught of fishes, not only works a miracle to confirm them in the belief of his Divine power, but to inform them also, that while they were employed in doing what he did command them, they should never want what was convenient for them; and as, by miraculously providing bread and fish broiling on the fire, (ver. 9.) he shewed his ability to do so; so by this numerous draught of fishes he supplied them with necessaries till the Holy Ghost should come upon them to fit them for their ministry.

[3] Ver. 7. He girt about him, τὸν ἐπενδύτην, his fisher's coat, ἦν γὰρ γυμνὸς, for he was naked.] Suidas and Phavorinus say ἐπενδύτης is ἱμάτιον τὸ ἐσώτατον, the inner garment, but Julius Pollux says it was χιτὼν ὁ ἔξωθεν, the outward coat; the context here seems to make it most probable it was the inward garment next his shirt: for he was naked, signifies, he only had his shirt on; for in this sense only Saul lay naked among the prophets, (1 Sam. xix. 24.) and David was naked when he danced before the ark, (2 Sam. vi. 20.) i. e. he had put off his royal robe. (See the note on Mark xiv. 51. see also Job xxii. 6. xxiv. 7. Isa. xx. 2, 3. 1 Cor. iv. 11.)

[4] Ver. 13. Jesus taketh bread, and giveth to them, and fish likewise.] As the father of the family he both makes provision for them, and gives to every man his portion: that he himself did eat is not said; yet since St. Peter saith, they did eat and drink with him after his resurrection, (Acts x. 41.) and St. Luke saith, that he did eat before them, (Luke xxiv. 42, 43.) as he did that for confirmation of his resurrection, so is it probable he might eat here for the same end.

[5] Ver. 15. Lovest thou me πλεῖον τούτων, more than these?] Most interpreters think Christ asketh whether St. Peter loved him more than the other disciples; but as Peter could not answer to this question unless he knew their hearts, so could he not shew he did this by feeding Christ's sheep, unless he fed them more than they. It is therefore observable, that after Christ had given them a commission to preach the gospel, (John xx. 21, 22.) Peter betakes himself to his fishing trade; Christ therefore here inquires whether he loved him more than these nets and fisher-boats, about which he was now employed, and saith, that if indeed he did so, he should leave them, and wholly employ himself in feeding his sheep and lambs. Some of the fathers add, that Christ makes this inquiry thrice, that Peter by a threefold confession might atone for his threefold denial. They who hence argue for the supremacy of Peter above the rest of the apostles, are vain in their imaginations; for if, by these words, Christ required Peter to feed all his sheep and lambs, it is certain he was wanting in his duty; for he never exercised one act of supremacy over the rest of the apostles, but, being sent by them, obeyed, (Acts viii. 14.) and, being reproved by St. Paul, he held his peace, and was so far from feeding all Christ's sheep, that he never fed any of the province of St. Paul. Did he feed those apostles on whom the same Holy Ghost fell, who had the same commission, given at the same time, and in the same words, to preach the gospel to all nations, or to every creature? if not, they were not in the number of the sheep, whom Peter is here bid to feed: or did all other pastors receive commission from St. Peter to feed Christ's sheep? Did St. Paul, who doth so solemnly declare he had not his commission from man, neither by man? (Gal. i. 1.) Did any of the bishops of Asia? No: St. Paul assures us the Holy Ghost had made them overseers of the flock of Christ. (Acts xx. 28.) No, saith Pseudo-Ambrosius,* not Peter only, "sed nos cum eo," but we with him have received commission to feed Christ's sheep; and what is here said to Peter, Feed my sheep, "ad omnes dicitur," is (saith St. Austin †) said to all; and, saith St. Basil,‡ Christ here gave τὴν ἴσην ἐξουσίαν πᾶσι τοῖς ἐφεξῆς ποιμέσι καὶ διδασκάλοις, the same power to all ensuing pastors and teachers.

[6] Ver. 17. Lord, σὺ πάντα οἶδας, thou knowest all things.] Schlictingius here saith, that Christ is here said to know all things, because he knew many things. But this destroys St. Peter's argument; for, it follows not that Christ knew the sincerity of St. Peter's heart, and his affection towards him, unless he knew the secrets of all hearts. This therefore is an argument that Christ was truly God, it being God alone to whom the secrets of all hearts lie open. (1 Kings viii. 39.)

[7] Ver. 22. If I will that he stay ἕως ἔρχομαι, till I come.] viz. To the destruction of Jerusalem, after which this apostle lived a long time, and he alone did so, the other apostles being dead before; of this coming the prophet Joel speaks, saying, The sun shall be turned into darkness, πρὶν ἐλθεῖν, before the great and terrible day of the Lord cometh, Joel ii. 31. (see ver. 1.) so Mal. iii. 1, 2. ἰδοὺ ἔρχεται, behold, he cometh—but who shall abide the day of his coming? and, iv. 1. ἰδοὺ ἔρχεται ἡμέρα Κυρίου, behold, the day of the Lord cometh, which burneth as a furnace; and, ver. 6. μὴ ἐλθὼν, lest coming he smite the land with a curse. In the New Testament we have frequent mention of this coming of our Lord; for when our Lord spake of the destruction of the temple, the apostles ask what is the sign τῆς σῆς παρουσίας, of thy coming, Matt. xxiv. 3. and he tells them that παρουσία, the coming of the Son of man will be as lightning, ver. 27. and then should they see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, ver. 30. that as it was in the days of Noe, so should it be at the coming of the Son of man, ver. 37. 39. bidding them watch, because they know not when their Lord cometh, ver. 42. 44. (See Matt. xvi. 28. Heb. x. 37. James v. 9. and the notes there, and on 2 Thess. ii. 1.) And note here, that whereas it is said, that the Scripture mentions only two comings of our Lord, one when he came and lived on earth, the other at the day of judgment, when he shall come ἐκ δευτέρου, a second time without sin unto salvation, (Heb. ix. 20.) this is indeed no objection against this intermediate advent so frequently and plainly mentioned in the New Testament; this being not a personal advent, by a descent of Christ from heaven, but only a coming of our Lord by the Roman army, and by signs from heaven, and in the clouds of their approaching ruin. Wonderful here are the words of Theophylact; for he not only saith, that some held that John then lived, and was to do so till the coming of antichrist, when he, with Elias, was to preach Christ, and to be slain by antichrist, but adds this as the import of Christ's words, What if I will that he tarry till I come, that he should remain in Galilee till the destruction of Jerusalem; as, saith he, John did till the coming of Vespasian, and only departed when Jerusalem was to be taken.

[8] Ver. 24. This is the disciple who testifies of these things, and wrote these things, καὶ οἴδαμεν ὅτι ἀληθής ἐστιν ἡ μαρτυρία αὐτοῦ, and we know that his testimony is true.] Here some tell us that this chapter was writ by many, and therefore not by St. John, and this they conclude from the word οἴδαμεν, we know, but without ground: for Dr. Lightfoot here observes, that we know, in the Chaldee dialect, is often used of one. So Mary Magdalene saith of herself, They have taken the Lord out of the sepulchre, καὶ οὐκ οἴδαμεν, and we know not where they have laid him: so St. Paul often, οἴδαμεν γὰρ, for we know that the law is spiritual, but I am carnal, 1 Thess. ii. 18. ἠθελήσαμεν—ἐγὼ μὲν Παῦλος, we would have come to you, I Paul: so this apostle saith of himself, ἡμεῖς μαρτυροῦμεν, we testify, Eph. iii. 12. and that here it is only one that speaketh, is demonstrated from the following word, οἶμαι, I suppose. Nay, even these words shew that all the preceding words of this chapter were writ by this disciple, and therefore were not written by the Asiatic bishops: and therefore Theophylact here saith περὶ ἐμαυτοῦ λέγω ὅτι ἀληθεύω.

[9] Ver. 25. Οὐδὲ αὐτὸν οἶμαι τὸν κόσμον χωρῆσαι τὰ γραφόμενα βιβλία, I suppose the world itself would not contain the books which should be written.] Here most interpreters say the apostle's words contain a great hyperbole, with a catachresis, but Origen* avoids them both, declaring that the apostle saith, the world would not receive the books written, not for the multitude of the books, but for the greatness of the works recorded in them. So the word is used by this evangelist introducing Christ saying to the Jews, My word οὐ χωρεῖ ἐν ὑμῖν, is not received by you: so Eusebius saith, that the men of former ages οὐκ ἦν πῶ χωρεῖν, were not able to receive Christ's doctrine: (lib. i. cap. 1. p. 8.) so Christ saith, οὐ πάντες χωρεῖν, All men cannot receive this saying: (Matt. xix. 11.) and Philo saith,† there are very many things in the world, ἃ διὰ μέγεθος ἀνθρώπινος λογισμὸς οὐ χωρεῖ, which for their greatness human reason cannot comprehend. See many other examples of this sense of the word in Stephanus, and in Grotius on Matt. xix. 11.

A SERMON

ON JOHN vii. 47—49.

Are ye also deceived? Have any of the rulers, or of the pharisees, believed on him? But this people, who knoweth not the law is accursed.

ceeding great, that they prevailed on those plain-hearted people, who beheld them, to believe, that he who wrought them was indeed the Christ: for "many of the people believed on him, saying, When Christ cometh, will he do more miracles than these?" (ver. 31.) These apprehensions of the vulgar did so alarm the chief priests and pharisees, who saw their interest, authority, and credit, with the people, must decline as fast as that of Christ's prevailed, that they forthwith dispatched their officers to take him, and bring him to them, (ver. 32.) These officers, when they had heard the gracious words which issued from the mouth of Christ, were themselves taken by him; they, who were sent to bring Christ to the priests and pharisees, were themselves brought to Christ; and so these converts neglect to do the office of the high-priest's serjeants: and being asked the reason why they had not brought Christ, they boldly answer, that they had heard such gracious and heavenly words proceeding from him, as never man before him spake; and therefore could not think it fit to apprehend so excellent a person as he was. The pharisees hearing this answer, do presently conclude, their officers must be deceived in these kind thoughts of Christ, and offer this, as they supposed, convincing argument to prove it; viz. that though the giddy multitude, who had no knowledge of the law, and therefore no capacity to understand the mind of God contained in it, might be inclined to think that Jesus was indeed the Christ: yet, since the rulers of the church, the Sanhedrin, seeing the doctors and expounders of the law, the scribes and pharisees, believed not on him, but did unanimously reject him as a vile impostor, they must be certainly deceived, who apprehended otherwise concerning him; because they followed the verdict of the ignorant and giddy multitude, in opposition to the better judgments and the mature deliberations of their church-guides and learned clerks.

Now amongst all the arguments by which the emissaries of the church of Rome endeavour to beguile unstable souls, and beget in them a suspicion that they have been seduced from the church, none is more plausible than this, which by the pharisees is here laid down. I therefore shall endeavour,

1. To propound the argument, which is here urged by the pharisees to prove our Jesus could not be the true Messiah, in its full strength and vigour. And,

2. To shew that what the papists do produce to prove that protestants must be deceived, is exactly parallel to what the pharisees did, or might, produce against our Saviour; and the same arguments might with equal reason have been urged by the unbelieving Jews against our Lord's disciples, and those who laid the first foundations of, and became early converts to, the Christian faith, as they are urged by the papists against our departure from the church of Rome.

§. 2. Now the argument contained in the text is this, viz. You must be certainly deceived if you believe that Jesus is the Christ; because you do, by entertaining this persuasion, contradict the judgment of your church-guides, which God hath set over you. For they have frequently assembled for the determination of this grand debate, "Whether this Jesus was the Messiah promised to the Jews, or not," and they have constantly determined that he was not the Christ; and have unanimously concluded that he deserved to be punished as a vile impostor, and that all who did confess that he was the Christ should be excommunicated. In an assembly consisting of chief priests and pharisees, they positively declare that Christ could be no prophet, because he was a Galilean: (John vii. 41, 42.) this all, say they, who search the Scriptures, may plainly see, (ver. 52.) Moreover, they determine in my text, that all, who so esteemed him, were themselves deceived, and that they lay exposed to this delusion for want of knowledge in the law, (ver. 47—49.) In the ninth chapter of St. John, ver. 16. the pharisees again declare, that "this man could not be of God, because he did not keep the sabbath." Moreover, these pharisees, and other rulers of the church, συνετέθειντο, determined and agreed together, "that whosoever did confess that Jesus was the Christ, should suffer excommunication." (John ix. 22. xii. 42.) They therefore thought themselves infallibly certain (if excommunication be, as R. H.* informs us, an evidence of a claim to be infallible), that Christ was not the true Messiah. Elsewhere the scribes and pharisees do positively conclude that Christ did only "cast out devils through Beelzebub." (Mark iii. 22.) After some days they again call a council, συνέδριον συνήγαγον, and there determined that it was fit that Christ should die: (John xi. 47. 50. 53.) this the high-priest declares, and all the pharisees and the chief priests agree to execute. (Luke xxii. 66.) A full assembly, consisting of the high-priest, and all the chief priests, presbyters, and scribes, Christ being brought before their council, do with one voice declare, that he was worthy to die as a blasphemer, and also that "by their law he ought to die, because he made himself the Son of God." After his death, the chief priests and the pharisees, with one consent, pronounce him a deceiver. (Matt. xxvii. 63.) When the disciples began to witness that he was risen from the dead, the high-priest, rulers, elders, scribes, and all the kindred of the high-priest, assemble at Jerusalem, and strictly do command them "not to speak at all, nor teach, in the name of Jesus. (Acts iv. 6. 18.) Soon after the high-priest, the Sanhedrin, and all the elders of Israel, being met in council, repeat the same command, and chastise the apostles for their disobedience to it. (Acts v. 40.) If therefore the decrees of many councils, consisting of the guides of the whole Jewish church, may be esteemed sufficient to decide a controversy, it must be certain that Jesus Christ was not the true Messiah, promised to the Jews, but a deceiver and blasphemer. Now as a Romanist,† having produced five provincial and two general councils, falsely so called, for that portentous doctrine of transubstantiation, saith, "If the decrees of so many synods, so often weighing the adversaries' reasons and evidences were not sufficient for settling such a point, at least as to the obedience of future silence, and noncontradiction, and as to suffering the church to enjoy her peace, what can hereafter be sufficient? Or can we ever hope that any controversy shall be finally determined, or ended by any future council, if this (of the Messiah) is not by these forepast? Can there be any ground here to question the integrity or lawful proceedings of so many councils, all concurring in the same judgment (for a corporal presence, saith the Romanist, that Christ was a deceiver, saith the Jews)? Or could there be a new light in this point attainable in those times (by the private person, or Christian convert), which those (guides of the Jewish church, who condemned your Jesus,) were not capable, or had no notice of?"

2. They who so often and so unanimously condemn your Saviour and his doctrine, saith the Jew, were the church-guides, by God appointed to "teach the children of Israel all the statutes which the Lord had spoken to them by the hand of Moses, to teach Jacob his judgments, and Israel his law," and by whose lips the knowledge of it was to be preserved. (Lev. x. 11. Deut. xxxiii. 10.) They were the men who are in Scripture styled the "messengers (or the ambassadors) of the Lord of hosts;" (Mal. ii. 7.) that is, the men appointed by him to declare his message to the people. They were the men ordained to "minister before the Lord in every controversial matter," men who were "set for the judgment of the Lord, and for controversies." (Deut. xvii. 8. 12. 2 Chron. xix. 8.) "In controversy they shall stand in judgment (saith the Lord), and by their word shall every controversy be tried." (Deut. xxi. 5. xvii. 12. Ezek. xliv. 24.) Wherefore, to act in opposition to the judgment of these guides, must be to act presumptuously, as God himself declares, to despise the verdict of God's messengers, and, in a controversial matter of the highest moment, to reject the sentence of those men, who are by God ordained to define it, and by whose words, according to his ordinance, it must be tried.

3. As for the common people, who in this matter did oppose their private judgments to the decrees of their church-guides, not acquiescing in their conciliar determinations, that your Jesus was not the true Messiah, they, saith the Jew, must act against that rule, which both the law of Moses and the prophets have prescribed; for by that law they are commanded, under pain of death, when any controversy should arise among them, "to go to the priests and Levites, and to the judge then living, to inquire the sentence of judgment from his mouth, and to do according to the sentence which they shall shew them, and according to all that they inform them, not declining from it to the right hand, nor to the left." (Deut. xvii. 8—11.) They by the prophets are instructed to "ask the priests concerning the law," and to "seek the knowledge of it from their mouths." (Hag. ii. 11. Mal. ii. 7.) They therefore stood obliged to assent to the determinations of the Sanhedrin, and the conciliar decrees of priests and Levites, scribes and pharisees, confirmed by the high-priest, and so they were obliged to believe, that, according to the true intent and meaning of the law, your Jesus could not be the true Messiah. And consequently they must err, who, quitting the decisions of the pharisees, and other rulers of the church, embrace that tenet of the ignorant and giddy multitude.

§. 3. Thus the Jews pleaded from Scripture against our blessed Lord. And if you do compare these pleas, and others of like nature, which might be offered from the Scriptures by the Jew, with what the Romanists do offer for the infallibility of any of their councils, you will soon find that all their pleas for this infallibility from the New Testament are paralleled, or rather over-balanced, with places of like nature in the Old, which do more strongly plead for the infallibility of the high-priest and rulers of the Jewish church. For,

1. Do the Romanists plead Christ's promise to be "for ever with the church?" (Matt. xxviii. 20.)

Ans. The Jews had equal reason to expect God's presence among them, because he promised "to dwell among the children of Israel, to meet them at the tabernacle of the congregation, and there speak with them," (Exod. xxix. 42—45.) to "reign over them in Zion, from henceforth and for ever." (Micah iv. 7.) He "chose Zion for his habitation," and said of it, "This is my rest for ever, here will I dwell;" (Psal. cxxxii. 13, 14.) and of Jerusalem, "that he would put his name for ever in that place, and that his eyes and his heart should be there for ever." (2 Chron. vii. 16.)

2. Do they add that Christ hath promised, that "where two or three are gathered together in his name, he will be in the midst of them?" (Matt. xviii. 20.)

Ans. God also promised to the Jews, that he would "bless them out of Zion," (Psal. cxxxiv. 3.) and that "wheresoever he did record his name, there would he come and bless his people." (Exod. xx. 24.)

3. Do they allege the sayings of our Lord to his disciples; viz. "He that heareth you, heareth me;" (Luke x. 16.) he who neglects to hear the church, shall be accounted as "a heathen and a publican?" (Matt. xviii. 17.)

Ans. God also said, that "he who will not hearken to the priest that stands to minister before the Lord, even that man shall die for his presumption." (Deut. xvii. 12.)

4. Do they say that Christ's apostles commanded Christians "to obey those that had the rule over them, and to follow their faith?" (Heb. xiii. 7. 17.)

Ans. Our Jesus did command his hearers to "do all that the scribes and pharisees did say unto them," (Matt. xxiii. 3.) and that because of their authority derived from Moses; and God himself commanded all his people to do "according to all that they should be informed of by the priests." (Deut. xvii. 10.) And,

5. Do they plead Christ's promise made to his apostles, that "he would send the Spirit of truth to guide them into all truth?" (John xiv. 26. xvi. 13.)

Ans. Whereas this promise doth personally belong to the apostles, and not to their successors—for it is a promise "to bring to their remembrance (by his Spirit) what he (before) had said to them," (John xiv. 26.) and to "shew them things to come," (John xvi. 13.) to which spirit of prophecy the Roman doctors do not now pretend;—I say, whereas this promise did belong to the apostles only, God stood obliged by covenant to cause his Holy Spirit to remain among the rulers of the Jewish church: for thus he speaks, "According to the word that I covenanted with you, when ye came out of Egypt, so my Spirit remains among you." (Hag. ii. 5.) Moreover, God promised to the Sanhedrin, that "he would put the spirit of Moses upon them;" (Numb. xi. 17.) and in compliance with that promise he came down in a cloud, and took the spirit, which was upon Moses, and gave it to the seventy elders, so that "they prophesied, and did not cease." Or,

6. Do they argue for their infallibility, because the church is styled by St. Paul, "the pillar and the ground of truth," (1 Tim. iii. 15.) by reason of that truth which is preserved by her governors?

Ans. God also hath declared, touching his priests, that "the law of truth was in their mouth;" (Mal. ii. 6.) and of Jerusalem, that "she should be called the city of truth."

(Zech. viii. 3.) And if the church of Judah hath since failed, so also hath the church of Ephesus, of which alone St. Paul affirmeth that it was the "pillar and the ground of truth."

7. Do they conclude that the church-guides must be infallible, because "God hath placed in the church, some apostles, some prophets, some pastors, and some teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine?" (Eph. iv. 11, 12.)

Ans. Were not the Jewish priests placed also for this end, for the work of their ministry, the perfecting of their saints, the edifying of their flocks? Were not their lips to preserve that knowledge, which should restrain the people from their errors? Were not they appointed "to heal that which was sick, and bring again that which was strayed?" (Ezek. xxxiv. 4.) Or,

Lastly, Do they triumph in that promise of our Lord, that the "gates of hell should not prevail against the church?" (Matt. xvi. 18.)

Ans. God also promised, that his "covenant made with the Levites, priests, and ministers," should be as certain and perpetual as that of day and night. (Jer. xxxiii. 20, 21.) So that I need not add, that by this phrase Christ only promiseth, that pious Christians shall not for ever be detained under the power of the grave; which I have elsewhere shewed to be the natural and only import of these words, "the gates of hell shall not prevail against the church."

Moreover, the plain meaning of the foregoing words, viz. "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build my church," is, as Tertullian* well informs us, this: Thou who hast, first of all my disciples, acknowledged me to be the Christ, thou shalt first preach this doctrine to the world, and by so doing, lay the first foundation of a Christian church: which he accordingly performed, first laying the foundation of a church† among the Jews by the conversion of three thousand souls; and after, laying the foundation of a church among the gentiles, by the conversion of Cornelius and his friends; Christ having, to fulfil his promise, "made choice of him, among the rest of the apostles, that the gentiles by his mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe."‡ Now to pretend to be St. Peter's successor in this matter, is in effect to say, that the foundations of a Christian church are not yet laid.

If therefore Roman Catholics conclude from these ambiguous and obscure places for the infallibility of councils, or the major part of the church-guides concurring with the pope in any sentence or decree, although these places do not speak one syllable of any pope, or major part of the church-guides, and much less of the Romish prelates, and less of their infallible assistance; what ovations and triumphs would they have made, had it been said expressly of their cardinals and councils, as it is said of Jewish priests, that they were set for judgment and for controversy? had God fixed his glorious presence at Rome, as he did at Jerusalem, and settled there a seat of judgment, and a continual court of highest judicature, as was that Sanhedrin, which in Jerusalem was settled? had he dwelt in St. Peter's, as he dwelt in the temple? had he left with them, as he did with the Jewish priests, a standing oracle, a urim and a thummim, to consult with upon all occasions? so that this plea being much stronger for the infallibility of the superiors of the Jewish church, than for the infallibility of the whole western church, or any of its councils, the Roman doctors must acknowledge, either that they fallaciously urge it against protestants, or must confess that it stands also good against the Christian, and is a confirmation of all those traditions which were condemned by our Saviour, and a sufficient plea for all those errors and corruptions, which, as the prophets do complain, were generally taught and practised by the church-guides in the declining ages of the Jewish church: for* if these arguments be good now, they were so then; and if they were good then, for aught that I can see, the high-priest, and the major part of the church-rulers of the Jews, were always in the right; and Christ, and his apostles, with the holy prophets, must be in the wrong.

§. 4. Moreover, had we no evidence from Scripture, may the Jew say, in prosecution of this argument, reason seems very strongly to conclude for this submission of the common people, and some few priests, to the concurring judgments of their church-guides, and of the major part of Jews, who joined with them in condemnation of your Jesus as a blasphemer and false prophet, and of his followers as heretics and schismatics, or men, who worshipped God after that way, which by the Jews was called heresy, (Acts xxiv. 14.) and were ringleaders of a sect, (ibid. ver. 5.) For, still to argue after the manner of the Romish doctors;

1. Is it not reasonable to conceive, that they who were God's ministers appointed for this very thing to judge in controversial matters, and to make trial of such as did pretend to prophecy, as was the Jewish Sanhedrin; I say, is it not reasonable to conceive that the assistance of the Holy Spirit should be vouchsafed to these rulers of the church and doctors of the law, rather than to those common people, who bore no such relation to God, had no commission from him to direct others in the meaning of his word, but had so many and such express injunctions to seek it at the mouth of their church-guides? Can we imagine, that these pharisees and rulers should be the men ordained by God for controversies, and by whose words they must be tried, and yet should be such blind and stupid guides, as by your Jesus they were said to be, that "he who was led by them must fall into the ditch?"

Moreover, were no assistance from above to be expected in this case, it is not reasonable to think that these great doctors of the law, those numerous priests, who made it their whole business to study and search out the meaning of the law of Moses, those members of the Sanhedrin,† who were still chosen out of the most learned persons, and the most eminent for wisdom; I say, may we not reasonably conceive such persons to be fitter and more able judges of the sense and meaning of that law, or of the truth of any miracles pretended to be wrought by Christ or his apostles, than was that rude and giddy multitude, which had no knowledge of the law? *" They therefore considering their superiors' study and learning in such things Divine, and also their own ignorance; they considering both the special ordination and commission of their superiors from God to teach them in the necessary truth, and his charge laid upon them to obey their ecclesiastical superiors, ought to depend upon and adhere to their directions so much the more in any point of faith, by how much it is esteemed more necessary, as wherein there is a much greater hazard if they should err."

3. All that your gospel doth suggest, or reason may pretend, for the exemption of the first Jewish converts from obedience to these decrees of their superiors in the Jewish church, may, saith the Jew, be fully answered from the plain principles, and almost in the words, of Roman Catholics. For, to proceed in the expressions of R. H. the guide in controversies, with very little variation of them;

§. 5. 1. Will you affirm, that all the priests and rulers, scribes and pharisees, and the whole Sanhedrin, acted against their faith and conscience in these determinations by which your Jesus was condemned as an impostor?

Ans. R. H.† will tell you, "There is a moral certainty that so many such persons cannot conspire in such a matter, viz. a necessary to salvation, to falsify the truth against their own belief and conscience to their subjects and posterity, with an anathema to all dissenters," or an excommunication of all who preached and believed that Christ was the Messiah promised to the Jews, and was already risen from the dead, when their own consciences could tell them that these things were true. ‡ "If any can be so uncharitable as to credit of them so great a wickedness, that the supreme councils of the (Jewish) church should with design decree an error contrary to their faith (or knowledge) in this necessary matter, and then enjoin all their subjects to believe it under anathema," he must believe that "they most certainly do devote themselves to eternal perdition." And therefore, "if not out of charity or reverence to such sacred persons, yet from the irrationality of such a defence, it is much better to pass over this objection."

2. Will you say that these superiors were only to be appealed to in doubtful matters, and that this thing, "Whether the Scriptures declared your Jesus to be the true Messiah," was not doubtful?

Ans. R. H. informs you,§ that "a right judgment cannot but account all those places doubtful, in the sense whereof, either the ancient or present major part of Christianity are of a contrary judgment from himself." That must be therefore doubtful, according to the ground and reason of this rule, which you presume not to be doubtful, since it was that in which the major part of the then present Jewish church was of a contrary judgment from the Christian convert.

3. Will you plead, in favour of the vulgar, that they were bound to hearken to these Jewish guides no longer than they followed the rule of Scriptures?

Ans. Be it so; but, saith R. H.‖ "Who is appointed judge of these supreme judges, when they transgress against this rule? Their subjects? Who are from them to learn the sense of the rule, where difficult and disputed, and who are bidden to follow their faith? The right exercise of judgment will not judge so." For if the vulgar may pass this judgment on the decrees of many councils, and the concurring judgment of their superiors and church-guides, I hope the matter must be evident even to the vulgar sort, that notwithstanding the contrary judgment of chief priests and rulers, scribes, pharisees, and elders, and almost all the Jewish nation, that sense of Scripture must be false, which their ecclesiastical guides alleged, to prove that Jesus was not the true Messiah, and that "according to their law, he was to die;" and that sense of the Scripture must be true, which by the apostles and their converts was alleged to prove, that Jesus was the Messiah promised to the Jews. Now, "how vainly (saith R. H.*) doth any one pretend, or promise himself a certainty of any thing wherein (so many) councils, and a much major part of the church, having all the same means of certainty as he, judgeth contrary; where it seems† the Scripture may be so doubtful, that the sense of the (then) catholic church, or its (greatest) councils, they say, can be to them no certain or infallible interpreter of it, where the judgment or common reason of (these) councils thinks itself so certain of the contrary, as to anathematize dissenters (or cast them out of the church)? On what grounds here these (private) persons, or (new erected) churches, could assure themselves that their own sense of Scripture was true, they having left that of the churches, councils, and of a major part of (Jews), who also judged their sense false, I understand not: surely they will not say, they have this certainty from the Scripture, because the true sense thereof is the thing so mainly questioned, and the certainty or infallibility of the traditive sense of the (Jewish) church they renounced; and then, which only is left, their own judgment, or their own common reason, when that of (their greatest) councils, or major part of (their) church-guides, differs from it, one would think should be a more fallible ground to them, than the judgment or common reason of the church. For‡ (a man) to presume himself certain in a matter of faith, or in his own sense of Scripture (though the literal expression be never so clear), where so many learned and his superiors, (comparing other texts, &c.) are of a contrary judgment; this (saith R. H.) is the same as if, in a matter of sense, a dim-sighted person should profess himself certain that an object is white, when a multitude of others, the most clear-sighted that can be found, having all the same means of a right sensation as he hath, pronounce it black, or of another colour." Moreover, § if these Scriptures or reasons be so clear, even to the ignorant and unlearned Jews, must they not be as clear to their church-guides? And may not then their judgments more securely be relied upon, at least for any thing which is presumed to be clear? "For if the Scriptures ‖ be maintained so clear in necessaries, that every one using a right endeavour cannot mistake in them; then shall the church-governors much rather, by reason of this clearness obvious to every rustic, not err in them; and so shall the people, the more the rule of faith is proved to be clear, the more securely rely on, and be referred in them to their direction."

4. If you pretend a more sincere endeavour in those few converts, to find out the sense of Scripture, or search out the truth in these matters; which, in the case of the Bereans, your Scripture seemeth to assert:

Ans. I answer still with the same author,* "That since all parties do pretend sincere endeavour in the right understanding of the Scriptures, and after it do differ so much in their sense of it, it follows, that such sincere endeavours being indifferently allowed to all parties, the sense of Scripture (and the verdict of true reason) ought to be pronounced clear, if on any, on that side as the major part doth apprehend it (which certainly was not the primitive converts, but the unbelieving Jews, and their ecclesiastical superiors)." For surely,† "we have reason to presume that the chief guides of the church, in their consults concerning a point necessary to salvation delivered in Scripture (as that of the Messiah was), use at least as much endeavour as a plain rustic doth to understand the meaning of it." And, "whatsoever other thing is supposed necessary besides sincere endeavour, or is understood to be included in it (as freedom from passion and secular interest, or also a freely professing the truths, which their sincere endeavour discovers to them), none can rationally imagine, but that the supreme church-governors should be as much or more disengaged herein than private men:" and,‡ "that passion and interest blind private men or ourselves, sooner than general councils, or a major part of the church."

See therefore here the wisdom of the unbelieving Jews, "who to preserve themselves from erring in this matter, made use of the securest way that reason could imagine, (saith R. H.§) or that Christians are prescribed, whilst for the sense of the Scriptures that were controverted in this point of the Messiah, they chose not to rely on their own judgments, but on that of the supremest guides of the church, and judges of Divine truth, that were afforded them on earth; and so if they erred, yet took the wisest course to have missed erring, that religion or reason could dictate. To which guides also the subjects of this former communion all believed submission of their private judgments to be due, and to be commanded; from whence also it follows, that till they are convinced of error in this point, viz. that no submission was due" to the decrees of all these councils, and the concurring judgment of those spiritual guides by whom your Jesus was condemned, "they are not capable of being convinced in any other matter."

If, lastly, you affirm that the common people had conviction and demonstration from the miracles of Christ of the falsehood of the decrees, and the interpretations of their church-guides in this matter, and of the truth of that Christianity, which they embraced in opposition to those said decrees:

Ans. This I confess is a great truth, but then the Roman doctors cannot plead it without rejecting most of their professed tenets, and their strongest pleas for absolute submission to the major part of their church-guides. For,

1. Admit our Saviour and his apostles wrought true miracles, how did the vulgar perceive them so to be but by their senses? and how did they infer from them the truth of Christianity, but by their private reasons? Now* "the evidence of sense and reason must be both neglected (saith the Romanist), when a Divine revelation declares any thing contrary to them;" this, and this only, being their defence of transubstantiation against the common sense and reason of mankind. Now, of the certainty of a Divine revelation, or the true sense of Scripture, they make the judgment of the major part of their church-guides to be sufficient evidence, and so there was sufficient evidence, according to this rule, that all the miracles, which Christ and his apostles seemed to work, were done in opposition to Divine revelation, or the true sense of Scripture.

2. Certain it is that the rulers of the Jews, and the prevailing part of the whole nation, differed from the converted Christians in their apprehensions of these miracles, and judged them all diabolical impostures, or trials of their faith, &c. "Now this seems necessary to be granted, (saith R. H.†) that in what kind of knowledge soever it be (whether of our sense or reason, in whatever art or science), one can never rightly assure himself concerning his own knowledge; that he is certain of any thing for a truth, which all or most others, of the same or better abilities for their cognoscitive faculties, in all the same external means or grounds of the knowledge thereof, do pronounce an error. So that where all or most differ from me, it seems a strange pride not to imagine this defect in myself, rather than them; especially when, as all the grounds of my science are communicated to them, and when, as for my own mistakes, I cannot know exactly the extent of supernatural delusions." According therefore to this rule, it was strange pride in the first converts to Christianity among the Jews, to judge the miracles of Christ or his apostles true, when most of their own nation, as well as heathens, differed from them in that apprehension, and spoke so freely every where against the sect of Christians.

3. The truth of the pretences of our Lord and his apostles, depended on two things, viz. the fulfilling of prophecies, and the truth of his miracles. ‡"Now, according to the Roman principles, no man could be certain of the truth of either of these without the authority of the then present church. For the fulfilling of prophecies depended on the sense of many obscure places of Scripture, of which, say they, the major part of the church-guides must judge: and for miracles, they tell us that there is no way of judging true from false, but by the authority of the church. Now, if these things be so, what ground could the first Jewish converts have to believe Christ was the true Messiah, or a worker of true miracles, when, in believing both these things, they must oppose the authority of the then present church?"

4. All that hath been discoursed in answer to the former pleas, serves also against this: for who shall be judge whether these miracles were true, and were sufficient to confirm the Christian faith? Those persons, whose office it was to judge both of true prophets and true miracles, or those who had no power or commission so to do? Were not the Jewish Sanhedrin and other rulers of that church more able judges of the truth, and the validity of any miracles pretended to be wrought by Christ and his apostles, than was that multitude which, as experience teacheth, may be imposed upon with ease? Were not those guides, who were appointed to be judges in all other matters, the proper judges of this controversy? Have we not reason to believe their judgment was as free from interest and passion, and their endeavours to search out the truth of these relations as sincere, as was the judgment or endeavours of the laity? When therefore these church-guides did, notwithstanding those pretended miracles of Christ and his apostles, conclude unanimously that Christ was a deceiver, was it not absurd to say that what they so universally determined, might be discerned by any private judgment to be the clearest falsehood? that vulgar persons had demonstration in this matter against the judgment of the whole body of their guides, and that their common reason was able to discern that to be manifestly true, which the same common reason of their superiors judged to be manifestly false?

§. 6. Thus have we seen that Scripture and reason do more countenance the Jew pleading against our Lord, and the first Christian converts, than they do countenance the papist pleading against protestants. In the last place the Jew may argue from tradition thus, viz.

These spiritual guides, in making this determination, and passing of this judgment concerning Jesus, were guided by that rule, which, by the greatest part of Christians, I mean the Roman catholics, is highly magnified and equalled with the Holy Scriptures, viz. tradition, acknowledged by the present church for such. *And so your Jesus must also upon this account be deemed an impostor, or the pretences and pleadings of the Romanist against the protestant, from the tradition of the church, must be acknowledged to be in vain. For,

1. It is most certain that the Jews had a tradition generally received amongst them, that their Messiah at his coming should "restore the kingdom to Israel:" that he should subdue the nations under them, and should erect a temporal dominion in the Jewish nation over all their enemies. Even the disciples of our Lord did constantly believe this article, till by the Holy Ghost's descent upon them, they were better informed. Witness their contest, "who should be greatest in that kingdom," (Matt. xviii. 1.) and the desire of the sons of Zebedee, "to sit one at his right hand, another at his left hand in it." (Matt. xx. 21.) This was our faith, saith Cleophas, "we trusted that this Jesus should have redeemed our Israel:" (Luke xxiv. 21.) and when they were assembled, after his resurrection, their first inquiry is this: "Lord, wilt thou now restore the kingdom to Israel?" (Acts i. 6.) It is therefore certain, that this was the received tradition of the whole Jewish church, grounded, as they supposed, upon the Scriptures, which did necessitate them to expect a glorious Messiah,† not such a one (saith Trypho) as your mean and despised Jesus was.

2. It was also a tradition which generally obtained amongst the Jews, that their Elias, who was called the Tishbite, was to appear again in person before the advent of the true Messiah: so was that place of Malachi, translated by the LXX. three hundred and eighty years before our Saviour's coming; "Behold, I send unto you Elias τὸν Θεσβίτην before the great and terrible day of the Lord come." (Mal. iv. 5.) All we expect (saith Trypho), *that Christ should be anointed by Elias, who is for to come; and because this Elias is not come, we think your Jesus cannot be the Christ. Accordingly the scribes, or the expounders of the law, did with one voice declare it necessary that Elias should first come.†

3. It was the general tradition of the Jews, that the law of Moses should be perpetually obliging to them; and that it was to be observed even in the days of the Messiah. On this presumption certainly it was that Christ's disciples, after his resurrection, were strict observers of the law of Moses for a considerable time; and so were also many thousands of the Jewish converts. St. Peter was so nice in observation of the Jewish customs, that till he was informed better by a vision, he thought such meat was utterly unlawful as was forbidden by the law; so that when in that vision he was bid "to slay and eat," he presently cries out, as a man tempted to an unlawful act, "Not so, Lord, for I have never eaten any thing that is unclean." (Acts x. 12.) St. James gives an account to Paul of the great zeal that all the Jewish converts had to the law of Moses, in these words, "Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of the Jews there are which believe, and they are all zealous of the law." (Acts xxi. 20.) He farther tells him, how highly they were all offended with him, because they were informed he had taught that they were not obliged to yield obedience to the constitutions and customs of the Jewish law; and, lastly, doth exhort him to do what might be proper to cause these zealots to believe that "he also walked orderly, and kept the law," (ver. 21. 24.) St. Jerome‡ and Sulpicius § inform us, that fourteen immediate succeeding bishops, with their flocks, were all observers of the law of Moses. And by the unbelieving Jews nothing was more abhorred than the thoughts of changing their Mosaic customs: for upon this account St. Stephen was accused of blasphemy against Moses and the law, because he said, "that the Messiah should change the customs which Moses had delivered to them." (Acts vi. 11. 14.) This accusation before the scribes, the elders, and high-priest, was deemed sufficient to prove him guilty of that capital offence of blasphemy. On this account they bring St. Paul before the judgment-seat of Gallio; because, say they, he did persuade men to worship God παρὰ τὸν νόμον, against, or otherwise than was commanded by the law of Moses. (Acts xviii. 13.) And this opinion they grounded chiefly upon those places, which seem to speak of the perpetual duration of those statutes, and say they shall be "ordinances to them for ever;" (Exod. xii. 17. Lev. xxiii. 21. Deut. xxix. 29.) and consequently seem to infer a declaration from the mouth of God, that they should not be altered.

Moreover it is certain, that as the protestants condemn as sinful and pernicious many traditions and customs of the Romish church; so did that Jesus, whom Christians honour as the true Messiah, as frequently inveigh against and solemnly condemn many traditions, which then were generally received and practised in the Jewish church, as vain and sinful customs, and such as tended to make void the Scriptures, and render the whole Jewish worship vain. He therefore seemeth to have been as great an enemy to ecclesiastical traditions, though they were generally owned by the then present church as such, as protestants can be esteemed.

Lastly, Certain it is that the superiors and church-rulers, or at least the major and prevailing part of the church-rulers, did then as firmly and unquestionably believe that those traditions, which were condemned by our Jesus, and which so evidently proved, if true, he was not the Messiah promised to the Jews, were both agreeable to the word of God, expounded by their church-tradition, and were delivered to them by Moses, and the patriarchs, and prophets, and were continually practised by their forefathers, as doth the Roman church believe that her traditions were taught and practised by Christ or his apostles, and by their successors, throughout all ages of the church. Hence are they often styled by them, "the traditions of the ancients,* or the traditions received by succession from their fathers:" and in their later writers they are always held to be derived from God by Moses, together with the written law, and as an explication of it. Hence, like good Roman catholics, they were more "exceedingly zealous for the traditions of their fathers," than for the law itself. They † accuse all who walked not according to these customs of their fathers, as persons who forsook the law of Moses: and to do any thing against these customs of their fathers, was reputed criminal. This being so,

I ask, why the tradition of the major part of the church catholic, or Christians in any age whatsoever, and their concurring judgment, that what she doth at present teach and practise, she received from Christ and his apostles, should be esteemed sufficient to render all those persons guilty of heresy and schism, who do not yield assent to what they teach, or a compliance with their practices, as Roman catholics assert; and yet that the general tradition of the then present Jewish church, even the including the disciples of Christ, should not conclude them schismatics and heretics, who, being members of that church, would not assent unto what they so generally taught, or comply with that, which they practised, as delivered to them by Moses, and the patriarchs, and prophets?

§. 7. But to apply these things, if it be possible, yet more particularly unto the pleadings of the Roman church, and to shew the weakness and the pernicious results of their most specious pretences: I add,

1. That notwithstanding it was the duty of the priests and rulers of the Jewish church, both to preserve and teach unto the people the knowledge of the law, yet did the major part of these church-guides both oft and dangerously swerve from this their duty: for they did teach and practise, and direct the people into those ways, which were destructive to the eternal welfare of their souls. God by his prophets doth complain, without exception, of them, that "they erred in vision, and stumbled in judgment;" that "the teachers of his people made lies their refuge, and under falsehood hid themselves, saying, The overflowing scourge shall not come to us;" (Isa. xxviii. 7. 15.) that their "interpreters had transgressed against him, that his watchmen were blind, they were all ignorant, all dumb dogs that could not bark, sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber; that they were greedy dogs, that could not have enough:" (Isa. xliii. 27. lvi. 10, 11.) "Shepherds that could not understand; that the priests said not, Where is the Lord? and they that handled the law knew him not; that the pastors also transgressed against him, and the prophets prophesied by Baal; and walked after the things that did not profit:" (Jer. ii. 8.) that "his prophets prophesied falsely, and the priests bare rule by their means:" (Jer. v. 31.) that "from the prophet to the priest every one dealt falsely:" (Jer. vi. 13, 14.) that "they healed also the hurts of the daughter of his people slightly, saying, Peace, peace, when there was no peace:" (Jer. viii. 9.) that "his wise men had rejected the word of the Lord;" (Jer. xxiii. 1, 2.) and that "the pastors, whose business it was to feed his sheep, destroyed, and scattered, and drove them away, and did not visit them:" (ver. 11.) that "both priests and prophets were profane:" (Ezek. xxii. 26.) that "they had violated his law, and had profaned his holy things, putting no difference betwixt the holy and profane, the clean and the unclean, and hid their eyes from the sabbaths:" (Ezek. xxxiv. 1. 6.) that "the shepherds of Israel fed themselves, but did not feed the flock, the diseased did they not strengthen, neither did they heal that which was sick, nor bring again that which was driven away, nor seek that which was lost, but with force and cruelty they ruled; so that the sheep were scattered because there was no shepherd:" (Hos. iv. 6.) that "they rejected knowledge, so that God's people were destroyed for lack of it:" (Zeph. iii. 4.) that "her prophets were light and treacherous persons, her priests had polluted the sanctuary, they had done violence to the law: that they had forgotten the law of their God, they departed out of the way, they caused many to stumble at the law, they corrupted the covenant of Levi." (Mal. ii. 8.)

Moreover, of these guides it is expressly said, that "they which led the people, caused them to err," (Isa. iii. 12.) "and destroyed the way of their paths:" (ix. 16.) that "the leaders of the people caused them to err, and they that were led of them were destroyed, and that their shepherds caused them to go astray." (Jer. l. 6.) Our Lord declares, that "they were fools, blind guides, full of hypocrisy and of iniquity; that they had taken away the key of knowledge, and had shut up the kingdom of heaven against men, not going in themselves, nor suffering them that were entering to go in:" (Matt. xxiii. 13. Luke xi. 52.) that they made many false decisions in matters of so great importance, as to "make void the law of God, and render his whole worship vain:" (Matt. xv. 6. 9.) that "they transgressed the commandment of God by their traditions;" that notwithstanding their instructions, the "people were as sheep without a shepherd," (Matt. ix. 26.) or only had "such guides as would most certainly," if they submitted to their guidance, "lead them to the pit." (Matt. xv. 14.) Hence therefore I infer,

1. That even those spiritual guides, who are by God's appointment constituted to instruct his people, and to feed his flock (for such our Lord acknowledged the scribes and pharisees and rulers of the Jewish church to be), may scatter and destroy that flock: and they, who are set for the judgment of the Lord, and for controversies, may violate, corrupt, pervert that law they should interpret; they may be partial in it; they may depart out of the way; they may make the commandments of God of none effect, and his whole worship vain by their traditions; they may cause their sheep to err, stumble, and go astray, and that so dangerously, that they who are led by them shall be destroyed with them, and find no entrance into bliss. And hence, I hope, I may assume the boldness to conclude against the infallibility of our spiritual governors, or the concurring judgments of the major part of them; which is sufficient to root up even the foundations of the Romish Babel.

2. Hence I infer, that notwithstanding all the forementioned scriptures, which say, it was the duty of the people to ask of their spiritual guides the meaning of the law, and seek the knowledge of it at their mouths, and to inquire after their judgments in all those controversies they were not able to resolve; I say, hence I infer, that notwithstanding this, the people were not absolutely obliged to rest in the decision of the major part of these church-guides, or bound to practise all that they approved; for then an obligation must be laid upon them, not only to err in judgment with them, to countenance false prophets, and to speak peace to themselves, when there is no peace; but also to violate the law, and to comply with their false glosses and corrupt interpretations of it; nay, which is more unreasonable, they must be then obliged to be destroyed, to fall into the pit, and to exclude themselves from the enjoyment of Christ's kingdom: whereas it is a contradiction to say, that God obligeth any person to transgress his law; and it is little less than blasphemy to say, he doth require them to destroy themselves, to fall into the pit, or to deprive themselves of the enjoyment of his kingdom. Hence therefore I infer this corollary:

That neither are all Christian people, churches, or nations, absolutely bound to rest in the decisions of the major part of Christian bishops, nor to practise all that they approve and impose:—which proposition overthrows that absolute and blind obedience to their church-guides or councils, which Romanists so stiffly plead for.

3. Hence it is also evident, that private persons, or that the minor part of the whole church, may have sufficient ground, either from reason or clear Scripture, for their refusal of assent, and of submission to the authority and definitions of the major part of their church-guides; for the Jews were bound to believe Christ to be the true Messiah, although the high-priest and the elders had pronounced him a deceiver and a malefactor: they were obliged to believe his miracles were wrought, not by Beelzebub, but the Spirit of God; that Christ's kingdom was not of this world; that John Baptist was that Elias, which was for to come; and that to eat with hands unwashed, to heal the sick, to pluck some ears of corn upon the sabbath-day, were not unlawful actions, although the major part of their church-guides taught and believed the contrary. (Matt. xv. 5.) They were obliged not to void that law of nature, which required children to relieve their own distressed parents; and therefore stood obliged not to comply with those traditions of the scribes and pharisees, which made the word of God of none effect, and would not suffer them to yield obedience to it. And seeing they had "many traditions and decrees of the like nature,"* which obtained amongst them, and only were rejected by the Sadducees and disciples of our Lord; in none of these could they comply with their church-guides without the violation of that law of God, which sure they had sufficient ground and reason to observe. In a word; in all those cases, in which they were not bound to rest in the decision of the major part of their church-guides, or practise what they did approve, that is, in all the cases mentioned in the former head, they must have had sufficient ground, either from Scripture or from reason, for their refusal of submission to them. Now these three inferences do fully justify the reformation of the church of England.

§. 8. 4. From what hath been discoursed, we may see the weakness of those pleas the Roman doctors make in their own defence, and of the arguments they use to shew, that it is impossible they should be guilty of those corruptions in doctrine, or in manners, which we charge them with. For, their most specious pretences are to this effect; that we confess the church of Rome was once both true and orthodox: shew then, say they, how we did cease to be so, whether by schism or heresy: with schism you cannot justly charge us; "for † that can never be of a much major and more dignified part, in respect of a less and inferior, subject to it; because this main body in any division is rightly taken for the whole, from which a separation is schism, and to which every member ought to adhere, as to the body and head here upon earth to which it belongs:" we therefore being the much major and more dignified part of the church, cannot be schismatics in reference to protestants, who are, and were at their departure, a less and an inferior body to us. If heresy be the crime charged upon us, by what church were we condemned? What body of men before you found fault with those corruptions which you pretend to reform? for sure, it was not possible for so many errors and corruptions to come into the church, and no one take notice of them? Could this be so, where was the watchful eye of Providence over the church? But, if we could suppose this Providence was unconcerned for the preservation of the church, could all the pastors fall asleep at once? Or, could they all conspire together to deceive their posterity? Moreover, since God will always have a visible church, what can you mention besides that which holds communion with the church of Rome, as the then present visible church of Christ, when you began your reformation (except perhaps some eastern churches, which you dislike almost as much as that of Rome)? And if that church could teach such errors as you charge her with, as matters of the Christian faith, what assurance can you have she hath not erred in defining the canon of Scriptures, and delivering some book or books for the word of God, which are not so? This is the sum of all the pleadings of the Roman party in their own behalf: and they are only such as the Jewish doctors might have pleaded with as much plausibility against our Lord's disciples, and that first Christian church which they planted in that nation. For,

* Παρόμοια τοιαῦτα πολλά. Mark vii. 8.

† R. H. Rational Account, disc. iii. chap. 5. §. 63. p. 203.

1. Where, may they say, will * you produce the men of former ages, who taxed the Jewish church with such errors and corruptions as your Jesus did, and bid men "beware of the leaven of the scribes and pharisees," that is, the most holy and learned members of our church? Do not the Christians themselves acknowledge, that we were once a "right vine," and the "beloved of the Lord?" How or when therefore did we cease to be so? If by schism, produce that major part or body of the Jewish church from which we separated, when first your Jesus, like another Luther, appeared among us? Or, if by heresy we ceased to be so, by what church, what councils, were we condemned? Who can believe that God would ever suffer such dangerous doctrines to prevail in his own church, and raise up no church-guides, no prophets, to discover things so destructive to her very being, till these new teachers and reformers first arose? Where then had God a true church in the world, if not among the people of the Jews? What other church could Christ or his apostles mention, besides that which he so often taxed with voiding the commandments of God, and rendering his worship vain, because of some traditions which they had received from their forefathers? If then God suffered this church to be all overrun with such a fatal leprosy, and gave no clear discovery thereof, where was the watchful eye of Providence? Where was that God, who promised that he would "put his name for ever in Jerusalem, and that his eyes and heart should be perpetually there?" But suppose that Providence was unconcerned, did all our pastors fall asleep at once? Or, could they all conspire to deceive posterity? Were not the oracles of God committed to us Jews? Did not your Christians receive them from us? If then our church might teach her children such destructive errors as you charge her with, how can you be assured that she hath not erred even in that canon of Scriptures which from her you have received?

Now though this instance, which I have largely prosecuted, may be sufficient to shew the vanity of the most plausible pretences of R. H. against the protestants, both in his Rational Account and his Discourse, it might be farther manifested, that they as strongly plead for the heathen world against the Jews; for the Mahometan against the Christian; for the priests of Baal against Elias and those seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal; for the prevailing Arian against the orthodox; for the fornicator, the simoniac, the covetous, and the debauched person, in all those ages, in which these were the epidemical and almost general diseases of the clergy, that is, from the tenth to the sixteenth century; and, lastly, for antichrist himself, when he, according to the predictions of the Scripture, and the confession of many Roman catholics, shall drive the church, that is, the orthodox professors of the faith, into the wilderness, and slay the witnesses of Christ, and of his doctrine. But,

To conclude, If this be truly the result of the most specious pretences of the Roman party to draw our souls into their deadly snares, if all their fairest pleas do make for Judaism more naturally than they do for popery; if what they urge, to prove the protestant divines to be deceivers of the people, doth more strongly prove our blessed Jesus a deceiver, which is the highest blasphemy; I hope that no true lover of this Jesus will be much tempted by such pleas to entertain a good opinion of the Romish faith: it being certainly that faith, which cannot be established but on the ruins of Christianity, nor embraced by any protestant, but with the greatest hazard, if not the ruin of his soul.

THE

ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

WITH ANNOTATIONS.

PREFACE.

THE history of the acts of the Apostles, if it relateth matters truly, is an invincible demonstration of the truth of Christian faith. For,

First, It confirms the truth of Christ's great promise, John xiv. 12. He that believeth in me, shall do greater works than I have done; because I go to my Father. (See the note there.)

It confirms his promise made to his disciples, that the Spirit of his Father should speak in them, and give them a mouth and wisdom which all their adversaries should not be able to gainsay; (Matt. x. 20. Luke xxi. 15. Acts vi. 10.) that they who believed in him after that he was glorified, should receive the Holy Ghost; (John vii. 39.) and the saying of his forerunner, that he who was to come after him, should baptize them with the Holy Ghost, and with fire; (Matt. iii. 11. Acts ii. 3.) and of Christ's declaration, that when this Spirit was come he should convince the world of sin, because they believed not in him, (John xvi. 9. Acts ii. 37.) and of righteousness, because he went to the Father, (ver. 33.)

It confirms the truth of this prediction, that after he was lifted up, he would draw all men after him; (John xii. 31.) when he was sown in the earth, he should bring forth much fruit; (ver. 14.) and of his comparison of the kingdom of God to a grain of mustard-seed, (Mark iv. 30.) for its wonderful increase: (Acts ii. 41. iv. 4. v. 14.) so mightily grew the word of God and prevailed. (Acts xix. 20.)

* Vid. Stillingfl. Sermon on Acts xxiv. 14.

It confirms all that Christ had said concerning the kingdom of Satan falling down like lightning, (Luke x. 17.) the casting out and judging the prince of this world, (John xii. 31. xvi. 11.) and the conquest his disciples should have over all the power of the enemy, (Luke x. 18.) by shewing the efficacy the gospel had to turn men from the power of Satan unto God.

To make these things more evident, I shall reflect more largely upon two particulars, which are the frequent subjects of this history: viz. the gifts of the Holy Ghost conferred upon the apostles and others, partly by the laying on of the apostles' hands upon them, and partly at the preaching of the apostles to them: and, (2.) the miracles, which the apostles, and other preachers of the gospel, wrought for confirmation of their doctrine. And,

First, Of these miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost, these Acts of the Apostles have left upon record these signal instances;

(1.) That on the day of Pentecost, the apostles and disciples of Christ Jesus being met together, cloven tongues like to fire fell upon them, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance; adding, that when this miracle was wrought upon them, there were devout men of every nation, who heard them speak in their own tongues the wondrous works of God; and upon this account did with amazement ask, Are not all these which speak Galileans? And how hear we every man in our own tongues wherein we were born? and that St. Peter, one of Christ's disciples, did then and there declare, that the same Jesus, whom the Jews had crucified, was by God raised up, and exalted to his own right hand, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, had shed forth this which they now saw and heard; and that he with these sayings instantly converted three thousand souls; and that God daily added to the church such as should be saved. (Acts ii.)

(2.) That when St. Philip had converted many people of Samaria to the Christian faith, and had baptized them, St. Peter and St. John laid their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost: and that Simon Magus seeing this, offered them money to have this power imparted to him, that on whomsoever he should lay his hands, they might receive the Holy Ghost. (Acts viii.)

(3.) That whilst St. Peter was preaching to Cornelius, his kinsmen, and near friends, the Holy Ghost fell on all those that heard the word, and they spake with tongues, and magnified God in the presence of the Jews. (Acts x. 44, 45.)

(4.) That St. Paul finding twelve disciples of John the Baptist who had not yet received the Holy Ghost, he baptizeth them in the name of the Lord Jesus; and when he had laid his hands upon them, they received the Holy Ghost, and prophesied. (Acts xix. 6.)

Now all these things were done, saith this record, in populous and famous cities; viz.

The first in Jerusalem at the great feast of Pentecost, immediately ensuing Christ's ascension, and therefore at a time when all Jerusalem was met to celebrate that feast, and when the fame of the Messiah expected suddenly to appear, (Luke xix. 11.) had brought great multitudes of Jews and proselytes out of all nations to attend the issue of that expectation; and so the matter of fact, if true, must be well known by all Judea so to be: nor could it possibly be false, but all then present and alive when first this fact was published to the world, must be so many living witnesses of the falsehood of it.

The second populous city, whose converts received this effusion of the Holy Ghost, was the metropolis of Samaria, according to our Lord's prediction, You shall be my witnesses in Samaria. (Acts i. 8.) The time when this was done is noted by three characters; viz. that it was done soon after the death of Stephen, (Acts viii. 2.) and before the conversion of St. Paul, (ver. 1.) and when Simon the celebrated magician was there, and had so gained upon the people of that city, that they all gave heed to him, and owned him as the great power of God, (ver. 9, 10.)

The third happened in the city of Cæsarea (the seat of the Roman governor of Judea, inhabited by Jews, Samaritans, and gentiles, and well stocked with Roman soldiers), upon the person and kindred of Cornelius, a centurion of the Roman band, one well reported of by the whole nation of the Jews; and so, not only Cæsarea, but all Judea, and Rome also, must be acquainted with the conversion of a man so eminent for his post, so well approved by the whole Jewish nation for his piety. The character of the time when this was done, we learn from these circumstances, that before the word was preached to the Jews only; and that this was the first instance of their preaching to convert a gentile to the faith of Christ. (Acts xi. 19.)

The fourth was done in Ephesus, the metropolis of the proconsular Asia, about twelve years after the former, in a city where dwelt many Jews, who were teachers of the law in opposition to the gospel, and who had there a synagogue: and after this, all Asia, both Jews and Greeks, heard the word of Christ. (Acts xix. 10. 17.)

Secondly, Of the miracles performed by the apostles and other persons assisted by the Holy Ghost, this history saith in the general, that with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, (Acts iv. 33.) and that in confirmation of it many signs and wonders were done by the apostles' hands. In particular it informs us,

(1.) That at Jerusalem, Peter and John cured by the name of Jesus a man forty years old, who had been so lame from his mother's womb, that he was carried from one place to another; that this was done to the astonishment of the people, who knew he had been so long impotent in his feet, but now saw him leaping and walking, and praising God: and that these two apostles being brought before the whole Sanhedrin on this account, and asked by what power or by what name they had done this cure, they openly declare to them that they had done it by faith in the name of that Jesus of Nazareth whom these men had crucified; and that the council seeing the man that was healed standing by them, were forced to confess, that it was manifest to all them that dwelt at Jerusalem, that a notable miracle had undeniably been done by them, (iii. 2. 11. iv. 6. 16.)

(2.) That when the chief priests and sadducees had put them by night into prison for preaching in the name of Jesus, though the prison was found shut with all safety, and the keepers standing without before the doors; yet were the apostles on the morrow found standing in the temple, and teaching the people; the angel of the Lord having opened the prison doors, and brought them forth, and commanded them thus to preach: (v. 18—25.) and that this so affected them, that they not only doubted what this might come to, (ver. 24.) but were prevailed upon by the great and celebrated Gamaliel, to let these men alone, lest haply they should be found to fight against God, (ver. 39.)

(3.) That Stephen being full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people, (vi. 8.)

(4.) That these miracles were so certainly and so effectually performed, that thereupon the people brought forth the sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them; and that a multitude came out of the cities round about them to Jerusalem, bringing sick folks, and them that were vexed with unclean spirits, and they were healed every one: (v. 15, 16.) and also, that by their miracles and preaching, they converted to the Christian faith at one time three thousand, (ii. 41.) at another time five thousand persons, (iv. 4.) that men were daily added to the church, (ii. 47.) that believers were the more added to the Lord, even multitudes of men and women, (v. 14.) that the word of the Lord increased, and the multitude of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly, and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith, (vi. 7.)

(5.) That upon St. Philip's preaching Christ at Samaria, the people, with one accord, gave heed to the things which he spake, beholding the miracles which he did; for unclean spirits crying with a loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them, and many, taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed: and that these things prevailed there, not only with many men and women to receive Christian baptism, but also forced Simon Magus, a famous sorcerer, to believe; and being baptized, to continue with Philip, wondering at the signs and miracles done by him, (viii. 6, 7. 13.)

(6.) That whilst St. Paul, a zealous pharisee, and a more zealous persecutor, breathed out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, and had received commission from the high-priests and elders to bring them bound unto Jerusalem to be punished; as he came nigh to Damascus, a light from heaven above the brightness of the sun shone round about him, and struck him blind; and the Lord Jesus, by a voice from heaven, said unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? and that one Ananias being sent by the same Jesus to lay his hands upon him, he presently receives his sight, is filled with the Holy Ghost, and preacheth Christ in the Jewish synagogues erected in that famous city: (Acts ix.) and to this miraculous conversion he twice appeals, (chap. xxii. xxvi.) in vindication of himself, declaring, that partly the high-priests and elders, partly those persons that were with him then, partly one Ananias, a devout man according to the law, and a man of good report among all the Jews, could bear witness to them, (xxii. 5. 9. 12.) and that none of these things were hid from king Agrippa's knowledge, they being not done in a corner; and by this narrative he almost persuaded that king to become a Christian, xxvi. 26. 28. (See note on xxii. 6.)

(7.) That when St. Peter, being at Lydda, a city of Palestine, said to one Æneas there, who had kept his bed eight years, and was sick of a palsy, Æneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole: arise, and make thy bed; he immediately did so; and that thereupon all that dwelt at Lydda seeing this, were turned to the Lord, (ix. 32. 35.)

(8.) That the same Peter at Joppa, a city of Phœnicia, lying upon the Mediterranean, raiseth one Tabitha from the dead; and that this being known throughout all Joppa, many believed in the Lord, (ibid. ver. 39. 42.) And here let it be noted, that at Jabneh, near Joppa, sat the great Sanhedrin; and at Lydda were famous schools and eminent persons of the Jewish nation and religion.

(9.) That at Cyprus St. Paul converted Sergius Paulus, the deputy of the island, by striking Elymas, a Jewish sorcerer there, blind with a word, because he sought to turn the deputy, or the proconsul, from the faith, (xiii. 7. 12.)

(10.) That at Iconium, a city of Lycaonia, where also was a synagogue of the Jews, Paul and Barnabas so preached, that a great multitude, both of the Jews and Greeks, believed, (xiv. 1.) and that the Lord gave testimony to his word by granting signs and wonders to be done by their hands, (ver. 3.)

(11.) That at Ephesus Paul preached almost three years, and prevailed so much among them, that all Asia, both Jews, there very numerous, and Greeks, resorting to Ephesus, heard, and many of them believed the gospel, God working, in confirmation of it, special miracles by the hand of Paul; so that from his body were brought handkerchiefs and aprons; and by this means the diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them.

(12.) That seven sons of one Sceva a Jew (and of the priests' order, saith the Talmud), which were exorcists, perceiving how powerful Paul was to cast out devils by the name of Jesus, and therefore attempting to exorcise one that had an evil spirit, by the name of that Jesus whom Paul preached (supposing that the very name of Jesus, without faith in him as the true Messiah, would be effectual to cast out devils), they were set upon and overpowered by the evil spirit, and forced to fly from the place naked and wounded; and this being known to all the Jews and Greeks, prevailed with many who formerly had used magic arts to burn their books, confess their deeds, and believe in Jesus: so mightily grew the word of God and prevailed, (chap. xix.)

(13.) That at the isle of Malta, St. Paul not only shook off a viper from his hand that had fastened on it, without harm, but healed the father of Publius, the chief man of the island, lying sick of a fever, by laying his hands upon him; and that thereupon, others in that island who had diseases, came and were healed; and that thereupon they honoured all Paul's companions, and loaded them at their departure with such things as they needed; (Acts xxviii. 3. 10.) which things, if true, must be known to the inhabitants, and also to the two hundred and seventy-six persons who were cast with Paul on that island, (xxvii. 37.)

So that this history affords us an account of miracles, great and many, done in many places, upon persons remarkable and well known: viz. the lame man laid at the beautiful gate of the temple; upon Tabitha, eminent for her works of charity; upon Saul, a zealous persecutor of the church; upon Elymas the sorcerer, opposing the right ways of the Lord; upon the Pythoness at Philippi; (Acts xvi. 18.) upon the sons of Sceva; upon the father of Publius, to the conversion of many thousands, not only of the people, but of multitudes of the priests at Jerusalem; to the astonishment of Simon Magus, that prince of sorcerers, and the conviction and conversion of multitudes of the same wicked art at Ephesus, a city famous for those practices. (See the note on xix. 19.)

Moreover, these miracles were either done in Jerusalem, Samaria, Ephesus, cities of which we have already spoken, or where the Jews abounded; and that so certainly as St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Hebrews, inquires, How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, which was confirmed to us by signs and wonders, and divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost? (Heb. ii. 3, 4.) And as for the conversion of St. Paul, it was done at Damascus, the metropolis and a noble mart of Syria, where flourished many thousand Jews; upon a person known by the whole nation of the Jews, to be a strict and celebrated pharisee, and once a zealous persecutor of the Christian faith; one who, after his conversion, which happened the next year after our Lord's ascension, was hated and persecuted by his own nation, for preaching up that faith he formerly endeavoured to destroy: and so, not only they at Damascus, and they who journeyed with him, and saw and felt that glorious light which was the means of his conversion, but even the whole Jewish nation must be acquainted with, and even alarmed at, this miraculous and sudden change. Lastly, These miracles were mostly done within two years, and all of them within twenty-seven years, after our Lord's ascension.

Now, when times and places, circumstances and events, are so particularly set down, and are of such a nature as seem to carry in them a conspicuous evidence of the notorious falsehood, or the clear truth of the narration, as it is a sign the historian intended no deceit; so neither seems it easy to conceive, how such great cities and regions should be ignorant of the truth or falsehood of them, or be capable of being imposed upon by such relations.

All that can possibly be offered to impair the credit of these evidences, of the miraculous operations of the Holy Ghost exercised by the apostles, and conferred on such as did embrace the Christian faith, must be comprised in these two particulars, viz. either that these things were not written and published by St. Luke, or in his time; or, that they were not truly written, but contain false stories invented for the credit of Christianity.

Now that this history was universally and originally received by the tradition of the church, amongst her true undoubted Scriptures, Eusebius * sufficiently informs us. Clemens of Alexandria † and Origen confirm the same tradition. And as all agree, that this history was written by St. Luke, and owned as an unquestionable record of Christianity, so do we find it cited by St. Clemens,‡ St. Paul's companion; by Papias,§ who conversed with men of the apostles' time; and by Polycarp,‖ who was St. John's disciple; and Irenæus, who flourished in the second century, hath in a large chapter almost epitomized it: nor do I read of any Jew or gentile who did except against the truth or the sincerity of the relator of these things: now if a record so early and so generally received, and cited by the Christians, may be, without all proof, rejected, as not written by that author whose name it hath still borne; if a writing that has been always unanimously owned among the records of the Christian faith, may be, without all reason, rejected as a spurious or doubtful piece, the truth and credit of all history must be entirely subverted; and so there will be nothing certain left concerning any records of antiquity.

But if, according to this general tradition, this history was indeed writ and published by St. Luke, there must be many myriads still living in Judea, Samaria, Damascus, Ephesus, Cæsarea, and many other places mentioned in these Acts, who could be able to disprove these things, had they been false; which yet was either not at all or unsuccessfully attempted, as the issue, which concluded in its general reception, testifies. We therefore may conclude, that neither Jew nor gentile, orthodox Christian nor apostate, though they were all concerned to do it, found any cause to doubt the certainty of what was thus recorded.

But, to give scepticism its utmost scope; be it, this history was not published till a hundred years after our Lord's ascension; beyond which infidelity cannot go, if we consider the citations of it before that time, and the abridgment of it made by Iræneus not long after; either the facts related in it were true, and then they are a signal evidence of the miraculous operations of the Holy Ghost vouchsafed to Christians; or, they were false; and then, how is it possible they should obtain so easy and so general belief? Could they not know in Judea, Samaria, and Ephesus, and in the other cities mentioned, by what means they were first converted to the Christian faith? must it not be sufficient prejudice to them against these tales, that they had lived so long in the profession of that faith, and had heard nothing of these things, too wonderful, too much conducing to the honour and confirmation of that faith to be so long concealed, had they been truly done by two such eminent apostles as were St. Peter and St. Paul?

CHAP. I.

1. THE former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, [1] of all that Jesus began both to do and teach (as far as I thought this needful for the instruction of a catechumen),

2. Until the day in which he was taken up, after that he [2] through the Holy Ghost had given commandments to the apostles whom he had chosen:

3. To whom also he shewed himself alive after his passion by many [3] infallible proofs (Gr. by many signs or testimonies of his resurrection), being seen of them forty days, and [4] speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God:

4. And, being [5] assembled together (or, eating and conversing) with them, (he) commanded them that they should not (or, not to) depart from Jerusalem, (till power from on high was come upon them, to fit them for their work, Luke xxiv. 49.) but (to) wait for the promise of the Father, which, saith he, ye have heard of me (Gr. for the promise of my Father, of which you have heard).

5. For John truly (Ἰωάννης μὲν, John indeed) baptized with water (only); but (as he said, Matt. iii. 11.) [6] you shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence (i. e. within ten days; for this was spoken on the day of our Lord's ascension, that is, ten days before Pentecost).

6. When they therefore were come together, they asked of him (that which they chiefly desired and expected), saying, Lord, [7] wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? (i. e. Wilt thou now set up that temporal kingdom, in which the Jews shall rule over all nations, which we impatiently expect)?

7. And he said to them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father [8] hath put in his own power (i. e. reserved to himself).

8. But (for your satisfaction in what more concerns you, know that) [9] ye shall receive (a miraculous) power, after the Holy Ghost (which I have promised) is come upon you: and (then) ye shall be witnesses to me (of what I said and did, John xv. 27.) both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and to the [10] uttermost parts of the earth.

9. And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld (him), he was taken up (into heaven); and a cloud received him (and conveyed him) out of their sight.

10. And while they looked steadfastly towards heaven as he went up, behold, two (angels, like) men, stood by them in white apparel;

11. Who also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye (thus) gazing up into heaven, (after him whom ye cannot now see? but the time will come, at the end of the world, when) this same Jesus who is taken up from you into heaven, [11] shall so come (down from thence) in like manner as ye have (now) seen him go into heaven.

12. Then returned they to Jerusalem from the mount called Olivet, [12] which is from Jerusalem a sabbath-day's journey (i. e. seven furlongs).

13. And when they were come in (thither), they [13] went up into an upper room, where abode both Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, Philip, and Thomas, Bartholomew, and Matthew, James the son of Alpheus, and Simon Zelotes, and Judas the brother of James.

14. These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the women, and [14] Mary the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren.

15. And in those days Peter stood up in the midst of the disciples, and said, (the [15] number of the names (of which) together were about a hundred and twenty,)

16. Men and brethren, This Scripture must needs have been (Gr. be) fulfilled, which the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, who was guide to them that took Jesus.

17. For he was numbered with us (being one of the twelve sent out, and empowered by Christ to preach in his name, Matt. x. 1. 5.) and had obtained part of this ministry.

18. Now this man [16] purchased a field with the reward of (his) iniquity (i. e. with the reward of his iniquity had no other advantage, but to return it back to them that gave it, who with it purchased a field); and (then) [17] falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out.

19. And it (this fact) was known to all the dwellers at Jerusalem; insomuch as that field is called in their proper tongue, Aceldama, that is to say, The field of blood.

20. [18] For it is written (by way of prediction concerning him) in the book of Psalms, Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein: and, His bishoprick let another take (or, his habitation shall be desolate, and no man shall dwell in it, and his bishoprick let another take).

21. [19] Wherefore, of these men that have accompanied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, (and so can testify of all he did and said, John xv. 27.)

22. Beginning from the baptism of John unto the same day that he was taken up from us (into heaven), must one be ordained to be witness with us of his resurrection (and of his words and actions).

23. And they appointed two, Joseph called Barsabas, who was surnamed Justus, and Matthias (to be presented before the Lord).

24. And [20] they prayed, and said (Gr. and praying they said), Thou, Lord, who knowest the hearts of all men, shew (by directing the lot to come out with his name) whether of these two thou hast chosen,

25. That he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, [21] that he might go to his own place (as the reward of his iniquity).

26. And (then) [22] they gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apostles (making their number twelve).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. I.

[1] Ver. 1. ΠΕΡΙ᾽ πάντων, Of all that Jesus began both to do and teach.] Since the apostle John hath left on record many things the blessed Jesus did and taught, which are not in St. Luke; yea, since St. Luke himself doth about ten times say Christ taught the people, iv. 15. 31. v. 3. 17. vi. 6. xiii. 10. xix. 47. xx. 1. xxi. 37. xxiii. 5. and yet in none of those places records the words he taught, it is necessary to limit the generality of these words. Now though the word all doth sometime signify the chief of all the things related to, as when our Saviour saith to his disciples, ἐγνώρισα ὑμῖν πάντα, I have made known to you all things which I have heard of my Father, and yet he adds, xvi. 12. I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them yet; notwithstanding, seeing all the excellent discourses of our Saviour mentioned by St. John, and two of his great miracles, the cure of the man born blind, John ix. and the raising of Lazarus, mentioned chap. xi. are not recorded by St. Luke, though these discourses and these miracles deserve well to be ranked among the chief things which Christ did, and taught, I prefer the exposition of these words given in the paraphrase, as being in effect the exposition, which the evangelist's own words afford, Luke i. 4. Ὧν ἤρξατο, which Jesus began to do, that is, which Jesus did; for the gospel of St. Luke contains what was done by Christ from the beginning of his ministry to his assumption; and that ἄρχομαι is frequently an expletive, see Matt. xvi. 22. Mark ii. 23. Luke xv. 24. Acts xi. 15.

[2] Ver. 2. Διὰ πνεύματος ἁγίου, By the Holy Ghost.] These words admit of several constructions, as, (1.) that he had chosen his apostles by the Holy Ghost; but against this it is objected, that the Scripture no where saith that Christ chose his apostles by the Holy Ghost: or, (2.) that he was taken up into heaven by the Holy Ghost, as by the same Spirit he was led into the wilderness: (Luke iv. 1.) or, (3.) that he gave commandments to his disciples by the Holy Ghost: which again is capable of divers constructions; as, first, that he gave them these commandments by the inward operations of the Holy Ghost, which he had breathed into them: (John xx. 22.) but this sense seems not very probable, (1.) because, after his breathing of the Holy Ghost upon them, he still saith, he will send the promise of his Father upon them, viz. the promise of the Holy Ghost; and bid sthem stay at Jerusalem till they had received him, Luke xxiv. 29. and here, ver. 4. and, (2.) because he is said, ver. 3. to speak unto them the things which belonged to the kingdom of God: or, secondly, as he did all his miracles, and delivered all his doctrines, by virtue of the Holy Ghost, whilst he discharged his prophetic office; (see note on Matt. iii. 16.) so being yet on earth, he spake these things, and gave these commands to his apostles, touching his kingdom by the same Spirit. And his passion, mentioned in the verse following, renders it probable that St. Luke speaks of the commands relating to his kingdom, which he had given them before his passion.

[3] Ver. 3. Ἐν πολλοῖς τεκμηρίοις, By many infallible proofs.] For, by speaking to, by walking, and by eating with them, he gave them certain indications that he lived; that he was seen and handled by them, was a sure evidence that he had a true and natural body; that he permitted Thomas to view the scars of his feet and hands, and put his hand into his side, was a certain token that the body raised was the same which was crucified, and pierced by the soldier's lance.

[4] And speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God.] viz. Of the teaching the doctrine of this kingdom to all nations, and the receiving them into it by baptism who believed, and professed to own it; (Matt. xxviii. 19.) of the benefits which were promised to them who cordially believed their doctrine, and the condemnation which belonged to them who would not believe it; (Mark xvi. 15, 16.) of the encouragements and assistances he would afford them in the propagation of it by his continual presence with them, (Matt. xxviii. 20.) and the assistance of his Spirit, (ver. 4, 5.) and by the miracles by which their doctrine should be confirmed by them, and others, who believed it. (Mark xvi. 17, 18.)

[5] Ver. 4. Συναλιζόμενος, Being assembled with them.] So Phavorinus saith, that ἁλίζω is συναθροίζω, I assemble together: so Herodotus in Clio,* οὕτω μὲν δὴ συνηλίζοντο, so they met together; and again, Cyrus συναλίσας εἰς ταυτὸ,† gathering together all his father's herds; and cap. 125. καὶ τὰ μὲν αὐτέων ὁ Κύρος συνάλισε, Cyrus gathered together some of the Persians; and in his Euterpe he saith, that Pheron,‡ king of Egypt, εἰς μίην πόλιν συναλίζων, gathering together all the women that had been false to their husbands into one city, burnt them all with the city; and so in Melpomene, ἁλίζειν στρατὸν, is to assemble, or gather together the army. Now this assembling them together is, by Dr. Lightfoot, thought to have been in Galilee; but this is contrary both to the text in Luke and here: for Luke xxiv. 49. he commands them καθίζεσθαι, to abide in the city of Jerusalem, here μὴ χωρίζεσθαι ἀπὸ, not to depart from Jerusalem, ἀλλὰ παραμένειν, but to abide there; and it is added in both places, that having spoken this, he led them out (of Jerusalem) to Bethany, (Luke xxiv. 51. Acts i. 9.) and there was taken up into heaven, and that thence, ὑπέστρεψαν, they went back (from Bethany) to Jerusalem; (Luke xxiv. 52. Acts i. 12.) they must be therefore at Jerusalem when Christ thus conversed with them, and there abiding, were to expect the promise of the Father. (Luke xxiv. 49.) Al. κοινωνῶν ἁλῶν καὶ τραπέζης, Chrys. Œcum.

[6] Ver. 5. Βαπτισθήσεσθε ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost.] The word ye, and the time affixed to this baptism, the day of Pentecost, shew that this baptism relates only to the disciples then present, and conversing with the holy Jesus: and to them the Holy Spirit was given, (1.) to render them powerful or able witnesses of our Lord's resurrection, (Luke xxiv. 48. Acts i. 8.) and consequently that he was the true Messiah, or that Prophet, which was to come into the world, and was to be the Saviour of it. (John xvi. 8—10.) And therefore Peter speaks thus to the Jews, Ye have killed the Prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead, of which we are witnesses: (Acts iii. 15.) and he with the apostles says to them, The God of our fathers hath raised Jesus from the dead, whom ye killed and hanged on a tree, him hath God exalted to his own right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance to Israel, and remission of sins. And we are his witnesses of these things, and so is the Holy Ghost, which he hath given to them that obey him, Acts v. 30—32. (2.) To render them able to give us an exact account, as far as Divine wisdom saw it necessary, of what our Saviour did and taught. The Spirit (saith he) shall bear witness of me, and you also shall be my witness, because you have been with me from the beginning: (John xv. 26, 27.) and because, were they never so faithful, yet could we not so trust to the strength of their natural memories, as to depend on those long discourses we meet with in the Gospels of St. Matthew, Luke, and John, as the very words of Christ, or be assured thence, that they delivered all the circumstances of Christ's miracles exactly as they were transacted; therefore hath he assured us that he would send the Spirit of truth to them, to bring those things to their remembrance, which he had said unto them, John xiv. 26. (3.) To make them able ministers of the new testament, able to acquaint all Christians with all saving truth, and teach them all things, which he had commanded to be observed throughout all ages of the church; and to declare unto them by the spirit of prophecy what should be hereafter: and hence he promiseth them the Spirit to teach them all things, (John xiv. 26.) to lead them into all truth, (xvi. 13.) and to teach them things to come; and upon the strength of this promise all Christians of all ages have believed that the apostles, and writers of the New Testament, both spake and wrote as they were moved, or directed, by the Spirit of God; and received those doctrines they taught, and indited, not as the words of men, but, as they were in truth, the word of God. (1 Thess. ii. 13.)

[7] Ver. 6. Ἐν τῷ χρόνῳ τούτῳ ἀποκαθιστάνεις; Wilt thou at this time restore?] That temporal dominion over all other nations, which the Jews then expected, being never before granted to them, the word here cannot well be rendered restore, but rather, grant, or establish, as it may be rendered; for ἀποκαθιστῶν, say Suidas and Phavorinus, is, διδοὺς, χαριζόμενος, giving, or granting; and in the Septuagint the word signifies to establish: so Amos v. 15. ἀποκαταστήσατε, ye shall establish judgment in the gates; and Psal. xvi. 5. σὺ εἶ ὁ ἀποκαθιστῶν, thou sustainest, or establishest, my lot. Ingenious here is the conceit of Dr. Lightfoot, that the reason of the question, Wilt thou do it at this time? arose from their reflection on the indignities the Jews had done to Christ, and was to this effect: Lord, wilt thou restore the kingdom to those who have dealt so basely with thee? what! to this generation so unworthy of that honour, as lying under the guilt of thy bloodshed!

[8] Ver. 7. Which the Father hath put in his own power.] i. e. Reserved to himself: for, secret things belong to God; (Deut. xxix. 29.) and not revealing the critical moment when they shall come to pass to any of his prophets, he left himself free to choose his own season when he will effect them. Grotius here saith, this kingdom was granted to the true Israel, i. e. the Christians, when Constantine and other Christian kings began to reign; but this agrees not with the predictions of the prophets, which plainly speak of a glorious kingdom belonging to the Jewish nation coming in to the faith of Christ. Dr. Lightfoot is positive that this place hath no relation to such a kingdom, and if he only means a temporal kingdom, this may be granted; but this answer speaking of times and seasons relating to a kingdom to be set up, or granted to Israel, I know not why he may not respect that time when the Jews generally shall be converted, and all nations shall flow in to them, and make Christ's kingdom glorious.

[9] Ver. 8. Λήψεσθε δύναμιν ἐπελθόντος τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος ἐφ' ὑμᾶς. Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you.] Or, ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you: for δύναμις, in the New Testament, when it relates to God the Father, Christ, or the Holy Ghost, imports generally some miraculous or extraordinary power; and what is here, ye shall receive power, the Holy Ghost coming upon you, is, Luke xxiv. 50. Ye shall be endued with power from on high, and then ye shall be my witnesses, enabled to confirm what you say of my words and actions, and especially of my resurrection, with signs and wonders, and divers distributions of the Holy Ghost. (Heb. ii. 4.)

[10] And to the uttermost parts of the earth.] That is, to the Jews first, then to the Samaritans, and, lastly, to all the nations of the world; and yet it is evident that the apostles, and converted Jews, at the first understood this of their preaching only to the Jews dispersed through the earth, for they preached the word to the Jews only, (Acts xi. 19.) and thought it unlawful, till by a vision from heaven they were taught otherwise, to preach to the gentiles.

[11] Ver. 11. Οὕτως ἐλεύσεται ὃν τρόπον, Shall so come in like manner as to have seen him go up into heaven.] We are told, 2 Thess. i. 7, 8. that he shall come down from heaven with his mighty angels in a flame of fire; and 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17. that he shall come down from heaven, and snatch us up into the clouds; as therefore here the angels attended on him ascending to heaven, so the cloud that received him, (ver. 9.) must be such a cloud of fire in which God was wont to appear with the attendance of his holy angels: of which see note on Phil. ii. 6. and this makes out the parallel; he being then to come also with a cloud of glory, in his body, and with the attendance of his holy angels. And thus Elias went up to heaven in a fiery chariot. (2 Kings ii. 12.)

[12] Ver. 12. Which is from Jerusalem a sabbath-day's journey.] Note here, (1.) that St. Luke doth not intend to give us the distance of the place of Christ's ascent from Jerusalem, that being from Bethany, (Luke xxiv. 50.) which was from Jerusalem fifteen furlongs, (John xi. 18.) but only from the foot of Mount Olivet, which was, say the Syriac, and Theophylact from Josephus,* seven furlongs, though now we read in Josephus only five furlongs. Now, say the Jews, a sabbath-day's journey is two thousand cubits, that is, a thousand yards, which is about eight furlongs, or a mile. (See of this Buxt. Lex. Talm. p. 2582.)

Note also, that the day of Christ's ascension seems not settled in the church then, or that Chrysostom thought not of it when he here said, That because Christ's ascension was on the sabbath-day, therefore St. Luke informs us, that the way the disciples went out with him exceeded not a sabbath-day's journey. (Hom. 3. in Acts iii. 12.)

[13] Ver. 13. They went up εἰς ὑπερῷον, into an upper room.] Where and what this upper room was, as it is not much material, so it is difficult to determine; that it was not the room in which Christ celebrated his last supper, appears from this, that that is called ἀνώγεον, Mark xiv. 15. Luke xxii. 12. which difference of names argues a difference in the thing itself. For ἀνώγεον is any room above stairs, be it only one story high, but ὑπερῷον is the highest room in the house. (Acts xx. 8, 9.) Note,

Secondly, That there was ὑπερῷον ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, an upper room in the second temple, in which Ezra sat with the chief of the fathers of the people, as Josephus† testifies; it is therefore supposed there might be many such, in one of which Christ's apostles, and the other Christians with them, might abide.

It was also common among the Jews, not only for their rabbins to have an upper room for their Beth-Midrash, but also for others to have such an upper room where they discoursed of the law, or exercised other parts of religion; now in which of these two the apostles and disciples abode, is the question.

That it was an upper room in the temple is argued, (1.) Because St. Luke tells us, that after their return to Jerusalem, they were διαπαντὸς ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, always in the temple, (Luke xxiv. 52, 53.) and here, that after their return to Jerusalem, they went up into this upper room, that they were καταμένοντες, abiding there; and ii. 46. it is said of them convened, and remaining in this upper room, that they were daily προσκαρτεροῦντες ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, abiding in the temple. But to this it is answered,

1. That the phrase, they were always in the temple, doth not prove this: for Christ saith of himself, John xviii. 10. I taught πάντοτε ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, always in the temple, and yet he had no habitation in any part of it.

2. We read, iii. 1. that Peter and John ἀνέβαινον, went up into the temple at the hour of prayer, whereas, had they been in an upper room of the temple, it should have rather been said that they went down into it. It is also said, that they continued there καθ' ἡμέραν, day after day, which seemeth to import that they lodged not there by night.

3. It follows that they broke bread, κατ' οἶκον, that is, saith Dr. Hammond, in the temple; but both these and the former words are spoken of the whole number of Christians, which were now at least three thousand one hundred and twenty, too many sure to lodge together in one upper room. Moreover, that κατ' οἶκον refers to houses distinct from the temple, we learn from this evangelist, saying, v. 42. they were teaching all the day, ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ καὶ κατ' οἶκον, in the temple, and from house to house.

* Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 6. † Ibid. lib. xv. cap. 5.

4. That there were ὑπερῷα upper rooms in the temple is granted, but then that they belonged to any besides the priests and Levites is not proved: the ὑπερῷον mentioned by Josephus was that of Johanan the son of the high-priest. And Maimonides in his book de Ædificio Templi, mentions sixteen conclavia, or chambers, but saith, they were all appointed for sacred things or persons. How improbable therefore is it, that poor fishermen and Galileans, odious for their Master's sake, should be permitted to crowd in such numbers into one of these rooms? (See the note on Luke xxiv. 53.)

[14] Ver. 14. And Mary the mother of Jesus.] Here is the last time that we have any mention of this blessed mother: of her ascension St. Luke saith nothing, because he knew nothing of it; that idle tale being the invention of latter ages from apocryphal writings and vain revelations.

And with his brethren.] They therefore then believed, though before they did not. (John vii. 5.)

[15] Ver. 15. The number ὀνομάτων of names.] i. e. Of persons. So Rev. iii. 4. Thou hast ὀλίγα ὀνόματα, a few persons in Sardis, which have not defiled their garments: so in Æschylus, τὸ Θηβαίων ὄνομα, is one of Thebes: in Cicero,* "Romanorum nomen," is a Roman citizen; and in Virgil,† "Silvius Albanum nomen," a man of Albania.

[16] Ver. 18. This man purchased a field, ἐκτήσατο χωρίον, with the wages of iniquity.] As in the Old Testament men are said to get or purchase to themselves shame, (Prov. ix. 7.) and in the New, to receive to themselves damnation, and in profane authors, κτήσασθαι ἔχθραν, καὶ συμφορὰν, to purchase enmity and calamities; and we in our language are said, to create trouble to ourselves, when this is the event, though it is not the intention of the action: so is Judas here said to purchase this field, by the wages of his iniquity, which was bought with the money he received as the reward of his iniquity, though he neither intended this, nor was he instrumental to it.

[17] And falling headlong he burst asunder.] See note on Matt. xxvii. 5.

[18] Ver. 20. For it is written in the book of Psalms, (Psal. lxix. 26.) Let his habitation be desolate; and, (Psal. cix. 1.) His bishoprick (or office) let another take.] That the first of these Psalms refers to that Messiah, of whom David was a type, we learn from the twenty-first verse, where it is said, they gave me gall to eat, and when I was thirsty they gave me vinegar to drink, which was true only of Christ, and is applied to him, John xix. 29. and from the ninth verse, where it is said, the zeal of thy house hath consumed me, and the reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me, which is applied to Christ, John ii. 17. Rom. xv. 3. and therefore what is said, ver. 26. of the enemies of David, may reasonably be applied to Judas, the great enemy of Christ; what is said, Psal. cix. 8. if it primarily relate either to Doeg or Ahithophel, the mortal enemies of David, might by the Holy Spirit be intended to have its full completion in the betrayer of the Son of David, and this intention might be suggested to St. Peter by the same Spirit. (See the appendix to the second chapter of St. Matthew.)

[19] Ver. 21. Δεῖ οὖν, τῶν συνελθόντων ἡμῖν ἀνδρῶν, &c. Wherefore of these men who have accompanied with us all the time, one must be ordained to be a witness.] One must be chosen to make up the number twelve, answerable to the twelve tribes of Israel: he must be one who always had conversed with them, that he might be a witness of all that Jesus said and did, John xv. 27. whilst he discharged his office among them; for that is the import of the phrase, go in and out; as when Moses says, I am grown old, I can no more go in and out before you, Deut. xxxi. 3. and when Solomon prays for wisdom, that he might go in and out before that great people, 2 Chron. i. 10. (See Deut. xxviii. 6. Psal. cxxi. 8.)

[20] Ver. 24. And they praying said, Κύριε καρδιογνῶστα, Lord, who knowest the hearts of all men, &c.] Here Woltzogenius truly notes, that they prayed to the Lord Jesus, because the apostles were at first chosen by him, were his apostles, and were to be his witness, and then they must ascribe to him the knowledge of all hearts, which is the property of God alone.

[21] Ver. 25. Πορευθῆναι εἰς τὸν τόπον ἴδιον, That he might go to his own place.] i. e. To the place worthy of him, and which he had deserved by his sin. So the Jews said of Balaam, ἀπῆλθεν εἰς τὸν τόπον αὐτοῦ, he went into his own place, (Numb. xxiv. 14, 15.) that is, saith Baal Turim, to hell. So Ignatius* saith, ἕκαστος εἰς τὸν ἴδιον τόπον χωρεῖν μέλλει, every one must hereafter go to his own place; Barnabas† saith of those that walk in the light, that they do afterward ὁδεύειν εἰς τὸν ὡρισμένον τόπον, go to the place appointed for them; Clemens R. that they do go εἰς τὸν ἅγιον τόπον, to the holy place, εἰς τὸν ὀφειλόμενον τόπον τῆς δόξης, to the place of glory due to them; and Polycarp, that they are with the Lord, and go, εἰς τὸν ὀφειλόμενον αὐτοῖς τόπον, to the place appointed for them; according to the Hebrew phrase here cited by Lightfoot, he came from his own place, that is, from hell, appointed for idolaters.

Obj. 1. Hell is not the proper place of Judas, but common to him with all the wicked.

Ans. St. Peter doth not expressly say he went to hell, but into a place proper for him; now Ignatius saith, there is appointed for every man, ἴδιος τόπος, a proper place; i. e. a place worthy of him, or agreeable to his actions. This in Plato‡ is the place whither the genius which he had chosen whilst he lived was appointed to bring him, viz. the incorrigible wicked soul, εἰς τὴν αὐτῇ πρέπουσαν οἴκησιν, into a habitation fitted for it, but the pure soul, εἰς τόπον προσήκοντα, to a place convenient for it.

Obj. 2. Secondly, It is said that it belonged not to Peter to pass sentence on Judas, or affirm any thing of God's secrets, such as Judas's going to hell.

Ans. This is wonderful, that when Christ had pronounced him a devil, (John vi. 71.) a son of perdition, (John xvii. 12.) and declared, that it had been better for him that he had never been born, (Matt. xxvi. 24.) it should be thought a diving into God's secrets to say, he went into a place prepared for, or due to, such miscreants. Moreover, doth not our Saviour say, this fall of the son of perdition was foretold by the Scripture? (John xvii. 12.) Doth not St. Peter here apply those Scriptures to him which foretell the most dreadful things? Does not Luke shew the dreadful issue of his iniquity upon his body? and after all this might he not say, he went to a place proper for him? Whosoever betrays an Israelite into the hands of the gentiles (say the Jews), hath no part in the world to come; how much less he who betrays the Messiah, the King of Israel, into the hands of the gentiles? (Matt. xx. 19. xxvi. 24.)

* Lib. i. de Fin. † Æn. vi. 763.

* Ep. ad Magn. sect. 5. † Sect. 19. ‡ In Phæd. p. 80. B. D. E.

Obj. 3. It seems improper to say such a one sinned that he might go to hell.

Ans. This is even such an impropriety of speech as God is pleased to use to his own people, when he saith by Hosea, viii. 4. Of their silver and gold they made them idols that they might be cut off; and by the prophet Micah, vi. 16. The statutes of Omri are kept, and ye walk in their counsels, that I should make you a desolation; and as Christ useth, when he saith, The Jews had shut their eyes and hardened their hearts, lest they should be converted and healed, or lest their sin should be forgiven them. (Mark iv. 12. John xii. 39, 40.) By all which places it appears, that in Divine construction any man may be said to do an action to that end which he knows will be the event of it, and which by God is threatened to the doers of it.

Moreover, the other exposition, viz. that the κλῆρος διακονίας καὶ ἀποστολῆς, portion of the ministry and apostleship, is the province which fell to the lot of Judas in the distribution of them among the apostles, and that this is called the proper place from which Judas fell by his sin, and into which Matthias is here said to go; I say this exposition is founded upon an evident mistake, viz. that the several provinces into which the apostles were to go for preaching the gospel, were distributed among them before they were filled with the Holy Ghost, which is abundantly confuted by Dr. Stillingfleet, Iren. lib. ii. cap. 6. §. 2. And when, where, and to what end, should a province of preaching the gospel after our Lord's ascension be distributed to him, who was before to be a son of perdition? (2.) To succeed in the office of Judas, is not πορευθῆναι, to go into his place, but λαμβάνειν, to take his place; according to the words of the Psalmist, His office, λάβοι ἕτερος, shall another take. And, lastly, had this been intended, a conjunction copulative should have been put before πορευθῆναι, and the words should have run thus, λαβεῖν τὸν κλῆρον—καὶ πορευθῆναι, to take the share of his apostleship, and to go into his place.

[22] Ver. 26. Καὶ ἔδωκαν κλήρους αὐτῶν, And they gave forth their lots.] That is, saith Grotius, they put two lots into two urns, the one containing the two names of Joseph and Matthias, the other the name of an apostle, and a void lot; and then drawing forth the name of Joseph, and the void lot, they knew that the lot containing the name of an apostle belonged to Matthias. (See Lucian's Hermotimus, sive de Sectis, p. 232, 233.)

CHAP. II.

1. [1] AND when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord (together) in one place.

2. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind (Gr. as of a strong wind brought or coming thence), and it filled all the house where they were sitting.

3. And there appeared to them cloven tongues, like as of fire, and it sat (Gr. καὶ ἐκάθισε sub. γλῶσσα, and a tongue sat) upon each of them.

4. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues (than those which they had learned), as the (gift of the) Spirit gave them utterance.

5. And there were (then) dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, (by nation and by proselytism, ver. 10.) devout men out of every nation under heaven (where the Jews dwelt).

6. Now when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together, and was confounded (or, astonished at the strangeness of the thing), because that (ὅτι, for) every man (of them, who were of several nations,) heard them speak in his own language.

7. And they were (therefore) all amazed and marvelled, saying to one another, Behold, are not all these that speak (these strange tongues by birth) Galileans?

8. And how (then) hear we every man (of us them speaking) in our own tongue, wherein we were born?

9. (For being) Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judea, and Cappadocia, in Pontus, and Asia,

10. Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes,

11. Cretes and Arabians, we do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God.

12. And they (who said this) were all amazed, and were in doubt (what the issue of this might be), saying one to another, What meaneth this? (What importeth this great matter?

13. But) others mocking, said, These men are full of new wine (and this causes them to speak thus).

14. But Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice, and said to them, Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known to you, and hearken to my words (which I am about to speak):

15. For these (men) are not drunken, as ye (scoffers) suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day (i. e. the ninth hour, or the time of the morning sacrifice, to which we Jews usually come fasting).

16. But this (which is come to pass) is (the completion of) that which is spoken by the prophet Joel (ii. 28. in these words);

17. [2] And it shall come to pass in the last days (i. e. the times of the Messiah), saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh (i. e. upon persons of all ranks): and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams:

18. And on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy:

19. And (for the terror and condemnation of those who will not be convinced by this effusion of the Holy Ghost) [3] I will shew wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; (an extraordinary effusion of) blood, and (Matt. xxiv. 6, 7. strange appearances of lightnings and of) fire, (devouring towns and cities, and causing) pillars of smoke (to ascend up):

20. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood (the government in church and state shall be dissolved), before that great and terrible day of the Lord (be fully) come:

21. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved (from these direful judgments).

22. Ye men of Israel, hear these words (which I am now about to speak; viz.) Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of (i. e. declared to be sent from) God among you by miracles, and wonders, and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know:

23. [4] Him, being delivered (into your hands) by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God (declaring by his prophets that he should lay down his life for sinners), ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain:

24. (And he is that very person) whom God hath raised up (from the grave), having loosed the pains (or bands) of death: (as you may be assured he hath done,) because it was impossible that he (who had life in himself, John v. 26. and the promise of a speedy resurrection, ver. 25.) should be holden of it.

25. For David speaketh (thus, not of himself, but) concerning him, (Psal. xvi. 8, &c.) I foresaw the Lord always before my face; for he is on my right hand, that I should not be moved:

26. Therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover also, my flesh shall rest in hope:

27. Because (ὅτι, that) thou wilt not leave my soul in hell (Gr. hades, i. e. my life in the grave), neither wilt thou suffer thy Holy One to see corruption.

28. Thou hast made known to me the ways of life; thou hast made me full of joy with thy countenance.

29. Men and brethren, let me freely speak to yo uof the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is (stillseen) with us to this day (from whence his body never rising, this cannot personally belong to him).

30. Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ (from the dead) to sit upon his throne;

31. He (I say), seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ's (body thus), that his soul [5] was not (to be) left in hell (i. e. the grave), neither his flesh did (should) see corruption.

32. This Jesus (I say) hath God raised up, whereof we are all witnesses.

33. Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted (Gr. exalted to the right hand of God), and having [6] received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this (gift, of) which younow see and hear (the effects).

34. For (this passage, which I am about to cite, cannot belong to) [7] David (himself, seeing he) is not (yet) ascended into the heavens: but he saith himself (of Christ), The Lord said to my Lord, [8] Sit thou on my right hand,

35. Until I make thy foes thy footstool.

36. Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that (by this exaltation of him to his right hand), [9] God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord (of all things, x. 36.) and Christ, (i. e. the king of Israel, John i. 50.)

37. Now when they heard this, they were pricked (or filled with sorrow) in their hearts (for this sin), and said to Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do (to obtain the pardon of so great a crime)?

38. Then Peter said to them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the [10] name of Jesus Christ for the remission of (your) sins, (which by this baptism will be washed away, xxii. 16.) and (then) ye (also) shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

39. For the promise (of him, mentioned Joel ii. 28.) is (made) to you, and to your children, and (not to them only, but also) to all that are afar off (i. e. the gentiles), even (to) as many as the Lord our God shall call.

40. And with many other words did he testify and exhort (them to repentance), saying, Save yourselves from (the evils coming on) this untoward generation.

41. Then they that gladly received the word were baptized: and the same day there were added to them (of the church) about three thousand souls (i. e. persons).

42. And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine, and (in) fellowship (with them, and one another, 1 John i. 3. 7.) and in [11] breaking of bread, and in prayers.

43. And fear came upon every soul (that was acquainted with these things): and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles.

44. And all that believed [12] were together, and had [13] all things common;

45. And sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men as every man had need.

46. And they continued daily with one accord in the temple, and, breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart (or sincere liberality one towards another),

47. Praising God, and having favour with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be [14] saved (Gr. the saved).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. II.

[1] Ver. 1. ΚΑΙ᾽ ἐν τῷ συμπληροῦσθαι, And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were ὁμοθυμαδὸν ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, with one accord in one place.] Here the critical notes are these; (1.) that πληροῦσθαι and συμπληροῦσθαι, when they relate to time, signify only the coming of that time. (See Dr. Hammond.) But Dr. Lightfoot here more critically observes, that the phrase hath a particular respect to the words of the institution of the feast of Pentecost, Lev. xxiii. 15. where it is said, You shall count to you from the morrow after the sabbath (that is, from the morrow of the first day of unleavened bread, which always was a sabbath, because no servile work was to be done in it; or from the sixteenth of Nisan), seven sabbaths תמימות complete, ὁλοκλήρους, saith the LXX. even to the morrow, after the sabbath, shall ye number fifty days. Now it is to be noted from R. Solomon, that this account of the seven weeks complete, was to begin at the evening: They reckoned (saith Maimonides) from the night of the sixteenth of Nisan; for else the weeks would not be complete; and so this day, after the sabbath, was none of the forty-nine, which made seven sabbaths complete; but that even and Sunday made the first day of the first week, and so Friday even and Saturday the forty-ninth, and Saturday evening and the Lord's day the fiftieth; and so on that day Pentecost was fully come, as our translation truly saith: so that the evening beginning the account, Pentecost was on the fiftieth day; but the day was not complete till the fifty-first.

So that two things may be noted for the dignity and honour of this day, which the Lord hath made: that on this day he rose from the dead, and became the first-fruits of them that slept: and, (2.) that on this day he poured forth the Holy Ghost on his apostles, and sent them forth to speak the wonderful works of God to men of every language and nation. It also is observable, that as the confusion of tongues in Babel spread idolatry through the world, and made men lose the knowledge of God and true religion; so God provided by the gift of tongues at Sion, to repair the knowledge of himself among those nations.

Secondly, Dr. Hammond, note on i. 15. saith, that ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, signifies assembling for the service of God; but though this sometimes happens so to be, as when men meet ἐπι τὸ αὐτὸ, together to pray, to celebrate the Lord's supper, as 1 Cor. xi. 20. yet the phrase signifies only to meet ὁμοῦ ἢ εἰς τὸν αὐτὸν τόπον, together, or in the same place, without any relation to the business of the meeting; and indeed, I might as well argue that it signifies meeting after religious exercises are ended, because it is said, 1 Cor. vii. 5. Let them not separate, except for prayer or fasting, and then let them come again ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ together. (See Deut. xxii. 10. Luke xvii. 35. Acts iii. 1.)

But the great important question here is this, Whether they all, here signify, all the hundred and twenty mentioned i. 15. as Grotius and Dr. Lightfoot think, or only the twelve, as Dr. Hammond in his paraphrase? This is a question of some importance: for if the whole hundred and twenty be here intended, the cloven tongues must sit upon every one of them, as well as upon the twelve apostles, and so must give them a right, though not an equal power to be Christ's witnesses; for a tongue sat upon every one of them, (ver. 3.) who were met together in the house.

The arguments of Dr. Lightfoot seem only probable; but this is certain, that there were many besides the apostles of their company, who had these gifts of the Holy Ghost: for when the apostles came to appoint seven deacons, they command the assembly to look out among them seven men full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom; there must therefore be many such persons among them, known to them by the exercise of these gifts, who therefore must have received them either at this time, or when they praying, that God would stretch forth his hands to heal, and to work signs and wonders by the name of Jesus, were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and spake the word with great freedom. (Acts iv. 30, 31.) Now, if these gifts were given then to others for this end, we may reasonably conceive, that when that great promise of him was to be fulfilled, they might be given to others also. And if we consider what multitudes of several languages were then met, and even living at Jerusalem, it seems but rational to conceive this gift should be conferred on many, to enable them to discourse intelligibly for their conversion in the several synagogues, in which men of so many divers languages must meet for Divine service. Moreover, seeing the apostles themselves imparted the same gift, by the imposition of hands, to those whom they ordained ministers in particular churches, it seems unreasonable to think, that those extraordinary persons, who had been all along in company with Christ and his apostles, and were to be the great preachers of the gospel in several parts of the world, should not be enriched with the same gifts.

And, lastly, this seems to have obtained as a tradition, or a received opinion in the church; for, saith St. Jerome,* when Paula came to Sion, they shewed her the place where the Holy Ghost fell upon the hundred and twenty, to complete the prophecy of Joel: and St. Chrysostom† and Œcumenius on the place say, He fell not only upon the apostles, but also upon the hundred and twenty; and that St. Luke would not have said πάντες, all, when the apostles were present, εἰ μὴ καὶ ἄλλοι μέτεσχον, if others also had not been made partakers of the Holy Ghost.

Concerning this gift of tongues, let it be farther noted:

First, That they mistake the matter, who imagine, that the apostles only spake in their own mother tongue; and that the hearers, of what tongue soever they were, understood them as well as if they had spoken in their native language: for, as Greg. Nazianzen well notes, this makes the miracle to be wrought rather upon the hearers than upon the apostles; it also contradicts the words of the text, which saith, the apostles began to speak ἑτέραις γλώσσαις, with other tongues, not as the Spirit gave the auditors ability to hear, but as he gave the apostles utterance. Nor could the several auditors hear the apostles speak τῇ ἰδίᾳ διαλέκτῳ, in their own proper dialect, unless they had spoken in the language of those nations who heard them. Nor,

Secondly, Are we to admit of the criticism of those who, instead of οἱ κατοικοῦντες Ἰουδαίαν the dwellers in Judea, (ver. 9.) read οἱ κατοικοῦντες Ἰνδίαν, the dwellers in India, because, say they, it was no miracle for the men of Judea to hear the apostles speaking in their language: for, (1.) this criticism is confuted by the following verse, which saith, all those men were Jews and proselytes. And, (2.) the Jews are mentioned only, to shew that men of all nations heard them speak in their own language, and in that consists the miracle; not that the Jews, but that every nation, heard and understood them.

Note also, That the nations here reckoned up, living some in Asia, some in Africa, some in Europe, are said, though not without an hyperbole, to be men of every nation under heaven, (ver. 5.) And this phrase is not only used in the Scriptures, as when God saith, He would make the dread of the Jews fall upon every nation under heaven; (Deut. ii. 25.) but it is frequent in Jewish writers, who lived about this time; for Philo‡ often speaks of the Jews dwelling πανταχόθεν τῆς οἰκουμένης, every where through the whole earth; and says, that § πᾶσα οἰκουμένη, almost the whole earth was inhabited by them. Agrippa also in Josephus saith, Οὐκ ἔστιν ἐπὶ τῆς οἰκουμένης δῆμος, There is not a people upon earth, among whom some Jews do not inhabit. (See the note on Coloss. i. 23.)

Note, fourthly, That it seems incredible, that they, who said, These men are full of new wine, (ver. 13.) should be so foolish as to think, that new wine should enable them to speak all languages, or to declare the wonderful works of God: it is therefore well conjectured by Dr. Lightfoot, that they who said this, were men of Judea; who, not understanding what the apostles spake in other languages, imagined they had babbled some foolish gibberish they could make nothing of; as drunken men are used to do. Note, Fifthly, That St. Peter well confuteth this surmise, by saying, ver. 15. It is not yet the third hour of the day, or nine of the clock; because, before that time, especially on the sabbath, and other feast-days, the Jews were not wont so much as to taste any thing of meat or drink, as Dr. Lightfoot here shews. And, saith Josephus,* by their tradition, they were not to eat on their sabbaths till the sixth hour.

[2] Ver. 17, 18. And it shall come to pass in the last days, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh, &c.] For explication of these two verses, let it be observed;

First, That even Kimchi owns, that achaire cen in the prophet Joel, is here all one with beacharith hayamim, in the last days, in the prophet Isaiah, ii. 2, 3. where is a plain prophecy of the exaltation of Christ's kingdom, and of the flowing in of the nations to it; and so St. Peter hath truly rendered what is in the prophet afterward, by ἐν ἐσχάταις ἡμέραις, in the last days; and so it follows, that as there was no time before in which this promise fully was made good, so are we not to expect any aftertimes for the completion of it. Note,

Secondly, That as the words all flesh must be restrained to all men, they only being capable of spiritual gifts, as when the Psalmist saith, Psal. cxlv. 50. Let all flesh bless his holy name; and the prophet Isaiah, lxvi. 23. All flesh shall come, and worship before me, saith the Lord: so must all men be here restrained to some of all ranks of men; as when Hazael is said to bring to the prophet Elisha, col tob, all the good of Damascus, (2 Kings viii. 9.) i. e. some of every good thing: so Christ healed πᾶσαν νόσον, all kinds of diseases, Matt. iv. 23. (See Glass. Phil. S. p. 437.) So that the phrase includes all sorts of men, without exclusion of age, young or old; without exclusion of sex, viz. sons and daughters; without exclusion of conditions, servants and maidens; without exclusion of nations, Jews or gentiles, even as many as the Lord shall call, (ver. 39.) This promise being fulfilled as well upon the Samaritans, (viii. 17.) and upon Cornelius and his kinsfolk, (Acts x.) as upon the Jews; and so this promise contradicts the Jewish rules, that prophecy belonged only to Israelites, and to them only dwelling in Judea, and them only being muchanim, fitly prepared for it; that is, say they, upon those who are wise, and valiant, and rich, and who are free from sorrow. (See all this in Dr. Pocock on Joel ii. 28.) Moreover, this effusion of this Spirit upon all flesh, as it denotes an inexhaustible fulness in that Spirit, who was to fill all men with all diversity of gifts, as the glory of God, and the good of the church required; so the effusion of it upon all the several ranks of men and women mentioned, is a full confutation of all the Jewish rules and glosses, requiring such qualifications as they do to make men capable of the gifts here promised. Again, these gifts being here styled prophecy, visions, dreams, it is apparent, that the promise of distributing them to all flesh, could be meant only of the distribution of them to some of all ranks of men; for it being never so, that all men individually had the gifts of prophecy, dreams, visions, or revelations, (1 Cor. xii. 29, 30.) this could never be promised; it being certain, that God did punctually fulfil his promise.

[3] Ver. 19, 20. And I will shew wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapour of smoke.] Τέρατα καὶ σημεῖα, the first relating to signs in the heavens, the second to those on earth. (See note on Heb. ii. 4.) So Josephus,* speaking of the calamities of the Jews, mentions πρὸ ταύτης σημεῖα καὶ τέρατα, the signs and wonders that preceded them, (Pref. ad Bell. Jud. p. 708. C.) καὶ ἐναργῆ τέρατα, the prodigies which manifestly portend their destruction, and the dreadful thunderings and lightnings, καὶ μυκήματα σειομένης τῆς γῆς ἐξαίσια, and the vast earthquakes, which in the judgment of all men portend no small evil to them. (See note on Matt. xxiv. 7, 8. and on Luke xxi. 11.) The blood very probably relates to that great effusion of blood which was then made, partly by their continual conflicts with other nations, and the insults of other nations upon them; the wars betwixt them and the Samaritans, (Joseph. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 5.) betwixt them and the Syrians at Cæsarea, (ibid. cap. 6. p. 695.) betwixt them and the Greeks and Syrians, (lib. xviii. cap. 12. p. 649, 650.) the sedition betwixt them and the Greeks at Alexandria, (Antiq. lib. xix. cap. 4.) the vast slaughter of them there, mentioned by Philo in his oration against Flaccus, where τὰς μὲν ἡμέρας ἐν αἵματι διῆγον. and by Josephus, in almost all the cities round about them: and partly by the zealots and Sicarii, of which Josephus† speaks very tragically. The fire here mentioned may relate either to the fiery meteors spoken of by Josephus, viz. The flaming sword hanging over the city, and the fiery comet pointing down upon it for a year; the light that shone upon the temple and the altar, in the night, as if it had been noon-day, and the terrible lightnings now mentioned; or to the continual burnings of their synagogues, their oratories, their cities, villages, and houses, mentioned by Philo, as done at Alexandria by Flaccus; by Josephus,‡ as done there by Tiberius; in Galilee and in Judea, by Cestius and Vespasian: from whence must arise pillars of smoke.

Of the import of the sun's being darkened, and the moon turned into blood, see the note on Matt. xxiv. 20.: and of the wonderful preservation of those, who then called upon the name of the Lord, as the Septuagint hath it, of the εὐαγγελιζόμενοι, i. e. of those who had embraced the gospel, see the note on ver. 12.

[4] Ver. 23. Him being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, τῇ ὡρισμένῃ βουλῇ, καὶ προγνώσει τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Here note, (1.) that in Scripture, that is said to be done by the determinate counsel of God, which is done according to what he had written and declared in his word, all his predictions concerning things future being declarations and determinations that they shall come to pass; The Son of man goeth as it is written of him, saith St Matthew, xxvi. 24. κατὰ τὸ ὡρισμένον, as it is determined by God concerning him, Luke xxii. 22. Note, (2.) That in order to the completion of this prediction, it was necessary that God should suffer Christ to fall into the hands of wicked men, for they could have no power over him, unless it were thus given them from above, (John xix. 11.) and that he should lay no restraints upon them from executing their malicious designs upon him; and this unrestrained permission is all that is or can be signified by God's delivering Christ up into their hands. Note, (3.) That this permission doth neither hinder nor abate their sin in crucifying Christ; for notwithstanding this, it is plainly said, that they by wicked hands had crucified him. Hence therefore it doth only follow, (1.) That God foresaw what he foretold, that Christ would suffer by the hands of wicked men. (2.) That when their malice should incline them to bring him to these sufferings, he had determined not to interpose by his immediate power to hinder them from doing it, but rather to permit them so to do. But then it must be noted, that every Divine permission of what God hath forbidden men to do, and of what he requires them to repent of when they have done it, as God doth by Peter here, is a permission of what he would not have done by them, whom he forbids to do it, and a permission of that which cannot be done by them without sin, for of that only are we called to repent. Hence therefore it must follow, that this foreknowledge and determinate counsel of God can be no intimation of his will, that any man should do what he forbids him to do, but only of his will to permit the action to be done: for God cannot will that any one should do what he forbids, i. e. wills he should not do. Nor, secondly, can it lay on any person a necessity of doing what he thus determines to permit; for then it must remove the sin, because it takes away the freedom of the action, and renders it not mine, but his, that laid upon me the unavoidable necessity of doing it. It only doth suppose that God can see and foretell what man, not hindered by him, but left to his own inclinations, will do; and if that foresight hath any influence upon the will to make the action necessary, then (1.) not only all our actions must be necessary, they being all foreseen, but also God must foresee that they are necessary, for he foresees them as they are in their causes, and doth not by foreseeing make them, i. e. cause them so to be, since that must necessarily make him the cause of all the sinful actions he foresees.

[5] Ver. 26. My flesh shall rest in hope, Ver. 27. that thou wilt not leave τὴν ψυχήν μου εἰς ᾅδου, neither wilt thou suffer thy Holy One to see corruption.] That is, saith Dr. Hammond, I am confident that though I die, yet shalt thou not leave me so long dead, as that my body shall be putrefied; or, thou wilt not leave my life in the grave, or in the state of death. To explain and confirm this interpretation, let it be considered,

First, That the Hebrew word nephesh, translated by the Septuagint ψυχὴ, doth, many hundred times, both in the Old and the New Testament, signify life: so σῶσαι, τηρεῖν, φυλάττειν τὴν ψυχὴν is to preserve life, Gen. xix. 17. xxxii. 30. 1 Sam. xix. 11. Job ii. 6. Psal. lxxxv. 2. Jer. xlviii. 6. li. 6. (See the note on Matt. xvi. 25, 26.)

Ζητεῖν τὴν ψυχὴν, is to seek the life of a man to destroy it, Exod. iv. 19. 1 Sam. xx. 1. xxiv. 9. xxv. 29. 2 Sam. iv. 8. 1 Kings xix. 10. 14. Psal. xiv. 4. xxiii. 3. xxxvii. 15. xxxix. 19. lxix. 2. cxli. 6. Jer. iv. 30. xi. 23. xxii. 25. xliv. 30.

Ῥῦσαι, ἐξέλεσθαι, λυτρῶσαι τὴν ψυχὴν, is to save life, or preserve it from death, Josh. ii. 13. 2 Sam. iv. 9. 1 Kings i. 12. 29. Psal. xvi. 14. xxi. 21. xxxii. 19. xl. 4. liv. 25. lvi. 5. lxxi. 13. lxxxv. 12. lxxxviii. 47. cviii. 30. cxiv. 5. cxix. 2. Isa. xliv. 20.

Δοῦναι λύτρον τῆς ψυχῆς, is to give ransom for his life, Exod. xxiii. 30. xxx. 12.

Ψυχὴ ἀντὶ ψυχῆς, is life for life, Exod. xxi. 23. Lev. xxiv. 18. Deut. xix. 21. 1 Kings xxiii. 39. 42. (see the note on Matt. xxviii. 20.) and ψυχὴ ἡμῶν ἀνθ' ὑμῶν, is our life for yours, Josh. ii. 13.

Τιθέναι τὴν ψυχήν μου ἐν τῇ χειρί μου, is to put my life in jeopardy, Judg. xii. 3. 1 Sam. xix. 5. xxviii. 21. (See for this sense in the New Testament, the note on 1 Thess. ii. 8.) Note,

Secondly, That when a man dies, his life, in the Scripture phrase, is said to go down to hades, to the pit, or into the house of silence; and when he is snatched from the gates of death, his life is said to be brought or lifted up from hades, or the grave; and therefore, when their bodies remain unquickened in the grave, their life may properly be said to be left in it. Thus Jacob saith, Gen. xxxvii. 35. I will go down to sheol to my son mourning, καταβήσομαι εἰς ᾅδου, I will descend to hell, saith the LXX. "lebi chebortha," to the sepulchre: so Jonathan, That I may be in the state of the dead as my son is: so again, xlii. 38. If mischief befal my son Benjamin, you will bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to sheol, κατάξετε εἰς ᾅδου, you will bring me down to hades, into the house of the sepulchre, saith B. Uziel again; and that to bring down his gray hairs, was to bring down his life to the grave, is evident, because, when Judas repeats these very words, xliv. 29. 31. he gives this reason of them, because ἡ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ ἐκκρέμαται ἐκ τῆς τούτου ψυχῆς, his life depended on the lad's life: so 1 Sam. ii. 6. The Lord (saith Hannah) killeth, and he maketh alive, κατάγει εἰς ᾅδου καὶ ἀνάγει, he bringeth down to the hades, and he raiseth up again; where note, that these words are by Josephus * used as a proof of the resurrection; and that the Chaldee paraphrast was of the same opinion, his words testify, for thus he renders them, He killeth, and he hath said we shall live again; he bringeth down to hades, and he will after bring us up to life eternal: so again, Job vii. 9. If a man καταβήσῃ εἰς ᾅδην shall go down to hades, shall he rise up again? And Job xxxiii. 18. we find these very words, If God will teach him discipline, he will deliver נפשו מני שחת his life from the pit; from corruption, saith the Chaldee; ἀπὸ θανατου, from death, saith the Septuagint; and ver. 22. If his life draweth nigh to the pit, נפשו לשחת ἡ ζωὴ αὐτοῦ εἰς θάνατον, to death, and he says, Redeem me from going down שחת into corruption, ἐν ᾅδῃ, to hades, he shall return to the days of his youth. And Jonah, who was a type of Christ in this very thing, (Matt. xii. 39, 40.) saith, When naphshi my soul failed in me, taal mishechatz chaii, thou causedst my life to ascend out of the pit. (Jonah ii. 6, 7.) In the Psalmist this expression is very frequent, O Lord, saith he, ἀνήγαγες ἐξ ᾅδου τὴν ψυχήν μου, thou hast brought up min sheol naphshi, my life from hell, or hades, thou hast preserved me from going down into the pit, Psal. xxx. 3. And again, Psal. lxxxvi. 13. Thou hast delivered my life τὴν ψυχήν μου, from the nethermost hell, or hades misheol haragitha, from sheol beneath, or from the low earth, saith the Chaldee; from the state of death, Ainsworth; from the sepulchre, I. T. into which Christ is said to have descended, Eph. iv. 9. (see the note there); and into which David, had he then died, would only have descended, and not into hell properly so called, Psal. lxxxviii. 3. chajah lesheol, My life draweth nigh to hell; ἡ ψυχή μου τῷ ᾅδῃ, to hades; and Psal. xciv. 14. If the Lord had not been my helper, my life had dwelt in silence, ἐν ᾅδῃ, in the grave, the house of silence, as appears from those words, Psal. cxv. 17. The dead cannot praise thee, nor οἱ καταβαίνοντες εἰς ᾅδου, they that go down into hades, LXX. into silence, Heb. into " beth cheborah," the house of the sepulchre, Chaldee; and Psal. lxxxix. 40. What man is he that liveth, and shall not see death? Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of hell, τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ ἐκ χειρὸς ᾅδου, his life from the hand of hades, i. e. the grave? Shall he be delivered from the angel of death, shall he not descend into the house of the sepulchre? Parallel to which are the words of Hezekiah, Isa. xxxviii. 18. οἱ ἐν ᾅδῃ, They that are in hades, or sheol, shall not praise, neither shall the dead bless thee: so Tob. iii. 10. I shall bring the old age of my father with sorrow εἰς ᾅδου, that is, εἰς τάφον, to the grave, vi. 14. so David saith to Solomon of Joab and Shimei, κατάξεις εἰς ᾅδου, Thou shalt bring down their gray hairs to the grave. (1 Kings ii. 6. 9.)

Note, thirdly, that sheol throughout the Old Testament, and ᾅδης in the Septuagint, answering to it, signifies not the place of punishment, or of the souls of bad men, but the grave only, or the place of death, appears,

1. From the root of it, shaal, which signifies to ask, crave, and require, because it craves for all men, (Prov. xxx. 16.) and will let no man escape its hands, (Psal. lxxxviii. 49.) it is that sheol, or hades, whither we are all going. (Eccles. ix. 10.) The Hebrew sheol (saith Buxtorf) signifies, in general, the place of human bodies, when they are separated from their souls, ἅιδην νεκρῶν χωρίον, exponunt Græci, the Greeks say, that hades is the place of the dead, saith D. Windet; it is ὁ τάφος, ὁ τύμβος, the tomb, or sepulchre, saith Phavorinus; thus, to go to the gates of hades, in Homer, is, saith the scholiast, περίφρασις θανάτου, a description of death; He shall knock at the gates of hades, saith Theocritus, τούτεστι ἀποθανεῖται, he shall die, saith the scholiast. (See the note on Matt. xvi. 18.)

2. Because it is the place to which the good, as well as the bad, go, for they whose souls go upwards descend into it; thither went Jacob, Gen. xxxvii. 35. there Job desired to be, xvi. 13. for he knew that sheol was his house, xvii. 13. and that to descend into the dust, was to descend into hades; where Olympiodorus brings him in speaking thus, Οὐ κοινὸν ἅπασιν ἀνθρώποις τὸ ἀποθανεῖν; οὐχὶ ᾅδης ἅπασιν ὁ οἶκος; Is not death common to all men? Is not hades the house of all men? Hezekiah expected to be there after he went hence; for he said, I will go to the gates of hades, Isa. xxxviii. 30. that is, saith Jerome, to those gates of which the Psalmist speaks, saying, Thou wilt lift me up from the gates of death. The ancient Greeks assigned one hades to all that died, and therefore say, πάντας ὁμοῦ θνητοὺς ἅιδης δέχεται, hades receives all mortal men together, εἰς κοινὸν ᾅδην πάντες ἥξουσιν βροτοὶ, all men shall go to hades.

3. Had the penmen of the Old Testament meant by hades any receptacle of souls, they could not truly have declared there was no wisdom or knowledge in sheol, Eccles. ix. 10. no remembrance of God there, Psal. vi. 6. no praising in sheol, Isa. xxxviii. 18. for those heathens who looked upon it as the receptacle of souls, held it to be a place in which they would be punished or rewarded.

Seeing then κατάγειν τὴν ψυχὴν εἰς ᾅδου, is to bring down the life to the grave, ἀνάγειν τὴν ψυχὴν ἐξ ᾅδου, is to bring the life up from the grave; μὴ ἐγκαταλείπειν τὴν ψυχήν μου εἰς ᾅδου, may very properly here import, not to leave the life of Christ in the grave, but to revive his dead body by giving a new life and motion to the animal spirits, now dormant in it, and a reunion of his soul to it; and so this first part of the sentence, Thou wilt not leave my life in the grave, will be in sense the same with the ensuing words, Thou wilt not suffer the Holy One to see corruption; as are those words in the Psalmist, What man is he that shall not see death? the same with the following words, Shall he deliver his life from the hand of hades? and those of Job, xvii. 18. The grave is my house, I have made my bed in the darkness; and those of Elihu, xxxiii. 28. He will deliver his life from going down into the pit, and his life shall see the light; and those of David, Thou hast brought up my soul from the grave, thou hast kept me alive, that I should not go down into the pit, xxx. 3. My life draweth nigh to the grave, I am counted with them that go down into the pit, Psal. lxxxviii. 3. (See Psal. cxv. 17. Isa. xxxviii. 10—12.) And that this must be the true import of the words, will be still farther evident,

1. From the precedent words, my flesh shall rest in hope, that thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, it being a very proper prosopopœia to bring his dead flesh, hoping it shall be revived, but not so proper to introduce it, hoping that its soul shall not be left in hell, or in the place of the damned; and also from the following words, thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, for thou wilt shew me the path of life: for, as life is opposed to death, so shewing to one dead, or in danger of it, the path of life, must signify the preserving him from death, or the restoring him to life when dead. And,

2. From the consideration of the person to whom these words do in the primary sense belong: for being spoken by king David, when his life was continually in his hand, and he was still in danger of death from a persecuting Saul, they in respect of him can only signify his hope, that God would not give him over unto death; and so in reference to the Son of David will very naturally import, that though thou sufferest men to kill me, and lay me in the grave, yet wilt thou raise me from the dead. In a word, this phrase is by St. Peter imported of our Lord's resurrection: for so he speaks, Him, whom you by wicked hands have slain, God hath raised up, loosing the bands of death, ver. 23, 24. for David saith of him, Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, i. e. my life in the grave; and it is opposed to David's continuing in the grave, and in the state of death, thus, David is both dead and buried, and his body lies still in the sepulchre; he therefore could not say this of himself, but being a prophet, and so foreseeing that God would raise up Jesus from the dead, he said this of the resurrection of Christ, Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, or, my life in the grave. (See the appendix to this verse at the end of the Acts.)

[5] Ver. 31. Οὐ κατελείφθη ἡ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ εἰς ᾅδου.] Here Dr. Mills is confident that the words ἡ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ, were inserted from ver. 26. because they are wanting in Irenæus, lib. iii. cap. 12. p. 299. in the Vulgate, Syriac, and Cod. Alex. but as these words are owned by the Arab. Chrysostom, and Œcumenius, in locum, and by Origen,* in his commentary on the Kings, where he says, that they are read in the Psalms, and are interpreted in the Acts of the Apostles; so is it evident from the very words that they ought to be retained, for the words of the Psalmist being these, οὐκ ἐγκαταλείψεις τὴν ψυχήν μου εἰς ᾅδου, the apostle here saying that David spake this of the resurrection, ought to use the words that David spake: and, 2. this is farther evident from the words following, οὐδὲ σὰρξ αὐτοῦ, nor did his flesh see corruption, they having a plain relation to ἡ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ going before.

[6] Ver. 33. He received the promise of the Spirit from the Father.] i. e. The Spirit promised by him, and therefore styled his promise, Luke xxiv. 49. and received from him by Christ, who, as mediator betwixt God and man, is to convey all blessings to man, from that Father of light from whom comes every good and perfect gift; and thus this one mediator betwixt God and man, the man Christ Jesus, (1 Tim. ii. 5.) is fitly said to have received this Spirit from the Father, though as to his Divine nature he also is the Spirit of Christ, (1 Pet. i. 11.) and he receives of his to give unto us, (John xvi. 14. see the note there); yea, he hath so received him as to be the Lord of the Spirit, (2 Cor. iii. 18.) and of all his administrations: (1 Cor. xii. 5.) so that all Christians ever did receive him according to the measure of the gift of Christ. (Eph. iv. 7.)

[7] Ver. 34. David is not ascended into heaven.] i. e. With his body, as Enoch and Elias did; but as Jesus, who is the Son and Lord of David, and was to sit upon his throne, (ver. 33.) and reign over the house of Jacob for ever, (Luke i. 32, 33.) must have ascended thither: for thus did David prophesy concerning him when he said, The Lord said to my Lord, &c. of which words see the notes on Matt. xxii. 46. Heb. i. 13.

[8] Sit thou on my right hand.] Christ's session at the right hand of God, imports, (1.) the unspeakable felicity which Christ, according to his human nature, now enjoys; for, God's right hand is represented as the place of everlasting happiness and joy, as in those words, Psal. xvi. 11. In thy presence there is fulness of joy, at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore; and hence the Psalmist having prophesied of our Lord's resurrection, adds these words, Thou wilt make me full of joy with thy countenance, ver. 28. (2.) The glorious majesty to which our Saviour is advanced; God's right hand being styled in Scripture, the right hand of majesty, Heb. i. 3. and as the most honourable place among men is the right hand, and Solomon showed his mother Bath-sheba the highest honour, when he made her sit on the right hand of his throne; (1 Kings ii. 19.) so hath the Father advanced Christ's human nature to the highest dignity, by causing it to sit on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens, Heb. viii. 1. (3.) It signifies that fulness of power with which he is invested over all things in heaven and earth; (Matt. xxviii. 18.) for so the Scripture represents the greatness of his Divine power by the strength of his right hand: (Psal. xx. 6. lxxxix. 13.) and hence our Lord is said to sit on the right hand of power, Matt. xxvii. 64. (4.) Because princes sit on their thrones to execute judgment, and exert that dominion which God hath given them over their subjects; therefore this session at the right hand of God, imports his authority to judge both the quick and dead, as being by it constituted Lord of the dead and of the living. (Rom. xiv. 9. 12.)

[9] Ver. 36. God hath made the same Jesus both Lord and Christ.] Here the word Christ signifies the Messiah, according to his regal office, in which sense he is still styled by the Chaldee paraphrasts and Jewish writers, משיח מלכ, Messias, or Christ the king, as Buxtorf* shews in the word Messias; under which title the prophets frequently speak of him as of a King to reign over God's people, Psal. xxiv. 7. xlv. 1. Isa. xxxii. 1. Zech. ix. 9. and not the Jews only, but the whole east under that title did expect him. (See the note on Luke ii. 38.)

[10] Ver. 38, 39. Be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, for the promise is to you and to your children.] Here let it be observed,

First, That St. Peter exhorts the Jews to be baptized, not in the name of the Father and the Holy Ghost, but only in the name of Jesus, because they did already believe in God the Father, and in the Holy Ghost, and profess obedience to the laws of God, and of the Holy Ghost speaking by the mouth of his prophets.

Secondly, That when it is said, You shall receive the Holy Ghost, it is not intended that every one of them upon their baptism should be endued with the extraordinary gifts of tongues and prophecy: for it is manifest from the history of the Acts, and especially from vi. 3. that he was given only to some among them, though that was for the benefit of all; and hence is that inquiry of St. Paul, 1 Cor. xii. 29, 30. Are all prophets? do all speak with tongues? But the meaning of St. Peter is, that he should fall upon some of all ranks of them, according to the true purport of the words of Joel. Note, Thirdly, That these words will not prove a right of infants to receive baptism: the promise mentioned here being that only of the Holy Ghost, mentioned ver. 16—18. and so relating only to the times of the miraculous effusion of the Holy Ghost, and to those persons, who by age were made capable of these extraordinary gifts.

[11] Ver. 42. And in breaking of bread.] I see no necessity to think these words relate to the receiving of the sacrament; not from the phrase of breaking bread, for this is used by the evangelists when they relate Christ's miraculous feeding of the multitude, Matt. xv. 36. Mark viii. 19, 20. and in the forty-sixth verse of this chapter, they are said to break bread from house to house, and to eat their meat with singleness of heart; where it can only signify their friendly converse with one another: but, (2.) allowing this to relate to the receiving of the sacrament, and not to their breaking bread at the feast of Pentecost, either wine was also consecrated with the bread, or it was not; if it was, then must bread signify, by a synechdoche, very usual in the Scripture,* bread and drink; and therefore, when that drink is wine, as in the sacrament it is, bread and wine; and then, if both were consecrated, both might be distributed, according to our Saviour's precept, Drink ye all of this; if it was not, the officiator, even according to the principles of the church of Rome, must be guilty of sacrilege. (See the notes on Luke xxiv. 30. Acts xx. 7.)

* Apud Huet. tom. i. p. 32.

[12] Ver. 44. They were ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, all together.] There being added to the one hundred and twenty, three thousand souls, (ver. 41.) it seemeth inconvenient to say, they were all together in one place, unless it were in one of those apartments in the towers of the temple, which, saith Josephus,† would receive a hundred beds; and therefore it seems better to refer this to their communion in the same action, in which sense all the Jews are said to build ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, together, (Ezra iv. 3.) though they were far separated from one another, (Nehem. iv. 19.) and Joab and Abner's men to be ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, together, (2 Sam. ii. 12.) though one were on the one the other on the other side of the pool. (See Psal. iv. 9. xlix. 2. Isa. lxvi. 17. Jer. vi. 12.)

[13] And had all things common.] These words here, and iv. 32. do not signify that they had no longer any property in what belonged to them, for then they could not sell them afterward; but that they used and disposed of them as things common, freely imparting of them to all that had need. And that this making sale of them was not done by command, St. Peter declares, by telling Ananias he was under no obligation so to do. (Acts v. 4.) Nor was it ever intended for an example or precedent to other Christians, as is evident from all the Epistles, in which we have frequent mention of the distinction betwixt rich and poor; and frequent exhortations to the wealthy to be rich in good works, but not the least intimation that they ought to sell their possessions; this being now done on a particular account, either by them who had lands out of Judea, as Barnabas had his in Cyprus, and being resolved not to return thither, but to cleave to the apostles, could make but little benefit from them there; or else in Judea, and therefore they knowing, from our Saviour's prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem, and from his exhortation, that they were shortly to fly from and quit them to the enemy, were willing to part with their estates for the benefit of the church, before they were snatched from them by the enemy.

[14] Ver. 47. Τοὺς σωζομένους, The saved.] The Christians are so styled elsewhere: so 1 Cor. i. 18. τοῖς σωζομένοις ἡμῖν, to us the saved Christ crucified is the power of God; and when the means of salvation, or that grace of God which brings salvation, was vouchsafed to them, salvation is said to come, (Luke xix. 9. Rom. xi. 11.) or to be sent to them. (Acts xiii. 16. xxviii. 28. see the note on Eph. ii. 18. Tit. iii. 5.)

CHAP. III.

1. NOW (Gr. and) Peter and John went up together into the temple at the hour of prayer, (being) [1] the ninth hour (Gr. at the ninth hour of prayer).

2. And a certain man (who had been) lame from his mother's womb was carried (thither), whom they (who brought him) laid daily at the [2] gate of the temple which is called Beautiful, to ask alms of them that entered into the temple; (by which means he became well known to all who entered into it, ver. 10.)

3. Who seeing Peter and John about to go into the temple asked (Gr. to receive) an alms (of them).

4. And Peter, fastening his eyes upon him with John (to raise his expectation of receiving some benefit from them), said (to him), Look on us.

5. And he gave heed unto (Gr. looked on) them, expecting to receive something of them.

6. Then Peter said (to him), Silver and gold have I none (to give); but such as I have (Gr. what I have) give I to thee: (saying to thee,) In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk.

7. And he (having said this) took him by the right hand, and lifted him up (Gr. and taking him by the right hand, he arose): and (for) immediately his feet and ancle-bones received strength (to arise).

8. And he leaping up (from his bed) stood (up), and walked, and entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God, (according to the prophecy, Isa. xxxv. 6. Then the lame shall leap as the hart).

9. And all the people saw him walking, and (heard him) praising God.

10. And they knew that it was he that sat for (to beg) alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple: and (therefore) they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened to him.

11. And as the lame man which was healed held Peter and John, all the people (present) ran together to them in the porch called Solomon's, greatly wondering (at what was done).

12. And when Peter saw it, he [3] answered (or, spake thus) unto the people, Ye men of Israel, why marvel ye at this? or why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own power [4] or holiness we had made this man to walk?

13. (This miracle is wholly to be ascribed to the Lord Jesus; for be it known to you, that) the God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers, hath glorified his Son Jesus; (placing him at the right hand of his Majesty in the highest heavens, Heb. i. 3. and giving him all power in heaven and earth, Matt. xxviii. 18. even that Jesus) whom ye delivered up (to be crucified), and denied him (or, refused him) in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let him go, (κρίναντος ἀπολύειν, judging him rather fit to be released;

14. He, I say, would have released him,) but ye [5] denied the Holy One and the Just (i. e. him who was truly so), and (instead of him) desired a murderer (i. e. Barabbas, Luke xxiii. 19.) to be granted to you,

15. And (ye) killed [6] the Prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead; whereof we are witnesses.

16. And his name, through (our) [7] faith in his name, hath made this man strong (to walk), whom ye see and know (to have been unable from his birth to go): yea, the faith which is by him (i. e. which we have in him, or which is efficacious by his power) hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all.

17. And now, brethren, I wot that [8] through ignorance

(of his mission from God) ye did it (i. e. these things), as did also your rulers (through the like ignorance, arising not from want of evidence that he was sent of God, but from those prejudices which obstructed their discerning it).

18. But those things, which God before had shewed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled (as that you, through this ignorance, have been the very means of fulfilling what they had foretold, Acts xiii. 27.)

19. Repent ye therefore (of the murder of the Just One), and be converted (from your opposition to his name and doctrine to faith in him), that your sins may be blotted out, when [9] the times of refreshing shall (ὅπως ἂν ἔλθωσι, that times of refreshing may) come from the presence of the Lord.

20. And he shall send (καὶ ἀποστείλῃ, and that he may send) Jesus Christ, who [10] before was preached to you, (to give you a final absolution from them at the great day; him, I say,)

21. [11] Whom the heavens must receive till the [12] times of restitution (or completion) of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets [13] since the world began.

22. [14] For Moses truly said (or, said indeed) to the fathers, A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up to you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say to you.

23. And it shall come to pass, that every soul (i. e. person) who will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people.

24. Yea, and [15] all the prophets from Samuel and those that follow after (or, and the times following), as many as have spoken (of that Prophet), have likewise foretold of these days (of grace and refreshment by him.

25. Now) [16] ye are the children of (your fathers) the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying to Abraham, (Gen. xxii. 18.) And in [17] thy seed shall all the kingdoms of the earth be blessed.

26. Unto you (therefore) first God, having raised up his Son Jesus, (as he promised by Moses, ver. 22.) sent him to bless you, in turning every one of you from his iniquities.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. III.

[1] Ver. 1. AT the ninth hour of prayer.] Among the Jews there were three stated hours of prayer; the first at the third hour of the day, (Acts ii. 15.) which answers to our ninth; at which time they offered their morning sacrifice: (Exod. xxix. 39. Numb. xxviii. 3, 4.) at the ninth hour, or at three in the afternoon, when they offered their evening sacrifice. (Acts x. 3. 30.) Of these two, the Hebrew doctors say, The continual sacrifice of the morning made atonement for the iniquities that were done in the night, and the evening sacrifice for the iniquity that was done by day: but Philo* saith, They were both sacrifices of thanksgiving for the blessings God was pleased continually to confer upon mankind by day and night. At both these times, special favours were shewn by God to his people; thus, πρωΐ ἀναβαινούσης τῆς θυσίας, in the morning when the mincha was offered, the thirsty land was miraculously filled with water; (2 Kings iii. 20.) and about the time of the evening oblation, God answers Daniel's prayer, by sending the angel Gabriel to him. (Dan. ix. 21.) Hence David says, Let my prayer ascend to thee as incense, and the lifting up of my hands as an evening sacrifice; (Psal. cxli. 2.) either because that also comprehends the morning sacrifice, as Kimchi conjectures, or, as R. Saadias, because by that all things were atoned, there being no sacrifice offered after that: and upon this account it might be, that the apostles and other persons went always up into the temple at these hours of prayer. (Acts ii. 46.)

The third time of prayer was the sixth hour, that is, at twelve of the clock before they dined, or after dinner; at which time we find Peter at his prayers, Acts x. 9. Of these three times, the royal Psalmist speaketh thus, At evening, and at morning, and at noon, will I pray to thee: (Psal. lv. 17.) and of Daniel it is recorded, that he kneeled down three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks. (Dan. vi. 10. 13.) And the Jews say, they received these stated hours of prayer from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: but yet as their going to the temple is no precedent for us Christians to perform our private devotions in the church, which by our Lord's directions we rather are to do entering into our closets; God not being so present in our churches, as in a place of his perpetual and glorious residence, as he was in the tabernacle and the temple; so neither is their observation of these hours of prayer any warrant for our institution of canonical hours of prayer, much less an evidence, that the apostles by going thither did institute these canonical hours, as Baronius fancies. Notwithstanding, seeing we Christians are as much obliged to perform both our public and private devotions to God, as the Jews could be, it must be laudable in us also to set apart solemn times for the performance of those duties, as they did. And hence the Constitutions* of the apostles, having cited the Lord's prayer, Τρὶς τῆς ἡμέρας προσεύξεσθε, Pray thus thrice a day: and Tertullian† says, that these three hours, morning, noon, and evening, were "insigniores in orationibus diurnis," the most celebrated in their daily prayers. And these three times, saith Theodoret,‡ we glorify God, τὰς θείας λειτουργίας ἐν ἐκκλησίαις ἐπιτελοῦντες, using the sacred liturgies in the churches.

[2] Ver. 2. Πρὸς τὴν θύραν τοῦ ἱεροῦ τὴν λεγομένην ὡραίαν, To the gate of the temple called Beautiful.] This gate being the very front and entrance into the temple, was built with such sumptuousness and glory, as became the frontispiece of that place, where the Divine Majesty vouchsafed to dwell, and hence bearing the name of the Beautiful gate: the other three gates, belonging to the entrance into the court of the women, were, saith Josephus, χρυσῷ τε, καὶ ἀργύρῳ κεκαλυμμέναι πανταχόθεν, covered over with silver, and then gilt; but this gate, which he called the Corinthian gate, as being made of Corinthian brass, was, saith he,§ πολὺ τῇ τιμῇ τὰς καταργύρους καὶ περιχρύσους ὑπεράγουσα, much exceeding in glory those of gold and silver.

[3] Ver. 12. Ἀπεκρίνατο, He answered.] This word is often used without relation to any precedent question, and sometimes only signifies, that such a one began to speak, and is usually joined with λέγω or εἶπω, to speak: so Matt. xi. 25. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν, "Jesus Patrem compellans dixit," Jesus speaking to his Father, said; or, Jesus began to say, Matt. xii. 38. Some of the scribes, ἀπεκρίθησαν λέγοντες, spake, saying, xvii. 4. ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ὁ Πετρὸς εἶπεν, and Peter speaking, said to Jesus: see xxii. 1. xxvi. 63. xxvii. 21. xxviii. 5. Mark ix. 38. x. 51. xi. 14. Ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτῇ, Jesus speaking, said to the fig-tree; xii. 35. xiv. 48. John v. 19. Acts v. 8. viii. 34. x. 46. xv. 13. xxiv. 25. xxv. 9. so the Hebrew word אמר often signifies, as in Exod. xv. 21. so Exod. xxi. 5. ἐὰν ἀποκριθῇ, if the servant say: so 1 Kings ii. 1. Ἀπεκρίνατο, David speaks; and iii. 26. ἀπεκρίθη ἡ γυνὴ, the woman said, Psal. cxix. 172. and frequently in the book of Job. Sometimes, though no question is asked, and no discourse requiring an answer preceded, yet our Lord answers to the secret thoughts and inward reasonings of the Jews, or to their admiration touching his words or works, as Matt. xvii. 4. xxviii. 5. Mark x. 24. Luke iii. 16. v. 22. viii. 40.

[4] Ἡ εὐσεβεία, Or holiness.] This is the reading of Chrysostom, and Œcumenius, and of all the MSS. and ancient versions, excepting only the Syriac: for it is confessed by Lorinus, that the ancient Latin copies, both MSS. and printed, read not potestate, but pietate. Here then is a plain evidence of the variation of the Roman doctrine from that of the apostles, assisted by the Holy Ghost; for the apostles here plainly disclaim any excellency or piety in them, which might make them worthy to be God's instruments above any others, in working such miracles as these: but the catechism of the Trent council * plainly declares, that God confers upon us many benefits, "eorum merito," by virtue of the merits of the saints; and Lorinus on the place declares, that innumerable histories, and the practice of the church, shew, "quod sanctorum merita ad impetranda miracula valeant," that the merits of the saints are prevalent for the working miracles.

[5] Ver. 14. Τὸν ἅγιον καὶ δίκαιον ἠρνήσασθε.] These words I would render thus, You refused the Holy One: so styled by good angels, Luke i. 35. and by evil angels, Luke iv. 34. and even by Pilate's wife, that Just One, Matt. xxvii. 19. for so ἀρνέομαι doth often signify both in Scripture and profane authors. So Acts vii. 25. This Moses, ὃν ἠρνήσαντο, whom they refused: Heb. xi. 24. ἠρνήσατο, He refused to be called the son of Pharaoh. So in Phavorinus, ἀρνεῖται ὁ μὴ θέλων ποιῆσαί τι, is, he that is unwilling, and refuseth to do any thing: in Suidas, τὸ ἀρνεῖσθαι δανειστὰς, is, to reject the usurers. And to this sense, the very derivation of the word seems to lead: it being, say grammarians, ἀπὸ τοῦ αἴρειν τὰς χεῖρας ἐπὶ τῇ παραιτήσει, done by lifting up the hands in way of refusal.

[6] Ver. 15. Ἀρχηγὸν τῆς ζωῆς, The Prince of life.] The person sent by God to lead you in the way to life eternal, having first declared it fully to the world, 2 Tim. i. 10. proposed it to believers, John vi. purchased it for them by his death, shewed the way to it by his doctrine, and being appointed to give it to his faithful servants, John xvii. 2. whence he is styled, ἀρχηγὸς τῆς σωτηρίας, the Captain of our salvation, Heb. ii. 10. ὁ ἀρχηγὸς, a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance to Israel, and remission of sins, v. 32. Or, as Grotius here hath it, he is styled a Prince of life, as having life in himself, and power to raise all men from the dead, John v. 26. 29. To which sense the whole phrase, Ye have killed the Prince of life, seems to lead us.

[7] Ver. 16. Ἡ πίστις ἡ δι' αὐτοῦ, The faith which is by him.] For ἐν αὐτῷ, in him: so Rom. xv. 20. nothing is unclean δι' αὐτοῦ, in itself; δι' ὕδατος, in the water, 2 Pet. iii. 5. τὰ διὰ τοῦ σώματος, the things done in the body, 2 Cor. v. 10. they that sleep διὰ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, in Jesus, 1 Thess. iv. 14. and in this book, διὰ τῆς νυκτὸς, in the night, v. 19. xxiii. 31.

[8] Ver. 17. Through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers.] Though the ignorance of the whole nation, and especially of the rulers in this case, was such as took away all just excuse in them on the account of their infidelity; (John xv. 22. 24.) yet, because it was occasioned by those prejudices they had contracted through the meanness of his character, and their imaginations that Christ should not die, and that his kingdom should be temporal, Christ bears with it till the time of the effusion of the Holy Ghost, and then calls them again by his apostles to repentance. See the discourse of the sin against the Holy Ghost in the appendix to Matt. xii.

[9] Ver. 19. Ὅπως ἂν ἔλθωσι καιροὶ ἀναψύξεως, When the times of refreshing shall come upon you.] Here the critical notes are these, (1.) that ὅπως ἂν ἔλθωσι, is to be rendered that, or, so that they may come: ut veniant; so Irenæus, lib. ii. cap. 12. p. 363. ut superveniant, Tertul. de Resur. Carn. cap. 23. So the phrase is often used both in the Old and New Testament, and in profane authors: in the Old Testament it answers to the למען, and is often rendered that: so Psal. ix. 14. ὅπως ἂν ἐξαγγείλῳ, that I may shew forth thy praises: Psal. xcii. 7. ὅπως ἂν ἐξολοθρευθῶσιν, that they may be destroyed for ever: Psal. cxix. 101. ὅπως ἂν φυλάξω, that I may keep thy words. In the New Testament, ὅπως ἂν ἐκζητήσωσιν, that the residue of men may seek after the Lord, Acts xv. 17. ὅπως ἂν ἀποκαλυφθῶσιν, that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed, Luke ii. 35. ὅπως ἂν δικαιωθῇς, that thou mayest be justified, Rom. iii. 4.: so in Aristophanes, ὅπως ἂν εἰδῇ, that he may know. (See Budæus.) (2.) Οἱ καιροὶ ἀναψύξεως, are times of rest, refreshment, consolation: sometimes after great danger and trouble, as when God had taken away the plague of frogs, Pharaoh saw there was ἄνάψυξις, refreshment, or, as we say, a breathing-time: so when the evil spirit was on Saul, David played on the harp, καὶ ἀνέψυξε, and Saul was refreshed, 2 Sam. xvi. 14.) The king and all the people came weary, καὶ ἀνέψυξαν ἐκεῖ, and were refreshed there: so Psal. xxxviii. 13. O spare me, ἵνα ἀναψυξῶ, that I may revive: Psal. lxv. 11. We have gone through fire and water, and thou hast brought us forth, εἰς ἀναψυχὴν, to a place of rest: (see 2 Macc. xiii. 13.) and sometimes without relation to it, as, a nation at ease, and without care, is ἔθνος καθήμενον εἰς ἀναψυχὴν, Jer. xlix. 30. I have found ἀναψυχὴν, rest to myself, Hos. xii. 8. (See 2 Macc. iv. 46.) Now these times of refreshing, rest, and comfort, are by some referred to the times of the gospel, in which Christ saith, Come to me, ye that are weary and heavy laden, καὶ ἀναπαύσω, and I will refresh you, (Matt. xi. 28.) and ye shall find, ἀνάπαυσιν, rest to your souls, (ver. 30.) So Dr. Lightfoot, who gives the import of the words thus, Repent, &c. that your sins may be blotted out, that the times of refreshing from the gospel may come upon you. But against this interpretation there lies this objection, That these times of refreshing were to come by the sending of that Jesus, who was ascended into heaven, and was not to come thence till the day of judgment, (ver. 21, 22.) Grotius and Dr. Hammond refer this to their deliverance from the destruction which shortly was to come on the obdurate Jews; but though that was then future, and there is frequent mention of a παρουσία, or coming of Christ, then, yet was it no coming of Christ from heaven, but only a coming by the Roman army. I therefore incline rather to the opinion of the ancients, which refers this to the time of Christ's second coming, to give all his servants, after their troubles and persecutions in this world, rest with him, (2 Thess. i. 6—8.) which he shall do by descending from heaven, raising them from the dead, and causing them to enter into everlasting rest. (1 Thess. iv. 15, 16. 1 Cor. xv. 47.) So the times of the resurrection are by the Jews styled the days of consolation, Targum in Hos. vi. 2.

[10] Ver. 20. Τὸν προκεκηρυγμένον, Who before was preached to you.] Some here read, τὸν προκεχειρισμένον, before designed, viz. in the predictions of the law and the prophets, or, before preached to you by them.

[11] Ver. 21. Ὃν δεῖ οὐρανὸν μὲν δέξασθαι, Whom the heavens must receive.] They who render the words thus, Who must receive the heavens, i. e. govern there, seem to be confuted by the limitation of time annexed to these words, Christ being to reign in the heavens for ever.

[12] Ἄχρι χρόνων ἀποκαταστάσεως πάντων, Till the times of restitution of all things.] That these words cannot be meant of a restitution of all things to their former state, is certain; for sure, it is very improper to say, there will be a restitution of all things to their former state, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his prophets: for since these things relate to the forerunner of our Lord, Christ's coming in the flesh, his life, death, resurrection, and ascension, the preaching of the gospel to the gentiles, and the reign of antichrist, the calling of the Jews, and the coming in of the fulness of the gentiles, these things may very well be said to be exhibited, performed, accomplished, and consummated; but I see not with what propriety or truth they can be said to be restored to the former state, or be renewed; and therefore ἄχρι χρόνων ἀποκαταστάσεως πάντων, is by the Syriac rendered, until the fulness of the time of all things; by the Arabic, till the time in which all things shall be perfected or finished; by Tertullian,* "adusque tempora exhibitionis omnium;" by Irenæus,† "usque ad tempora dispositionis omnium;" i. e. till the time of the exhibition or disposal of all things; by Œcumenius, till the time of all things does, εἰς πέρας ἐλθεῖν, come to an end: and for the confirmation of this import of the word, we have the suffrage of Hesychius and Phavorinus, that ἀποκατάστασις is τελείωσις, the consummation of a thing. Hence then I argue thus against the doctrine of the millenaries; Since Christ is to continue in heaven till the completion or consummation of all things spoken by the holy prophets, if the millennium were any of them, Christ must continue in heaven till the consummation of that also, and therefore is not to come down from heaven to reign on earth till the millennium be ended; nor can that be contemporary with our Lord's second coming, which is from heaven.

* De Carn. cap. 23. † B. iii. cap. 12.

[13] Ἀπ' αἰῶνος, Since the world began.] That is, from times of old. (See note on Luke i. 70.)

[14] Ver. 22. For Moses said, A Prophet, &c.] Hence it appears that this prophecy doth primarily respect Christ, and not a series of prophets, as some imagine. (See the note on John i. 45. v. 46.)

[15] Ver. 24. And all the prophets from Samuel.] Samuel, saith Dr. Hammond, is here reckoned the first of the prophets, because the schools of the prophets were first instituted and erected by him; we reading in his time of a company or college of prophets at Ramah, and Samuel standing among them. (1 Sam. xix. 20.) He is reckoned, saith Dr. Lightfoot, after Moses, partly because prophecy from Moses to Samuel was very rare, (1 Sam. iii. 1, 2.) and partly because he was the first after Moses that wrote his prophecy.

[16] Ver. 25. Ye are the children of the prophets.] The prophets being styled spiritual fathers, 2 Kings ii. 12. xiii. 14. they who were taught by them were called the sons of the prophets, 2 Kings ii. 3. and generally teachers were called fathers, and they who were taught by them children. (See note on 1 Cor. xiv. 15.)

[17] In thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed.] Hence it is evident, that these words are not a form of blessing to this effect, God bless thee as he blessed Abraham, but a promise of a benediction to all nations through Christ the seed of Abraham. (See the note on Gal. iii. 16.)

CHAP. IV.

1. AND as they spake to the people, the priests, and [1] the captain of the temple, and the sadducees, came upon them (violently.

2. The sadducees) being grieved that they taught the people, and preached (to them) through Jesus the resurrection from the dead (which the sadducees denied, xxiii. 8.)

3. And they laid hands on them, and put them in hold (i. e. in prison) until the next day: for it was now eventide.

4. Howbeit (δὲ, but notwithstanding this treatment of him) many of them which heard the word believed (their doctrine); and the (whole) [2] number of the men (that believed it) was about five thousand.

5. And it came to pass on the morrow, that their rulers, and elders, and scribes,

6. And Annas the high-priest, and Caiaphas, and John, and Alexander, and as many as were of the kindred of the high-priest, were gathered together at Jerusalem.

7. And when they had set them (Peter and John) in the midst (of the assembly), they asked (them), By what power, or by (virtue of) what name, have you done this (cure)?

8. Then Peter (and John, being) filled with the Holy Ghost, said to them, Ye rulers of the people, and elders of Israel,

9. If we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man, (if you inquire) by what means he is made whole;

10. Be it known to you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name (and power) of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, (and) whom God (hath) raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole.

11. [3] This (οὗτος, he) is the stone which (according to the words of the Psalmist, Psal. cxviii. 22.) was set at nought of you builders, (and) who is (now) become the head (stone) of the corner (the prime foundation of the whole fabric of the church).

12. [4] Neither is there (such) salvation (promised by faith) in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby (or, by faith in which) we must (or may) be saved.

13. Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were [5] unlearned and ignorant men (and therefore could not be thus bold on the account of their own wisdom or skill in the Jewish learning), they marvelled; and they took knowledge of them, (Gr. ἐπεγίνωσκόν τε, but they knew) that they had been with (that) Jesus (in whose name they pretended to work this cure).

14. And beholding the man that was healed standing with them, they could say nothing against it (i. e. their allegation).

15. But when they had commanded them to go aside out of the council, they conferred among themselves,

16. Saying, What shall we do to (restrain) these men? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been done by them is manifest to all them that dwell in Jerusalem; and we cannot deny it.

17. But, that it (their doctrine may) spread no farther among the people, let us straitly threaten them, that they speak henceforth to no man in his name.

18. And (so) they called them, and commanded them (under pain of their displeasure) not to speak at all (henceforth) nor teach in the name of Jesus.

19. But Peter and John answered and said to them, [6] Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken to you (forbidding,) more (i. e. rather) than to God (commanding us to preach in the name of Jesus), judge ye.

20. (As for us, be assured, we shall not obey your commandments;) for we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard.

21. So when they had farther threatened them, they let them go, finding nothing (done by them against the law), how (for which) they might punish them, (and not daring to do it against the law,) because of the people: for all men glorified God for that which was done.

22. For the man was about forty years old, on whom this miracle of healing was shewed (and so the cure was the more remarkable).

23. And being (thus) let go, they went to their own company, and reported (to them) all that the chief priests and elders had said to them.

24. And when they had heard that, they lifted up their voice to God with one accord, and said, Lord, thou art God, which hast made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is:

25. [7] Who by the mouth of thy servant David hast said, (Psal. ii. 1.) Why did the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing?

26. The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against his Christ: (and what thou saidst by him is now fulfilled.)

27. For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed (with the Holy Ghost), both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the gentiles (i. e. Roman soldiers), and the people of Israel, were gathered together.

28. For [8] to do whatsoever thy hand (of providence) and thy counsel determined before to be done.

29. And (therefore) now, Lord, behold their threatenings: and grant unto thy servants (such courage), that with all boldness they may (still) speak thy word.

30. (And assist them in so doing) by stretching forth thy hand to heal; (and by granting) that signs and wonders may be done by (us in) the name of thy holy child Jesus.

31. And when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together, (as on the day of Pentecost, Acts ii. 2.) and [9] they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness.

32. And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul (united in love and affection): neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was (so) his own (as not to be imparted to others who had need of it); but they had [10] all things common.

33. And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace (of God) was come upon them all.

34. Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as had possessions of lands or houses sold them, and brought the price of the things that were sold,

35. And laid them down at the apostles' feet: and distribution was (by the apostles) made to every man according as he had need.

36. And [11] Joses, who by the apostles was surnamed Barnabas, which is, being interpreted, The son of consolation, (he being) a Levite, and of the country of Cyprus (by birth),

37. Having land (there), sold it, and brought the money, and laid it at the apostles' feet.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IV.

[1] Ver. 1. OF this captain of the temple, see the note on Luke xxii. 52. Before our Saviour's passion, the chief agents against him were the scribes and pharisees; but now that the apostles do not only assert the resurrection of our Lord, but also preach through the resurrection of the dead, (ver. 2.) the sadducees, who denied the resurrection of the body, become their fiercest adversaries. (See the note on Acts xxiii. 6.)

[2] Ver. 4. And the number of the men was about five thousand.] Not the number of the auditors, for they are never reckoned up in Scripture, but the number of them that believed, hearing Peter and John preach, and seeing the miracle done by them: for so the words run, many of them that heard the word believed, and the number of them (that believed) was about five thousand. Note also, that the three thousand, mentioned ii. 41. belong not to this number, but they were all new converts, converted by the word which Peter and John had preached, for of them only is the discourse from iii. 1. to this place.

[3] Ver. 11. This is the stone which the builders refused.] Though the Chaldee paraphrast interprets this clause of the Psalmist (Psal. cxviii. 22.) of David; and Aben-Ezra of the congregation of Israel, yet R. Solomon Jarchi on Micah v. interprets these words of the Messiah, as our Saviour doth, Matt. xxi. 42. the Jews not contradicting him, or saying they belonged not to him.

[4] Ver. 12. Καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν ἄλλῳ οὐδενὶ ἡ σωτηρία, Nor is their salvation in any other.] This some interpret thus, There is no other name under heaven by which health can be given to the diseased, or feet to the lame, &c. and this interpretation will not be so strange as at first sight it seems to be, if we consider,

First, That it is very frequent in the Gospels to say of them who were cured, they were saved. So the woman saith, Matt. ix. 21. If I do but touch the hem of his garment, σωθήσομαι, I shall be saved; and Christ answers, Thy faith, σέσωκέ σε, hath saved thee; καὶ ἐσώθη, and the woman was saved from that hour: so the ruler of the synagogue prays Christ to put his hand upon his daughter, ὅπως σωθῇ; that she might be saved, Mark v. 23. and vi. 56. as many as touched the hem of his garment, ἐσώζοντο, were saved: so to blind Bartimeus Christ saith, Thy faith, σέσωκέ σε, hath saved thee, Mark x. 52. and so to the Samaritan leper, Luke xvii. 19.

Secondly, That this opinion had obtained among the Jews, and other nations, that there were some powerful names that could cure diseases; this seems to be insinuated in the question of the Sanhedrin, ver. 7. ἐν ποίῳ ὀνόματι, In what name have you done this cure? Josephus* speaks of the doing this by mention of the name of Solomon; the Talmud† of doing it by mention of the separate name; the Christians by the name of the God of Abraham, &c. (See note on Matt. xii. 27.)

Thirdly, If we consider St. Peter's answer, viz. If the question be ἐν τινὶ οὗτος σέσωσται, by what name this man is saved, i. e. healed, be it known to you that he is healed through the name of Jesus Christ, nor is there any other name by which we can be saved. And from this sense of the words it clearly follows, that no true miracles have been ever done since Christ's ascension, by the invocation of the names of saints; and, (2.) that the disputes of the schools from this place concerning the salvation of the gentiles, have been impertinent. If the common sense be rather liked, yet must it be acknowledged, that God is no respecter of persons, as to their spiritual and eternal interests, but in every nation he that feareth God, and worketh righteousness, is accepted of him, Acts x. 34, 35. (see the note there): and that God would have all men diligently to seek, and to come to him with a firm belief that he is a rewarder of them that do so, (Heb. ix. 6.) and that he hath not suspended that reward on an impossible condition, though he will only give it with respect to what our Lord Jesus hath done or suffered for them: that he hath not left himself without a witness of his goodness to the heathen world, not only by doing good to their bodies without regard to their souls, or by being good only to them as we are to our hogs, by fattening them for a day of slaughter. It being, saith Maximus Tyrius,‡ a thought unworthy of God, that he should be liberal in bestowing mean things on us, but penurious as to better.

[5] Ver. 13. They were ἀγράμματοι καὶ ἰδιῶται, unlearned and ignorant (or private) men.] This for three centuries was the objection against the professors of Christianity; these were the names given them by Lucian,* Celsus,† Asclepiades,‡ Cecilius,§ Porphyry,‖ Hierocles,¶ Julian, and by all the heathens; as Justin, Tatian, Minucius, Tertullian,†† Arnobius,‡‡ and Lactantius §§ testify: and though that is not wholly true, yet it is a great confirmation of the Christian faith, and shews, as Justin Martyr |||| well observes, that it was not of human, but Divine original, and that being with Jesus, was sufficient to make the ignorant and unlearned wise.

[6] Ver. 19. Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you rather than unto God, judge ye.] So Socrates answered to his accusers, πείσομαι τῷ Θεῷ μᾶλλον ἢ ὑμῖν, (Apol. p. 23.) O ye Athenians, I will obey God rather than you: and so saith Arrian, When thy superiors command thee any thing, thou must remember there is one above who sees thee καὶ ὅτι ἐκείνῳ σε δεῖ μᾶλλον ἀρέσκειν ἢ τούτῳ, and that thou oughtest to please him rather than man.

[7] Ver. 25. Who by the mouth of thy servant David hast said, Why did the heathen rage, &c.] Here note,

First, Against some late innovators, that what was said by David is ascribed to God himself, to shew that David spake and composed these Psalms by the prophetical afflatus of the Holy Spirit.

Secondly, That though the latter Jews will not admit that this Psalm belongs to the Messiah, yet R. Solomon Jarchi confesses that all their ancient rabbins did so interpret it. (See the note on Heb. i. 5.)

[8] Ver. 28. To do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done.] Here note, what is usually observed, that the hand of God most frequently in the Old Testament relates not so much to his power, as to his wisdom and providential dispensations: so Job xxvii. 11. I will teach you by the hand of God, i. e. by his wisdom in his providential dispensations, (Eccles. ii. 24.) that a man should enjoy the good of his labours, that is, from the hand of God; so the good hand of God, is his favour or his gracious providence, Ezra vii. 9. viii. 18. 22. Nehem. ii. 8. 18. and being here joined with God's counsel, and applied to what was done by Pontius Pilate and the Roman soldiers, and by the Jews towards the crucifixion of the holy Jews, to which actions, so highly displeasing to God, his power could not actually concur, or effectively incline them, we have great reason here to prefer this import of the phrase before the other; and then the import of the words will be no more than this, That Jews and gentiles were assembled to accomplish those sufferings of our Saviour for mankind, which God had foretold, and by foretelling had determined should come to pass; according to those words of St. Paul, Acts xiii. 27. They who dwelt at Jerusalem, and their princes, not knowing the voices of the prophets, have fulfilled them by condemning him, doing all things which were written of him, ver. 29. As therefore St. Peter and Paul, by calling the Jews to repentance for this sin in crucifying the Lord of life, do evidence their sin was not the less, because they did by it fulfil the counsel of God's holy will and kind intentions to mankind: so do they consequently evidence, that God's foreknowledge and determination of a thing future, do not impair the liberty of men's wills in the accomplishment of it; as all the ancient fathers have declared in this particular. (See the note on xxii. 22.)

[9] Ver. 31. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost.] Not all the Christians, who being now eight thousand, could not be all in one house, but the hundred and twenty mentioned i. 15. and being in the same house with the apostles, this is their own company to which they went, ver. 24. and therefore, if the Holy Ghost fell only on the twelve before, yet now he must be supposed to fall on this whole number, enabling them to speak the word of God with boldness, as it follows here.

[10] Ver. 32. They had all things common.] As ii. 45. not by possession, but as to use; in which sense that of Tertullian is only true, "omnia indiscreta sunt apud nos præter uxores," among us all things are common except our wives; for it follows, that they had lands to sell. (See note on ii. 45.)

[11] Ver. 36, 37. And Joses a Levite, and by birth a Cypriot, having land, sold it.] For the Levites might have lands, not only in foreign countries, as Joses had in Cyprus, but even in their own: for Samuel, a Levite, (1 Chron. vi. 33.) was born upon his father's land, which had been purchased by his great-grandfather Zuph; (1 Sam. i. 1. ix. 5. and that lands might fall to them by accident, which they might sell, see the Bishop of Ely on Lev. xxvii. 21.

CHAP. V.

1. BUT a certain man named Ananias, with Sapphira his wife, sold a possession,

2. And (but he) [1] kept back part of (Gr. he defalked from) the price (of it), his wife also being privy (and consenting) to it, and brought (Gr. bringing) a certain part (of it only), and laid it at the apostles' feet, (pretending to do as the rest had done, iv. 35. 37.)

3. But Peter said (to him), Ananias, why hath Satan filled thy heart to lie unto the Holy Ghost, and (moved thee) to keep back part of (or defalk from) the (full) price of the land (which thou hast sold)?

4. Whilst it remained (unsold), was it not thine own (possession, no share of it belonging to any other)? and after it was sold, was it not in thine own power (to dispose of the money as thou wouldest, and bring the whole as others did)? why (then) hast thou conceived this thing in thine heart (to defalk from the price, and present to us a part only of it, as if it were the whole? by doing this) [2] thou hast not lied unto men (only), but to God (also).

5. And Ananias hearing these words fell down, and gave up the ghost: and great fear came upon all them that (saw and) heard these things.

6. And the young men (there) arose, wound him up, and carried him out, and buried him.

7. And it was about the space of three hours after, when his wife, not knowing what was done, came in.

8. And Peter answered (i. e. said) to her, Tell me whether you sold the land for so much (only as Ananias said)? and she said, Yea, (only) for so much.

9. Then Peter said to her, How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord (i. e. to try whether the Spirit of the Lord in us was able to detect your cheat)? behold, the feet of them which have buried thy husband are at the door, and shall carry thee out.

10. Then fell she down straightway at his feet, and yielded up the ghost: and the young men came in, and found her dead, and, carrying her forth, buried her by her husband.

11. And great fear came upon all the church, and upon as many as heard these things.

12. And by the hands of the apostles were many signs and wonders wrought among the people; (and they (of the church) were all with one accord in Solomon's porch.

13. [3] And of the rest (that were not of the church) durst no man join himself to them (i. e. to the apostles): but the people magnified them.

14. And believers were the more added to the Lord, (even) multitudes both of men and women) (who owned that Jesus was the Christ.

15. And so great and manifold were these miracles, ὥστε,) insomuch that they (who beheld them) [4] brought forth their sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them.

16. There came also a multitude out of the cities round about to Jerusalem, bringing sick folks, and them that were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed every one.

17. Then the high-priest rose up, and they that were with him (which is (being) the [5] sect of the sadducees), and (they) were filled with indignation,

18. And laid their hands upon the apostles, and put them in the common prison.

19. But the angel of the Lord by night opened the prison-doors, and brought them forth, and said (to them),

20. Go, stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words [6] of this life (which the sadducees deny, and I have commanded you to preach, Acts xiii. 26.)

21. And when they heard that, they entered into the temple early in the morning, and taught. But the high-priest came, and they that were with him, and called the council together, and all the senate of the children of Israel, and sent to the prison to have them brought (out).

22. But when the officers came, and (Gr. but the officers coming) found them not in prison, they returned, and (Gr. returning) told (the council of it),

23. Saying, The prison truly found we shut with all safety, and the keepers standing without before the doors; but when we had opened (them), we found no man within.

24. Now when the high-priest and [7] the captain of the temple and the chief priests heard these things, they

[8] doubted of (i. e. concerning) them whereunto this would grow (or, what the import of them might be).

25. Then came one, and told them, saying, Behold, the men whom ye put in prison are standing in the temple, and teaching the people.

26. Then went the captain (thither) with the officers, and brought them without violence, for they feared the people, lest they should have been stoned (by them).

27. And when they had brought them, they set them before the council, and the high-priest asked them,

28. Saying, Did not we straitly command you that you should not teach in this name? and (yet), behold, ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine, and intend to (Gr. would) bring (the guilt of) this man's blood upon us.

29. Then Peter and the other apostles answered (to the charge of disobeying their commands) and said, We ought to obey God rather than men.

30. (And as for the guilt of blood, that it is justly charged upon you, God himself hath testified; for) the God of our fathers (hath) raised up (that) Jesus whom ye slew and hanged on a tree (by being instant with Pilate that he might be crucified).

31. [9] Him (whom ye thus treated) hath God exalted with (to) his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins.

32. And (this we say not without proof, for) we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him.

33. (And) when they heard (these words), they were cut to the heart, and took counsel to slay them.

34. Then stood there up one in the council, (who was) a pharisee, [10] named Gamaliel, a doctor of the law, had in great reputation among the people, and (he) commanded (the officers) to put the apostles forth a little space (or while);

35. And (then) he said to them (of the council), Ye men of Israel, take heed to yourselves what ye intend (Gr. go about) to do as touching these men.

36. For [11] before these days rose up Theudas, boasting himself to be somebody; to whom a number of men, about four hundred, joined themselves: who was slain, and all, as many as obeyed him, were scattered, and brought to nought.

37. After this man rose up Judas of Galilee in the days of taxing (or enrolling), and drew away much people after him: (but) he also perished; and all, even as many as obeyed him, were dispersed.

38. And now (καὶ τὰ νῦν λέγω ὑμῖν, therefore) I say to you (for the present), Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought;

39. But if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it (nor ought you to attempt to do so); lest haply ye be found even to fight against God.

40. And to him they agreed: and when they had called the apostles, and beaten them (with rods), they commanded (them) that they should not speak in the name of Jesus (any more), and (then) let them go.

41. And they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy [12] to suffer shame for his name.

42. And daily in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach (the doctrine of) Jesus Christ.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. V.

[1] Ver. 2. ΚΑΙ᾽ ἐνοσφίσατο ἀπὸ τῆς τιμῆς, And he kept back part of the price.] It is generally here supposed, that Ananias and Sapphira had consecrated their estate to God by vow, so that they were guilty of the sin of sacrilege; but this may very well be doubted: (1.) because in all the sales of lands or houses, mentioned chap. ii. iv. and here, there is not the least hint or intimation of any such vow; that there was some fraud in the case, may be fairly gathered from the νοσφίζεσθαι, but that it was a sacrilegious fraud, cannot be proved from the word. (2.) St. Peter accuses neither him nor his wife of any such crime, but only of tempting, i. e. distrusting, and making trial, of the wisdom of the Holy Ghost, and going about to deceive him by this artifice: and, (3.) the apostle seems to own he had a right in his possession, and in the money for which it was sold, (ver. 3.) which yet he could not have, if he before had consecrated it to religious uses. But yet they were guilty of a double fraud: (1.) in laying down this part of the price at the apostles' feet, as the others had done, and thereby tacitly implying they had now the same right to be relieved from the public stock which others had, as having nothing of their own, when indeed they had money which they kept back: (2.) in presenting this before them as the whole price of the possession they had sold, when it was only a part of it, which it appears they did from St. Peter's question to his wife, Tell me for how much the land was sold? That the punishment of this sin was so heavy, will not be admired, if we consider, (1.) that it was a direct sin against the Holy Ghost, who was sent down from heaven to propagate the gospel, an attempt to put a cheat upon him, and questioning his wisdom to discern things secret, and therefore deserved the greater punishment, because it did so plainly tend to the hinderance of the gospel, by declaring that the Spirit which assisted the apostles was not able to discern things secret, and so might not be able to acquaint them with the secret things of God. (2.) We find God under the law very severe in his punishment of those who first offended in offering strange fire, as in the case of Nadab and Abihu; and violated the sabbath, as in the case of the man that gathered sticks upon that day, and especially against those who rose up against Moses the prophet, and Aaron the priest of the Lord, as in the case of Corah and his company; it was therefore fit the first great offence of this kind should receive exemplary punishment from the hand of God, that others might the more dread those sins which thus affronted that Holy Spirit, by whose power the gospel began to be propagated.

[2] Ver. 4. Οὐκ ἐψεύσω ἀνθρώποις, ἀλλὰ τῷ Θεῷ, Thou hast not lied to man, but unto God.] Hence it is argued, that if he that deceiveth or lieth to the Spirit, attempteth to deceive or lie to God, the Holy Spirit must be God.

To this Woltzogenius here and other Socinians answer, that the like phrase is often used when the inference cannot be good: for the Jews murmuring against Moses and Aaron, are said to murmur not against them, but against God, Exod. xvi. 8. and he that despiseth the preaching of the apostles, is said to despise not man, but God, who had given them the Holy Spirit, 1 Thess. iv. 8. Not them, but Christ, Matt. x. 40. Luke x. 16. but hence it will not follow, that either Moses, or Aaron, or the apostles, were God.

But to this answer, I reply, first, That these examples rather do confirm than infringe this argument: for as they who murmured against Moses and Aaron, murmured against God, because they did it against them who were invested with the authority of God, and acted in his name and by his power; and as they who despised the apostles, despised God for the same reason; so they, who lied to the apostles acting by the Spirit of God, or sought to deceive them by lying, are said to lie to God, because they lied to the apostles acting by the power and authority of God; and therefore the power and authority of the Spirit, must be the power and authority of God.

Secondly, Moses, and Aaron, and the apostles sent out by Christ to preach, did only act in the name of God and Christ, because they did this by commission from them, and by their command; but Ananias is here said to lie to God, because he lied to the Spirit in the apostles, enabling them to discern the secrets of men's hearts and actions, which being the property of God alone, he that doth lie to him must therefore lie to God, because he lies to one who hath the incommunicable property of God, consequently the Divine essence.

[3] Ver. 13. Τῶν δὲ λοιπῶν οὐδεὶς ἐτόλμα κολλᾶσθαι αὐτοῖς, But of the rest durst no man cleave unto them.] That is, saith Dr. Lightfoot, none of the hundred and eight durst join to the twelve, or equal themselves to them in office or dignity; but as there is no mention of that number in this chapter, so did they never before this join themselves to the apostles; nor doth the word κολλᾶσθαι import any such thing, but only to converse, associate with, or come to them; as when Philip is bid κολλᾶσθαι, to join himself to the chariot of the eunuch, (viii. 29.) and Paul assayed after his conversion, κολλᾶσθαι, to join himself to the disciples, (ix. 16.) and when Peter saith, (x. 28.) You know that it is unlawful for a Jew κολλᾶσθαι, to join himself to one of another nation; and, lastly, when it is said that some men κολληθέντες αὐτῷ, joining themselves to St. Paul, believed, (xvii. 35.) which seems to favour the opinion of Grotius and Beza, viz. that great fear came on all the church, (ver. 11.) but of the rest, which were not yet of the church, durst no man join themselves to, or associate with, them as members of the church, for fear of the like punishment. But notwithstanding this, the people magnified them, and multitudes of them were added to the Lord, i. e. believed in Christ, though they durst not yet consort with the twelve apostles.

[4] Ver. 15. They brought forth their sick into the streets, that at least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them.] Here it is left uncertain, whether it were the faith of believers, or the superstition of the Jews, which had such expectation from St. Peter's shadow, whether St. Peter passed by that way, or not, or whether his shadow wrought any cures, or not. But if God, intending to magnify Peter, the minister of the circumcision, in the eyes of the circumcised, healed some persons when his shadow went over them, he did more certainly as much to magnify St. Paul, the apostle of the gentiles; for from his body were brought handkerchiefs or aprons to the sick, and the diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them; (xix. 12.) but hence it is ridiculous to argue, that the one, or the other, was prince of the apostles, or that the relics of holy men are to be venerated.

[5] Ver. 17. Ἡ οὖσα αἵρεσις τῶν σαδδουκαίων, Being the sect of the sadducees.] Not that the Sanhedrin then consisted chiefly of that sect, but because the doctrine of the resurrection destroyed their sect, and therefore they are still the readiest to oppose it, (iv. 2.) the pharisees being only concerned to avoid the guilt of Christ's blood.

[6] Ver. 20. Go, speak to the people all the words of this life, πάντα τὰ ῥήματα τῆς ζωῆς ταύτης.] i. e. Of this life which I have commissionated you to preach, and which the sadducees deny: so, xiii. 26. Ye children of Abraham, and ye that fear God, ὑμῖν ὁ λόγος τῆς σωτηρίας ταύτης ἀπεστάλη, to you is the word of this salvation sent.

[7] Ver. 24. Ὁ στρατηγὸς τοῦ ἱεροῦ, The captain of the temple.] i. e. The captain of the garrison of the Levites. (See the note on Luke xxii. 52.)

[8] They doubted of them what this thing should be, τί ἂν γένοιτο τοῦτο.] i. e. What this miraculous deliverance of them might import, and to what this would tend. So, x. 17. Peter doubted in himself, τί ἂν εἴη τὸ ὅραμα, what the vision might import.

[9] Ver. 31. Him hath God exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance to Israel, and remission of sins,] Upon that repentance, to be a Prince and a Saviour, even the Prince of life, (iii. 15.) and of salvation, (Heb. ii. 10.) on which account he is styled, τὸ σωτήριον τοῦ Θεοῦ, the salvation of God; (see note on Luke iii. 30.) and he is said to be exalted to give repentance and remission of sins, by giving the knowledge of that remission of sins which is promised to the penitent, and of those motives which should induce them to repent. So the Baptist is said to go before him, to give the knowledge of salvation to his people, through the remission of sins; and so God gave unto the gentiles repentance unto life, when he sent Peter to them to preach that word by which they repenting should be saved. (Acts xi. 14. 18.)

[10] Ver. 34. A pharisee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of the law, had in great reputation among the people.] He was Paul's tutor, (Acts xxii. 3.) and was called Rabbin Gamaliel, a title of the highest eminency, and given, say the Jews, only to seven persons; which shews sufficiently the reputation that he had among the people.

The right reverend Bishop Pearson very probably conjectures, that the sadducees, after our Lord's resurrection, being the greatest enemies to the apostles; they being grieved that they preached through Christ the resurrection from the dead; (Acts iv. 2. v. 17.) Gamaliel being a pharisee, and so a stiff asserter of the resurrection, did therefore give advice for the dismission of the apostles; for we find the pharisees, almost in the same words, pleading for St. Paul, preaching the same doctrine, viz. that they ought not to molest him, lest they should be found, θεομάχοι, fighters against God. (Acts xxiii. 9.)

[11] Ver. 36, 37. Πρὸ γὰρ τούτων τῶν ἡμέρων ἀνέστη Θευδᾶς, For before those days rose up Theudas; μετὰ τοῦτον, after him rose up Judas of Galilee.] Here Gamaliel affirms two things, (1.) That before those days, in which that council was assembled, that is, before the twentieth of Tiberius, arose Theudas, mentioned by him; whereas the Theudas mentioned by Josephus, Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 5. arose and perished by the hands of Cuspius Fadus, in the fourth year of Claudius, that is, ten years after the meeting of this council. (2.) He affirms that Judas of Galilee rose up after him, and yet that he arose in the days of the taxing, which was under the emperor Augustus, at the birth of Christ, and so thirty-four years before this council; and so this Theudas that arose before him must have been at least thirty-five years before this council.

Some critics endeavour to solve these difficulties by torturing the words of the text, and making Gamaliel say, that Judas of Galilee arose, μετὰ τοῦτον, not after, but before Theudas, contrary to the rule of Phavorinus, that μετὰ with an accusative case δηλοῖ ὑστεροχρόνιον, signifies posteriority of time. Dr. Lightfoot here seems inconstant in his opinion, for in his first notes upon the Acts he saith, that Gamaliel's Theudas and Josephus's are not one and the same; but as it happened with Judas, that though he himself perished in his error, and as many as obeyed him were scattered abroad, as Gamaliel relateth, yet was not his error extinguished with him, but revived and grew again: so that at least forty years after his first appearing, his two sons, James and Simon, are crucified for it by Tiberius Alexander, the successor of Fadus. (Jos. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 3.) And many years after that, Eleazer, a branch of the same Judas, appeareth in the same opinion, with a desperate company with him. (De Bell. Jud. lib. vii. cap. 20.) Even so may it be conceived of the sect of Theudas, that it began before that of Judas, and that the first author of it took upon him great things, as, to be a prophet, and to work miracles, and the like; but he was soon slain, and all that obeyed him were scattered abroad, and came to nought; but his folly and fancy perished not with him, but (however at other times) in the times of Fadus one of the same foolery and name, and probably his son, would be a prophet again, and divide Jordan, and do I know not what, whom Fadus destroyed, and brought his company to ruin: so that Gamaliel's and Josephus's Theudas are very probably two men, but very likely father and son, or tutor and scholar; agreeing so exactly in the same folly and madness, that they agreed in the same name: and that name either given to the latter, as parents name their children by their own names, or assumed by him in imitation of the former Theudas, whom as he delighted to imitate in his enthusiastic folly, so delighted he to follow him in denomination: and I am the rather confirmed in this opinion about these two men, because that as soon as ever Josephus hath told the story of the destruction of Theudas by Fadus, he telleth of the destruction of the sons of Judas by Tiberius Alexander; and I cannot but interpret both the stories in one sense, that as in the latter he speaks of the offspring of Judas, whose sect had begun many years before, so in the former he speaketh of the offspring of Theudas, whose sect had begun before that of Judas: yet, in his latter exercitations on this place he says, this is but an imagination, and inclines rather to think, that Josephus slipped in his chronology, to whom (saith he), both in history and chronology, it is no unusual thing to trip, or go out of the road of truth.

I prefer his first opinion, as being generally embraced by the ancients; for (1.) Origen,* who had read Josephus, and declares that he examined things relating to the Scripture, φιλαληθῶς, out of love to truth, speaks thus, We say that there was one Theudas before the birth of Christ, who among the Jews declared himself to be somebody. And again, that Judas Galileus, and Theudas that was before him, being not of God, perished. And a third time, because they gathered from the Scriptures that the time of the Messiah was come, first Theudas, and after him Judas of Galilee, tumultuated in the time of the taxing. Hence do the fathers unanimously say, that those words of Christ, John x. 8. *All that came before me are thieves and robbers, relate to these two, Theudas and Judas of Galilee, which shews their belief, that both of them were before the time of Christ's preaching: so that it is extremely evident, that the ancient fathers agreed in this, that there was a Theudas pretending to great things, even before the coming of our Lord, though Josephus hath taken no notice of him.

[12] Ver. 41. Ἀτιμασθῆναι, To be reproached.] Or dishonoured, by being scourged: for as, among the Romans, a citizen of Rome was not to be scourged, so, among the Jews, saith Josephus,† it was τιμωρία αἰσχίστη, the most shameful punishment, when inflicted upon a Jew, and that which did ὑβρίζειν τὸ ἀξίωμα, stain his dignity.

CHAP. VI.

1. AND in those days, when the number of the disciples was multiplied, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians (Gr. of the [1] Hellenists, or Jews of the dispersion who spake the Greek language) against the Hebrews (who used the Hebrew or Syriac tongue), because their widows were neglected in the daily ministration (of provisions, made for poor widows belonging to the church, 1 Tim. v. 16.)

2. [2] Then the twelve called the multitude of the disciples to them, and said, It is not reason (-able) that we should leave (preaching) the word of God, and (daily be employed to) serve tables (or, make provisions for the poor).

3. Wherefore, brethren, look you out among you seven men of honest report, [3] full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, [4] whom we may appoint over this business (Gr. for this use).

4. But we (and we being eased of this burden) will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the word.

5. And the saying (of the apostles) pleased the whole multitude: and they (accordingly) chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and Nicolas a proselyte of Antioch:

6. Whom they set before the apostles: and when they had prayed (Gr. they praying), [5] they laid their hands upon them.

7. And (so, by the labours of the apostles,) the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied

12. And they stirred up (against him) the people, and the elders, and the scribes, and came upon him, and caught him, and brought him to the council,

15. And all that sat in the council, looking steadfastly on him, [8] saw (on him a great splendour, making) his face (to shine) as if it had been the face of an angel.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VI.

[1] Ver. 1. ΤΩΝ Ἑλληνιστῶν, Of the Grecians.] It is much to be disputed who these Hellenists were: it is beyond doubt that they were not Greeks by nation or birth, whether unconverted or proselytes to the Jewish nation; for these are never called Hellenists, but always in the Scripture Ἕλληνες, Hellens, and by Josephus, Ἑλληνικοὶ, and are distinguished, not from the Hebrews, but the Jews; as when mention is made, Ἰουδαίων τε καὶ Ἑλλήνων, of the Jews and Greeks, Acts xvi. 1. 3. 19. x. 17. xx. 20, 21. Rom. i. 16. ii. 9, 10. iii. 9. x. 12. 1 Cor. ii. 22, 23. x. 32. xii. 13. Gal. iii. 28. Col. iii. 11. see John xii. 20. and of those Greeks who came to the Jewish synagogues, and therefore seem to have been proselytes, Acts xiv. 1. xviii. 4. and a distinction is made, not between Hebrews, but Jews and proselytes, Acts ii. 10. Moreover, they who were scattered upon the persecution which followed the death of Stephen, (Acts viii. 1.) spake the word only to the Jews, Acts xi. 19. and yet they spake πρὸς τοὺς Ἑλληνιστὰς, to the Hellenists, ver. 20. And, thirdly, Paul coming to Jerusalem, disputed πρὸς τοὺς Ἑλληνιστὰς, against the Hellenists, and they went about to kill him, Acts ix. 29. as the Jews at Damascus had done before, ver. 23. which shews they must be Jews by birth, and not only strangers of other nations come thither; for how durst they attempt to kill a Jew among the Jews without bringing him to their tribunal?

Secondly, I think it not sufficient to say, with the Syriac or St. Chrysostom, that they were Jews, Ἑλληνιστὶ φθεγγόμενοι, using the Greek tongue; for this they of Judea, especially the learned among them, generally did: for we never find in Josephus, that they spake to the Romans, or others who used that tongue, by an interpreter. Dr. Lightfoot therefore adds, that they were Jews, who, living among the Greeks, understood and used that tongue only, and then they must be called Hebrews, who used the Hebrew or Syriac tongue as their usual dialect: but then, whereas Dr. Lightfoot will not allow, that in their synagogues they used the Greek tongue, or read the Scriptures according to the Greek translation, I incline rather to the opinion of the learned Grotius, that they used this tongue also in their sacred exercises; for why should they, whose synagogues consisted of persons understanding neither Hebrew nor Syriac, have both or either of those languages, read to them in their assemblies? Moreover, that in their exhortation made in their synagogues, consisting both of Jews and proselytes of the Grecians, they used the Greek language, seems evident from this, that Paul and Barnabas so spake in them, that a multitude of the Greeks as well as of the Jews believed. (Acts xiii. 43. xiv. 1. xvii. 4. 12. xviii. 4.)

[2] Ver. 2. And the twelve calling the multitude of the disciples, Gr. τὸ πλῆθος τῶν μαθητῶν.] Here Dr. Lightfoot conjectures, that the multitude of the disciples doth not import the multitude of believers, they being many thousands, (Acts iii. 41. iv. 4. v. 14.) but only the one hundred and eight presbyters, mentioned Acts i. 15. But (1.) it is evident, that the whole multitude of believers are called disciples, both here, ver. 7. and throughout this whole history of the Acts: and, (2.) we are told, that this multitude were together: (Acts ii. 44. iv. 23. 32.) and, (3.) it is here noted, that the saying of the apostles was acceptable, ἐνώπιον πάντος τοῦ πλήθους, before the whole multitude.

[3] Ver. 3. Full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom.] i. e. Of the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost, and of the gift of wisdom, mentioned 1 Cor. xii. 8. So, when they had prayed, that God would stretch forth his hands to heal, and that signs and wonders might be done by the name of Jesus, Acts iv. 30. it is added, ver. 31. that they were filled with the Holy Ghost; and of Barnabas it is said, that he was full of the Holy Ghost and of faith, another of these gifts, 1 Cor. xii. 9. and so, by his means, a great multitude was added to the Lord, Acts xi. 24. and here, ver. 8. that Stephen, being full of the Holy Ghost and power, did great signs and miracles among the people: and these gifts of the Holy Ghost being given to them, not for their own use, but to profit the church with them, (1 Cor. xii. 7.) and so being not only qualifications of them for, but as it were pre-elections of them to, some sacred functions; (Acts xx. 28.) out of those who were thus endowed, they generally chose church-officers, and the very deacons and helps had these gifts: (Rom. xii. 7, 8. see note on 1 Cor. xii. 28.) and hence the apostles here say, Look ye out men full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom.

[4] Ver. 3. 6. Whom we may appoint over this business; —and they laid their hands upon them.] Here two things are disputed:

First, Whether these seven were chosen and ordained to a civil office only, viz. that of ministering only to the necessities of widows and other indigent disciples; or else to the sacred office of a deacon, and so empowered to preach the word, and baptize. Certain it is, that of these seven, St. Stephen did preach the word, and that Philip did baptize. (Acts viii. 12. 38.) But then it is said, they did so, not as men chosen and ordained to this office, but as being of the number of the seventy disciples, ἐξ ὧν ἦσαν οἱ ἑπτὰ, of whom these seven were, saith Epiphanius.* And, indeed, the ancients seem to have been divided about this matter: the council of Neocæsarea† saying expressly, that there ought to be but seven deacons in the great cities, as we learn ἀπὸ τῆς βίβλου τῶν Πράξεων, from the Acts of the Apostles; and the apostles in their Constitutions,‡ that they, after our Lord's ascension, had chosen διακόνους ἑπτὰ τὸν ἀριθμὸν, seven deacons; of which number, Stephen was one: and the synod in Trullo, on the other hand, saying, that the apostles spake not there περὶ τῶν τοῖς μυστηρίοις διακονουμένων, of those who served at the altar, but of those that served ταῖς χρείαις τῶν τραπεζῶν, to the business of tables; but this is as true of the deacons mentioned by St. Paul, 1 Tim. iii. that there is not a word said of their ministering at the altar: and it seems very unlikely, that the apostles would have made this one requisite of the persons to be chosen, that they should be full of the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost, and of wisdom, if their office had confined them to the ministry of the widows at Jerusalem; or that they, who were evangelists before, as Philip is expressly styled, should wholly lay aside the preaching of the word, and attend only on a civil office. (See Acts xxi. 8.) Moreover, it is certain that deacons were instituted before St. Paul writ the First Epistle to Timothy; for we have mention of them in the Epistle to the Philippians, writ three years before that to Timothy; and they are mentioned in the advice to Timothy, not as an office to be instituted, but as a standing office then settled in the church, as they must be if bishops were then so, they being necessary attendants on that higher function, according to the words of Epiphanius,§ Ἄνευ δὲ διακόνου ἐπίσκοπον ἀδύνατον εἶναι, A bishop cannot be without a deacon. Now if they were not instituted here by the apostles, I desire to know when, where, and by whom, they were instituted, and what other record we have left us of such an institution of them.

Obj. 1. Against this it is objected, first, That these seven are never called deacons in the whole history of the Acts of the Apostles, and that this name is never given either to St. Stephen, or to Philip the evangelist.

Ans. But this objection can be of no strength against the suffrage of all antiquity, which hath still given them the name of deacons, seeing they have no other name ascribed to them in the whole Acts of the Apostles, or the sacred history; they are never called διάκονοι τραπεζῶν, ministers of tables in all the Acts, though here they are said to be appointed for that work: and so saith Jerome‖ of the deacons of his age, that they were "mensarum et viduarum ministri," the ministers not only of the priests, but also of widows and tables. So he styles them in his Epistle to Evagrius, and bids them learn the reason of their institution from the Acts of the Apostles.

Obj. 2. It is farther objected, That in St. Paul's account of the deacons of the church, there is no mention of this part of their office to provide for widows and serve tables, nor any quality required of them which respects that office.

I answer, That, according to this argument, should all that hath been said be granted, the deacons could have no authority to baptize, or administer either the bread or the cup to the laity, there being not one word of any such office belonging to them in St. Paul's Epistles to Timothy, nor of any assistance they are to give the bishop.

Secondly, I answer, That as the deacons of St. Paul are to be grave, and hold the faith in a good conscience, so are the deacons here to be men of honest report and wisdom, ver. 3. as they were to be approved, and then to execute the office of a deacon, 1 Tim. iii. 9.: so was it here, ver. 5, 6. Now men of double tongues, and given to much wine, could neither be men of good report, nor men of wisdom, and much less could they be approved as such; so that the characters of the deacons here seem virtually to include all the characters required of them there, and two more, especially relating to sacred offices, viz. that they should be men full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom; and that which St. Stephen doth here, and St. Philip did in preaching to the Samaritans, and then baptizing them, is the foundation of the authority given by bishops to deacons to preach the word, and to baptize. Moreover, their being ministers of tables, made them also ministers at the Agapæ, where the bishop was to be acquainted with the necessities of the widows and the poor, say the Apostolical Constitutions,* διὰ τῶν ὑπηρετῶν, τουτέστι, διὰ τῶν διακόνων, by the ministers, that is, the deacons; and so they became attendants also on him, or on the president, who consecrated the eucharist, celebrated at the same time with these feasts of charity; and so they distributed the bread and wine to the communicants, and carried them, saith Justin Martyr,† to those that were absent. Hence are they styled by Ignatius ‡ and Polycarp,§ not only the ministers of meats and drinks, but the servants of the church of God, and said to be servants not of men, but of God and Christ, as servants are in that relation said to serve the Lord Christ, and therefore are bid to do all things as to the Lord, and not unto men. (Colos. iii. 23, 24.) And Clemens of Alexandria‖ saith, that in the church the presbyters have, τὴν βελτιωτικὴν εἰκόνα, τὴν ὑπηρετικὴν δὲ οἱ διάκονοι, the representation of those who make men better, and the deacons of them that serve. And, because they performed this ministry under the inspection of the bishop, and gave him an account of the condition of the widows and the poor, and had from him, or his presbyters, the treasury of the church to distribute to others: therefore is this so often mentioned in church-history as part of the episcopal office, to have the care of all that are in need, as Justin Martyr¶ saith, the presbyters and deacons doing this only by his authority.

In fine, To say that Philip and others of these deacons might preach and baptize, but not as deacons, but only as evangelists, is not sufficient in this case: for if they were all evangelists, or, as Epiphanius saith, of the seventy, and afterward by the apostles ordained deacons, it is hence evident, that they must have with this office a power to preach and baptize, as doubtless the evangelists and seventy disciples had; and hence we find, that Philip, being one of those seven, (Acts xxi. 8.) did both these offices by the direction and assistance of the Holy Ghost. (Acts viii. 12. 29. 40.) If they were not, yet being men full of the Holy Ghost, and of that wisdom which enabled them to teach others, we cannot reasonably conceive they were disabled, by their ordination to this office, from doing that work, for which they were thus fitted, and as it were appointed, by these gifts of the Holy Spirit conferred upon them. In a word, it is evident from this history, that before the ordination of these deacons, the apostles themselves were engaged in this work: for the treasure of the church was laid at the apostles' feet, and distribution of it was made to every man according as he had need, (iv. 35.) This distribution therefore must be made by them who had this treasure in their hands, and therefore they appoint these seven over this business to ease themselves of this trouble, that they might give themselves more entirely to prayer and to the ministry of the word, and might not, by attending on this work, be hindered in the execution of that higher office: now surely that work which the apostles personally performed for a season, must be consistent with their commission, to teach and to baptize all nations.

[5] Ver. 6. The apostles laid their hands on them.] Here seemeth to be nothing in this relation which favours the authority of the laity, in choosing persons to sacred offices: for though the choice of these seven was committed to them, yet was this done (1.) by the particular appointment of the apostles themselves; for the twelve called the multitude, and said to them, Look ye out seven men, ver. 2, 3. (2.) They specify the number and the qualifications of the persons to be chosen to this office. (3.) They reserve to themselves the appointment of them to this work, saying, Look ye out seven men whom we may appoint over this business: and, lastly, they only laid their hands upon them. (See Chrysost. in locum.) So in the case of the princes, or rulers over thousands, hundreds, fifties, and tens; Moses saith, as here, Choose to yourselves men of wisdom and understanding, and known to your tribes, votashmam, and I will set them to be your heads: (Deut. i. 23, 24.) accordingly he both appointed them to, (ver. 25.) and instructed them in, the discharge of their office, (ver. 26, 27.)

[6] Ver. 9. Certain of the synagogue of the Libertines, and Cyrenians, and Alexandrians, and them of Cilicia, and Asia, disputing with Stephen.] That the word synagogue is to be repeated before all the places mentioned here, appears from this; that the Jews mention a synagogue of the Alexandrians at Jerusalem, as Dr. Lightfoot here noteth. Moreover, there being men of all these nations living in Jerusalem, and speaking their native language, and who yet were proselytes to the Jewish religion, (ii. 8. 11.) it is reasonable to conceive, that they had also synagogues for prayer, and hearing of the law, and pious exhortations in a tongue they understood. By the synagogue of these Libertines, some understand the Jews that were free-born, or had obtained the Roman freedom, as St. Paul had; so Dr. Lightfoot. Others think, they were Roman servants who had obtained their freedom; οἱ Ῥωμαίων ἀπελεύθεροι οὕτω καλοῦνται, saith Œcumenius here. The first opinion seems to be most probable. For though Tacitus* in his Annals, saith, that "quatuor millia libertini generis Judaicâ superstitione infecta," four thousand Libertines, infected with the Jewish superstition, were banished into Sardinia: yet Suetonius† saith, that they were "Judæorum juventus," the young men of the Jewish nation that were sent thither; and that "reliquos ejusdem gentis, aut similia sectantes urbe submovit," he only expelled the other Jews and their proselytes out of the city; Josephus,‡ that he commanded πᾶν τὸ Ἰουδαϊκὸν τῆς Ῥώμης ἀπελαυνθέναι, all the Jews to be expelled Rome, and that four thousand of them were sent to Sardinia by the consuls: and Philo§ saith, that he suffered a great part of the city beyond Tiber to be inhabited by the Jews, and that these Jews, Ῥωμαῖοι ἦσαν οἱ πλείους ἀπελευθερωθέντες, were most of them Romans set at liberty; for being carried captives into Italy, they obtained their freedom from their masters.

[7] Ver. 10. And they were not able to resist the wisdom with which he spake.] So exactly was the promise made by Christ, Matt. x. 20. Luke xxi. 15. fulfilled in St. Stephen.

[8] Ver. 15. Saw his face as the face of an angel.] This expression of the shining of the face like that of an angel, seems to have been proverbial among the Jews: for so Esther speaks to Artaxerxes, I saw thee as an angel of God, and my heart was troubled, ἀπὸ φόβου τῆς δόξης σου, from fear of thy glory, Esth. xv. 13. And the Chaldee paraphrast on Cantic. i. 4. saith, When Israel made the calf, their visage was black as that of an Ethiopian; but when they repented, and their sin was remitted, the splendour of the glory of their countenance was like that of an angel. Now God by this splendour of St. Stephen testified his innocence, and that he was pleasing to him as Moses was, in that he made his face to shine as he did that of Moses.

CHAP. VII.

1. THEN said the high-priest, Are these things so (as is suggested by these witnesses)?

2. And he said, [1] Men, brethren, and fathers, hearken; [2] The God of glory appeared to our father Abraham, [3] when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran, (Gen. xi. 33.)

3. And said to him, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, (who are idolaters, Josh. xxiv. 2.) and come into the land which I shall shew thee.

4. Then came he (in obedience to this call) out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran, (his father Terah being then with him, Gen. xi. 31.) and from thence, [4] when his father was dead, he (i. e. God) removed him into this land of Canaan, (Gen. xii. 5.) where ye now dwell.

5. And he gave him none inheritance in it, no, [5] not so much as to set his foot on: yet (καὶ, although) he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and (that is) to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child.

6. And [6] God spake on this wise, That his seed (begin- ning from Isaac) should sojourn in a strange land; and that they (among whom they sojourned) should bring them into bondage, and entreat them evil four hundred years.

7. And (then) the nation to whom they shall be (last) in bondage will I judge, saith God: (Gen. xv. 14.) and after that shall they come forth, and (shall) [7] serve me in this place (i. e. in this land of Canaan).

8. And he gave him the covenant of circumcision: and so Abraham (being circumcised himself) begat Isaac, and circumcised him the eighth day; and Isaac begat Jacob; and Jacob begat the twelve patriarchs.

9. And (the residue of) the patriarchs, (being) moved with envy (by reason of his dream), sold Joseph into Egypt: but God was with him (there).

10. And delivered him out of all his afflictions, and gave him favour and wisdom in the sight of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and he made him governor over Egypt and (over) all his house.

11. Now there came a dearth over all the land of Egypt and Canaan, and great affliction: and our fathers found no sustenance.

12. But when Jacob heard that there was corn in Egypt, he sent out our fathers first (without Benjamin).

13. And at the second time (when Benjamin was sent with them) Joseph was made known to his brethren; and Joseph's kindred was made known to Pharaoh.

14. Then sent Joseph, and called his father Jacob to him, and all his kindred, (who with their wives were) [8] threescore and fifteen souls.

15. [9] So Jacob went down into Egypt, and died, he, and our fathers,

16. And (our fathers) were carried over into Sychem, and (he was) laid in the sepulchre that Abraham bought for a sum of money (they, in the sepulchre bought) of the sons of Emmor the father of Sychem.

17. But when the time of the promise drew nigh, (concerning) which God had sworn to Abraham, (Gen. xxii. 16—18.) the people grew and multiplied in Egypt,

18. Till [10] another king arose that knew not Joseph.

19. The same (Gr. he) dealt subtilly with our kindred, and evil-entreated our fathers, so that they cast out their young children, to the end they might not live.

20. In which time Moses was born, and (he) was [11] exceeding fair, and nourished up in his father's house three months:

21. And when he was cast out, Pharaoh's daughter took him up, and nourished him for her own son.

22. And (so it came to pass, that) [12] Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and (he) was mighty in words and deeds (i. e. his words came to pass, and his deeds were wonderful).

23. And when he was full forty years old, it came into his heart to visit his brethren the children of Israel (and to make himself known to them, as one appointed of God to be their deliverer).

24. And (therefore) seeing one of them suffer wrong (from an Egyptian taskmaster), he defended him, and avenged him that was oppressed (by him), and smote the Egyptian:

25. For he [13] supposed (that by this action) his brethren would have understood how that God by his hand would deliver them: but they understood (it) not.

26. And the next day he shewed himself to them as they strove (one with another), and would have set them at one again (i. e. made them friends), saying (to them); Sirs, ye are brethren; why do ye wrong one to another?

27. But he that did his neighbour wrong thrust him away, saying, Who made thee a ruler or judge over us?

28. Wilt thou kill me (now) as thou didst the Egyptian yesterday?

29. Then fled Moses (from Egypt) at this saying, (the Egyptian king seeking his life on that account, Exod. ii. 15.) and (he) was a stranger in the land of Midian, where he (was married to Zipporah the daughter of Jethro, and) begat two sons.

30. And when forty years were expired, [14] there appeared to him in the wilderness of Mount Sinai, an angel of the Lord in a flame of fire in a bush (sent from the Schechinah, where God was).

31. When Moses saw it (this angel), he wondered at the sight: and as he drew near to behold it, the voice of the Lord (from the Schechinah) came to him,

32. Saying, I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. Then Moses (perceiving that God himself spake to him) trembled, and durst not behold (the vision).

33. Then said the Lord to him, Put off thy shoes from thy feet (in token of thy reverence to me, thus speaking to thee): for the place where thou standest is holy ground (being made so by my presence there).

34. I have seen, I have seen the affliction of my people which is in Egypt, and I have heard their groaning (under their hard labour), and am come down to deliver them. And now come, I will send thee into Egypt (to that end).

35. [15] This Moses whom they (formerly) refused, saying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge (over us)? the same (Gr. him) did God send to be a ruler and deliverer by the hands (or ministry) of the angel which appeared to him (as God's messenger) in the bush: (and)

36. He brought them out (of Egypt), after that he had shewed wonders and signs in the land of Egypt, and in the Red Sea, and in the wilderness (after they came from Egypt) forty years.

37. This is that Moses, who said to the children of Israel, (Deut. xi. 15.) [16] A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up to you of your brethren, like to me; him shall ye hear (which prophet was Christ).

38. This is he, that was in the church (or congregation) in the wilderness [17] with the angel that spake to him (from the Divine presence) in Mount Sinai, and (to) our fathers: [18] who received the lively oracles to give to us (which spake of him:

39. This is he) to whom our fathers would not obey, but (they) thrust him from them, and in their hearts turned back again into Egypt,

40. Saying unto Aaron, Make us gods to go before us: for as for this Moses, which brought us out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him (and so it is no wonder that they will not hear God's Prophet now).

41. [19] And they made a calf in those days, and offered sacrifice to the idol, and rejoiced in the works of their own hands.

42. [20] Then God turned, and gave them up to worship the host of heaven; as it is written in the book of the prophet (Amos, saying, v. 25.) O ye house of Israel, [21] have ye offered to me slain beasts and sacrifices by the space of forty years in the wilderness? (i. e. μὴ προσηνέγκατε, ye have not offered these things to me.

43. Καὶ, But) [22] ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch (i. e. the sun), and the star of your god Remphan (i. e. and a star to represent to you Saturn; these being) figures which you made (whereby) to worship them: and (therefore) I will carry you away beyond Babylon.

44. (And yet) [23] our fathers had the tabernacle of witness in the wilderness, as he (God) appointed, speaking to Moses, that he should make it according to the fashion that he had seen.

45. Which also our fathers that came after brought in with Jesus (i. e. Joshua) into the possession of the gentiles, whom God drave out before the face of our fathers, (and this tabernacle continued) to the days of David;

46. Who found favour before God, and desired to find a tabernacle (a habitation) for the God of Jacob (the father of the Israelites).

47. But (he being a man of blood, 1 Chron. xxii. 8. his son) Solomon built him a house.

48. Howbeit (ἀλλ', but this he did, acknowledging at the same time, 1 Kings viii. 27. that) the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands; as saith the prophet (Isaiah, lxvi. 1. in these words, spoken from God),

49. Heaven is my throne, and the earth is my footstool: what house (then) will ye build me? saith the Lord: or what is the place of my rest?

50. Hath not my hand made all these things? (you must not therefore think with the heathens, I leave heaven to be present there, or am confined to rest in any building made with your hands.)

51. Ye stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye (surely deserve more than the heathens, uncircumcised in the flesh, to be excluded from God's presence and habitation; for ye) do always resist the Holy Ghost (the Schechinah): as your fathers did, so do ye.

52. Which of the prophets (acted by that Holy Spirit) have not your fathers persecuted? and (καὶ, yea) they have slain them who shewed before (by the same Spirit) of the coming of the Just One; of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers:

53. (Yea, you are the very same persons) [24] who have received the law (immediately from the mouth of God) by the disposition (administration) of angels, and have not kept it (but violated even those laws which were delivered from God immediately, as well as those which he spake by the Holy Spirit in the prophets).

54. When they heard these things, they were cut to the heart, and they gnashed upon him with their teeth (through indignation).

55. But he, being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and [25] saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing at the right hand of God,

56. And said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man (the Messiah) standing at the right hand of God.

57. Then they cried out with a loud voice, and stopped their ears, and [26] ran upon him with one accord,

58. And cast him out of the city, and stoned him: [27] and the witnesses laid down their clothes at a young man's feet, whose name was Saul.

59. And they stoned Stephen, [28] calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, [29] receive my spirit.

60. And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he [30] fell asleep.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VII.

[1] Ver. 2. ΑΝΔΡΕΣ, ἀδελφοὶ, Men, brethren.] It is customary with the Hebrews to add the word man, when it imports no more than the word to which it is annexed; as Gen. xiii. 8. Let there be no strife between thee and me, for we are men, brethren: Exod. xii. 14. Who made thee a man, a prince over us? (See Gen. xxxviii. 1.) So accordingly men, brethren, occurs i. 16. ii. 29. 37. here, ver. 2. 26. xiii. 15. 26. xv. 13. xxii. 3. xxiii. 1. 6. xxviii. 17. so Matt. xiii. 28. ἐχθρὸς ἄνθρωπος is an enemy. (See Luke xxiv. 7.)

[2] The God of glory appeared to our father Abraham.] How God appeared to him, whether it were by a dream, or a vision, or an angel, the text doth not tell us; but this phrase, The God of glory appeared, seems to make it probable this was done by a voice from the Schechinah, or Divine presence.

[3] When he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran.] Here note, that that part of Mesopotamia, which is next to Assyria, is called the land of the Chaldees; for Ur, of Chaldea, as Abarbanel observes, was in Mesopotamia, lying in the way from Tigris to Nisibis; and therefore Ammianus, lib. v. speaks of an Ur in Mesopotamia so situated. And Chaldea and Babylon are reckoned as parts of Mesopotamia, both by Josephus* and by Pliny.† That God appeared to Abraham, when he was in Mesopotamia, i. e. in Ur of Chaldea, before he dwelt in Haran, though it be not expressly said, Gen. xi. 31. yet it is to be understood there: for Gen. xv. 7. God saith expressly to him, I am Jehovah, that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees; and Nehem. ix. 7. the Levites speak thus, Thou art the Lord, which did choose Abraham, and broughtest him forth out of Ur of the Chaldees; and therefore it is said of the rest, Gen. xi. 31. that they went forth with them, that is, with Terah and Abraham, from Ur of Chaldea, and came to Haran. Yea, it is observable, that Terah is made the chief agent in this remove; for he (saith the text) took Abraham and Lot, and went forth from Ur of the Chaldees, with an intention to go to Canaan; whence we may gather, that Abraham had made known God's call to him, and that he believed now in that God, who had thus spoken to his son. For what should move him to leave Ur, but obedience to the Divine call, which Abraham received, to which he would not have agreed, if he had not believed in God, as it is certain Lot and Sarah did, who went with them.

[4] Ver. 4. And from thence, after his father was dead, he (God, by another call) removed him into the land of Canaan.] Having proved in the former note, that Abraham went out from Ur of the Chaldees by an especial call from God; the call he received after his father's death, by virtue of which he removed from Charran into the land of Canaan, must be a second call, even that mentioned Gen. xii. 1. Now the Lord said to Abraham, Get thee out of thy own country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, to a land that I will shew thee. In the first call he is only bid to go out of his country, and from his kindred, which at his first removal was not completely done; for Charran was in the land of Mesopotamia, as well as Ur, Κάρρας πόλις Μεσοποταμίας, as Stephanus informs us: and though Nahor did not presently go along with his father to Haran, yet that he followed after him with all his family, and dwelt in Mesopotamia and in Charran, is evident; for Eliazer goes to Mesopotamia, to the city of Nahor, for Rebekah, Laban's sister, and the daughter of Bethuel, the son of Milcah, the wife of Nahor, (Gen. xxiv.) and Rebekah sent Jacob to her brother Laban to Charran. (Gen. xxvii. 43. see also Gen. xxviii. 10. xxix. 5.) At this second call therefore he is bid to depart from his country, where he yet was, and (from his kindred, and from his father's house, and) come to him there; and now he leaves his brother Nahor, and all his father's house, behind him.

[5] Ver. 5. Not so much as to set his foot on.] He being forced there to buy a burial-place, that he might bury his dead out of his sight. (Gen. xxiii. 3, 4. 16.)

[6] Ver. 6. God said, That his seed should sojourn in a strange land, and that they should bring them into bondage, and entreat them evil four hundred years.] This four hundred years cannot respect their sojourning in Egypt, for that was only two hundred and fifteen years, as both Josephus* and the Scriptures testify; and so four hundred and thirty years after the promise made to Abraham, leaving Charran to go into the land of Canaan; for that two hundred and fifteen years after that promise they went down to Egypt, is thus demonstrated:—Abraham was seventy-five years old when he went from Haran to Canaan, and received the promise of that land, (Gen. xii. 4. 7.) and from that time to the birth of Isaac, when Abraham was one hundred years old, (Gen. xxi. 5.) is twenty-five years: from the birth of Isaac to that of Jacob was sixty years, for Isaac was sixty years old when Rebekah bore him: (Gen. xxv. 26.) from Jacob's birth to his descent into Egypt was, as he saith to Pharaoh, one hundred and thirty years: (Gen. xlvii. 9.) which sums put together make two hundred and fifteen years, and so their stay in Egypt two hundred and fifteen years more, makes exactly four hundred and thirty years. Some therefore well observe, that they sojourned not only in Egypt, but before in Canaan, ὡς ἐν γῇ ἀλλοτρίᾳ, as in a strange land. Hence the whole land of Canaan is styled, the land in which they were πάροικοι, strangers, or sojourners, Gen. xvii. 8. xxvi. 3. xxxv. 27. Exod. vi. 4. Psal. cv. 12. and the author to the Hebrews saith, they dwelt in Canaan as in a strange land, xi. 9. (See the note there.) Their evil treatment here, and their bondage in Egypt, saith the text, shall be four hundred years: these years some reckon from the birth of Isaac, from which time to their deliverance out of Egypt was four hundred and five years; they therefore tell us, that the five odd years are not mentioned, no notice being taken of small broken numbers: for thus, say they, the Greek interpreters, being seventy-two, are called the seventy; and the Roman writers call them centumviri, who were in all one hundred and five; and Moses, Numb. xi. 21. saith, the Israelites were six hundred thousand, when they were three thousand five hundred and fifty above that number, as appears from Numb. i. 46. ii. 32. But others begin the account from the time when Ishmael the son of Hagar mocked Isaac, Gen. xxi. 9. for that it was done when Isaac was weaned, we read ver. 8. and that this was when he was five years old, St. Jerome* doth inform us from some of the Jews, and this mocking is by St. Paul styled persecution, Gal. iv. 39. Now from this time to the deliverance of the children of Israel out of Egypt is exactly four hundred years, and from this time began the evil treatment of his seed. Some, I know, begin the computation of the four hundred and thirty years, from the first call of Abraham from Ur of the Chaldees; but since the Holy Scripture hath given us no intimation of the age of Abraham when he went from Ur of the Chaldees to Charran, nor of the time of his stay there, this computation is upon both these accounts precarious; and the Scriptures being so express in saying, Abraham was seventy-five years old when he left Charran to go into Canaan the land of promise, if the Holy Ghost designed to give us any chronological account of these matters, it seems more naturally to direct us to the time assigned by these years, than to the time of which it hath not given us any character at all: and though the Scripture doth not tell us the exact time when Isaac was weaned; yet, since it tells us the child was grown up, or increased, Gen. xxi. 8. and was playing with Ishmael, ver. 9. hence it is probable that the tradition of the Jews, mentioned by Jerome, that Isaac was five years old when he was weaned, may be true.

[7] Ver. 7. And serve me in this place.] This is not said expressly, Gen. xv. but ver. 16. it is said, that in the fourth generation they shall come forth and return hither, which seems equivalent to this expression. This seems preferable to the exposition of some, who refer this to what is said Exod. iii. 12. four hundred years after, viz. ye shall serve me in this mount, that being Mount Sinai in Arabia, and not the place or land where St. Stephen was when he spake these words.

[8] Ver. 14. Ἐν ψυχαῖς ἑβδομήκοντα πέντε, Threescore and fifteen souls.] The Hebrew text reckoned them only seventy, Gen. xlvi. 27. Deut. x. 22. but the Septuagint, adding five sons of Ephraim and Manasseh, born in Egypt, from 1 Chron. vii. make them seventy-five; both which, for any thing I can see to the contrary, may be true: for, mark the way of counting in the Hebrew, All the souls that came into Egypt with Jacob from his loins were sixty-six; and then ver. 27. it is said, that to Joseph was born in Egypt two souls; and then it is again said, that all the house of Jacob which came into Egypt (viz. if you add to them Jacob, Joseph, and his two sons) were seventy souls. So also say the Septuagint, ver. 26. All the souls going with Jacob into Egypt were sixty-six, as the Hebrew said; then, ver. 27. the sons of Joseph were, with himself and father Jacob, nine, viz. five being descended from Ephraim and Manasseh, ver. 20. so that all the souls of the house of Jacob going down into Egypt, if you add these nine to them, are seventy- five: Moses saith, all the souls that he had reckoned were seventy: but he says not there were no more; the Septuagint add the names of five more, and then say, that all the names they had reckoned were seventy-five: nor can the names they have reckoned be disproved, for we find them in the book of Chronicles: so that I see no cogent reason why the Hebrew, the Septuagint, and St. Stephen, may not all speak the truth.

But, secondly, the texts both in the Hebrew and the Greek, seem plainly to hint another solution; for Gen. xlvi. 26. All the souls that came into Egypt from the loins of Jacob, besides Jacob's sons' wives, were sixty and six; add to these the wives of his eleven sons, and they made seventy and seven; take from them Hezron and Hamul, not yet born, and they were only seventy-five. Now it was the design of Moses only to give an account of those that came out of Jacob's loins, as it is said, ver. 6—8. 26. and therefore he excepts their wives out of his catalogue of sixty-six, and makes them up seventy, as before, ver. 27. But Stephen undertakes only to tell us the number of those that Joseph called into Egypt, viz. his father, καὶ πᾶσαν συγγένειαν αὐτοῦ, and all his kindred. Some therefore of the list of Moses must be left out of St. Stephen's number, viz. Joseph and his two sons, who were there already, Hezron and Hamul, who were not yet born, and Jacob, whom he reckons apart; that is, take out these six from the seventy, and their remain sixty-four; which with the eleven wives of his sons are seventy-five. Now that these wives were a part of those that were called by Joseph, is certain, because he called Jacob and his household, and all that he had, Gen. xlv. 11. He sent waggons for their wives, ver. 19. and the sons of Jacob carried their wives in them, xlvi. 5. And therefore Josephus* gives us the words of Joseph thus, Bring your wives, and your little ones, and all your kindred hither. And that the words συγγενεῖς and συγγένεια belong to wives, we learn from Lev. xviii. 14. xx. 20. Josh. vi. 23. as well as from Josephus.

[9] Ver. 15. So Jacob went down into Egypt and died, he and our fathers: Ver. 16. and were carried over into Sychem, and were laid in the sepulchre that Abraham bought for a sum of money of the sons of Emmor, the father of Sychem.] These words have in them many difficulties, I will begin with the easiest of them. And,

First, That Ἐμμὸρ τοῦ Συχέμ, is well rendered the father of Sychem; and that the Greek bears this interpretation, is proved, note on Luke xxiv. 1.

Secondly, It is evident, that Jacob was buried with his fathers, Abraham and Isaac, in the cave of Machpelah. For thus he speaks to Joseph, I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt bury me in their burial-place; (Gen. xlvii. 30.) and accordingly we read, that Joseph buried him in the cave of Machpelah, Gen. l. 13. Hence then it is certain, that it cannot be said of Jacob, that he was carried into Sychem, and buried there.

Thirdly, I add, that only Jacob was there buried, and that all the rest of the patriarchs were translated to Sychem, and buried there. That Jacob only, of all here mentioned, was buried there, is evident from an old tradition of the Jews, mentioned by Jerome,* Hegesippus,† and R. Sol. Jarchi;‡ that Hebron was called Kiriath-Arba, the city of the four, because four patriarchs, viz. Adam, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, were buried there: and from the observation of the cabalists, that in the word ישראל is contained by Rose Theboth all that were buried in Hebron; to wit,

Isaac and Jacob,	Adam, Abraham,
Sarah,	Leah.
Rebekah,

As for the patriarchs, styled here our fathers, that they being dead, were carried to Sychem, is here said in express words. And St. Jerome,§ giving us a description of the travels of Paula through the holy land, saith, She came to Sychem, " atque inde divertens vidit duodecim patriarcharum sepulcra," and passing thence she saw the sepulchres of the twelve patriarchs, they being buried, not in, but near to Sychem. (Josh. xxiv. 32.) That Moses took the bones of Joseph with him when he went out of Egypt, as he had charged his brethren to do when God brought them thence, Gen. l. 25. we read Exod. xiii. 19. that is, the children of Israel did it by his command, Josh. xxiv. 32. And R. Solomon on Exod. xiii. 19. saith, we may learn from this very place, that the bones of all the patriarchs were brought up with him: and this will appear very probable,

First, Because the same cause that moved Joseph to desire burial in the land of Canaan, could not but move all his brethren to desire the like, they having the same faith in the promise, and the same interest in the land, and so the same principles to move them to desire it that Joseph had.

Secondly, The rest of the tribes bore the same honour to their patriarch that the tribe of Joseph did to him; and therefore they must be as much concerned to preserve their bones to be carried out of Egypt with them. And seeing Jacob their father was so concerned to be buried, not in Egypt, but in the land of promise, (Gen. xlvii. 30.) and Joseph to have his bones carried from thence into it from the same faith, (Heb. xi. 22.) who can imagine that the twelve fathers of the church of Israel, and heirs of the land of Canaan, should be left in the land of bondage, and not interred in their own land?

Moreover, that their bones were buried in Sychem, with the bones of Joseph, may be made probable from these considerations:

First, That though Joseph's bones were brought up with them out of Egypt, they were not buried till Joshua had divided the land among them, and had called all Israel to Sychem, to renew the covenant God made with their fathers; for then only it is said, the bones of Joseph which the children of Israel brought out of Egypt they buried in Sychem. Either then they buried the bones of the other patriarchs at the same time, or not at all; for we read nothing of their doing it in any other assembly, at any other time or place, and so may reasonably conceive, that as they were removed at the same time, so likewise were they buried.

Secondly, There were but two places assigned of the burial of the other patriarchs; one by Josephus, who saith, they were buried in Hebron; the other by St. Jerome and

* Αὐτὸν δὲ τοῦτον, καὶ γυναῖκας ὑμετέρας, καὶ τέκνα καὶ πᾶσαν τὴν συγγένειαν ὑμῶν ἀναλαβόντες ἐνθάδε μετοικίζεσθε. Antiq. lib. ii. cap. 3.

R. Solomon, that they were buried in Sychem. Now that they were not buried by Joshua in Hebron, we have great reason to believe:

First, Because we do not read that Joshua ever came to Hebron, but to destroy the city. Secondly, From the traditions already produced, that it was called Kiriath-Arba, because the four great patriarchs only were buried in it. And, thirdly, from the places where Josephus saith the contrary; for in his second book of Antiquities, chap. 4. he hath many other idle tales, which may cause us to suspect this; and in his book of the Jewish Wars, he begins the story thus, Μυθεύουσι,* They of Hebron tell a tale so and so, καὶ δείκνυσι, and they shew their sepulchres to this day, πάνυ καλῆς μαρμάρου καὶ φιλοτίμως εἰργασμένα, wrought curiously in fine marble, and a tree that had stood there from the creation. So that if you will believe Josephus here, you must believe they had sepulchres of fine marble curiously wrought; and then how wonderful is it that St. Jerome,† giving us what was chiefly observable in every place that Paula came at, saith only, that she came to Hebron, that is, Kiriath-Arba, "id est, oppidum quatuor virorum, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, et Adam;" that is, to the town of the four patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Adam; and bringing her from Hebron to Sychem, should tell us, she saw the sepulchres of the patriarchs there, not only being silent as to these curious marble sepulchres, but contradicting Josephus in the whole story.

Now if these things are duly fixed, it is necessary, either to say with the great Bochart, that some unskilful grammarian thinking a nominative cause was wanting before the word ὠνήσατο, was bought, wrote in the margin the word Ἀβραὰμ, which others put into the text, without which the words run thus with the exact truth; So Jacob went down into Egypt and died (there); he, and our fathers, and they (viz. our fathers) were carried over into Sychem, and laid in the sepulchre that was bought for a sum of money of the sons of Emmor, the father of Sychem. For that Jacob bought of the sons of Hamor, the father of Sychem, a field near Sychem, for a hundred kesita, we read Gen. xxxiii. 19. and that kesita is to be rendered pieces of money, he proves in Hieroz. lib. ii. cap. 43. where he treats largely on this verse: the only objection against this conjecture, which makes the words so plain, is this, that it is not supported by any copies or versions, and on this account it seems necessary to admit of the sense given in the paraphrase; viz.

Ver. 15. And Jacob went down into Egypt, and died, he, and our fathers.

Ver. 16. And (our fathers) were carried over into Sychem, and they were laid (Jacob) in the sepulchre that Abraham bought for a sum of money (they in the sepulchre bought) of the sons of Emmor the father of Sychem.

In which paraphrase there be three ellipses of words to be repeated from the former words, but they are such as may be often met with both in the Old and the New Testament; as, v. g. Psal. cxxxiii. 3. As the dew of Hermon (and as the dew) which fell upon the hills of Zion; for Hermon and Zion were far asunder; Eccles. x. 1. As dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savour, so a little folly (causeth) a man of reputation for wisdom and honour (to become unsavoury). See Numb. xxvi. 4. In the New Testament we have the like examples: so, 2 Thess. ii. 7. He that letteth (will let) till he be taken away; John ix. 3. Neither hath he sinned, nor his parents, (so that he should be born blind on that account, ver. 2.) 1 John ii. 19. But (they went out from us) that it might appear they were not of us. (See Glass. lib. iv. de Figuris Gram. tract. 2. from Observ. 8. to the 13th.)

[10] Ver. 18. There arose another king who knew not Joseph.] As it might very well be; this happening one hundred and thirty-five years after the coming of the children of Israel into Egypt; for they went out of it eighty years after, when Moses was so old, and this happened sixty-four years after the death of Joseph; so that the king reigning at that distance, might know little of, and less regard, the good deeds Joseph had done for Egypt.

[11] Ver. 20. And Moses was ἀστεῖος τῷ Θεῷ, exceeding fair.] The word God being added to increase the signification: so Nineveh is called πόλις μεγάλη τῷ Θεῷ, an exceeding great city, John iii. 3. so ὅπλα δυνατὰ τῷ Θεῷ, 2 Cor. x. 4. are very strong weapons: so cedars of God, i. e. goodly cedars, Psal. lxxx. 10. mountains of God, Psal. xxxvi. 7. i. e. great mountains. (See Glass. tract. 1. de Nom. can. 17. sect. 3.) With this great beauty of Moses, the ancient heathens were acquainted: for Justin out of Trogus saith,* that "eum formæ pulchritudo commendabat," the gracefulness of his countenance recommended him to others: and Huetius† shews that the whole story of Adonis hid by Venus in an ark and delivered to Proserpina, because she admired the great beauty of the infant, was framed out of this story of Moses.

[12] Ver. 22. And Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in word and deed.] Like to this saying is that of Lucian,‡ of an Egyptian priest skilled in all the wisdom of the Egyptians. But what this learning of the Egyptians then was, it is not easy to define; I suppose with the Pseudo-Justin,§ that it might be astronomy, astrology, and geometry; to which you may add, from Clemens of Alexandria,‖ skill in physic; but whereas Philo ¶ adds, arithmetic, music, hieroglyphical learning, and saith, τὴν δὲ ἄλλην ἐγκύκλιον παιδείαν Ἕλληνες ἐδίδασκον, that the Greeks, sent for into Egypt for that purpose, taught him the liberal sciences, he is utterly out; for the Greeks had no learning till long after the time of Moses, as Clemens Alexandrinus, Josephus,†† and many others testify; and what they had, was at first borrowed from other nations: Moses, saith Josephus,‡‡ being older, not only than their learning, but even than their laws and gods.

[23] Ver. 25. He supposed that his brethren would have understood how that God, by his hand, would deliver them.] Two things are here fit to be inquired into, viz. by what authority or right Moses slew the Egyptian, and what reason he had to expect the people should understand that God designed him for their deliverer? The Jewish historians will give us a very easy solution to these difficulties; for their priests, saith Clemens of Alexandria,* declared, that Moses slew the Egyptian with a word, and so gave them a miracle to prove his mission, and so then he must be killed by him, who is the Lord of life and death. Josephus also saith expressly,† that God appeared to Amram, the father of Moses, as he was praying to him for the afflicted Jews, and told him, Thy son now in the womb of thy wife shall escape the hands of the Egyptians, and τὸ μὲν ἑβραῖον γένος τῆς παρ' Αἰγυπτίους ἀνάγκης ἀπολύει, shall deliver the Hebrews from the afflictions of the Egyptians; and that to confirm this vision his wife brought him forth without any pain. He also adds, that a celebrated prophet among the Egyptians declared, that a Hebrew should be born then, who should afflict the Egyptians; and when Moses was grown up, counselled the king of Egypt to destroy him, saying, that by killing him he would free the Egyptians from fear, and cut off the hopes of the Hebrews.‡ But not to depend on these things, the Jerusalem Talmud declares, that Moses slew the Egyptian by the spirit of prophecy, or that he did it by an extraordinary impulse from God; and Maimonides§ makes this action one degree of prophecy, and thus (as Stephen saith) it came into his heart (from God) to visit his brethren; (ver. 23.) and indeed otherwise he could not have justified this fact to God and his own conscience. Now Moses knowing what an extraordinary person he had been in words and deeds, (ver. 22.) and what had been declared of him to his father, and by this action working deliverance to one of them, might justly hope they would look upon him as one appointed by God to be their deliverer. For to be δυνατὸς ἐν λόγοις, may well signify one that is endued with the spirit of prophecy, λόγος σοφίας καὶ γνώσεως, being frequently used to signify some extraordinary knowledge and wisdom, and the person gifted with them being, by Clemens Rom.‖ styled ὁ δυνατὸς γνῶσιν ἐξειπεῖν, a man able to declare this knowledge; and then δυνατὸς ἐν ἔργοις will signify a man of extraordinary and miraculous performances.

[14] Ver. 30. There appeared to him in the wilderness of Mount Sinai the angel of the Lord in a flame of fire in a bush.] That God himself was gloriously present here, attended with his holy angels as his ministers, of which one appeared in the bush, and was by God employed in forming the voice by which he spake to him, is evident, (1.) from the express assertion of Christ, viz. that ὁ Θεὸς, God spake to Moses in the bush: (Mark xii. 26.) so Moses himself informs us, when he prays, Deut. xxxiii. 16. that the blessing of him that appeared in the bush might fall upon the head of Joseph, that is, saith Onkelos, of him whose majesty dwells in the heavens, and was revealed to Moses in the bush; saith B. Uziel, of him who made the glory of his Divine majesty dwell in the bush. (2.) This appears from the words here spoken, saith Stephen, by the voice of the Lord, I am the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, I have heard the affliction of my people, I will send thee into Egypt; and also from the words in Exodus, for there Moses, who went boldly towards the angel to see that great sight, when God said, I am the God of Abraham, trembled, and durst not behold, Exod. iii. 6. being afraid to look upon God; and ver. 13. Moses said to God, What is thy name? and God answers, I AM, and bids him say, I AM, and the God of your fathers, hath sent me to you. And, lastly, if these names could belong to a created angel, I would gladly know how Christ received a more excellent name than the angels, as we read, Heb. i. 4. So that God was here present, as the chief person speaking to Moses, the angel only as his minister and his attendant. (See the note on John i. 1.)

[15] Ver. 35. This Moses whom they refused.] For though only one of them said to him, Who made thee a ruler or judge over us? yet that one is thought to have been a ruler of a tribe, and so to have spoken in the name of the rest. Moreover, none of them acknowledged him as one by God appointed to be their Prince and Saviour out of the hands of the Egyptians; (ver. 27.) and therefore it is said, that ἠρνήσαντο, they denied him, as the Jews are said to deny that Jesus whom they would not acknowledge. (See the note on iii. 14.)

[17] Ver. 38. With the angel that spoke to him in Mount Sinai.] Perhaps the same angel which appeared to him as an attendant on the Divine Majesty in the bush, for though the law was given by the disposition of angels, ver. 53. (of which place see the note on John i. 1. Heb. ii. 2.) yet seems there to have been a principal angel (perhaps Michael their prince, Dan. x. 21.) who attended upon Moses and the children of Israel, and who is therefore styled by God, my angel: so, Exod. xxiii. 23. My angel shall go before thee, that is, saith Baal-Hatturim, Michael, my peculiar angel: so also xxxii. 34. This Moses owns by saying, Numb. xx. 16. When we cried to the Lord—he sent an angel, and hath brought us forth out of Egypt, that is, Michael the prince, say the Jews, and therefore he saith, I am come, as captain of the host of the Lord, Josh. v. 14. which is the title of Michael, Dan. x. 13. but this is not so to be understood as to exclude the presence of God himself, for this angel was sent from the Schechinah or Divine presence, which was in the pillar of the cloud.

[18] Who received λόγια ζῶντα, the lively oracles to give to us.] The law of Moses is here styled, the lively oracles, not because they were able ζωοποιεῖν, to give life, for that St. Paul expressly denies, Gal. iii. 21. calling this law the ministry of death and condemnation, 2 Cor. iii. 6. 9. but because they were oracles, proceeding, not from dumb idols, but from the living God, and promising a prosperous and happy life in Canaan, to all that obeyed them, (Lev. xviii. 5. Deut. xv. 16. xxxii. 47.) on which account this word is styled, Heb. iv. 12. λόγος ζῶντος Θεοῦ, the word of the living God, and 1 Pet. i. 23. the living word of God, as being quick and vigorous in its operations. (See the note on Heb. iv. 12.)

[19] Ver. 41. And they made a calf in those days, and offered sacrifice to the idol.] Here note,

First, That the calf worshipped by the Jews is expressly called an idol, and they who worshipped it are expressly styled idolaters, 1 Cor. x. 7. and with good reason, because they changed the image of the incorruptible God into the similitude of a calf, Psal. cvi. 19, 20. Note,

Secondly, That the worship performed by them to this golden calf, was worship directed by them to the true God, viz. to that God which brought them from the land of Egypt; for when they had made them a molten calf, they said, This is thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, Nehem. ix. 18.

Nor can we otherwise conceive, if we consider, (1.) that by this God they could not possibly intend to signify the very image they had made, there being nothing more repugnant to common sense, and more irrationally stupid, than to conceive that what they made the other day, was both their maker and preserver, whilst it was nothing in the world; and that it gave them power, before it was in being: men may assert such things, who have no other refuge or defence, but cannot possibly believe themselves in what they so wildly do affirm. (2.) They could not be conceived to affirm, that this God, who brought them out of the land of Egypt, was the Egyptian Serapis; for then they must imagine, that this Egyptian god wrought all the miracles they saw done in Egypt upon those that owned and worshipped him, in favour of those persons, who did not own him for a god, but looked upon him as a devil, and that he did inflict the heaviest judgments upon them that feared him, and shewed the greatest kindness unto those that feared him not, by separating betwixt them and the Egyptians, and not permitting any of his judgments to molest or touch them. They must believe that the Egyptian Serapis had enjoined them to abstain from all those modes of worship, with which he was served in Egypt, as an abomination to him; for in the day that he lifted up his hand unto them to bring them forth of the land of Egypt,— then said he unto them, Cast away every man the abominations of his eyes, and defile not yourselves with the idols of Egypt, I am the Lord your God, Ezek. xx. 6, 7. Lastly, They must believe that he, who executed his judgments on the Egyptian gods, was the Egyptian god, and that the God of the Hebrews, who said, Let my people go, that they may serve me, Exod. vii. 1. was the god of Egypt, and that he, who wrought those miracles unto this end, that the Egyptians might know that he was the Lord, Exod. xiv. 18. was he whom the Egyptians owned as their god; all which deductions are too absurd to be believed. Moreover, (1.) the reason why they desired the making of this god to go before them, is delivered thus, Up, make us gods which shall go before us; for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him, Exod. xxxii. 1. And from these words it is apparent, that the want of Moses was the only cause why they required this golden calf to go before them. Now it is certain, they esteemed not Moses to be God, but only one who represented God, and who declared his mind unto them; on which account God himself saith, that he should be to Aaron instead of God, Exod. iv. 16. and therefore it is also certain, that they desired only some other representative of God, which Aaron might consult to know the mind of God. (2.) Here they expressly do acknowledge that Moses brought them out of the land of Egypt, i. e. the God of Moses did so. Now they all knew the true Jehovah was that God, whom Moses taught them to adore, and that the God of Moses was not that calf, which he knew nothing of, nor that Egyptian Apis, which he had so much opposed and vilified: when therefore they affirm at the beholding of this calf, These are thy gods, this affirmation must be supposed consistent with their former words, which do acknowledge that the God of Moses brought them forth, &c. Now since the golden calf, or the Egyptian Apis, was not, even in the apprehension of these men, the God of Moses, these words, viz. These are thy gods, cannot be spoken of the calf, or the Egyptian Apis, and therefore must be understood of him, who was indeed the God of Moses, and so must signify, This is the sign, this is the representation of that God which brought us forth, &c. Again, this we may gather from the feasts they consecrated, for Aaron doth expressly say it was a feast to Jehovah; whereas had it been really intended as an honour done to the Egyptian demons, it cannot be [conceived that Aaron would both give unto these devils the proper and incommunicable name of God, and also offer sacrifice to devils. He therefore, whom he called Jehovah, and to whom he offered those peace-offerings, was he who truly bears that name. And, (3.) this is plain from St. Stephen's words, ver. 41, 42. And they made a calf in those days, and offered sacrifice unto idols, and rejoiced in the works of their own hands; then God turned, and gave them up to worship the host of heaven: for it is observable, that the idolatry of the calf was distinct from the other heathen idolatry, this being the punishment of the other, and only a consequent of that, for then God turned, and gave them up to worship the host of heaven. Since then the worship of Osiris under the species of a golden bull, and of the Egyptian Apis in the symbol of a living calf, was really the worship of the sun and moon, as the great Selden* doth inform us, it follows, that when they worshipped the golden calf, they were not given up unto the worship of Osiris, or the Egyptian Apis, which were adored by the Egyptians as the most glorious part of all the host of heaven.

Hence then it must demonstratively follow, that the worship of the true God in an image, or material representation, is, in the Scripture sense, idolatry.

Ver. 40. Ὁ γὰρ Μωσῆς οὗτος οὐκ οἴδαμεν, As for this Moses.] This construction occurs often both in the Old and New Testament: so Psal. xi. 4. Jehovah in the heavens is his throne; Κύριος ἐν οὐρανῷ ὁ θρόνος αὐτοῦ. LXX. Psal. xviii. 30. ὁ θεός μου ἄμωμος ἡ ὁδὸς αὐτοῦ, as for God, his way is perfect; Psal. civ. 17. The stork, the fir-trees are his house. (See Eccles. ii. 14. Hos. xii. 2. Nah. i. 3.) So Matt. xxi. 42. λίθον ὃν ἀπεδοκίμασαν οὗτος, as for the stone which the builders refused, it is become the head corner-stone: see also Rev. ii. 26. and the note on 1 John ii. 27. καὶ ὑμεῖς τὸ χρίσμα ὃ ἐλάβετε ἀπ' αὐτοῦ, &c.

[20] Ver. 42. Then God gave them up to worship the host of heaven.] i. e. From their worshipping him in images against his command, he suffered them to proceed to worship the creature instead of the Creator: see note on Rom. i. 21. 24. The invention of idols (i. e. images, saith the book of Wisdom) was the beginning of fornication, i. e. idolatry: (see note on John viii. 41.) and therefore God is said to have given this host of heaven to the heathens to worship, εἰς θρησκείαν καὶ προσκυνεῖν ὡς θεούς. See Drus. and the Septuagint, Deut. iv. 19. Just. M. Dial. p. 274. Clem. Alex. Strom. p. 609. B. viz. He suffered them to proceed to that more vile idolatry in punishment of their worship of him by images. And to this alludes that of the Septuagint, Hos. xiii. 4. God gave not the host of heaven to you, πορεύεσθαι ὀπίσω αὐτῶν, to go after them, but sent his prophets to forbid it, which he did not to the heathen world.

* Lib. de Diis Syris, cap. 4.

[21] Have ye offered to me slain beasts and sacrifices by the space of forty years in the wilderness?] This question is a strong negative, importing, that though they really did offer sacrifices, as he had commanded; yet did he not accept or look upon them as offered to him. The expression is like that of the prophet Zachary, vii. 5. When ye fasted and mourned in the fifth and seventh months, these seventy years, did ye at all fast to me, even to me? And this is here denied,

First, Because God will accept of no worship as done unto him, which is not done unto him alone; and when any other is worshipped with him, he looks upon himself as not worshipped at all. So of those nations which came from Assyria into the cities of Samaria, it is said, 2 Kings xvii. 33. they feared the Lord, and served their own gods; and then it is added, ver. 34. that they feared not the Lord.

Secondly, Because God will not own any worship as performed to him, whilst men continue in their disobedience to his laws, and in their hearts depart from him, and incline to a worship he approves not of: thus the Jews in Zachary are said, not to fast to him, because they would not hearken to or obey his words, (ver. 8.) and he is said to have been angry with them in the wilderness forty years, because they erred from him in their hearts, Psal. xcv. 10. that is, saith the Chaldee, they had their idols in their hearts. And the Samaritans are said to worship they know not what, John iv. 22. because they did not worship him according to his will revealed in his word. (See the note there.)

[22] Ver. 43. Yea, ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the star of your god Remphan, figures which you made to worship them, &c.] Here note,

First, That these words are taken from Amos v. 26. where the words in our translation are, Ye have borne the tabernacle of your Moloch, and Chiun your images, the star of your god. Note,

Secondly, That these words of the prophet are by St. Stephen produced to prove, that God gave them up to worship the host of heaven, as the punishment of their worshipping of the golden calf; even as God is said to have given up the heathens to uncleanness and vile affections, Rom. i. 24. 26. as the punishment of their former idolatry, ver. 21. 23. So that the gods here mentioned must belong to the host of heaven. Note, Thirdly, That Moloch is thought to be the sun, for the whole east did worship the sun and moon as the king and queen of heaven; and interpreters almost generally agree, that Baal, Bel, or Belus, so often mentioned in the Scriptures as worshipped by the heathens, is the sun, or lord of heaven. Now Baal the lord, and Moloch the king, of heaven, is the same. So Eusebius* tells us of the Phœnicians out of Sanchoniathon, that when drought happened, they did τὰς χεῖρας ὀρέγειν εἰς οὐρανοὺς πρὸς τὸν Ἥλιον. τοῦτον γάρ φησι Θεὸν ἐνόμιζον μόνον οὐρανοῦ Κύριον Βεελσάμεν καλοῦντες, lift up their hands to heaven to the sun, whom they owned as the only lord of heaven, calling him Beelsamen, that is, the lord of heaven; and Damascius† in Photius saith, the Syrians and Phœnicians τὸν κρόνον Ἦλ καὶ Βῆλ ἐπονομάζουσι, call Saturn El and Bel; and Servius‡ upon Virgil says, That the sun and Saturn were worshipped by the Assyrians and the Africans under the name of Bel. See for the farther proof of this, Voss. de Idol. lib. ii. cap. 4. Spencer de Ritibus Hebr. p. 551.

As for the other word Chiun, changed by the Septuagint into a name better known, viz. Rephan or Remphan, Vossius thinks it signifies the moon, ibid. cap. 23. But Aben-Ezra on the place informs us, that it signifies Saturn, and that with great probability, Saturn* bearing that name, say the learned, in the Arabian and Persic tongues; and in the Egyptian alphabet, Ῥῆφαν is Saturn. Note,

Fourthly, That to Moloch is ascribed succoth, a tabernacle or tabernacles, because he was worshipped in little shrines, chapels, and tabernacles, which they used to carry about with them, as Grotius and Dr. Hammond here prove;

Remphan a star, because the heathens worshipped their gods, demons, and heroes, under the name of some star appropriated to them, as Dr. Spencer† shews; and so the Egyptian god Remphan or Remphin, mentioned by Diodorus Siculus, might be worshipped in the star Saturn.

And because they made images of these gods, and put them into these shrines, and chapels, or tabernacles, to be worshipped; therefore the prophet calls them צלמים images of their gods, which they had made.

Lastly, Because the tabernacles of Moloch and Saturn, to whom they offered their sons and daughters, had "septem conclavia,"‡ seven cells, or receptacles, according to the number of the seven planets; therefore perhaps it is that St. Stephen saith, they worshipped the host of heaven.

Fifthly, That they were guilty of this idolatry whilst they continued in the wilderness, though we read nothing of it expressly in the five books of Moses, we cannot doubt, if we believe the prophet Amos, declaring from God, that they did not offer sacrifice to him in the wilderness, because they were then guilty of this idolatry; or St. Stephen saying, that in punishment of the calf they made and worshipped there, God gave them up to worship the host of heaven. And to this we may refer the complaint of the Psalmist, that even then they erred in their hearts, and knew not his ways; and more certainly the words of Joshua, (xxiv. 14.) And now put away the strange gods which your fathers served on the other side of the river, and in Egypt, and serve the Lord; for if they had them not among them, they could not put them away; and his following words, (ver. 19.) ye cannot serve the Lord (whilst ye retain your idols), for he is a jealous God.

And, lastly, whereas St. Stephen saith, I will carry you beyond Babylon, though the prophet had only said, I will carry you beyond Damascus, this need give us little trouble, seeing this prophecy was fulfilled by Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, carrying them both beyond Damascus and Babylon, into the cities of the Medes, 2 Kings xvii. 6.

[23] Ver. 44. Our fathers had the tabernacle of witness.] i. e. In which the true God gave them signal testimonies of his presence with them, and indications that he dwelt among them, though, as in the wilderness, so till the times of David they fell off from him to idolatry: this David desired to build God a temple, and his heart was set upon it, (Psal. cxxxii.) and his son Solomon built it, and in this you place your confidence, saying, The temple of the Lord are we; (Jer. vii. 4.) but now, says St. Stephen, that the great God of heaven cannot be confined to your temple, or to choose it for a place of rest, as that he should not depart from it, or suffer it to be destroyed again, as he formerly did for your crying provocations: this therefore you may reasonably expect, who are still a stiffnecked people, and uncircumcised in heart, still resisting the Holy Ghost in God's prophets, as your fathers did, and adding to all your sins the murder of your promised Messias; this, I say, you have reason to expect, did not I warn you of it.

[24] Ver. 53. Who have received the law, εἰς διαταγὰς ἀγγέλων·] That is, saith Grotius, "inter angelorum turmas," by God's appearing with his host of angels, for so we read he did at Mount Sinai, when he gave the law: so, Deut. xxxiii. 2. The Lord came from Sinai, he came with ten thousand ἀγγέλων, of angels, from his right hand went a fiery law for them; and, Psal. lxviii. 17. The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels, and the Lord is among them as in Sinai. I rather choose to say, by the administration of angels, they all here ministering to God when he gave the law. (See note on John i. 1. and on Heb. ii. 2.)

[25] Ver. 55. He saw the glory of God.] That is, the Schechinah, the symbol of God's glorious presence; (see the notes on Rom. i. 23. and on Heb. i. 3.) and Jesus standing at the right hand of God, as in a posture ready to receive him.

[26] Ver. 57. They ran upon him with one accord.] Though they rush upon him in this case, yet they do it only because, by fresh words of blasphemy, as they conceived, he had confirmed the former blasphemy testified against him by two witnesses, and therefore they drew him out of the city, because their traditions said, that no man was to be stoned in the camp, or in the city; and stone him after the legal manner, the witnesses against him beginning the execution; and so here is no evidence that this was done jure zelotarum, and not by course of justice, the Sanhedrin having before sufficiently shewed what they thought of him, by being mad against him, gnashing upon him with their teeth.

[27] Ver. 58. And they laid their clothes at the feet of a young man, whose name was Saul. (See note on Philem. ver. 9.)

[28] Ver. 59. Ἐπικαλούμενον, Calling upon Christ, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit.] Here we find Stephen, full of the Holy Ghost, calling religiously upon Christ, now in heaven, to receive his spirit, and thereby testifying not only that religious worship was due to him, but also that he could hear his prayer, and receive his spirit at that distance, and therefore was omnipresent, and the searcher of the hearts, and he in whose hands the spirits of men were: for he doth not say, Κύριε τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, Thou who art the Lord of Jesus; that phrase being never used in the New Testament, but Κύριε Ἰησοῦ, Lord Jesus receive my spirit: like to this is that prayer of St. John, Rev. xxii. 20. Κύριε Ἰησοῦ, Lord Jesus, come quickly.

[29] Receive my spirit.] Hence it appears that the spirit of man is a substance distinct and separable from the body, and which dies not with it; for Stephen prays not to the Lord Jesus to receive his body, but only to receive his spirit, now to be separated from it. (See the notes on Luke xxiii. 40. and on 2 Tim. i. 12.) Now, if the spirit of a man died with the body, no reason can be given why St. Stephen should pray to the Lord Jesus to receive his spirit, rather than his body. Moreover, this being said by a Jew in presence of the Jews, is doubtless to be understood, to the sense and the opinion of the Jews, who held, that the souls of just men were in the hand of God, (Wisd. iii. 1.) and were in peace; which expressions agree not to a thing which is insensate; nor could an insensate being have any hope at all, much less a hope full of immortality, as he there speaks, ver. 2, 3.

CHAP. VIII.

1. AND Saul (when Stephen thus died) was consenting to his death. And [1] at that time there was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem; and they (that were of it) were all scattered abroad [2] throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles.

2. And devout men carried Stephen [3] to his burial, and made great lamentation over him.

3. As for Saul, he made havoc of (Gr. and Saul wasted or afflicted) the church, entering into every house (of the faithful), and haling men and women (thence, he) committed them to prison.

4. [4] Therefore they that were (Gr. they therefore being) scattered abroad, went every where (Gr. went through Judea and Samaria, ver. 1.) preaching the word.

5. Then [5] Philip (the evangelist, being one of the seven, xxi. 8.) went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ to them.

6. And the people with one accord gave heed to those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles he did (to confirm his doctrine).

7. For unclean spirits, crying with (a) loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them: and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed.

8. And there was great joy in that city (that a person so beneficial was come to them).

9. But there was a certain man, called Simon, which beforetime used sorceries in the same city, and bewitched (Gr. and a certain man named Simon was before in that city, using magic, and astonishing) the people of Samaria, giving out (Gr. saying) that himself was [5] some great one:

10. To whom they all gave heed, from the least to the greatest, saying, This man is the great power of God.

11. And to him they had regard, because that of long time he had bewitched (astonished) them with (his) sorceries.

12. But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women (for the remission of sin, ii. 38.)

13. Then Simon himself believed also (that this Jesus who enabled Philip to do these things, was some power superior to any he conversed with): and when he was baptized, he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the miracles and signs which were done.

14. Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, [8] they sent to them Peter and John:

15. Who, when they were come down, [9] prayed for them (περὶ αὐτῶν, over them whom the Holy Ghost saw fit to be endued with prophetical gifts for the ministry there), that they might receive the Holy Ghost:

16. For as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.

17. Then laid they their hands on them, and they (visibly) received the Holy Ghost (so as to speak with tongues, and prophesy, xix. 6.)

18. And when Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money (to obtain the same power),

19. Saying, (Let this reward induce you to) give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay (my) hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost.

20. But Peter said to him, [10] Thy money perish with thee (i. e. without repentance thou wilt perish with it), because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money.

21. Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter (i. e. the blessings of this kingdom): for thy heart is not right in the sight of God.

22. Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thy heart may be forgiven thee.

23. For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity.

24. Then answered Simon, and said, Pray ye to the Lord for me, that none of those things which ye have spoken come upon me.

25. And they, when they had testified, and preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jerusalem, and (by the way) preached the gospel in many villages of the Samaritans.

26. And the angel of the Lord spake to Philip, saying, Arise, and go towards the south to [11] the way that goeth down from Jerusalem to Gaza, which (way) is (through the) desert (of Judah, or, to old Gaza, which is desert).

27. And he arose and went: and, behold, a [12] man of Ethiopia, a eunuch of great authority, under Candace queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treasure, and had come to Jerusalem to worship,

28. Was returning (to his country), and sitting in his chariot, (he) read (in) Esaias the prophet.

29. Then the Spirit said to Philip, Go near, and join thyself to this chariot.

30. And Philip ran thither to him, and heard him read (in) the prophet Esaias, and said, Understandest thou what thou readest?

31. And he said, [13] How can I (understand a prophecy of future times, with which I am wholly unacquainted,) except some man should guide (direct, or instruct) me? And he desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him.

32. The place (or section) of scripture which he read was this, [14] He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before the shearer, so opened he not his mouth:

33. [15] In his (state of) humiliation his judgment was taken away (and no right done him): and who can declare (the wickedness of) his generation? for his life is (was) taken from the earth.

34. And the eunuch answered Philip, and said, I pray thee, of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man?

35. Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture, and preached to him Jesus.

36. And as they went on their way they came to a certain water: and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?

37. And Philip said, If thou believest with all thy heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, [16] I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.

38. And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he (Philip) baptized him.

39. And when they were come out of the water, [17] the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more: and he went on his way rejoicing.

40. But Philip was found at Azotus: and passing through (it) he preached in all the cities till he came to Cæsarea (or, the tower of Straton, as it was named before it was rebuilt by Herod).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VIII.

[1] Ver. 1. AT that time there was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem.] The rage they were in for what was spoken, as they conceived, against the law and the temple,* for which they had the highest veneration, and the cutting words St. Stephen had pronounced before, and even of, the Sanhedrin, as of a stiffnecked and uncircumcised generation, wanting that circumcision they so gloried in, not observing that law they seemed so zealous for, persecuting the prophets, who foretold of the Messias, betraying and murdering him when he was come, gave, in all likelihood, the occasion to this persecution of all others who believed this, as St. Stephen did; and that this persecution was set on by the authority of this great council, we may learn from the part Saul bore in it; for he confesses that he received his authority to treat the Christians thus from them, (xxii. 5. xxvi. 11.)

[2] They were all scattered abroad πλὴν τῶν ἀποστόλων, except the apostles.] It is a very ancient tradition mentioned by Clemens of Alexandria,† that our Lord assigned twelve years after his ascension for the conversion of the unbelieving Jews in Judea, lest any of them should say, οὐκ ἠκούσαμεν, we have not heard; saying to his apostles, μετὰ δώδεκα ἔτη ἐξέλθετε εἰς τὸν κόσμον, go ye out into the world after twelve years; and Apollonius,‡ who flourished at the same time, speaks of this, ὡς ἐκ παραδόσεως, as delivered by tradition, that our Lord commanded his apostles, ἐπὶ δώδεκα ἔτεσι μὴ χωρισθῆναι τῆς Ἱερουσαλὴμ, not to recede from Jerusalem by the space of twelve years. Now if there be any truth in this tradition, it shews the reason why the apostles continued at Jerusalem when the rest of the disciples were scattered abroad.

[3] Ver. 2. Συνεκόμισαν, Buried Stephen.] i. e. They prepared Stephen for his burial, as the Greek word properly imports; i. e. they did all things in order to it, washing his body, (Acts ix. 37.) anointing it, and winding it up in linen, putting it in the coffin, carrying it forth to the burial-place, and weeping there over it after the manner of the Jews. But whereas Grotius tells us from St. Austin,* De Civ. Dei, lib. xxii. 8. that the relics of St. Stephen cured many diseases, it is wonderful he should depend much on the authority of St. Austin in this matter, seeing he tells us, that "hujus martyris corpus ex illo usque ad ista tempora latuit, nuper autem apparuit, sicut solent apparere sanctorum martyrum corpora revelatione Dei," the relics of this martyr were latent for about four hundred years, and only found by revelation in his time: for is there not sufficient reason to suspect such revelations appearing only in that age, when religion began much to decline, and superstition, as St. Austin confesses, to abound? Would God thus honour this martyr only then, and neglect to do it for four hundred years? or, did not Grotius know, that St. Austin saith in that very chapter of these very miracles, that they are not of such authority, that we should believe them without difficulty or doubting?†

* Ἐξαίρετός ἐστιν αὐτοῖς ἅπασι ἡ περὶ τὸ ἱερὸν σπουδή. Philo legat. p. 791.

[4] Ver. 4. They that were scattered abroad went through all places preaching the word.] Hence it is highly probable that it was not the whole church of Jerusalem, or the body of the laity, (seeing we find devout men burying Stephen, ver. 3.) that was thus scattered abroad: for what authority had they to preach the word? but the hundred and eight that were full of the Holy Ghost; this persecution aiming chiefly at those who were such as Stephen was; and therefore the discourse passes on from him to Philip, another of those persons so qualified to preach the gospel.

[5] Ver. 5. Philip.] That this was Philip the deacon, and not the apostle, seems evident from these considerations: (1.) That he seems not to have had the power of giving the Holy Ghost by imposition of hands; for he fell upon none of the Samaritans till Peter and John came and laid their hands upon them, ver. 15—17. and ver. 18. it is particularly noted, that the Holy Ghost was given only by the imposition of the apostles' hands. (2.) That the apostles were still at Jerusalem, ver. 1. whereas this Philip was one of those that were dispersed; for when St. Luke had said, that the rest were dispersed, preaching the gospel, ver. 4. he adds, ver. 5. and Philip went down to Samaria preaching Christ. And (3.) he goes from Azotus, evangelizing in the cities till he came to Cæsarea, (ver. 40.) and there we find Paul abiding in the house of that Philip, who was one of the seven deacons. (Acts xxi. 8.)

[6] Ver. 9. Λέγων εἶναί τινα ἑαυτὸν μέγαν, Saying he was some great one; and of whom the Samaritans said, that he was ἡ δύναμις τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ μεγάλη, the great power of God, ver. 10.] The account which, according to St. Luke, this magician gives of himself, is only this, that he was μέγας τὶς, some great person, as mountebanks usually represent themselves; and the opinion which his magical pranks had wrought in the Samaritans, only this, that he was the great power of God; by which words, perhaps they only meant some legate or minister of God, assisted by his mighty power; and yet the fathers tell us, he declared himself to be, "eum qui sit super omnia Pater," the Father which is above all. So Irenæus,‡ that he was bold to call himself the chief God: so Tertullian,* and that the Samaritans held him to be πρῶτον Θεὸν, the prime God; yea, to be God ὑπεράνω πάσης ἀρχῆς καὶ ἐξουσίας καὶ δυνάμεως, above all principality, power, and virtue: so Justin Martyr;† though he who reads these words of Irenæus, Esse se docuit sublimissimam virtutem, hoc est, eum qui sit super omnia Pater; and these of Tertullian, Hic ausus est summam se dicere virtutem, id est, summum Deum, will be apt to think, they only did infer this from these words of St. Luke, that the Samaritans held he was ἡ μεγάλη τοῦ θεοῦ δύναμις, the great power of God. St. Luke goes on to inform us, that he believed and was baptized in the name of Jesus, with the rest of the Samaritans; and after this, it is difficult to conceive how he should persuade the Samaritans that he was God the Father, or the Jews that he was that Son, that Jesus, into whose name he was baptized, or the gentiles, that he was that Spirit which he would have purchased with money. How can we easily conceive, that all Samaria should own him as a great God, and yet he, as Theodoret‡ informs us, should presently after this leave them, as having received the doctrine of Christ, and go thence to those who had not yet received it, and come in the second year of Claudius, i. e. about eight years after, to Rome, where he was confounded by the prayers of Peter? or that, being overcome in the sight of all that dwelt at Rome, they should still have erected, till the time of Justin Martyr, a statue, "Simoni Deo sancto," to Simon the holy God? These things, I say, seem neither easy to be believed in themselves, nor well consistent with what is here recorded by St. Luke. However, seeing both Irenæus and Theodoret in the places mentioned, say expressly, Ἰουδαίοις μὲν ὡς υἱὸν φανῆναι, πρὸς δὲ Σαμαρείτας ὡς πατέρα κατεληλυθέναι, ἐν δὲ τοῖς ἄλλοις ἔθνεσιν ὡς πνεῦμα ἅγιον ἐπιφοιτῆσαι, that Simon pretended to appear to the Jews as the Son, to have descended to the Samaritans as the Father, and to other nations as the Holy Ghost; this seems to shew that the doctrine of the blessed Trinity was embraced by all Christians from the beginning, as St. Basil proves from the testimonies of the fathers from the beginning, and from these words of Clemens Rom. ζῇ Θεὸς, καὶ ὁ κύριος Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς καὶ τὸ πνεῦμα ἅγιον. (Basil de Spiritu Sancto, tom. ii. cap. 29. p. 357, 358.)

[7] Ver. 12. Περὶ τοῦ ὀνόματος, Concerning the name of Jesus Christ.] That is, concerning the power of that name, when it was used by believers to do the greatest miracles; so, iii. 16. his name, through faith in his name, hath made this man strong, that is, his power upon the invocation of his name with faith hath done it: so the sadducees inquire of the apostles, iv. 7. By what have ye done this? and they answer, ver. 10. By the name, that is, the power, of Jesus; and afterward they pray, ver. 30. that signs and wonders may be done by his name, i. e. by using of his name with faith, and invocating of him; the power of Christ being then present with them that did so.

[8] Ver. 14. They sent to them Peter.] Here we find Peter sent by the other apostles, and by the church, which is a sign he was not their head and superior; for greater is he that sends, than he that is sent.

the Holy Ghost.] Not that all, who had been baptized, might receive it; for it was never so in any church; no, not at Jerusalem; there being only some among them full of the Holy Ghost; (Acts vi. 3.) and therefore it seems reasonable to say, with Dr. Lightfoot here, that they were such as the Holy Ghost had pointed out to be ordained ministers, or for the receiving of the prophetical gifts, which enabled men then λειτουργεῖν, to do sacred offices in the assemblies where they were; (Acts xiii. 2, 3.) and these gifts being conferred, either by God immediately, as in the case of Cornelius, or only by the apostles' hands; Epiphanius * observes rightly, that Philip, being only a deacon, had not the power to confer them, and therefore these apostles were sent to do it. But whereas Dr. Hammond saith, this laying on of hands was to confirm, and to ordain elders and bishops, in every city one; this latter clause, of the ordaining one bishop for every city of Samaria, when one city only had received the faith, is very surprising, it being new to hear of a bishop settled where there were no Christians, and therefore they could have no flock. Moreover, as this is spoken gratis, without any colour from the text, so is there not the least mention of any deacons here ordained, though Epiphanius saith, there cannot be a bishop without deacons. And if this imposition of hands made them bishops of so many cities of Samaria, by the same reason St. Paul imposing his hands on the twelve men at Ephesus, (xix. 6.) must make them also bishops of twelve cities of Asia. In a word, it is evident, that by this imposition of hands the Holy Ghost fell on them, not to make them bishops of any city, but only prophets and teachers in the churches where they came, and to which they travelled: thus Silas coming a prophet from Jerusalem, returns not to Judea, to exercise any episcopal function there; but goes on with Paul to the gentiles to visit and confirm the churches. (Acts xv. 34. 41.) Nor was one of them only placed in a city, but many; five at Antioch, (Acts xiii. 1.) more at Corinth, and perhaps at Ephesus. As for the other opinion, that these hands were laid on to confirm them; if hands were not laid on all that were baptized, this makes nothing for confirmation; if they were, then Simon Magus must be confirmed, and receive the Holy Ghost. And both these opinions seem dangerous on this account, that the Holy Ghost was never thus conferred but by the hands of an apostle; and consequently, if confirmation and ordination be laid on this foundation, they may be said to cease with the apostles. Notwithstanding, this may well be deemed a fit pattern for bishops to follow in the apostolical rite of confirmation and ordination, by laying on of hands; by which rite they, as successors of the apostles, confer the ordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost, as the apostles did the extraordinary gifts of the same Spirit.

[10] Ver. 20. Thy money perish with thee; because thou hast thought that the gift of God might be purchased with money.] As for the first clause of these words, the fathers look upon them rather as a prophetical prediction than an imprecation: and as for the sin of Simon, it seems not to consist so much in his ambition and his avarice, that he would be advanced to the highest dignity, and have those gifts, by the exercise of which he hoped to be the greater gainer; as in this, that he struck at the very foundation of the Christian faith, supposing that the apostles and other Christians did their miracles in confirmation of it, by some higher art of magic than that which he had learned, and so they by the same art could teach others to do the same works for any other end. Now what relation this sin hath to what we now call simony, it is not easy to conceive; only because he would have purchased this spiritual gift with money; hence, by analogy, all purchasing of spiritual offices or places, by such sordid means, doth bear that name.

[11] Ver. 26. Ἐπὶ τὴν ὁδὸν τὴν καταβαίνουσαν εἰς Γάζαν· αὐτή ἐστιν ἔρημος. In the way which leadeth to Gaza, which way is a desert.] So Œcumenius, There is a way to the south, τὸ δὲ αὐτή ἐστιν ἔρημος εἶπεν, and that way (saith he) is desert. So Pliny,* Per continentem deserta, oppidum Gaza. And this may be said to distinguish this Gaza of the Philistines from another Gaza in the tribe of Ephraim, mentioned 1 Chron. vii. 28. not far from the place where Philip now was.

[12] Ver. 27. Ἀνὴρ Αἰθίοψ εὐνοῦχος, δυνάστης Κανδάκης τῆς Βασιλίσσης Αἰθιόπων, A man of Ethiopia, a eunuch, a man of great authority under Candace queen of the Ethiopians.] This was not Ethiopia in Arabia, where the queen of Sheba dwelt, but Ethiopia in Africa under Egypt; where Candace had long been the name of their queens. So Pliny,† speaking of Meroe, saith, There reigns Candace, "quod nomen multis jam annis ad reginas transiit," which hath for many years been the name of their queens. (See Bochart. Geogr. S. lib. iv. cap. 26. §. 4.)

Moreover, that this eunuch was a proselyte of justice, or one who had embraced the Jewish faith, to which he was converted by those Jews, which from Alexandria spread themselves into Ethiopia, Grotius concludes; not only because he came so long a journey to worship at Jerusalem, and there to celebrate the feast of Pentecost, but because Cornelius was the first-fruits of the gentiles; and perhaps the fame that he had heard in Jerusalem of the sufferings and resurrection of Christ, might induce him to read this prophet.

[13] Ver. 31. How can I, except some man should guide me?] Here Grotius notes, that the eunuch did not think the Scripture was every where so perspicuous, or contained a sense so obvious to all, as do now our mechanics and women, who would do better if they thought they needed a guide: but sure it will not follow, that because the eunuch wanted a guide in an obscure prophecy, therefore we must want one to obtain the knowledge of the plain principles and precepts of Christianity; nor surely could he be ignorant, that when we assert the clearness and perspicuity of Scripture, in all things necessary to be believed or done, we do this not in opposition to the assistance of reason, or in exclusion to the instruction and help of others, but in opposition to the necessity of a living judge and infallible interpreter, supposed necessary to the knowledge of that will of God, by which alone we can be saved. Moreover, we do not say that Holy Scripture is absolutely and in all things perspicuous, for we willingly acknowledge with Origen,‡ Chrysostom,§ Theodoret,‖ St. Austin,¶ Gregory, and almost all the fathers, that there is in Scripture a mixture of obscure and plain texts, some things which are δυσνόητα, hard to be understood, and some things which are easy to be apprehended by very mean capacities; but our assertion is that of St. Chrysostom,* that πάντα τὰ ἀναγκαῖα δῆλα, all things necessary to be believed or done are there delivered with sufficient clearness; or so that all, who are concerned to know and do them that they may be saved, may hence learn them; and that of St. Austin,† that "quisque ibi fidem teneat, sine quâ piè, recteque non vivitur," every one may there obtain that faith, without which we cannot piously and rightly live. And the reason hereof, saith Mr. Chillingworth,‡ is convincing and demonstrative, because nothing is necessary to be believed, but what is plainly revealed: for to say, that when a place of Scripture, by reason of ambiguous terms, lies indifferent between divers senses, whereof one is true, the other is false, that God obliges men under pain of damnation, not to mistake through error and human frailty, is to make God a tyrant, and to say that he requires us certainly to attain that end, for the attaining whereof we have no certain means. Moreover, the apostles did not write only for the learned, but for all men; and therefore, unless we will imagine the Holy Ghost and them to have been wilfully wanting to their own desire and purpose, we must conceive that they intended to speak plain, even to the capacity of the simplest, at least touching all things necessary to be published by them and believed by us.

Secondly, We do not say that all things necessary to be believed or done are perspicuously mentioned in all places of the Holy Scripture, which respect those things; but then we say, with Irenæus,§ and the generality of the fathers, that those things, which are ambiguously spoken in some places, are to be expounded by those things which "apertè, et sine ambiguo posita sunt in Scripturis," are plainly, and without ambiguity, contained in the Scriptures; or if they cannot be this way expounded, the sense of them cannot be needful to be known:‖ for if God's will had been we should have understood him more certainly in such places, he would have spoken more plainly.

[14] Ver. 32. He was led as a sheep to the slaughter.] These words are taken from Isa. liii. 8. where that the prophet speaks of Christ, no Christian can reasonably doubt, there being scarce a verse in this whole chapter which is not by the Holy Ghost in the New Testament applied to Christ; the first verse, John xii. 38. the third, Mark ix. 12. the fourth, Matt. viii. 17. the fifth, Mark xv. 28. And though the latter Jews will not allow of this interpretation, yet some of them not only do own, that their ancient rabbins did with one mouth confess these words were spoken of Messiah the King;¶ but also spake thus of him, "The holy blessed God began to covenant with the Messiah when he created him, and said to him, The sins of those who are laid up in secret with thee, will make thee to come under an iron yoke, and make thee like to this young heifer, whose eyes are dim, and fill thy spirit with anguish; and because of their iniquities thy tongue shall cleave to the roof of thy mouth: wilt thou then undergo this condition for them? The Messiah said,* I undertake it with the joy and exultation of my heart on this condition, that not one of Israel may perish, and that not only they may be saved who live in my days, but also they who are dead from the days of the first man to this very day. And again, when God created the world, he held forth his hand under the throne of glory,† and created the soul of the Messiah, and his company, and said to him, Wilt thou heal and redeem my sons after six thousand years? He answered him, Yes. God said to him, If so, wilt thou bear chastisements to expiate their iniquities, according to what is written, Isa. liii. 4. surely he bore our griefs? he answered, I will endure them with joy." Whence three things are observable:

First, That what seems so strange and precarious to Crellius, viz. that God should make a covenant with the Messiah concerning his suffering for the sins of his people, seems to be only that with which the Jews were well acquainted, and which seems also to be insinuated here by the prophet, saying, If he shall make his soul an offering for sin, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand; he shall see the travail of his soul, and be satisfied: and in those words of the Psalmist, Sacrifice and offering thou didst not desire; mine ears hast thou opened: burnt-offering and sin-offering hast thou not required. Then said I, Lo, I come: in the volume of the book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O God: yea, thy law is within my heart. (Psal. xl. 6—8. Heb. v. 6—8.)

Secondly, That their Messiah was to suffer for their sakes, to make atonement for their sins. And,

Thirdly, That he was to be the salvation, not only of those who were to live in and after his time, but of all men from the beginning. And though Grotius, in his notes upon this chapter, endeavours to interpret the words concerning the prophet Jeremy, yet in his excellent book of the truth of Christian Religion, having cited this whole chapter, he inquires,‡ Quis potest nominari aut regum aut prophetarum in quem hæc congruunt? nemo sane.

[15] Ver. 33. In his humiliation his judgment was taken away.] Here Mr. Clerc gives a good sense of these words, viz. In his humiliation was his judgment; i. e. he appeared so mean to Pilate and the Jews, that they passed judgment against him, and he was taken away by them as an inconsiderable person, fit to be sacrificed to prevent seditions, or the coming of the Romans. The Hebrew saith, From force and from judgment he was taken away; i. e. it proceeded from the judgment of Pilate, and from the force, the continual clamours the Jews laid upon him to pass that judgment, that he was taken away, and who shall declare the wickedness of that generation who dealt thus with their Messiah? which therefore in the Gospels is styled a viperous, Luke iii. 7. an adulterous, Matt. xii. 34. 39. a wicked, ver. 45. an untoward generation, Acts ii. 40. and was so to be, say the Jews, in the days of the Messiah. (See note on Phil. iii. 2. and Dr. Lightfoot here.)

clause by Dr. Mills is taken "pro commate, Παραβεβλημένῳ, à primis Christianismi sæculis injecto, ut et alia in libro Actorum Apostolicorum haud pauca," for a supposititious clause put into the text from the first ages of the church, as many other clauses are in the Acts of the Apostles: and yet this clause is found in the Vulgar and Arabic versions, in Irenæus, lib. iii. cap. 12. lib. iv. cap. 40. in Tertullian, de Baptismo, cap. 18. in Cyprian, ad Quirinum, lib. iii. §. 83. in St. Jerome, tom. iv. fol. 46. lit. 1. in St. Austin, de Fide et Operibus, cap. 9. 12. and in Œcumenius in locum: and even the doctor, Prolog, p. 40. col. 2. owns it in contradiction to his former self; and hence we may judge of his other supposed additions, so confidently and so frequently mentioned, in this and in the other sacred books; which, were there any truth in what he says, as blessed be God there seldom is, would render the whole Scriptures of the New Testament dubious and uncertain. (See Examen Millii, in ix. 5. x. 6. 21. xi. 6. 12. xv. 20. 29. xvi. 14. xviii. 10. 17. 21. 27. xx. 24. xxi. 3. 8. 13. 22. xxii. 20, 21. 29. xxiii. 9. 30. 35. xxiv. 16. 18. xxv. 16. xxvi. 7. xxvii. 28. xxviii. 1. 16. 29.)

[16] Πιστεύω τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ εἶναι τὸν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, &c.] Four things are hence observable: (1.) That baptism was here performed by a κατάβασις, or descent of the baptized person in the water. (2.) That upon this faith, that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, and that he died for our sins, which was the thing which Philip preached to the eunuch, adult persons, who before owned one God, and the spirit of prophecy, as the eunuch did, were received to that baptism, in which they were taught, and by which they were obliged to observe all things that Jesus had commanded: for though the belief, that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of God, was the great article propounded, and first preached to every convert; yet the end of baptism being the remission of sins, and the effect of it justification, or the absolution of the baptized person from his past sins, and this justification and remission of sins being declared to be obtained only through faith in his blood, it is certain that believing in the Lord Jesus must include faith in his meritorious death and passion, or, as the Scripture saith, faith in his blood. Hence the apostle reckons this article ἐν πρώτοις, among the first he preached to the Corinthians, that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, 1 Cor. xv. 3. and tells them, that he preached to them Christ crucified, 1 Cor. i. 23. as the means of their justification and salvation. (See the preface to the General Epistle to St. John.) (3.) Observe, that to the Jews and proselytes, who already owned the true God, and believed his prophets were inspired by the Holy Ghost, baptism was administered in the name of Jesus Christ, (Acts ii. 38. viii. 16. x. 48.) or in the name of the Lord; but when the apostles were sent εἰς τὰ ἔθνη, to the gentiles, who believed not these things, they are commanded to baptize them in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, Matt. xxviii. 20. Observe, (4.) that in some copies we read thus, πνεῦμα ἅγιον ἔπεσεν ἐπὶ τὸν εὐνοῦχον, καὶ ἄγγελος Κυρίου, the Holy Ghost fell upon the eunuch, and the angel of the Lord caught away Philip: so the Alexandrian and other manuscripts, and so St. Jerome cites it, Dial. contra Lucif. F. 50. l. and, according to this reading, the eunuch was sufficiently authorized to preach to and convert the Ethiopians, as it is said he did. (See Iren. lib. iii. cap. 12. lib. iv. cap. 40. Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. ii. cap. 1. Hieron. in Isa. liii.)

[17] Ver. 39. The Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip.] He did it, saith Œcumenius, because the eunuch had requested him to go with him into Ethiopia; whereas God had designed him to preach the gospel in other places of the world, and so, by removing him thus from the eunuch, prevented his compliance with him in that request.

Ἐπορεύετο γάρ, Pergebat autem.] As the Hebrew ו, so the Gr. γὰρ often signifies but: so, Luke xii. 58. ὡς γὰρ ὑπάγεις, but as thou goest with thine adversary: so Phavorinus, ἀντὶ τοῦ, δὲ, κεῖται, it is put for but.

CHAP. IX.

1. AND Saul, yet [1] breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went to the high-priest, (and to all the elders of the Sanhedrin, Acts xxii. 5.)

2. And he desired of him (and them, ibid.) [2] letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound to Jerusalem, (to be judged and punished by them; ibid.)

3. And as he journeyed (in pursuit of his commission), he came near Damascus: and suddenly (about midday; Acts xxii. 6.) there shined round about him, (and those that were with him, Acts xxvi. 13.) a light from heaven: (above the brightness of the sun, ibid.)

4. And he (and all that were with him, Acts xxvi. 14.) fell to the earth, and (he) heard a (-n articulate) voice saying unto him (in the Hebrew tongue, ibid.) Saul, [3] Saul, why persecutest thou me?

5. And he said (in answer to it, Acts xxii. 8.) Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: it is (or, will be) [4] hard for thee to kick against the pricks (thus to set thyself to fight against God).

6. And he trembling and (being) astonished, said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do (to avoid thy farther displeasure)? And the Lord said unto him, Arise (stand upon thy feet), and go into the city (of Damascus), and (there) it shall be told thee what thou must do; (or, of all things which thou art appointed to do, Acts xxii. 10. for, for this cause have I appeared to thee, Acts xxvi. 17, 18.)

7. And the men that journeyed with him stood speechless (through fear, Acts xxii. 9.) [5] hearing a voice, but seeing no man (nor knowing what was said to him).

8. And Saul arose from the earth (and they that were with him); and when (the lids of) his eyes were opened, he saw no man, (his eyes being dazzled with the glory of that light, Acts xxii. 11.) but they (who were with him) led him by the hand, and brought him to Damascus.

9. And he was three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink.

10. And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias, (a devout man according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews that dwelt there, Acts xxii. 12.) and to him said the Lord [6] in a vision, Ananias. And he said, Behold, I am here, Lord.

11. And the Lord said to him, Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and inquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul of Tarsus: for, behold, he prayeth,

12. And hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight.

13. Then Ananias answered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done to thy saints at Jerusalem:

14. And here he hath authority from the chief priests to bind [7] all that call on thy name (i. e. all thy disciples).

15. But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way (upon this my message): for he is a chosen vessel to me, to bear my name before (i. e. to preach Christ to) the gentiles, and kings, and (to) the children of Israel:

16. For I will shew him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake: (and yet the prospect of them shall not make him disobedient to the heavenly vision, but as forward to preach as ever he was to persecute the preachers of the gospel.)

17. And (then) Ananias went his way, and entered into the house (where Saul was); and putting his hands on him (i. e. his eyes), said, Brother Saul, [8] the Lord, even (that) Jesus that appeared to thee in the way as thou camest (hither), hath sent me (to thee), that thou mightest receive thy sight, and (at thy baptism into his name mayest) be filled with the Holy Ghost, (as his other apostles were; I therefore say to thee in his name, Receive thy sight, xxii. 13.)

18. And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales: and he received sight forthwith; and (when Ananias had said to him, The God of thy fathers hath chosen thee that thou shouldest know his will, and see that Just One, and shouldest hear the voice of his mouth, &c. Acts xxii. 14—16. he) [9] arose, and was baptized.

19. And when he had received meat, he was strengthened. Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus.

20. And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, (there proving) that he is the Son of God.

21. But all that heard him were amazed, and said, Is not this he that destroyed them which called on this name at Jerusalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound to the chief priests?

22. But [10] Saul increased more in strength, and (by the evidence of his reasonings) confounded the (unbelieving) Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving (to them from the Scriptures) that this (Jesus whom he preached) is (was the) very Christ promised.

23. And after that [11] many days were fulfilled, the Jews took counsel to kill him:

24. But their laying (in) wait (to do it) was known of Saul. And (for) they watched the gates day and night to kill him.

25. Then the disciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall in a basket.

26. And when Saul was come to Jerusalem, he assayed to join himself to the disciples: but they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a disciple.

27. But Barnabas took him, and brought him to the apostles, and declared to them how he had seen the Lord in the way (to Damascus), and that he had spoken to him, and how he had preached boldly at Damascus in the name of Jesus.

28. And he was with them coming in and going out at Jerusalem.

29. And he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the Grecians (i. e. the Jews that used the Greek tongue): but they (also) went about to slay him.

30. Which when the brethren knew, they brought him down to Cæsarea (Philippi), and sent him forth to Tarsus.

31. Then had the churches rest throughout all Judea, and Galilee, and Samaria, [12] and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied.

32. [13] And it came to pass, as Peter passed through all quarters (of Judea, where disciples were), he came down also to the saints which dwelt at Lydda (a city of Palestine).

33. And there he found a certain man named Eneas, who had kept his bed eight years, and (who) was sick of the palsy.

34. And Peter said to him, Eneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole: (I therefore say to thee, in his name,) Arise, and make thy bed. And he arose immediately.

35. And all that dwelt at Lydda and (in the plain of) Saron (extending from Cæsarea Palestine to Joppa) saw him, and (by this means) turned to the Lord.

36. Now there was at Joppa (a Phœnician city, lying upon the Mediterranean) a certain disciple, named [14] Tabitha, who by interpretation is called Dorcas (a roe): this woman was full of good works and almsdeeds which she did.

37. And it came to pass in those days that she was sick, and died: whom when they had washed (in preparation for her interment), they laid her in an upper chamber.

38. And forasmuch as Lydda was nigh to Joppa, and the disciples had heard that Peter was there, they sent to him two men, desiring him that he would not delay to come to them.

39. Then Peter arose and went with them. And when he was come, they brought him (Gr. whom being come they brought) into the upper chamber: and all the widows stood by him weeping, and shewing the coats and garments which Dorcas (had) made while she was with them.

40. But Peter put them all forth, and kneeling down prayed; and turning him to the body, said, Tabitha, arise. And she opened her eyes: and when she saw Peter, she sat up.

41. And he gave her his hand, and lifted her up; and when he had called the saints and widows, presented her (to them) alive.

42. And it was known throughout all Joppa, and many (upon that account also) believed in the Lord.

43. And it came to pass, that he tarried many days in Joppa with one Simon a tanner.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IX.

[1] Ver. 1. AND Saul ἐμπνέων ἀπειλῆς καὶ φόνου, breathing out threatenings and slaughter.] It appears hence, that the power of capital punishments was not so taken from the Jewish Sanhedrin, held at Jerusalem, but that they might inflict this punishment upon those of their own nation, either by their own power, or by the consent of the Roman governors, in cases punishable with death by their laws and customs. For Saul confesses that he persecuted this way unto the death, by virtue of this power received from the Sanhedrin, binding and delivering up to prison men and women, Acts xxii. 4. (See the note on John xviii. 31.)

[2] Ver. 2. Letters to Damascus to the synagogues.] From this and from the twentieth verse, where Paul is said to preach Christ at Damascus in the synagogues of the Jews, it appears that there were more synagogues of the Jews than one in that city; and that it was so also in other cities, see Vitringa de Synag. Vit. lib. i. par. i. cap. 14. p. 255, &c.

[3] Ver. 4. Saul, why persecutest thou me?] The persecutions of Christ's members are represented as the persecutions of Christ himself, by reason of their union to him by the Spirit, which renders them his body, and of that sympathy he hath with them under all their sufferings, which makes him συμπαθῆσαι, to suffer with them. (Heb. iv. 15. Isa. lxiii. 9.)

[4] Ver. 5. It is hard for thee πρὸς κέντρα λακτίζειν, to kick against the pricks.] This is a proverbial expression, signifying the damage and hurt they are like to receive who resist and fight against those who are superior to them, and especially against God. So Euripides in Bacch. v. 794.

Θύοιμ' ἂν αὐτῷ μᾶλλον, ἢ θυμούμενος
Πρὸς κέντρα λακτίζοιμι, θνητὸς ὢν, θεῷ.

I will rather offer sacrifice to him, than, being a mortal man, be angry with God, and kick against the goads.

And Pindar* saith, we must not contend against God, but bear the yoke he puts upon our neck mildly, and not kick against the goads, ποτὶ κέντρον δέ τοι λακτίζεμεν, that is, saith the scholiast, not μάχεσθαι τῇ τυχῇ ἄνθρωπον ὄντα, to fight against God, being only men. The great Bochart† will not have this proverb taken from Æschylus, Euripides, Pindar, or Plautus, but from the Scriptures, it being used, saith he, by Moses, saying, Jeshurun waxed fat, "et recalcitravit," and kicked against the law, Deut. xxxii. 15. and by God himself, inquiring, Why kick ye against my sacrifices? 1 Sam. ii. 29. (See Examen Millii.)

[5] Ver. 7. Ἀκούοντες μὲν τῆς φωνῆς, Hearing a voice.] To reconcile this with xxii. 9. where it is said, that the men that were with him, τὴν φωνὴν οὐκ ἤκουσαν, heard not the voice of him that spake to, or with, him; Dr. Hammond notes, that the word φωνὴ signifies thunder, and so reconciles these places, by saying, They that were with me heard the voice of the thunder, but heard not the voice of him that spake unto me. That this importance of the word φωνὴ is frequent in the Old Testament, cannot be doubted; thus Exod. ix. 23. The Lord sent thunder and hail, φωνὰς καὶ χάλαζαν· and, ver. 29. I will stretch forth my hand, and the thunder shall cease, καὶ αἱ φωναὶ παύσωνται· and, ver. 33. He stretched out his hand, καὶ αἱ φωναὶ ἐπαύσαντο· and, ver. 34. When Pharaoh saw, ὅτι πέπαυται ἡ χάλαζα, καὶ αἱ φωναὶ, that the hail and the thunder were ceased, he hardened his heart: so, Exod. xix. 16. It came to pass on the third day, that there were thunderings and lightnings, φωναὶ καὶ ἀστραπαί· xx. 18. All the people saw the thunderings and lightnings, τὴν φωνὴν, καὶ τὰς λαμπάδας. so, Psal. xviii. 13. The Lord thundered out of heaven, and the Highest gave his voice; xxix. 3. The voice of the Lord is upon the waters, and the God of glory thundereth: so, Psal. xix. 1. 3. The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament or clouds of heaven shew his handywork: there is no speech nor language, where their voice, i. e. their thunder, is not heard. If it be said, we find no mention of any thunder here, it may be answered, that it was usually an attendant of such glorious coruscations as this was: if you add, that here is mention of a voice speaking in the Hebrew tongue, it may be still replied, that thus it was at Sinai, where God answered Moses τῇ φωνῇ, out of the thunder, Exod. xix. 19. If, thirdly, you object that it is said, they heard a voice, but they saw no person, and in thunder this is not expected; I answer, this is true of common thunder, but in such an extraordinary illumination as this was, they reasonably might expect the vision of an angel, or some glorious person; especially if the conjecture of most interpreters be true, that Paul not only heard, but saw the Lord Jesus speaking to him: this will be no objection against the interpretation of this learned man. Or, (2.) this seeming contradiction may be reconciled thus; they heard a voice, but οὐκ ἤκουσαν they understood not the words of him that spake unto me; for οὐκ ἀκούειν frequently in Scripture signifies not to understand what we hear: thus God saith of the builders of Babel, Let us confound their tongues, ἵνα μὴ ἀκούσωσιν, that they may not understand one another's speech, Gen. xi. 7. xlii. 23. The Lord shall bring upon thee a nation, οὗ οὐκ ἀκούσῃ τῆς φωνῆς αὐτοῦ, whose tongue thou shalt not understand, Deut. xxviii. 49. I will bring upon thee a nation, οὗ οὐκ ἀκούσεις τῆς φωνῆς τῆς γλώσσης αὐτοῦ, whose language thou knowest not, neither understandest what they say, Jer. v. 15. Speak in the Syrian tongue, ὅτι ἀκούομεν ἡμεῖς, for we understand it, 2 Kings xviii. 26. I sent thee not unto a people of a strange speech, and hard language, ὧν οὐκ ἀκούσῃ τοὺς λόγους, whose words thou canst not understand, Ezek. iii. 6. He that speaketh in an unknown tongue, speaketh not to men, but to God, οὐδεὶς γὰρ ἀκούει, for no man understands him, 1 Cor. xiv. 2. (3.) Œcumenius affords a third solution, viz. that they heard the voice of Saul speaking to Christ, οὐ τῆς ἄνωθεν, not the voice of Christ speaking to him.

[6] Ver. 10. The Lord said to him in a vision.] That is, saith Grotius, an angel in the shape of the Lord; but as we have no example in the New Testament of any such appearance of an angel in the person of Christ, so is it certain that here it was not so, but really was a vision of the Lord Jesus: for Ananias not only calls him Lord, but calls Christians his saints, and those that call upon his name, (ver. 13, 14.)

[7] Ver. 14. All that call upon thy name.] There be two periphrases of a Christian, which occur in this chapter and in other places of the Acts; the first, (ver. 2.) that they are men and women τῆς ὁδοῦ, of the way. So when St. Paul went into the synagogue at Corinth, they did κακολογεῖν τὴν ὁδὸν speak evil of the way; (Acts xix. 19.) and at Ephesus, there was no small disturbance, περὶ τῆς ὁδοῦ, touching the way. (See xxiv. 22.) And so some of the ancients seem to have spoken: so, in the history of the persecutions of the Gallican church,* we read of some apostates from the faith, † Hieroz. lib. ii. cap. 39. p. 587.

* Euseb. Hist. lib. v. cap. 1. p. 163.

βλασφημοῦντες τὴν ὁδὸν, who blasphemed the way: and Epiphanius* introduceth the Melchisedecians, saying, that Christ was chosen that he might turn us from idols, καὶ ὑπέδειξεν ἡμῖν τὴν ὁδὸν, and might shew us the way. The second periphrasis was this, that they were such as invoked Jesus Christ, or called upon his name; thus Ananias complains of Saul to Christ, saying, He hath done much evil to thy saints, and is come hither to bind all that call upon thy name; and the unbelieving Jews say of him, preaching Jesus Christ in their synagogues, Is not this he who wasted τοὺς ἐπικαλουμένους τὸ ὄνομα τοῦτο, those that called upon that name? (ver. 21.) Thus St. Paul writes to saints called, and to all other Christians under the title of all that call upon the Lord Jesus Christ in every place, 1 Cor. i. 2. and then, in the very next verse, he himself prays that grace and peace may be derived upon them, from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ (see the notes there); and 2 Tim. ii. 22. bids Christians follow after peace μετὰ τῶν ἐπικαλουμένων τὸν Κύριον, with those that call upon the Lord with a pure heart, that is, with all believers, it being the same thing to believe in, and to call upon, the name of the Lord Jesus. Hence St. Peter saith, He that believeth in him shall not be ashamed; because it is written, whomsoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved, Joel ii. 32. (See the note there.) And hence we learn who that Lord is, whom Ananias bid St. Paul invoke, when he saith, xxii. 16. Arise, and be baptized, ἐπικαλεσάμενος, calling upon the name of the Lord, even the Lord Jesus, who appeared to him, ix. 17. (see the note on xxii. 16.) and what is meant by that phrase, viz. Profess thy faith, by being baptized in, and by calling on, his name; this was a thing so continually practised by the first Christians, that Pliny mentions it in his epistle to Trajan, telling him, that it was the custom of the Christians, "Carmen Christo quasi Deo canere," to sing a hymn to Christ as God: for as St. Paul, in his thirteen first Epistles, prays for grace and peace from God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ; and St. John in his Second Epistle (ver. 3.) doth the same; so doth Polycarp, the disciple of St. John, in the proem of his epistle to the church of Philippi, pray, that mercy and peace may be multiplied to them from God omnipotent καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν, and from our Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour; and the church of Smyrna, in her circular epistle to all Christians, prays, that mercy, peace, and love, may be multiplied to them from God the Father and our Lord Jesus Christ. Ignatius in like manner, in the proem to his epistle to the Magnesians, wishes them health from God the Father and our Lord Jesus Christ, Θεῷ ἡμῶν, our God: in that to the church of Smyrna, Health ἐν ἀμώμῳ πνεύματι, καὶ λόγῳ Θεοῦ, in the immaculate Spirit, and the Word of God. And as St. Paul, in his Epistles, often prays to Christ both for himself (1 Cor. xii. 8—10. see the note there), and for other Christians, (1 Thess. iii. 11, 12. 2 Thess. ii. 16. iii. 16.) so did the primitive Christians pray, and entreat others to pray to him. So Ignatius† saith to the church of Rome, λιτανεύσατε τὸν Χριστὸν ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ, Pray to Christ for me, that by the beasts I may be found a sacrifice to God; and saith to the church of Ephesus,‡ If Jesus Christ shall make me worthy by your prayer: and the church of Smyrna saith,* They could not leave Christ, καὶ σέβεσθαι, "orationis precem impendere," and worship or pray to any other.

[8] Ver. 17. The Lord Jesus who appeared to thee, ὁ ὀφθείς σοι, who was seen of thee.] I think it not necessary from these words to affirm that St. Paul here saw the person of Jesus Christ, seeing in three relations of this matter he mentions no such thing, but only that he saw the glorious light in which he did appear, and which was the symbol of his presence; for so in the Old Testament men are often said to have seen the Lord, when they saw only the glory in which he did appear, for they never saw his shape. Thus of the nobles that went up with Moses into the mount, it is said, Exod. xxiv. 10. 12. that they saw God, the God of Israel, and yet they saw no manner of similitude, Deut. iv. 12. 15. whence the Chaldee paraphrast in all these places saith, they saw the glory of God; but if it were necessary to say St. Paul saw his person, the text seems rather to require us to say, he saw him in the way, than in the heavens.

But yet by comparing these with the words of the same person, The God of our fathers hath before chosen thee to see that Just One, (xxii. 14.) as also from the inquiry of St. Paul, Am I not an apostle, have not I seen the Lord? (1 Cor. ix. 1.) and from those words, (1 Cor. xv. 8.) Last of all, ὤφθη κἀμοὶ, he was seen of me also; it is certain that St. Paul saw the person of Christ, and therefore highly probable that he did it at this time, or at his return to Jerusalem. (Acts xxii. 17, 18.)

[9] Ver. 18. He arose, and was baptized,] With water and the Holy Ghost; according to Christ's promise made to his apostles, Acts i. 6. 8. And note here that this Ananias, who at most is only supposed to have been one of the seventy disciples, only laid his hands upon him that he might receive his sight, and that he was replenished with the Holy Ghost by the immediate gift of Christ, he being an apostle not of man, nor by man, (Gal. i. 1.) but by Christ alone.

[10] Ver. 22. Paul increased in strength,] By the spirit of wisdom and of prophecy, συμβιβάζων, proving that he is the Christ. The word here rendered proving, signifies to persuade, teach, confirm, or discourse; hence συμβίβασις is, by Hesychius and Phavorinus, rendered πείσις, διδαχὴ, πίστις, persuasion, doctrine, confirmation; συμβιβάζω by Suidas, διδάσκω I teach: so 1 Cor. ii. 16. τίς συμβιβάσει αὐτὸν, who shall instruct, or teach, God? so Exod. xviii. 16. συμβιβάζω αὐτοὺς, I make them known, or teach them the statutes of God; Deut. iv. 9. συμβιβάσης, thou shalt teach them thy sons: so also Lev. x. 11. So God saith to Moses, Exod. iv. 12. συμβιβάζω σε, I will teach thee what to say; ver. 15. συμβιβάσω ὑμᾶς, I will teach or instruct thee, and Aaron, what to do; and the angel to Daniel, ix. 12. I came forth συμβιβάσαι σε, to instruct thee: so Psal. xxxii. 8. συμβιβῶ σε, I will instruct thee in the way in which thou shalt go. (See Judg. xiii. 8. Isa. xl. 13.) The doctrine he taught and proved to the Jews, was, ver. 20. that Jesus was the Son of God, foretold Psal. ii. here that he was the Christ; and when the Jews speak of the Son of God, or the apostles or others speak to the unbelieving Jews of the Son of God, it may reasonably be granted that no more is meant by that phrase than the Messiah, they understanding nothing of the Divine original of the Son of God, and being first to be convinced that he was the Messiah; but hence it follows not that this phrase signifies no more when he is styled, ὁ μονογενὴς, the only-begotten, or ἴδιος υἱὸς, the proper Son of God, Rom. viii. 32. or when Christ argues from his doing the works of God, that God was his Father.

* Hær. Melch. p. 574. sect. 8. † Sect. 4. ‡ Sect. 20.

* Act. Polycarp. apud Usser. p. 27.

[11] Ver. 23. And when many days were fulfilled.] The history of St. Paul's preaching at Damascus, and going after to Jerusalem, is somewhat intricate, and interpreters differ much about it; some thinking that St. Paul preached at Damascus immediately after his conversion, and that the Jews then thought to kill him, and that then also he went thence to Jerusalem; others, that this only happened three years after his conversion, and that then only he went to Jerusalem: I shall therefore endeavour to give a brief account of this matter. And,

First, I grant that St. Paul preached at Damascus immediately after his conversion; this seems plain from the text, which says, he was baptized, and receiving meat was strengthened, καὶ εὐθέως, and straightway he preached Jesus in the synagogues of Damascus, (ver. 18—20.) And, secondly, from the amazement of the Jews, that he should do this who came hither for this very purpose, to bind them that call upon this name.

Secondly, It seems as evident that this consultation to kill him could not be at his first conversion, but some years after; for he was let down the wall in a basket, and escaped their hands, and then went to Jerusalem, and was brought by Barnabas to the apostles, (ver. 26, 27.) Now he himself declares, that εὐθέως soon after his conversion, he went not up to Jerusalem to those that were apostles before him, but went into Arabia, and returned again to Damascus, and after three years went up to Jerusalem, where he saw Peter and James, Gal. i. 16. 19. The series of the history therefore seems to lie thus: (1.) St. Paul after his conversion instantly preaches in the synagogues of Damascus, that Jesus was the Son of God, (ver. 20.) (2.) That going thence into Arabia, betwixt two and three years after, he returns to Damascus; (Gal. i. 17.) and of this journey, Luke, being not with him, gives no account. (3.) That in his return, being increased in wisdom and strength, he continues many days in Damascus, proving that Jesus was the Christ. (4.) That after three years, he, escaping from Damascus, comes to Jerusalem, and is by Barnabas brought to the apostles, Peter and James, and continued there fifteen days. (Gal. i. 18, 19.) (5.) That there Christ appears to him in a vision; commanding him to depart out of Jerusalem; and he accordingly goes thence to Cæsarea Philippi in Cœlosyria, and to Tarsus in Cilicia. (Acts ix. 30. Gal. i. 21.) It being then so long before he came to Jerusalem, Barnabas might well know, either from the brethren of Damascus coming to Jerusalem, or from some journey he had taken thither, the certainty of his conversion to the Christian faith.

[12] Ver. 31. And were edified.] Of the import of the word edification, see note on Rom. xv. 2. it is added, and walking in the fear of God, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied; their shining piety above others, and their great joy in the Holy Ghost, attracting others to the faith.

[13] Ver. 32, 33. And it came to pass, that Peter, passing διὰ πάντων, through all the forementioned places of Judea, Samaria, and Galilee, he came down also to the saints that dwelt at Lydda, a city in the tribe of Benjamin.] He being the chief apostle of the circumcision, visits the brethren in those parts that were circumcised: but that he went down to Antioch, and founded the church there, and sat bishop in it five or seven years, as Baronius fancies, is not only besides the text, which mentions nothing of St. Peter's going beyond the places here mentioned, but is plainly inconsistent with his imprisonment at Jerusalem, (chap. xii.) and with his abode at Joppa till he went to Cæsarea, (ix. 43. xi. 5.) Still more ridiculous are they who say, he went to visit all Christian churches every where; it being plain from the history of the Acts, that he abode at Joppa till he went to Cæsarea, and that from thence he returned to Jerusalem. (Acts xi. 2.) And there is as much reason to say, that Philip did so, because from Azotus, a city of the Philistines, (1 Sam. v. 2.) he preached through all the cities till he came to Cæsarea, (viii. 43.) That ever he was at Antioch, till St. Paul and Barnabas having founded a church there, he came, and was sharply rebuked by St. Paul for his dissimulation against his own knowledge and miraculous conviction, I find no reason to believe.

[14] Ver. 36. Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas.] i. e. A roe, both in Greek and Hebrew, say the Allegorists, from her quick sight into spiritual things, and her high contemplations, these roes feeding on the mountains; as if this name had been given her by way of prophecy. The reason why St. Luke gives this interpretation of her Syriac name seems rather to be this, that she being a Græcising Jewess, was called by the first name by the Jews, and by the second among the Greeks.

CHAP. X.

1. THERE was a certain man in Cæsarea called Cornelius, a centurion of the band called the Italian band,

2. (He was) a devout man, and [1] one that feared (the true) God with all his house, (they being all proselytes of the gate, one also) who gave much alms to the (indigent) people, and [2] prayed to God always, (i. e. morning and evening daily, and at all the hours of prayer.

3. [3] And) he saw in a vision evidently, [4] about the ninth hour of the day, (the time of the evening sacrifice, when he was praying, ver. 39.) an angel of God coming to him (in the likeness of a man, ver. 30.) and saying to him, Cornelius!

4. And when he looked on him, he was afraid, and said, What is it, Lord, (thou wouldest say to me)? And he said to him, [5] Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial (for good to thee) before God.

5. And now send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, [6] whose surname is Peter:

6. He lodgeth (there) with one Simon a tanner, whose house is by the sea-side: he (being come) shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do, (that thou mayest be saved, xi. 14.)

7. And when the angel which spake to Cornelius was departed, he called two of his household-servants, and a devout soldier (who was a proselyte, and one) of them who waited on him continually;

8. And when he had declared all things to them (which the angel had said to him), he sent them to Joppa (for Peter).

9. On the morrow, as they went on their journey, and drew nigh to the city, [7] Peter went up upon the housetop to pray (towards the temple) about the sixth hour (being an hour of prayer):

10. And became very hungry, and would have eaten: but while they made ready (Gr. were preparing something for him to eat), he fell into a trance (or ecstasy),

11. And saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending to him as it had been a great sheet knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth:

12. Wherein were all manner of fourfooted beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air (clean and unclean beasts together).

13. And there came a voice to him, (saying,) Rise, Peter; kill, and eat (of them without distinction).

14. But Peter said, (I can) not (do) so, Lord; for (out of regard to the law) I have never eaten any thing that is (in it styled) common or unclean.

15. And the voice spake to him again the second time (saying), What (that) God (who instituted the law of Moses, by this declaration of his will) [8] hath cleansed, that call not thou (any longer) common.

16. (And) [9] this was done thrice (for the certainty of the thing): and (then) the vessel was received up again into heaven.

17. Now while Peter doubted in himself what that vision which he had seen should mean, behold, the men who were sent from Cornelius had made inquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate,

18. And called, and asked whether Simon, who was surnamed Peter, lodged there.

19. While Peter thought on the vision, the Spirit said unto him, Behold, three men seek thee.

20. Arise therefore, and get thee down, and go with them, doubting nothing (of the unlawfulness of conversing with them): for I have sent them.

21. Then Peter went down to the men, which were sent to him from Cornelius; and said, Behold, I am he whom ye seek: what is the cause wherefore ye are come (to me)?

22. And they said, Cornelius the centurion, a just man, and one that feareth God, and (is) of good report among all the nation of the Jews, was warned from God by a holy angel to send for thee (to come) into his house, and to hear words of thee.

23. Then called he them in, and lodged them. And on the morrow Peter went away with them, and certain brethren from Joppa (six in number, being Jews), accompanied him (the providence of God so ordering it, that they might be witnesses of what was said and done).

24. And the morrow after they entered into Cæsarea. And Cornelius waited for them, and had called together his kinsmen and near friends (Gr. and Cornelius, calling together his kinsmen and near friends, to hear what Peter should say to them concerning the way of salvation, xi. 14. was expecting them).

25. And as Peter was coming in, [10] Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet, and worshipped him.

26. But Peter took him up, saying, Stand up; I myself also am a man (and so cannot receive such worship).

27. And as he talked with him, he went in, and found many that were come together (to hear his words).

28. And he said to them, Ye know that (according to the traditions of the Jews) it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or come unto one of another nation (as being by them accounted unclean); but God hath shewed me (by a vision) that I should not (from henceforth) call any man common or unclean.

29. Therefore came I to you without gainsaying, as soon as I was sent for: I ask therefore for what intent ye have sent for me?

30. And Cornelius said, [11] Four days ago I was fasting unto this hour; and at the ninth hour I prayed in my house, and, behold, (an angel in the shape of) a man stood before me in bright clothing,

31. And said, Cornelius, thy prayer is heard, and thine alms are had in remembrance in the sight of God.

32. Send therefore to Joppa, and call hither Simon, whose surname is Peter; he is lodged in the house of one Simon a tanner, by the sea-side: who, when he is come, shall speak to thee, (ver. 6.)

33. Immediately therefore I sent to thee; and thou hast done well that thou art come. Now therefore are we all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God (to say to us).

34. Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth [12] I perceive that God is no respecter of persons (i. e. he accepts no man merely because he is of such a nation, or descended from such ancestors):

35. But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him.

36. (Ye know) [13] the word which God sent to the children of Israel, preaching peace (and reconciliation to himself) by Jesus Christ; he is Lord of all: (God having exalted him to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance and remission of sins, v. 21.)

37. That word (I say) you know, which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached;

38. How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth (i. e. Jesus of Nazareth ye know, and how God anointed him) with the Holy Ghost and with power: who (thereupon) went about doing good, and healed all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him.

39. And we are witnesses of all things that he did both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem; whom (yet) they (of the Jews) slew, and hanged on a tree:

40. (We also testify, that) him God raised up on the third day, and shewed him openly;

41. Not to all the people, but to (us his) witnesses, chosen before of God (to testify this to the world); to us (I say), [14] who did eat and drink with him after that he arose from the dead.

42. And he commanded us to preach to the people, and to testify that it is he who was (is) ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead.

43. To him give all the prophets witness, that through (faith in) his name, whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins.

44. While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them that heard the word, (as on the apostles at the beginning, xi. 15.)

45. And they of the circumcision which believed (conceiving God had no such regard to the gentiles) were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost.

46. For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter,

47. [15] Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized (i. e. Can he gainsay the baptizing of them with water), who have received the (baptism of the) Holy Ghost as well as we?

48. And he [16] commanded them to be baptized [17] in the name of the Lord (Jesus). Then prayed they him to tarry certain days.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. X.

[1] Ver. 2. ΚΑΙ φοβούμενος τὸν Θεόν.] So we read, 2 Chron. v. 6. that king Solomon, and all the congregation of Israel, were assembled, καὶ οἱ φοβούμενοι, and the proselytes; they being men, saith Solomon, who know thy name, τοῦ φοβεῖσθαί σε, to fear thee, vi. 33. This was the title given to them, who so far embraced the Jewish religion as to worship the God of Israel only, and were styled by them proselytes of the gate, and men fearing God. So Bemidvar Rabba on those words, Blessed is the man ὁ φοβούμενος τὸν Κύριον, that feareth the Lord, Psal. cxii. 1. saith, These are the proselytes, and therefore they are mentioned next to the men of Israel; as when St. Paul saith, Ye men of Israel, καὶ οἱ ἐν ὑμῖν φοβούμενοι τὸν Θεὸν, and ye that fear God, hearken, Acts xiii. 16. 26. where, saith Œcumenius, φοβουμένους τὸν Θεὸν προσηλύτους ἐκάλει, he calls the proselytes, men that feared God: and because these men had a court in the temple, where they came to worship the true God, and offer sacrifices to him; hence they were called σεβόμενοι, the worshippers, as when it is said, many of the Jews, καὶ τῶν σεβομένων προσηλύτων, and of the worshipping proselytes, followed Paul and Barnabas, Acts xiii. 43. and there followed them a great multitude, τῶν σεβομένων ἑλλήνων, of the worshipping Greeks, that is, the proselytes, saith Œcumenius. And these being also called by them chasidim, are in the New Testament called εὐσεβεῖς καὶ εὐλαβεῖς, pious and devout men, as here, ver. 1. 7. But notwithstanding all these titles, they counted them unclean as well as other gentiles, saying,* A sojourning proselyte is as a gentile in all things; and therefore they of the circumcision contend with Peter for going in to converse with them. Yet it is not unpleasant to observe, that though they held their persons thus unclean, they deemed the alms they gave to the Jews clean, saith Lightfoot; and because Cornelius was free in giving them to the Jews of Samaria, he was a man of good repute among them all, ver. 22.

[2] And prayed to God always.] i. e. Daily and at all the hours of prayer. (See the note on 1 Thess. v. 17.) It also well deserves to be observed, that he feared God with all his house; this being still the commendation of pious men, that they made all their house religious: so Gen. xviii. 19. I know Abraham, that he will command his children, and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord: and, Josh. xxiv. 15. As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord: and pious Christians made their whole families converts to the Christian faith: so we read of the nobleman at Capernaum, that he himself believed, and all his house; (John iv. 53.) of the jailor, that he believed in God with all his house, and was baptized, he and all his, straightway; (Acts xvi. 33, 34.) and of Crispus, a chief ruler of the synagogue, that he believed in the Lord with all his house, (xviii. 8.) Hence they who had made their whole family Christians, are saluted by St. Paul thus, To such a one, and the church in his house. (See note on 1 Cor. xvi. 19.) And O that this was carefully observed and imitated by all that are called Christians!

[3] Ver. 3. He saw in a vision, φανερῶς, openly.] i. e. Waking, and with his bodily eyes; for there were also visions in a dream: (Gen. xx. 3. xxviii. 12. Job iv. 13.) so St. Paul saw, ἐν ἐκστάσει ὅραμα, a vision in an ecstasy, (xi. 5.) and when he was blind, he saw in a vision Ananias, (ix. 12.)

[4] About the ninth hour.] The time of the evening sacrifice; a very fit time to tell him, that his prayers and alms, which were spiritual sacrifices, were come up before God as an evening sacrifice: for at the same time, the angel was sent to tell Daniel that his prayer was heard. (Dan. ix. 21.)

[5] Ver. 4. Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial, &c.] The word μνημόσυνον, rendered a memorial, is used both of the incense offered up with the sacrifice, (Lev. ii. 2. 9.) and of a part or handful of the mincha offered up to God; (Lev. v. 12. Numb. v. 15. 18. 26.) in which two places no incense was to be admitted, it being an offering for sin, or a memorial for iniquity; so that there, not the incense or perfume, but part of the mincha or oblation put upon the altar, is called ascharah, a memorial. Now seeing alms are the Christian sacrifices, and are called so by the apostle, Phil. iv. 18. and seeing our prayers are said to ascend as incense, and are so styled, Rev. v. 8. viii. 3. seeing they are our sacrifice of praise, Heb. xiii. 15. and alms our odour or sweet savour, Phil. iv. 18. the allusion here may very fitly relate to both.

[6] Ver. 5. Whose surname is Peter.] And so throughout this story: for Christ having said to him, Thou art Peter, i. e. a rock, and upon this rock will I build my church, i. e. lay the foundation of a church among the Jews, as he did by Peter, (Acts ii. 47.) and among the gentiles, as he doth here; therefore Cornelius is bid to send, not to Jerusalem to James or John, nor to Damascus for Paul, the apostle of the gentiles, but to Joppa for Simon, whose surname was Peter, that from him he might hear those words by which he and his house should be saved, (xi. 14.)

[7] Ver. 9. Peter went up unto the housetop to pray at the sixth hour.] This being about noon, was, by the Jews, styled the time of the mincha gedola, one of the three daily hours of prayer, which devout men used. So Daniel prayed three times a day, vi. 10. morning, evening, and at the mincha: and David saith, Psal. lv. 17. evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray to thee; evening, and morning, and at mincha, three times of prayer: so R. Saadias and R. Solomon. Note also, that though St. Peter had been so long a convert to Christianity, he keeps close to the customs of the Jews, not only as to their hours of prayer, but as to their manner of praying towards the temple, when they were out of Judea or Jerusalem, and so could not go up to the temple at the hour of prayer; for he goes up to the top or roof of the house, to pray towards Jerusalem, as Daniel did, vi. 10. Solomon, at the dedication of the temple, praying so oft, that God would hear the prayers the men of Israel should make towards that place. (1 Kings viii. 29, 30. 35. 38. 44. 48.) And when it is said of Hezekiah, 2 Kings xx. 2. Isa. xxxviii. 3. that he turned his face towards the wall; the Targum saith, this was the wall of the house of the sanctuary; and therefore, in all likelihood, St. Peter, being at Joppa, went up to the roof of the house to pray, for the same reason.

[8] Ver. 15. What God hath cleansed, call not thou common, μὴ σὺ κοίνου, do not thou pollute.] For explication of all that in this chapter is mentioned, with relation to this matter, let it be noted;

First, That it was the priest's office in case of leprosy, and other matters of like nature, to pronounce the thing or person under examination clean or unclean, and though this was done only by a declarative sentence, yet it is expressed effectively; for in the Hebrew the words are וטהרו תטמאו, and in the Greek, καὶ καθαριεῖ αὐτὸν, καὶ μιανεῖ αὐτὸν, the priest shall cleanse, the priest shall pollute him: so Lev. xiii. 6. 8. 11. 13. 17. 20. and so on. Accordingly, the voice here says, What God hath cleansed (i. e. by this vision and command declared to be clean) that do not thou pollute (i. e. pronounce not thou unclean). Note,

Secondly, That the two great things which made the partition-wall betwixt Jew and gentile, were the rite of circumcision, and the distinction between clean and unclean meats; of these two, circumcision was common to them from the beginning with the Ishmaelites, and afterward with many other nations; but the abstaining from all meats, forbidden by the law of Moses as unclean, was peculiar to the Jews, and distinguished them from all the nations of the world; and that this was the true scope of these laws, even to separate them from all other nations, by a diet peculiar to themselves, which might keep them from familiar converse with the gentiles, and so from learning their idolatrous customs, God himself declareth, saying, Lev. xx. 23—25. I am the Lord your God which have separated you from other people; ye shall therefore put a difference between clean beasts and unclean, and between unclean fowls and clean; and you shall not make yourselves abominable by beast, or by fowl, or by any manner of creeping thing that creepeth on the ground, which I have separated from you as unclean. And ye shall be holy to me, for I the Lord am holy, and have severed you from other people, that ye should be mine. Hence it must follow, that though the Egyptians, the Syrians, and other nations, might abstain from some of these beasts as unclean, yet not any of them observed the distinction of meats prescribed by Moses, for then God could not, by it, have separated them from all other nations to himself. And suitable to this is the account which Eleazer the high-priest gives of these laws in Aristeas,* that God, πάντοθεν ἡμᾶς περιέφραξεν ἀγνείαις, καὶ διὰ βρωτῶν καὶ ποτῶν, ὅπως ἐν μηδενὶ συναλισγουμένοι μηδ' ὁμιλοῦντες φαύλοις διὰ τροφὰς λαμβάνωμεν, had hedged them in with these purifications, as to meats and drinks, that, not eating or conversing with evil men, they might not be defiled. Or as Eusebius† hath it from the same author, ὅπως μηδενὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἐθνων ἐπιμισγώμεθα κατὰ μηδὲν, that they might in nothing be mixed with other nations, but be kept pure both as to soul and body.

And, lastly, being thus separated by this precept from all familiar converse with other nations, hence they came to look on them who did not use this abstinence as unclean; because they freely did eat of those things which the law made unclean to them; and to say that the unclean beasts did signify the people of the world. (So R. Menahem on Lev. xi.) Now hence we learn,

First, Why in this vision there is a representation of all manner of beasts, fowls, and creeping things; viz. because all these are mentioned Lev. xx. 24. as things, by abstaining from some of which as unclean, God had separated them from other nations to himself.

Secondly, We see the reason why the men of the circumcision object to St. Peter these two things, viz. That he went in to the uncircumcised, and did eat with them; (xi. 3.) to wit, because it was chiefly by these two things they were separated from other nations.

Thirdly, We learn why St. Peter saith, (ver. 28.) that God had by this vision shewed him that he should call no man common or unclean, viz. because he, by this declaration and command, had taken away that distinction which hindered their converse with other nations: and,

Fourthly, We see how necessary and expedient it was, that this liberty of eating meats indifferently, should be so fully declared from heaven to the Jews; because it being by God declared a law given for this very purpose, that they might be severed to himself from other nations, they durst not do any thing, without a revelation, which seemed to violate it; and without breaking through the traditions they had received about it, they could not have executed their commission to teach, or make disciples in all nations. Hence Peter is bid to go to them, μηδὲν διακρινόμενος, putting no difference betwixt them and the Jews, as that phrase often signifies. (See Acts xv. 9. and the note on Rom. xiv. 23.)

[9] Ver. 16. This was done thrice,] As Pharaoh's dream was doubled, for the certainty of the thing, Gen. xli. 32.

[10] Ver. 25, 26. Cornelius fell down at his feet and worshipped him. But Peter said, Stand up; I myself also am a man.] If the worship intended and given to him by Cornelius was religious worship, Peter declares such worship was not to be given to a mere man; if it was only civil worship, he, who thought it not fit to receive that, would much less have received religious worship.

[11] Ver. 30. Ἀπὸ τετάρτης ἡμέρας μέχρι ταύτης τῆς ὥρας ἤμην νηστεύων, Four days ago I was fasting until this hour.] The Greek, say some critics, is to be rendered thus, From the fourth day to this hour I was, or have been, fasting; so that Cornelius, according to this import of them, must have been fasting four days together; but this cannot be the true sense of the words of Cornelius; for this hour is the hour of his speaking to St. Peter, and the same day he saw his vision, which yet he saw not when St. Peter was come to him, but four days before; the meaning therefore is, that four days since he was fasting till the same hour of the day in which he spake thus to St. Peter: so ἀφ' ἡμέρων ἀρχαίων, is a long time ago, Acts xv. 7. ἀπὸ πέρυσι, a year ago, 2 Cor. viii. 10. ix. 2. and therefore Budæus, having said that ἀπὸ is often put for μετὰ, saith, these words are to be rendered quarto abhinc die; and Grotius renders them thus, die ante hoc tempus quarta jejunaveram, both justifying our translation.

[12] Ver. 34. I perceive God is no respecter of persons, &c.] I shall shew in the note on James ii. 1. that respect of persons in matters judicial, is shewed, when men judge others not according to the merits of the cause, but according to outward respects, which relate nothing to it, as the greatness, richness, meanness, and poverty of the person, relation, friendship, or affection; and so in spirituals, to accept persons is to respect them and their services, not on the account of any thing that makes them better, or more fit to be regarded than others, or which is more acceptable in the sight of God, but on the account of the nation to which they belong, or the ancestors from which they were descended. Thus, because God had chosen the Jews to be his people, by reason of the piety of their forefathers, and to perform his promise made to them, the Jews imagined that God would accept them and their services on that account, that they were of the Jewish nation, and of the seed of Abraham according to the flesh, and that he would not accept the persons or regard the services of the gentiles, for want of these things; but these false conceptions St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans, and St. Peter here, refute: shewing (1.) that men, not only of the Jewish, but of any other nation, may be acceptable to God, there being one God, who is rich (in goodness) to all that call upon him, whether Jew or gentile, (Rom. x. 12.) he being the God not of Jews only, but also of the gentiles, and so as ready to justify them through faith, as to justify the Jews. (Rom. iii. 29, 30.) (2.) That God accepts such men, not on the account of their descent or circumcision, but because they fear God and work righteousness: thus Cornelius being one that feared God, and gave much alms, (ver. 2, 3.) his prayers and alms came before God for a memorial for good to him; whence it is evident, that some of other nations, owning the true God, not only might, but actually did, fear God and work righteousness, and otherwise they very ill deserved the title given to the proselytes of the gate; (see the note on ver. 2.) nor could St. Peter perceive that God was no respecter of persons on the account of a thing which never did nor could happen; or St. Paul say, Glory, honour, and peace shall be to every one that doeth good, to the Jew first, and also to the gentile: for there is no respect of persons with God. (Rom. ii. 10, 11.) How far such persons may be accepted with God, and on what account, see my conjecture on Rom. ii. 14.

[13] Ver. 36. The word which God sent to the children of Israel, &c.] The apostle's discourse from this to the forty-third verse seems to be to this effect; viz. (1.) That there was an offer made by the gospel of peace, i. e. of reconciliation and salvation by Jesus Christ, the author of that gospel, ver. 36, 37. (2.) That he was able to make good that promise, as being Lord of all things. (3.) That he who preached this doctrine was a true prophet, he being anointed with the Holy Ghost for that office, and confirming what he said by powerful miracles, ver. 38. (4.) That this doctrine, and these miracles, could not be reasonably questioned, they who were with him from the beginning being witnesses of what he said and did, ver. 39. And (5.) whereas it might be objected, that he was dead, and so could not be able to confer these blessings on them who believed in him, it is added, ver. 40. that him God raised up the third day according to his own prediction, and that of this resurrection they were all eye-witnesses, sufficiently instructed to give in their testimony concerning it by his frequent appearances to, and familiar converse with, them, ver. 41. (6.) That after his resurrection they had received a commission from God to testify that he was appointed to be Judge of the quick and dead, and so to give that peace and salvation he had promised in his gospel to his faithful servants, ver. 42. And, lastly, that to all this all the prophets had given in their suffrages, by declaring, that through his name all that believed in him should receive remission of sins, ver. 43. Note also, that it is not to be wondered that St. Peter should say to Cornelius and his kinsmen, who were already proselytes of the gate, and lived at Cæsarea, the seat of the governor of Judea, where the Jews dwelt, and whither they continually resorted, and where Philip had already preached the gospel, (Acts viii. 40.) Ye know this word, he meaning not that they were persuaded of the truth of it, but only that they had heard the fame, and were acquainted with the report.

[14] Ver. 41. Who did eat and drink with him.] That in their presence he did eat part of a fish and of a honeycomb, they had then with them, we read expressly, Luke xxiv. 41—43. that they did eat of the bread and fish he had provided for them, may be collected from his invitation to them to come and dine, John xxi. 12. which doubtless they refused not; and since we may reasonably suppose they did not dine without drinking, we must have reason to believe they did eat and drink with him.

[15] Ver. 47. Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized?] These words contain a plain and a convincing demonstration of the falsehood of the quakers' doctrine, that water-baptism is unnecessary to them who have received the inward baptism of the Spirit; since the apostle here not only declares that water-baptism ought therefore to be administered to these persons, because they had already been baptized with the Holy Ghost; but also commands them to be baptized upon that account.

[16] Ver. 48. And he commanded them to be baptized.] Whom did he command to do this? the gentiles? It seemeth at first sight absurd, that they who were not yet baptized should baptize others: or was it the Jews that came then with him? they seem only to be lay-brethren, who only were permitted to baptize in case of necessity; it seemeth therefore reasonable to say, that he commanded water to be brought for their baptism, and then performed himself the office, or left it to be done by gifted persons.

[17] In the name of the Lord Jesus.] Here the note of Grotius is this, that in the name of Christ the anointed, is understood he that anointed him, and the Spirit by whom he was anointed; but here the Spirit had fallen upon them already, and so they who thus felt his influence enabling them to speak with tongues, must believe in him already, and being proselytes of the gate, they believed already in God the Father, and came to hear what he should say to them; it was therefore only necessary, that by receiving Christian baptism, they should profess their faith in the Lord Jesus.

CHAP. XI.

1. [1] AND (δὲ, then) the apostles and brethren that were in Judea heard that the gentiles had also received the word of God.

2. And when Peter was come up to Jerusalem, [2] they who were of the circumcision (being still zealous for the law of Moses and the traditions of the elders) contended with him,

3. Saying, Thou (violating the tradition of our fathers) wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them.

4. But Peter rehearsed the matter from the beginning, and expounded it by order to them (Gr. ἀρξάμενος ἐξετίθετο αὐτοῖς καθεξῆς, beginning, expounded to them the matter orderly), saying,

5. I was in the city of Joppa praying: and in a trance I saw a vision, (viz.) A certain vessel descended (Gr. descending), as it had been a great sheet, let down from heaven by four corners; and it came even to me:

6. Upon the which when I had fastened mine eyes, I considered (Gr. εἰς ἣν ἀτενίσας κατενόουν, attending to which, I observed), and saw fourfooted beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

7. And I heard a voice saying to me, Arise, Peter; slay and eat (freely of them to satisfy thy hunger, x. 10.)

8. But I said, (I can) not (do) so, Lord; for (being a strict observer of the law of Moses) nothing common or unclean hath at any time entered into my mouth.

9. But the voice (of the Lord) answered me again (Gr. the second time) from heaven, (saying,) What (that) God (who instituted the law of Moses, by this declaration of his will) hath cleansed, that call not thou (any longer) common.

10. And this was done three times (for the certainty of the thing): and (then) all (the things I had seen) were drawn up again into heaven.

11. And, behold, immediately (after this vision) there were three men already come to the house where I was, (they being) sent from Cæsarea to me.

12. And the Spirit bade me go with them, nothing doubting (to converse with them though they were gentiles, or putting no difference betwixt them and Jews, as betwixt persons clean and unclean). Moreover these six brethren (here present, as witnesses of the truth of what I say,) accompanied me, and we entered into the man's house (who sent for me):

13. And he shewed us how he had seen an angel in his house, who stood (by him), and said to him, Send men to Joppa, and (by them) call for Simon, whose surname is Peter;

14. [3] Who shall tell thee words, by which thou and all thy house (believing them) shall be saved.

15. And as I began to speak (and had not long continued my discourse), [4] the Holy Ghost fell on them, as (he had done) on us at the beginning, (Acts ii. enabling them to speak with tongues, and to prophesy, x. 44—46.)

16. Then remembered I the word of the Lord (Jesus), how that he said (to us, Acts i. 5.) John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost.

17. Forasmuch then as God gave them (though gentiles and uncircumcised) the like gift as (he had given) to us (circumcised Jews), who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ; what was I that I could withstand God? (Gr. how was I able to hinder God; viz. by refusing to receive them into the church by baptism, x. 47. whom he had already baptized with the Holy Ghost?

18. And) when they heard these things they held their peace (being satisfied with this account of St. Peter's actions), and (they) glorified God (for his goodness to the gentiles), saying, Then (Gr. ἄρα γε, surely) hath [5] God also to the gentiles granted repentance unto life.

19. Now they which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen travelled as far as Phœnice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, [6] preaching the word to none but to the Jews only.

20. And some of them were (by birth) men of Cyprus and Cyrene, who, when they were come to Antioch, [7] spake to the Grecians, (Gr. πρὸς τοὺς ἑλληνιστὰς, to the Jews using the Greek language, see note on vi. 1.) preaching the Lord Jesus.

21. And (they being men enabled and authorized for this work by the Holy Ghost's descent upon them for this end, Acts ii. 9, 10.) the hand (or power) of the Lord was with them, and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord.

22. Then tidings of these things came to the ears of the church which was at Jerusalem: and they sent forth Barnabas (a Cyprian), that he should go (διελθεῖν, to go through those places) as far as (even to) Antioch.

23. Who when he came, and had seen (Gr. coming, and seeing) the grace of God (i. e. the prevalency of the gospel among them), was glad, and exhorted them all, that with (full) purpose of heart they would cleave to the Lord.

24. For he was a good man, and full of the (gifts of the) Holy Ghost and of faith: and (by this means) much people was added to the Lord (i. e. believed in the Lord Jesus).

25. Then departed Barnabas (from Antioch) to Tarsus, to seek Saul, (perhaps that he being an apostle might lay his hands on some of them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost, Acts viii. 17.)

26. And when he had found him, he brought him to Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves with (or in) the church, and taught much people. And the (-y who formerly were called) disciples [8] were called Christians first in Antioch.

27. And in those days came prophets (i. e. men who had the gift of foretelling things to come) from Jerusalem to Antioch.

28. And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by (the afflatus of) the Spirit, that there should be a great dearth [9] throughout all the world (i. e. the Roman empire): which came to pass in the days of Claudius Cæsar.

29. Then the disciples (of Antioch and the places adjacent), every man according to his ability, determined to send relief to the brethren which dwelt in Judea:

30. Which also they did, and [10] sent it to the elders (of the Jews) by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XI.

[1] Ver. 1. WHEN the apostles and brethren had heard that the gentiles had received the word of God.] This they then only heard, because it was then only done, they who before preached the word doing it only to the Jews, ver. 19.

[2] Ver. 2. Διεκρίνοντο πρὸς αὐτὸν οἱ ἐκ περιτομῆς, They of the circumcision contended with him.] I see no reason here to except any of the believing Jews (unless perhaps the apostles) from this contention, they being all zealous of the law and of their customs, and not enduring to hear that any Jew should act contrary to them; (Acts xxi. 20, 21.) and St. Peter himself being of that mind till he had received this vision, and laying it down as a known rule, (Acts x. 28.) that it was unlawful for a Jew to converse with an alien, and even after this vision, withdrawing himself from the believing gentiles for fear of the Jews, which came from Jerusalem, (Gal. ii. 12.) and they of the dispersion preaching to the Jews only. Note also hence, that the believers knew nothing of the supremacy, and much less of the infallibility of St. Peter; for otherwise they would not have dared thus to rise up against their supreme governor, much less would they have condemned the actions of their infallible teacher.

[3] Ver. 14. Who shall speak to thee words, by which thou and all thy house shall be saved.] God, saith Grotius, after he had sent Christ, would admit of no other way of obtaining the salvation promised in the gospel, but by the knowledge of him, which is certainly true of all who were capable of coming to the knowledge of him: how far he might accept of others, see my conjecture, note on Rom. ii. 14.

[4] Ver. 15. The Holy Ghost fell upon them, ὥσπερ καὶ ἐφ' ἡμᾶς ἐν τῇ ἀρχῇ, as upon us at the beginning.] They therefore having received the like gifts, which were the fruits of faith, must be looked on as brethren and disciples of the Lord, and so must be admitted into his church by that baptism, which Christ instituted to be administered to all his disciples; being united by his Spirit to Christ their head, they must be owned as his members; God having owned them, by imparting to them these spiritual gifts, they must be owned by us, and he having purified their hearts by faith, (xv. 9.) they must no longer be looked on by us as unclean.

[5] Ver. 18. Then hath God granted to the gentiles repentance unto life.] The Jews had the highest thoughts of themselves, as if all God's blessings were designed for them only, and the meanest and even vilest thoughts of all other nations, as if God counted them only as spittle. Thou madest the world for our sakes (saith the book of Esdras); as for the other people, thou hast said, They are nothing, but like to spittle, and they have ever been reputed as nothing, 2 Esd. vi. 55—57. They imagined, that the Messiah was to make them a glorious people, and to save them, but to destroy or to enslave all other nations to them; and that God would save all of them as being children of Abraham, but that all the rest of the world were fuel for hell-fire; and this made them so to contemn them, and never think of their being saved any other way than by being proselytes to their law. Hence, in the former chapter, they so much admire that the Holy Ghost should fall on them, ver. 45. and here speak of it as a thing beyond their imagination, that God should grant repentance unto life to them: hence do the unbelieving Jews forbid the apostles to speak to the gentiles that they might be saved, 2 Thess. ii. 16. and cry out against St. Paul as one not fit to live, because he said, Christ would send him to the gentiles, Acts xxii. 21, 22.

Τοῖς ἔθνεσιν ὁ Θεὸς μετάνοιαν ἔδωκεν, Then hath God given to the gentiles repentance.] From these words and from Eph. ii. 8. Faith is the gift of God, and from God's promise to the Jews, I will give them a heart to know me, Jer. xxiv. 7. I will give them a new heart, Ezek. xi. 19. xxxvi. 26. some argue thus; What God gives, we only receive from him, and so are only passive in it; but God gives faith, repentance, and a new heart; therefore we neither do, nor can do any thing towards the obtaining of them.

In answer therefore to these and all other passages of a like nature dispersed through the Scriptures, I shall shew, first, that they must be consistent with God's commands and exhortations directed to us to perform our duty, with his promises and motives to excite us to the performance of it, and with his threats denounced against those who do neglect it; and so must be so far from excluding, that they do rather presuppose our industry; as will be evident,

First, Because he promises those very blessings he is said to give to their industry and diligence who receive them, v. g. The Lord giveth wisdom, (Eccles. ii. 16.) but then he gives it only on this condition, that we ask it in faith, (James i. 4.) that we apply our hearts to seek it: (Eccles. vii. 25.) so that to argue as these men do in this case, is plainly to contradict the mind of the Holy Ghost, who, for this very reason, that God is the giver of it, requires us to incline our ears to wisdom, and to apply our hearts to understanding; to cry after knowledge, and lift up our voice for understanding; to seek for her as for silver, and to search for her as for hid treasure; suspending our enjoyment of her upon all this diligence, by saying, Then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God: for the Lord giveth wisdom. (Prov. ii. 2—6.) Again, Faith cometh by hearing of the word of God; (Rom. x. 17.) this is the ordinary instrument which works repentance and conversion in us; but that it may have this good effect, we must hear it with good attention, and improve the knowledge received from it, for to him that thus hath shall more be given; (Mark iv. 24, 25.) we must receive it into a good and honest heart, and treasure it up there: (Luke viii. 15.) for to them only it is given to know the mysteries of Christ's kingdom, who thus improve the knowledge and talents which they have received. (Matt. xiii. 11, 12. xxv. 20.)

Secondly, When there is a want of these or such-like dispositions, or some evil dispositions which prejudice us against, or indispose us for, the performance of those duties, then it is said that these things are not given: so Matt. xiii. 12. To them it is not given: for this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their hearts, and be converted, and I should heal them: so Deut. xxix. 3, 4. Ye have seen the temptations, signs, and miracles, which God wrought for you; yet the Lord hath not given you a heart to perceive, and eyes to see, and ears to hear, unto this day; which must not be imputed to any want of power in these things to move them, much less to a want of the Divine grace to work upon their hearts by them, for then they could not be blamed for not having such a heart; but it was wholly to be ascribed to their own negligence and perverseness, which rendered them indisposed to receive this gift: as will be farther evident, first, from God's vehement desire that such good things might have been given them, which through their own defect in the performance of their duty were not given them; as, v. g. a heart to fear God: so Deut. v. 29. O that there were such a heart in them, that they would fear me, and keep all my commandments always! which is an expression of a most earnest desire that it might be so, and therefore an assurance that there was nothing wanting on God's part that was requisite to the obtaining such a heart. Secondly, From his frequent commands requiring men to believe, repent, and turn to him, and to give their hearts to seek him: so 1 Chron. xxii. 19. And now δότε, give your hearts and your souls to seek the Lord: for seeing God neither commands what is impossible for us to do, nor what he himself will do without us, these commands must relate to something which is in our power, because it is our duty to perform it: and, thirdly, from the commendations which the Scriptures give to them who believed, repented, and turned to the Lord; and the reprehensions they give, the punishments they threaten to them who neglect to do so: for seeing no man can receive a reward for what he had no hand in doing, or blame and punishment for not performing what he could not be capable of doing, these praises and reprehensions shew that these things might and ought to have been done by us.

Having premised this, I proceed,

Secondly, To shew what are the various imports of this phrase in Scripture, or how and why God may be said to give, what, by our industry or our co-operation with his grace, and blessing upon our endeavours, we enjoy.

First, then, when the thing said to be given is morally evil; that God, who can neither himself do, nor incline others to do, evil, can be said to give it, only, because he gives those faculties by which men are enabled to do it, and suffers them, without restraint, to follow the inclinations of their own wicked hearts: so ἔδωκε Κύριος, God gave a lying spirit in the mouth of Ahab's prophets, 1 Kings xxii. 23. so ἐδόθη τῷ θηρίῳ, it was given to the beast to speak great things and blasphemies, Rev. xiii. 15. and, ver. 7. ἐδόθη, it was given to him to make war with the saints, and overcome them; and that in this sense God is said to give the heathens up to a reprobate mind, to the lustings of their hearts, and to dishonourable affections, see the note on Rom. i. 28. that thus only he gave to the Jews a spirit of slumber, see the note on Rom. xi. 8. Secondly, Sometimes to give doth only signify to pronounce, teach, and prescribe; as when God saith, Thou shalt put the blessing on Mount Gerizim, Deut. xi. 29. i. e. thou shalt pronounce it thence: thus is God said to give to the Jews his sabbaths, viz. by commanding the observation of them, Exod. xvi. 29. and to give them those laws and commandments he prescribed and taught them by his servant Moses; and in this sense he is said to give wisdom, because out of his mouth proceedeth understanding, Prov. ii. 6. and so he saith, give to the wise, i. e. instruction, and he will still be wiser, Prov. ix. 9. And in this sense also may he be said to give both faith and repentance; because he hath so frequently prescribed them, and taught us the advantages we shall reap by them, the means to produce them, the inducements to perform them, and the evils we shall suffer from the want of them.

Thirdly, I lay this down as a most certain rule, That where God is said to give us any thing which it is our duty to obtain, the exercise of that faculty is still supposed which he hath given us already; and God is only said to give it by giving thus those faculties by which we are enabled to obtain it, and the means and motives which are sufficient to excite those faculties to the performance of their proper actions; I say, the exercise of these faculties is always presupposed; and when God is said to give what we are to get, and what it is our duty and will be our advantage to perform, the meaning only is, he puts it into our power, by the exercise of those faculties which he hath given us, by attendance to the motives which he affords to excite us thus to exercise them, and by the assistance he is ready still to give us upon our willingness to do what he requires to obtain those things. And,

First, Thus it is always with respect to natural gifts; for thus God giveth riches, (Eccles. v. 19. vi. 2.) because he giveth power to get wealth, (Deut. viii. 18.) but yet it is the diligent hand, and the blessing of God upon our labours, that maketh rich; (Prov. x. 4. 22.) he giveth us our daily bread, yea, he giveth food to all flesh, (Psal. cxxxvi. 25.) and yet we must eat it in the sweat of our brows, and procure it with the labour of our hands; (Gen. iii. 19.) he giveth all things to all men, (Acts xvii. 25.) and to the beasts their food, (Psal. cxlvii. 19.) but then they must employ those faculties which God hath given them to get it: wherefore to argue thus—God giveth faith and repentance, and therefore we do nothing to obtain them, is as if I should say, God giveth us our daily bread, therefore we must not labour for it; God giveth food to all flesh, therefore they are not to seek after it.

Secondly, Thus it is also with respect to spirituals; thus God giveth wisdom, but it is to them who incline their ears to the instructions he hath given them to make them wise, and who apply their hearts to understanding: thus the Jews argue that God had given repentance to the gentiles; because he had commissionated St. Peter to preach to them peace through Jesus Christ, and remission of sins, and they upon his preaching had believed in Christ, and received the Holy Ghost: so also, though faith be an assent to a Divine revelation, and faith in Christ an assent to the revelation made in Scripture concerning him, and so must be an act of the understanding, requiring only the evidence of the truth of that revelation to produce it; yet is it said to be the gift of God, because the objects of that faith are only made known to us by Divine revelation; the motives to embrace it are all contained in the same revelation, and both are confirmed and made credible to us by the testimony which God hath given to them, and so God hath done all that is requisite on his part to produce this faith in us.

[6] Ver. 19. Preaching the word to none but the Jews only.] As thinking it unlawful to converse with men of other nations, and not believing that God would give repentance to the gentiles. Woltzogenius here notes, that these men preached without any mission; and hence concludes, that an ordinary mission is not required to authorize men to preach the gospel. But this is said without just ground; for these men seem to be of the number of those on whom the Holy Ghost fell on the day of Pentecost, among whom were those of Cyrene. Moreover, the power of the Lord was with them, to confirm their doctrine by miracles, ver. 21. He then that will plead a commission from God to preach the gospel without an ordinary mission, must shew the like extraordinary gifts or miraculous assistances; God never sending any person to do his work without some testimony from himself, or from persons commissionated by him.

[7] Ver. 20. And they spake πρὸς τοὺς Ἑλληνιστὰς, to the Hellenists.] Grotius here saith, certò legendum, πρὸς τοὺς Ἕλληνας, we must certainly read, to the Greeks, because the Syriac, Arabic, and Latin, so read; whereas, that is no ground at all; for so they all read, vi. 1. where Grotius himself acknowledges, the Jews are to be understood by the Hellenists: he adds, that the Alexandrian MS. so reads, but so it doth in opposition to all other MSS. Chrysostom here saith, that they spake Greek, Ἑβραῖοι ὄντες, being Hebrews. Œcumenius saith, he styles them Hellenists, not as being addicted to the worship of the Greeks, but as Ἑλληνιστὶ φθεγγόμενοι, speaking the Greek language; and it seems necessary to understand the Jews using the Greek tongue, and reading the Scriptures in that tongue in their synagogues, as Buxtorf says they did: (1.) because these persons preached to the Jews only, (ver. 19.) And, (2.) because they of the church of Jerusalem send to them Barnabas, whom they would scarce send to the uncircumcised.

[8] Ver. 26. And the disciples were called Christians first at Antioch.] Before they were called disciples, as here; believers, Acts v. 14. men of the church, Acts xii. 1. men of the way, see note on Acts ix. 2. the saints, Acts ix. 13. those that called on the name of Christ, ver. 14. and by their enemies, Nazarenes and Galileans; but now, by the conversion of Cornelius, and his kinsmen, and his family, the believing Jews and gentiles being made one church, that the name of Jew and heathen might no more continue the distance that was betwixt them, this new name was given to them both; as some conceive, according to the prophecy mentioned Isa. lxv. 15. a name embraced by all Christians as most expressive of their relation to their master Christ, and which they gloried in, and owned before the face of their enemies. (Tertull. Apol. cap. 3. 5. Euseb. Hist. Eccles. lib. v. cap. 1.) But that Evodius should be then bishop of Antioch, and give this name first to the Christians, and St. Luke should say nothing either of his doing this, or ever mention his being there, it is not easy to believe.

[9] Ver. 28. Ἐφ' ὅλην τὴν οἰκουμένην, Through the whole world.] That οἰκουμένη signifies the Roman empire, see the note on Luke ii. 1. Accordingly, Eusebius* saith of this famine, that it oppressed almost the whole empire; and that it was recorded by historians, most averse to our religion; viz. by Suetonius† in the life of Claudius, who saith, it happened, " ob assiduas sterilitates," through a long barrenness. Josephus‡ saith, that it raged so much in Judea, πολλῶν ὑπὸ ἐνδείας ἀναλωμάτων φθειρομένων, so that many perished for want of victuals: and Dion Cassius,§ that it was λιμὸς ἰσχυρὸς, a very great famine; and happened when Claudius and Caius Largus were consuls, that is, in the second year of Claudius, though it seems rather to have been that which happened, as Eusebius in his Chronicon, and Orosius, lib. vii. 6. place it, in the fourth year of Claudius.

[10] Ver. 30. And sent it πρὸς τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους, to the elders.] It is doubtless the duty of all Christians to be ready to relieve their Christian brethren in other nations according to their abilities, as St. Paul shews, 2 Cor. viii. 9. and those especially from whom they have received spiritual things. (Rom. xv. 27.) But here it is farther to be noted, that it was the constant custom of the Jews in their dispersions, to send money into the land of Canaan for the sustaining of the poor there, as Campegius Vitringa‖ proves. St. Paul was therefore careful, that the unbelieving Jews should not outdo the Christians in those offices of charity towards their brethren in Judea; and therefore, as he carries here the charity of the Christians of Antioch, and the parts adjacent, to the distressed brethren in Judea, so doth he shew himself always ready to advance this work, (Gal. ii. 10.) to plead for and to promote it, as he did in the churches of Macedonia and Achaia.

But whereas some contend, the elders mentioned here were the bishops of Judea; it is not certain that they were Christians, or any other than the elders of the Jewish synagogues, or the πρῶτοι τῶν Ἱεροσολυμιτῶν, chief men of Jerusalem; to whom, saith Josephus,* king Izates sent his charity at the same time: and if they were Christians, they might still be the elders of their synagogues, the Christians then retaining the Jewish rites.

CHAP. XII.

1. NOW about that time (that Agabus foretold of the famine, xi. 28.) Herod (Agrippa) the king [1] stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the church (Gr. caught hold of certain of the church to afflict them).

2. And [2] he killed James the brother of John (who by this title was distinguished from James the son of Alpheus, bishop of Jerusalem,) with the sword.

3. And because he saw it pleased the Jews (to see the Christians thus afflicted and cut off), he proceeded farther to take (into custody) Peter also. (And when this was done,) then were the days of unleavened bread (the paschal festival).

4. And when (therefore) he had apprehended him, he put him in prison, and delivered him to four quaternions of soldiers (i. e. sixteen soldiers) to keep him (four at a time); intending [3] after Easter (or when that festival was over, in which it was customary to release a prisoner to them, Matt. xxvii. 15.) to bring him forth to the people (to be slain before them).

5. Peter therefore was kept in prison (for this end): but [4] prayer was made without ceasing of the church to God for (deliverance of) him.

6. And when Herod would have brought (was about to bring) him forth, the same night (that he had determined to do this on the morrow, ver. 9.) Peter was sleeping betwixt two soldiers, (being) bound (to them) with two chains: (Acts xxviii. 20.) and the keepers, (being two other soldiers that stood) before the door, kept the prison.

7. And, behold, the (an) angel of the Lord came to him (to deliver him), and a light shined in the prison (to enable him to see what he was to do): and he (the angel) smote Peter on the side, and raised him up, saying (to him), Arise up quickly. And (when he had so said) [5] his chains fell off from his hands.

8. And the angel said to him, Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals. And so he did. And (then) he said to him, Cast thy garment about thee, and follow me.

9. And he went out, and followed him; and wist not that it was true which was done by the angel; but thought he saw (had seen) a vision (only).

10. (And) when they were past the first and second wards, they came to the iron gate that leadeth (from the prison) to the city; which (gate) opened unto them of his (its) own accord: and they went out, and passed out

* Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 2. p. 686.

(together) through one street; and [6] forthwith the angel (having done all that was requisite for his deliverance) departed from him.

11. And when Peter was come to himself (and saw where he was), he said, Now I know of a surety, that the Lord hath sent his angel, and hath delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews.

12. And when he had [7] considered (the thing done), he came to the house of Mary the mother of (that) John, whose surname was Mark; where many were gathered together praying.

13. And as Peter knocked at the door of the gate, a damsel came to hearken (what he who knocked would say, and she was) named Rhoda.

14. And when she knew Peter's voice, she opened not the gate for gladness, but (first) ran in, and told (them within) how Peter stood before the gate.

15. And they said unto her, Thou art mad (to entertain such a thought). But she constantly affirmed that it was even so. Then said they, [8] It is his (good) angel, (or a messenger sent from him).

16. But Peter continued knocking: and when they had opened the door, and saw him, they were astonished.

17. But he, beckoning to them with the hand to hold their peace, declared to them how the Lord had (by an angel) brought him out of the prison. And he said, [9] Go, shew these things to James, and the brethren. And (then) he departed (from them), and went into another place (of more safety).

18. Now as soon as it was day, there was no small stir among the soldiers, (inquiring) what was become of Peter.

19. And when Herod sought for him, and found him not, he examined the keepers (he questioned them in a judicial manner), and (when they could tell nothing of him, he) [10] commanded that they should be put to death. And (then) he (i. e. king Agrippa) [11] went down from Judea to Cæsarea (to celebrate the solemnity kept for the honour of Cæsar), and there abode (during the time of that solemnity).

20. And Herod was highly displeased with them of Tyre and Sidon (and designed to make war upon them): but they came with one accord to him, and having made Blastus the king's chamberlain their friend, desired (by him, that they might have) peace; because their country was nourished by the king's country.

21. And upon a set day (the second day of the solemnity, appointed in honour of Cæsar), Herod, arrayed in royal apparel (upon which the sun shining, gave it a glorious lustre), sat on his throne, and made an oration (in the theatre) to them (i. e. to those nobles and governors which were come out of the whole province to that solemnity).

22. And the people gave a shout, saying, The voice (of him that speaketh, is the voice) of a god, and not of a (mere) man.

23. And [12] immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, because he (received this flattery without reprehension, as due to him, and) gave not God the glory: and he was eaten (and miserably tormented) with worms (in his bowels), and so gave up the ghost.

24. But (and) the word of God (notwithstanding this opposition) grew and multiplied.

25. And Barnabas and Saul returned from Jerusalem, when they had fulfilled their ministry, (i. e. distributed the charity sent by the disciples from Antioch, and other places, to be given by them to the elders of Jerusalem, xi. 29, 30.) and took with them John, whose surname was Mark.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XII.

[1] Ver. 1. ΕΠΕΒΑΛΕΝ Ἡρώδης τὰς χεῖρας, Herod laid hands upon.] Ἐπιβάλλειν χεῖρας being never used intransitively, but always with the dative case, or an accusative with the preposition ἐπὶ, cannot here be rendered, he attempted or resolved, but the whole sentence filled up seems to be this, ἔβαλε χεῖρας ἐπὶ τίνας τῶν ἀπὸ τῆς ἐκκλησίας κακῶσαι αὐτοὺς, he laid hold of some of the church to afflict them: the preposition being often included in the verb, and being to be taken or repeated from it to complete the sense.

[2] Ver. 2. Ἀνεῖλε δὲ Ἰάκωβον, He killed James with the sword.] Thus was the prediction of our Lord fulfilled, that James should drink of his cup. (Matt. xx. 23.) But then he being cut off, A. D. 43. the story of his being long in Spain must be an idle fable of the monks, like to that of their placing vincula sancti Petri upon the first of August, when we learn from ver. 3. that he was put into those chains at the paschal feast, and delivered from them at the close of it, (ver. 7.) that is, above four months before.

[3] Ver. 4. Μετὰ τὸ πάσχα, After the Passover.] He being reserved till then, either in honour of the feast, or that the Christians, who, though they were hated by the rulers of the Jews, were yet in favour with the people, (ii. 47.) might not prevail with others to beg his life, according to the custom of that feast, (Matt. xxvii. 15.) or to avoid a tumult.

[4] Ver. 5. Προσευχὴ ἦν ἐκτενὴς, &c. Prayer was made for him by the church without ceasing.] That such prayers are prevalent for the preservation of very eminent members of the church, we learn, not only from this instance, but also from those words of St. Paul, I know this shall happen to my preservation through your prayers, (Phil. i. 19.) and, I hope, I shall through your prayers be given to you. (Philem. 22.) The word ἐκτενὴς primarily signifies extended; but because the fervency of our desire is usually the cause that we pray much, or long, for any thing; therefore to pray ἐκτενῶς, is also to pray fervently and importunately, Luke xxii. 14. and ἀγάπη ἐκτενὴς is fervent love, 1 Pet. i. 22. iv. 8.

[5] Ver. 7. Ἐξέπεσον αὐτοῦ αἱ ἁλύσεις, His chains fell off from his hands.] That some soldiers of Herod, converted to the Christian faith, should mark and take away these chains, and give them to the bishop of Jerusalem, and that they should be kept as a treasure not only through all the Jewish wars, but about four hundred years after, till Juvenal, bishop of Jerusalem, gave them to Eudoxia, wife to Theodosius the junior, who gave one of them to the church of St. Peter's in Constantinople, and sent the other to Rome, is a tale of Surius, that smells too rank of superstition to deserve the least credit.

[6] Ver. 10. Ἀπέστη ὁ ἄγγελος ἀπ' αὐτοῦ, And forthwith the angel left him.] When he had done all things requisite on his part for his deliverance, and which could not be done by Peter, he leaves what was farther requisite to complete the deliverance, and render him secure from danger, to his own industry and prudence; hereby instructing us, not to expect an immediate assistance from God in things he hath already put into our power, and given us abilities to perform.

[7] Ver. 12. Συνιδὼν τε ἦλθεν ἐπὶ τὴν οἰκίαν Μαρίας, And considering of the thing, he came to the house of Mary, where many were gathered together, praying.] Here note,

First, That it seems very unreasonable, without any authority, to change συνιδὼν, considering, into σπεύδων, hastening, either here, or xiv. 6. against all the versions in both places.

Secondly, note, from these words, the house of Mary, that all the Christians had not then sold their houses, and their goods. And,

Thirdly, That they had then in those times of peril their sacred assemblies in the night, Peter here coming to them before day, (ver. 18.) and yet finding them praying; whence Pliny* makes mention of their "cœtus antelucani," assemblies in the night, and Cecilius† objects to the Christians, "nocturnas congregationes," their night meetings, as knowing they were forbidden by the Roman laws; as you may see in Cicero, lib. ii. de Legibus, N. 25. 35—37.

[8] Ver. 15. Οἱ δὲ ἔλεγον, ἄγγελος αὐτοῦ ἐστιν, But they said, It is his angel.] Here it is acknowledged, that the word ἄγγελος signifies not only a celestial spirit, but also a messenger sent from one to another; as may be proved from many other places besides those cited by the reverend Dr. Hammond; thus the messengers sent by the elders of Jabesh to the Ammonites, 1 Sam. xi. 3. and by Saul through the coasts of Israel, ver. 7. 9. are styled ἄγγελοι, angels: so Saul sent ἀγγέλους, messengers, to take David, 1 Sam. xix. 20, 21. so David sent messengers, ἀγγέλους, to salute Nabal, xxv. 14. Amaziah sent ἀγγέλους, messengers, to inquire of Baalzebub, 2 Kings i. 2. so David saith, Psal. cli. Gr. ver. 4. he sent τὸν ἄγγελον αὐτου, his angel, viz. Samuel, and anointed me; and James ii. 25. Rahab received τοὺς ἀγγέλους, the messengers; but when it is hence conjectured, that the import of these words may be only this, that some messenger was come from him, to impart something to the church; as I have met with none of the ancients of this opinion, so is there this plain objection against it, viz. that the damsel could only know St. Peter by his voice, or face, both which they might believe his angel could imitate, whereas they knew a messenger, could he have had opportunity of sending one from the prison, could do neither. Since then it was a vulgar opinion among the Jews, that good men had their tutelar angels, or at least that angels were sent down from heaven about their affairs, they, by this angel, might understand either erroneously a guardian angel, attending on him, or, agreeably to Scripture, an angel sent from heaven to acquaint them with something relating to him, in answer to their prayers. Here then is no foundation for a guardian angel still attending on good men, and had Peter himself thought so, it is likely he would have ascribed this deliverance, not to an angel sent from heaven, but to his guardian angel.

[9] Ver. 17. Go, shew these things to James, and to the brethren,] That they might bless God for this extraordinary answer to their prayers, and might be confirmed by it in their faith, and in their expectation of Divine assistance and protection in their endeavours to promote the interests of the gospel.

[10] Ver. 19. He commanded them ἀπαχθῆναι, to be put to death.] So in Hesychius ἀπάγεσθαι is εἰς θάνατον ἕλκεσθαι, to be carried away to die, or to be sent away to punishment, as this phrase usually signifies in the best Greek authors, and in Seneca.*

[11] Καὶ κατελθὼν ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰουδαίας εἰς τὴν Καισάρειαν, διέτριβεν, And going down from Judea he abode at Cæsarea.] That it was not Peter, as some imagine, but king Agrippa, who went down from Judea to Cæsarea, we learn from Josephus, who gives us a full account both of this journey and the occasion of it, informing us that he went down εἰς πόλιν Καισάρειαν, to the city of Cæsarea, to perform the solemnity, or the games celebrated there every Olympiad to the honour of Cæsar, and that the nobles and governors of the province of Syria repaired to that city, on the same account, that on the second day of the festival he came early into the theatre, clothed with a wonderful garment, wholly made of silver, on which the sun shining, it cast forth a glorious splendour. (Ant. lib. xix. cap. 7. p. 678, 679.) He farther adds, that flatterers came about him, Θεὸν προσαγορεύοντες, calling him a god, and that the king οὐκ ἐπέπληξε, οὐδὲ τὴν κολακείαν ἀσεβοῦσαν ἀπεστρέψατο, did not repel or reprehend their impious blasphemy.

[12] Ver. 23. Παραχρῆμα δὲ ἐπάταξεν αὐτὸν ἄγγελος Κυρίου, And immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, &c.] That he was smitten by the Lord immediately on his receiving this impious flattery, is evident from Josephus; for he saith, μετ' ὀλίγον, that after a while he sees the owl which was the messenger of his calamity, that ἄδρουν ἄλγημα, a sudden torment came upon him, and that thereupon he instantly tells the same auditors he must die. Again, Josephus doth not say that he was σκωληκόβρωτος, eaten up of worms, but he saith he had ἀλγήματα τῆς κοιλίας, vehement torments in his bowels, which increasing upon him, in five days he died, and they in that time might breed worms in him, as he confesses they did in his grandfather. And examples of the like exists of the persecutors of the Christian faith, we have many in church-history: thus Tertullian† saith, of one Claudius Heminianus, one of their persecutors, that "cum vivus vermibus ebullisset," when worms broke forth of him whilst he was alive, he said, Let no man know it, lest the Christians rejoice. And Eusebius‡ saith of Maximinian, that sudden ulcers rose in his fundament and secret parts, from which sprung ἀλεκτόν τι πλῆθος σκωλήκων, an incredible multitude of worms. And of the uncle of Julian the apostate, who persecuted the Christians, and trampled upon the sacred vessels, Theodoret§ and St. Chrysostom‖ inform us, that he perished by this disease, διαφθερὲις γὰρ αὐτοῦ αἰδοῖον σκώληκας ἔτεκεν, for his scrotum corrupted and bred worms. An instance like to this we have in Pherecydes Syrus, ὑπὸ τῶν φθειρῶν ἀναλωθέντος, eaten up of lice, for boasting of his great wisdom, and his pleasant life, though he sacrificed, saith Ælian, to no god at all. (Ælian. Var. Hist. lib. iv. cap. 28. Diog. Laer.

So also was it under the Jewish state: for of Antiochus Epiphanes we read, ἐκ τοῦ σώματος τοῦ δυσσεβοῦς ἀραζεῖν, that worms sprung out of the body of this wicked man, (2 Macc. ix. 8, 9.) and of Herod the Great, Josephus owns that he had τοῦ αἰδοίου σῆψις σκώληκας ἐμποιοῦσα, a putrefaction producing worms. (Antiq. lib. xvii. cap. 8. p. 597.)

CHAP. XIII.

1. [1] NOW there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers; as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, who had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul.

2. (And) [2] as they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said (to them), Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the (peculiar) work whereunto I have called them.

3. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away (in pursuance of it).

4. So they, being (thus) sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed unto Seleucia; and from [3] thence they sailed to Cyprus.

5. And when they were at Salamis, they preached the word of God in the synagogues of the Jews: and they had also [4] John (surnamed Mark, xii. 25.) to their minister (to minister to them).

6. And when they had gone through the isle to Paphos, they found a certain [5] sorcerer, a false prophet, a Jew, whose name was Bar-Jesus:

7. [6] Who was with the deputy of the country, (named) Sergius Paulus, a prudent man; who called for Barnabas and Saul, and desired to hear the word of God (from their mouths).

8. But Elymas the sorcerer, (for so is his name by interpretation) (from the Arabic word Elim), withstood them, seeking to turn away the deputy from the faith.

9. Then [7] Saul, (who is also called Paul,) (being) filled with the (afflatus of the) Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him,

10. And said, O (thou that art) full of all subtilty and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord (but plead for and use thy sorceries in opposition to them)?

11. And now (therefore), behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season. And immediately there fell on him a mist, and a darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand.

12. Then the deputy, when he saw what was done, believed, being astonished at (the power which attended) the doctrine of the Lord.

13. Now when Paul and his company loosed from Paphos, they came to Perga in Pamphylia: and (then) John departing from them returned to Jerusalem.

14. But when they departed from Perga, they came to Antioch in Pisidia, and went into the synagogue on the sabbath-day, and sat down.

15. And after the reading of the law and the prophets, the [8] rulers of the synagogue sent to them, saying, Ye men and brethren, if ye have any word of exhortation to the people, say on (λέγετε, speak it).

16. Then Paul stood up, and beckoning with his hand, said, Men of Israel, and ye (Greeks) that fear God, give audience.

17. The God of this people of Israel chose our fathers (the patriarchs), and exalted the people (descending from them) when they dwelt as strangers in the land of Egypt, and with a high arm brought he them out of it.

18. And [9] about the time of forty years suffered he their manners in the wilderness.

19. And when he had (for their sakes) destroyed seven nations in the land of Canaan, he divided their land to them by lot.

20. And after that he [10] gave to them judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet.

21. And afterward they desired a king: and God gave them Saul the son of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, (who with Samuel reigned) [11] by the space of forty years.

22. And when he had removed him, he raised up to them David to be their king; to whom also he gave testimony, and said, (Psal. lxxxix. 11.) I have found David the son of Jesse, a man after my own heart, who shall fulfil all my will.

23. Of this man's seed hath God according to his promise raised to Israel a Saviour, Jesus:

24. When John had first preached before his coming the baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel.

25. And as John fulfilled his course (i. e. performed his office), he said, Whom think ye that I am? I am not he (i. e. the Christ). But, behold, there cometh one after me, whose shoes of his (i. e. the shoes of whose) feet I am not worthy to loose.

26. Men and brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and [12] whosoever amongst you feareth God, to you is the word of this salvation (which Christ hath brought into the world) sent.

27. For they that dwelt at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew him not, nor yet the (import of the) voices of the prophets, which are read every sabbath-day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him (to that death which procures our remission of sins).

28. And though they found no cause of death in him, yet desired they Pilate that he should (might) be slain.

29. And when they had fulfilled all that was written of him, they took him down from the tree, (John xix. 31.) and laid him in a sepulchre, (and they sealed the sepulchre, and put a guard upon it, Matt. xxvii. 66.)

30. But (notwithstanding this) God raised him from the dead:

31. [13] And he was seen (alive) many days of them which came up with him from Galilee to Jerusalem, who are his witnesses to the people.

32. And we declare to you glad tidings, (viz.) how that the promise which was made to the fathers (that in him should all the families of the earth be blessed),

33. [14] God hath fulfilled the same to us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again (to be a Prince and a Saviour); as it is also [15] written (of him) in the second

Psalm (by God, saying, from the mouth of David), Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.

34. And as concerning that (Gr. and that) [16] he raised him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption (is evident, because) he said on this wise, I will give you (Jews) the sure mercies of David.

35. Wherefore he saith also in another Psalm, Thou shalt not suffer thy Holy One to see corruption: (which words cannot respect David himself;)

36. For David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell asleep, and was laid to his fathers, and (his body) saw corruption:

37. But he, (that Jesus) whom God raised up, saw no corruption (as to his body).

38. Be it known to you therefore, men and brethren, that [17] through this man (-'s death) is preached to you the forgiveness of sins:

39. And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses.

40. Beware therefore, lest (for your infidelity) that come upon you, which is spoken of in the prophets;

41. Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish: for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall (will) in no wise believe, though a man declare it to you.

42. And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the [18] next sabbath (day).

43. Now when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas: who, speaking to them, persuaded them to continue in the grace of God.

44. And the next sabbath-day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God.

45. But when the Jews saw the multitudes, they were filled with envy, and spake against those things which were spoken by Paul, contradicting and blaspheming (them).

46. Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary (by Christ's appointment, Acts i. 8.) that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and (by your actions) [19] judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, [20] lo, we turn (from you) to the gentiles.

47. For so hath the Lord commanded, saying, I have set thee (O Christ) to be a light to the gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation to the ends of the earth.

48. And when the gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord (giving glory to him for it): and [21] as many (of them) as were ordained to (Gr. disposed for) eternal life believed.

49. And the word of the Lord was published throughout all the region.

50. But the Jews stirred up the devout and honourable women, and chief men of the city, and raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts.

51. But they shook off the dust of their feet against them, and came to Iconium.

52. And the disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIII.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἦσαν δέ τινες ἐν Ἀντιοχείᾳ κατὰ τὴν οὖσαν ἐκκλησίαν προφῆται καὶ διδάσκαλοι, There were some prophets and teachers in Antioch, belonging to that church.] So Grotius; and indeed Barnabas and Paul might well be reckoned such: Barnabas being sent thither by the church of Jerusalem, xi. 22. and he and Paul preaching there a whole year, ver. 26. and being sent by that church to Jerusalem, first, with their alms, ver. 30. and about the question determined by the council, Acts xv. and the rest being, very probable, some of the one hundred and eight, who, being scattered abroad by the persecution mentioned Acts viii. 1. came down to Antioch; (xi. 19.) for Niger is by Epiphanius* declared to have been one of the seventy-two, and Lucius was of Cyrene, saith the text; and so one of them that came down to Antioch: (xi. 20.) but to say, that either Paul or Barnabas were bishops of Syria, as Dr. Hammond doth, is that which never was before, nor can with any reason be asserted of the apostle of the gentiles, or of Barnabas appointed to go with him to the gentiles; (ver. 2.) nor could he have had any temptation to have made the other three, there named, bishops, but that he finds them laying on of hands, (ver. 2.) imagining that was for ordination, whereas it was by way of benediction on their enterprise only, or to recommend them to the grace of God; (xiv. 26.) for who ever heard before of an apostle ordained bishop, by laying on of the hands of prophets or teachers? or of one prophet, teacher, or bishop, laying his hands upon another prophet, bishop, or teacher, to ordain him bishop? And indeed, if there were so many bishops as he hath given us in Judea, Acts xv. in Syria and Cilicia here, and so many ordained in all other churches, as he saith, xiv. 23. is it not wonderful that St. Paul, in all his travels, should never meet with, resort to, or be entertained by, any one of them, but only by the brethren at large? Or that he should write to the churches of the Romans, Corinthians, Galatians, Colossians, and Thessalonians, before he went bound to Rome, and never salute any bishops there, or give any instructions to them, or so much as ever mention that he had ordained any elders, that is, saith he, bishops, there? It is also to be observed, that this only was a temporary mission to preach to the gentiles, that being the work to which St. Paul was called, ver. 2. and of which they give an account to the church of Antioch, declaring how God had opened a door of faith to the gentiles, which mission they presently completed, and then returned to Antioch, declaring to the church there what they had done in prosecution of it, (xiv. 26, 27.)

[2] Ver. 2. Λειτουργούντων δὲ αὐτῶν τῷ Κυρίῳ, And as they ministered to the Lord.] Vain here is the inference of the papists from this word, that they sacrificed the mass: for λειτουργεῖν in Phavorinus and Hesychius is δουλεύειν, διακονεῖν, ὑπηρετεῖν, to serve and minister. In the Old Testament it often signifies the ministry of the Levites, who were not to offer sacrifices, as Numb. iv. 23, 24. 26—28. 30. 35. 37. 39. 43. viii. 22. xvi. 9. xviii. 6. 21. 23. By Chrysostom† and Œcumenius it is rendered preaching, and in profane authors it is applied to any other work. Thus in Aristotle's Politics,* men are said λειτουργεῖν περὶ τὰς ἀρχὰς, πρὸς τεκνοποιΐαν, τὰ κατὰ τὸν βίον, to minister about government in getting children, and about the things of this life.

* Hær. xxx. sect. 4. p. 50.

† Λειτουργούντων τουτέστι κηρυττόντων, Chrysost. Œcumen. in locum.

[3] Ver. 4. And thence they sailed to Cyprus.] Where the Jews so abounded, that Dio Cassius† tells us, that in the time of Trajan, they slew two hundred and forty thousand men there; and Jerome,‡ that the Jews overthrew Salamis in Cyprus, killing all the gentiles there.

[4] Ver. 5. Καὶ εἶχον Ἰωάννην ὑπηρέτην, They had John to minister to them.] As the wise men and prophets among the Jews had one to minister unto them, so the apostles had also those who were their companions and fellow-labourers, who ministered to them. So Timothy and Erastus are mentioned among those who ministered to St. Paul, Acts xix. 22.

[5] Ver. 6. A sorcerer, a false prophet, a Jew, whose name was Bar-Jesus.] God having raised up prophets in the Christian church, and given the apostles and other teachers of the word a power to confirm it with mighty signs and miracles; the Jews who opposed Christianity, and laboured to turn men from the faith, pretended to be prophets also, and endeavoured by magic and enchantments to work miracles, to cure diseases, and to cast out devils: of their magic and enchantments, see Dr. Lightfoot, Harm. of the New Testament, p. 95. and of their attempts to cure diseases, and to cast out devils, note on xix. 13.

[6] Ver. 7. Ὃς ἦν σὺν τῷ ἀνθυπάτῳ, Which was with the deputy of the country (Gr. the proconsul), Sergius Paulus.] The difficulty which some find in giving the name of proconsul to the prætor or president of Cyprus, is solved by these words of Valla, that not he only is styled a proconsul who is sent to administer a province with consular power, but also a prætor or president. (Elegant. lib. iv.)

[7] Ver. 9. Saul, who is also called Paul.] Origen, in his preface to the Epistle to the Romans, saith, that whilst he preached to the Jews he was called Saul, according to the name he had among them at his circumcision, "Paulum autem appellatum esse cum Græcis et gentibus leges et præcepta conscribit," and that he was called by his Roman name, Paul, when he preached to the gentiles.

[8] Ver. 15. Οἱ ἀρχισυνάγωγοι, The rulers of the synagogue sent to them.] In what sense the rulers of the synagogue were many, and in what sense but one, see the note on Mark v. 22.

[9] Ver. 18. And about the time of forty years he suffered their manners, Gr. ἐτροποφόρησεν αὐτοὺς, in the wilderness.] Here Dr. Hammond thinks it is without doubt that the true reading is ἐτροποφόρησεν, he bore them as a parent doth his child, because so the word is used, Deut. i. 31. where it is said, the Lord ἐτροποφόρησέ σε, bore thee in this wilderness as a man τροποφορήσαι, would bear his son; and the woman in the Maccabees entreats her youngest son to pity her τροποφορήσασαν, bearing him, 2 Macc. vii. 27. And according to this sense the word signifies τὴν τροφὴν φέρειν, to bring them nourishment, as God did manna every day, or τρόφου δίκην φορεῖν, to bear them, as a nurse or mother doth her child to give him suck, or bring him up; which in Eustathius is τροποφορεῖν, Odyss. β. v. 131. But though this makes a very good sense, and very apposite, it seems not necessary; for, first, Origen* there reads as here ἐτροποφόρησεν, and expounds it ἁρμόζεσθαί σε πρὸς τὸ ἀσθενὲς, to accommodate himself to the infirmities of his children, and so the word is used by Cicero ad Atticum,† when he saith, τὸν τύφον μου τροποφόρησον, bear patiently my pride, or elation of mind. And again, Origen,‡ citing Deut. i. 31. thrice reads ἐτροποφόρησεν, he bore their manners, saying it signifies ἁρμόζεσθαι σὲ πρὸς τὸ ἀσθενὲς, to accommodate himself to the infirmities of his children: Procopius on the words of Moses saith, that τὸ τροποφορεῖν properly signifies τὸν παῖδα δυσχεραίνοντα τρέπειν καὶ μεταφέρειν διὰ συμψελλισμῶν καὶ συγκαταβάσεων, to carry about and appease a froward child, by prattling with, and accommodating ourselves to, him; and in the scholiast on Aristophanes τροποφορεῖν is τοῖς τρόποις ὑπηρετεῖν, to bear with the manners of another; and so the word is used by Cicero, &c. (See Examen Millii in locum.)

[10] Ver. 20. God gave them judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years.] Grotius and Bishop Usher note here, that other copies read thus, κατεκληρονόμησεν αὐτοῖς τὴν γῆν αὐτῶν ὡς ἔτεσι τετρακοσίοις καὶ πεντήκοντα καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα ἔδωκεν κριτὰς, he divided to them their land about four hundred and fifty years, and after that he gave them judges; and they begin the time of this computation from the birth of Isaac, of whom it is said, in Isaac shall thy seed be called, Gen. xxi. 12.: from his birth to the children of Israel's going out of Egypt was four hundred and five years, their stay in the wilderness was forty years, seven years after their land was divided to them; these years put together made four hundred and fifty-two: and so the apostle saith, the space from God's election of them to the dividing the land to them was about four hundred and fifty years. But,

First, This reading is not owned by Chrysostom, or Œcumenius, or by the Syriac, or Arabic, who all read as we do.

Secondly, The words seem not to bear this sense, for the apostle goes on orderly thus; (1.) God chose our fathers; (2.) he brought them out of Egypt; (3.) he led them in the wilderness forty years; (4.) he divided the land to them; and therefore it is reasonable to conceive he should go on to tell what was done after the division of the land. Moreover, the apostle doth not say, and all these things were done in the space of four hundred and fifty years, but, he divided their land to them about the space of four hundred and fifty years; which according to this reading signifies, he was so long in dividing their land; I therefore prefer the other computation which refers this to the judges, because if you compute the years of the judges till Samuel, you will find them three hundred and thirty-nine, and the years of the tyrants one hundred and eleven, which put together make four hundred and fifty.

Thirdly, Because this computation then obtained among the Jews, for Josephus § saith, Solomon began to build the temple μετὰ ἔτη πεντηκόσια καὶ ἐννενήκοντα καὶ δύο, after five hundred and ninety-two years of the children of Israel's going out of Egypt. Now, if you make the time of the judges four hundred and fifty, the computation is exactly five hundred and ninety-one years; he therefore here, as in the following verse, accords with the computation of his nation at that time, that so they might not except against his words:

Wilderness . . .	40
Joshua	17
Judges	450
Samuel and Saul .	40
David	40

And yet he saith, ὡς, to shew that computation was not exact. Some here tell us, that the true reading here is three hundred and fifty years; but seeing I find not one copy, version, nor father to countenance that reading, I think it dangerous to admit of that solution of this difficulty; especially if we consider that St. Luke, continually, both in his Gospel and in the Acts, follows exactly the computation of the Septuagint, and of the Jews, as we learn from his inserting Cainan, Luke iii. 36. his making Saul to reign forty years, ver. 21. of this chapter, and from this verse, where he accords exactly with Josephus.

[11] Ver. 21. By the space of forty years.] So Josephus saith, he reigned whilst Samuel lived ἔτη ὀκτὼ πρὸς τοῖς δέκα, eighteen years, and after his death δύο καὶ εἴκοσι, twenty-two years; but though this reckoning seems to have obtained in the time of Josephus, it is far from being true, that Saul reigned twenty-two years after the death of Samuel; it is rather true, as the Jews conceive, that they both died in the same year: so that the words, forty years, are to be connected thus—Until Samuel the prophet, who having judged them about thirty years, afterward they desired a king; andGod, by Samuel, gave them Saul, whose reign with that of Samuel's was about the space of forty years. So saith Sulpitius Severus,* " Ego arbitror à Paulo etiam Samuelis annos sub regis istius ætate numeratos," I suppose that the years of Samuel also are added to the reign of that king by Paul; as doubtless they were, they making together just forty years.

[12] Ver. 26. And whosoever among you feareth God.] So ver. 16. that is, the proselytes among you: so Bemidbar Rabba on those words of the Psalmist, Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord, saith אלוגלים, οἱ φοβούμενοι τὸν Θεὸν, are the proselytes.

[13] Ver. 31. Who was seen many days of those, who came up with him from Galilee to Jerusalem, who are his witnesses.] These seem to be the hundred and eight mentioned Acts i. 15. for these were Galileans, ver. 11. and συνελθόντες, men coming with him, and men that go in to the apostles, ver. 13.

[14] Ver. 33. God hath fulfilled the promise made to your fathers in raising up Jesus.] i. e. From the dead, ver. 30. so as not to return to corruption. For the promise being this, that God would raise up one to sit upon the throne of his father David, Acts ii. 30. and to reign over the house of Jacob, Luke i. 33. Christ upon his resurrection having all power in heaven and earth committed to him, Matt. xxviii. 18. and being exalted to the right hand of God, Acts ii. 33. this promise, by his resurrection to that kingdom, was fulfilled.

[15] As it is written in the second Psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.] That this Psalm belongs to the Messiah, and speaks of his dominion and kingdom, appears from the preceding words, I have set thee, my king, upon the holy hill of Sion; Jehovah hath said to me, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. This also is apparent from the following words, I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance; and from the exhortation of all kings to submit to him: (see the note on Heb. v. 5.) and, by this resurrection and exaltation, he is said to be begotten, as being made the first-born from the dead, Colos. i. 18. Rev. i. 5. constituted the Son of God with power, Rom. i. 4. and having received a new birth: hence those two things are joined, Luke i. 32. He shall be called the Son of the Highest, and God shall give him the throne of his father David. (See also Examen Millii in locum.)

[16] Ver. 34. In that he raised him up, now no more to see corruption, he said, (Isa. lv. 3.) I will give thee τὰ ὅσια Δαβὶδ τὰ πιστὰ, the sure mercies of David.] That is, of Christ the son of David; for that David, both in the language of Scripture and of the Jews, frequently signifies Christ, see note on Matt. ii. and that here it bears this sense both Kimchi and Aben-Ezra confess, and the following verse assures us; for, of this very David it is said, ver. 4. Behold, I have given him for a witness, a leader and commander to the people; and he being thus raised up to be a King for ever, so as to see no more corruption, the blessings he confers upon his subjects must be sure and lasting.

[17] Ver. 38. Through him is preached to them forgiveness of sins.] i. e. Those sins, from the guilt of which the law of Moses could not cleanse the conscience, and from which we could not be justified, i. e. from the guilt and condemnation due to us, from which we could not be exempted by the law of Moses. (See the note on xv. 1.)

[18] Ver. 42. Εἰς τὸ μεταξὺ σάββατον.] This phrase doth not signify the intermediate week, as some conceive, or on the second and fifth day of the week, but on the following sabbath; for we learn from the forty-fourth verse, that they came not together till the following sabbath. So Josephus* speaks of David and Solomon, ἔτι δὲ τῶν μεταξὺ τούτων Βασιλέων, and of the following kings of Judah; for there came none between them.

[19] Ver. 46. Καὶ οὐκ ἀξίους ἑαυτοὺς κρίνετε, And judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life.] Or rather discover, or by your actions shew yourselves unworthy of it: for when our Saviour sent his apostles, he bid them, into what village or house soever they entered, to inquire, τίς ἄξιος, who was worthy in it, and to shake off the dust of their feet against the unworthy; (Matt. x. 11. 15.) i. e. against those who would not receive their doctrine of salvation, or eternal life. This unworthiness, saith the apostle, κρίνετε, you discover, by thus contradicting and blaspheming it. This is the sense of the word κρίνεσθαι, viz. to discern, discover, or make known, when the apostle saith, He that cometh into the assemblies of the prophets, κρίνεται, is discovered of them all, 1 Cor. xiv. 24. and the spiritual man discovers all things, ii. 15.

[20] Lo, we turn to the gentiles.] Not from the Jews every where; for we find St. Paul still preaching to them in every synagogue where he came: (Acts xvii. 2.) but from those of Antioch in Pisidia, to the gentiles there, it being not reasonable that the Jews of other places should be deprived of the gospel, for the perverseness of those here.

[21] Ver. 48. And ὅσοι ἦσαν τεταγμένοι εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον, as many as were ordained to eternal life believed.] These words cannot signify a fixed number of persons absolutely by God ordained to eternal life, so that they, and they only, shall obtain it, and all others be excluded from it, as upon this supposition they must be; for if God, by his ordination or decree, hath fixed the number of those whom he will bring unto salvation, all they who are not of that number will not partake of that salvation. And this is evident from these considerations:

First, That if the reason why these men believed be only this, that they were men ordained to eternal life; the reason why the rest believed not can be this only, that they were not ordained by God to eternal life: and if so, what necessity could there be, that the word of God should be first preached to them? as we read, ver. 46. Was it only that their damnation might be the greater? This seems to charge that Lover of souls, whose tender mercies are over all his works, with the greatest cruelty, seeing it makes him determine from all eternity, not only that so many souls, as capable of salvation as any other, shall perish everlastingly; but also to determine, that the dispensations of his providence shall be such towards them as necessarily tends to the aggravation of their condemnation. And what could even their most malicious and most enraged enemy do more? What is it the very devil aims at by all his temptations, but this very end, viz. the aggravation of our future punishment? And therefore to assert, that God had determined that his word should be spoken to these Jews for this very end, is to make God as instrumental to their ruin as the very devil, and seemeth wholly irreconcilable with his declarations, that he would have all men to be saved, and would not that any man should perish.

Secondly, The apostle gives this reason why he turned from the Jews to the gentiles; viz. because the Jews had thrust away the word of God from them, and judged themselves unworthy of eternal life, (ver. 46.) Whereas, according to this supposition, this could be no sufficient reason of his turning from them to the gentiles; for it was only they, among the Jews, whom God had not ordained to eternal life, who thus refused to believe and to obey the word of God; and as many among the gentiles as were not thus ordained to eternal life must necessarily do the same; and so there could be no sufficient cause why he should turn from the Jews to the gentiles on that account. And,

Thirdly, Were this the reason why the Jews believed not, that they were not by God ordained to eternal life, why doth St. Paul by God's commission speak here to them thus: Be it known to you, brethren, that by this Jesus, is declared to you remission of sins? Why doth he add, and by him every one that believeth is justified? &c. Why doth he vehemently exhort them to beware, lest that saying of the prophet Habakkuk should be verified of them, I will work a work in your days, which you will not believe, though one declare it to you? (ver. 38. 41.) For could God have determined, that these very persons should not believe to life eternal, and yet commissionate his apostles to tell them, that remission of sins and justification to life eternal was proposed to them? Could it be revealed to St. Paul that they could not believe to life eternal, as being not by God ordained to it; and yet would he so passionately exhort them to that faith in Jesus, which he well knew by virtue of this revelation belonged not to them, nor could they possibly exert? These things seem clearly to evince, that this cannot be the proper import of the words; but they will very well admit of these two senses: viz. (1.) As many as were disposed for eternal life believed: or, (2.) As many as were disposed to do it, believed to eternal life. And,

First, It is highly probable, the genuine import of these words is this, Ὅσοι ἦσαν τεταγμένοι, As many as were disposed for eternal life believed; for this word τεταγμένος, by this very author, is used in this sense to signify a man, not outwardly ordained, but inwardly disposed; or one determined, not by God, but his own inclination, to do such a thing; as when it is said, Acts xx. 13. St. Paul went on foot to Assos, οὕτω γὰρ ἦν διατεταγμένος, for so he was disposed to do: so the son of Sirach saith, ἡγεμονία συνετοῦ τεταγμένη ἔσται, the conduct or government of the wise man will be well ordered, or disposed, (x. 1.) Thus Philo* saith to Cain, Thou needest not fear being killed by them who are ἐν σῇ τεταγμένοι συμμαχίᾳ ranked on thy side; i. e. of the same dispositions and affections with thee. And he saith of those children who, having had vicious parents, have themselves proved virtuous, that they are ἀμείνῳ τεταγμένοι τάξει,† placed in a better rank: and speaking of Esau and Jacob, he represents Esau as fierce, subject to anger and other passions, and governed by his brutish part; but Jacob as a lover of virtue and truth; and so ἐν τῇ βελτίονι τεταγμένον τάξει,‡ placed in a better rank of men, or one of a better temper and disposition; and adds, that Samuel§ was τεταγμένος θεῷ, one well disposed towards God: so Simplicius interprets this word; for when Epictetus‖ had said, τῶν δὲ βελτίστων σοι φαινομένων οὕτως ἔχου ὡς ἀπὸ Θεοῦ τεταγμένος εἰς ταύτην τὴν τάξιν, If thou hast a desire to be a philosopher, so retain those things which seem best to thee, as being by God placed in that rank; that is, saith he,¶ ὡς ὑπὸ Θεοῦ προτρεπόμενος ἐπὶ ταῦτα, τὸ γὰρ μέγιστον τῶν ἐκ Θεοῦ δωρηθέντων ἀνθρώποις φιλοσοφία ἐστι, as being incited by God to it; for philosophy, saith he, eternal salvation, saith the Scripture, is the greatest gift that God has given to mankind. And to this sense the very context leads; the persons opposite to those disposed for eternal life, being those who for their indisposition to embrace the offer of it, were unworthy of eternal life.

The second import of which these words are capable, is this: That as many as were well disposed, believed to eternal life; and accordingly we are said to believe in Christ to eternal life, 1 Tim. i. 16. and to the saving of the soul, Heb. x. 39. and they who truly do believe are said to do it to eternal life, because they, by believing, do obtain a perfect right to that life, of which they cannot fail, but by departing from that faith, or suffering it to become unfruitful in those works of righteousness, which make them meet to be partakers of eternal life.

CHAP. XIV.

1. AND it came to pass in Iconium, that they (viz. Paul and Barnabas) [1] went both together into the synagogue of the Jews (there), and so spake, that [2] a great multitude both of the Jews and also of the Greeks (i. e. the proselytes of the Jews) believed.

2. But the (οἱ δὲ, and that the) unbelieving Jews stirred up the gentiles, and made their minds (Gr. rose up, and made the minds of the gentiles) evil (-ly) affected against the brethren.

3. Long time therefore abode they (ἱκανὸν μὲν οὖν χρόνον διέτριψαν, for indeed they had tarried a long time) speaking boldly in (the name of) the Lord, who gave testimony unto the words of his grace, and granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands.

4. But (then) the multitude of the city was divided: and part held with the (unbelieving) Jews, and part with the apostles.

5. And when there was an assault (or tumult) made, both of (i. e. by) the gentiles, and also of (by) the Jews, with their rulers, (endeavouring) to use them despitefully (or contumeliously), and to [3] stone them (as blasphemers of the law),

6. They were aware of it, and (so) fled to Lystra, and (then to) Derbe, (ver. 20.) cities of Lycaonia, and (then) to the region which lieth round about (those cities):

7. And there they preached the gospel.

8. And there sat a man at Lystra, [4] impotent in his feet, being a cripple from his mother's womb, (and so one) who never had walked.

9. The same heard Paul speak (-ing the word); who steadfastly beholding him, and [5] perceiving (by his gift of discerning spirits) that he had faith to be healed,

10. Said (to him) with a loud voice, Stand upright on thy feet. And (having said this) he (the impotent man) leaped and walked.

11. And when the people saw what Paul had done, they lifted up their voices, saying in the speech of Lycaonia, [6] The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men.

12. [7] And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercurius (i. e. his interpreter), because he was the chief speaker.

13. Then the priest of Jupiter, who (i. e. whose image) was before the city, brought oxen and garlands (Gr. coronets) [8] to the gates (where Barnabas and Paul were), and would have done sacrifice with the people (i. e. he and they would have offered sacrifice to them as gods).

14. Which when the apostles, Barnabas and Paul, heard of, they rent their clothes (to shew their detestation of the fact), and ran in among the people, crying out,

15. And saying, Sirs, why do ye (attempt) these things? (seeing) we also are men of like passions with you, and preach to you that ye should turn from these vanities (or dead idols) to the (worship of the) living God, who made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein:

16. [9] Who in times past (since the days of Noah, 1 Pet. iii. 20.) suffered all nations to walk in their own ways (giving them no written law, and sending them no prophets to instruct them in the true worship of him, as he did to the Jews).

17. [10] Nevertheless he left not himself without witness (to them of his providence), in that he did good (to us all), and gave (Gr. giving) us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness.

18. And with these sayings scarce restrained they the people, that they had not done (i. e. from doing) sacrifice to them.

19. And (then) there came thither certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who persuaded the people (against the apostles), and (so they), having [11] stoned Paul, drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead.

20. Howbeit, as the disciples stood round about him, he rose up, and came into the city: and the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe.

21. And when they had preached the gospel to that city, and had taught many (Gr. had made many disciples), they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch,

22. Confirming the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and (telling them) that we (Christians) must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God.

23. And when they had [12] ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, (Gr. and when praying with fasting, they had ordained, &c.) they commended them to (the protection of) the Lord (Jesus), on whom they believed.

24. And after they had passed through Pisidia, they came to Pamphylia.

25. And when they had preached the word in Perga, they went down to Attalia:

26. And thence sailed to Antioch, from whence they had been recommended to the grace of God (by prayer for his assistance, Acts xiii. 3.) for the work which they (had now) fulfilled.

27. And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all that God had done with (i. e. by) them, and how he had opened the door of faith to the gentiles.

28. And there they abode (a) long time with the disciples.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIV.

[1] Ver. 1. THAT they went κατὰ τὸ αὐτὸ, both together.] So 1 Sam. xi. 11. there were not two of them left יחד κατὰ τὸ αὐτὸ, together; 2 Sam. ii. 16. They fell down κατὰ τὸ αὐτὸ, together; 1 Kings iii. 18. ἡμεῖς κατὰ τὸ αὐτὸ, We were together.

[2] A great multitude, Ἰουδαίων καὶ ἑλλήνων, of the Jews and Greeks believed.] i. e. Σεβομένων ἑλλήνων, a great multitude of Greek proselytes; for they made a part of the Jewish synagogue, and in it are converted to the faith: so xvii. 4. and xviii. 4. Paul spake in the synagogue at Corinth, and persuaded Jews and Greeks; see also xiii. 42. xix. 8. 10. Note also, that the second verse is to be put in a parenthesis.

[3] Ver. 5. And to stone them,] As blasphemers against the law, Deut. xiii. 6. So they stoned Stephen as speaking blasphemous words against the law and the temple, Acts vi. 13. So St. Paul here, ver. 19. and so they attempted to stone Christ for supposed blasphemy, John x. 33. And in like manner, Josephus saith,* that Ananias the high-priest delivered up James, and other Christians, to be stoned, as being accused of impiety against the law.

[4] Ver. 8. Ἀδύνατος τοῖς ποσὶν, Impotent in his feet.] This word ἀδύνατος is frequently used in the Septuagint, for a man feeble and helpless; as when Job saith, he was πατὴρ ἀδυνάτων, the father of the helpless, xxix. 16. xxxi. 20. and Joel, iii. 10. ὁ ἀδύνατος λεγέτω, let the weak say I am strong.

[5] Ver. 9. Seeing he had faith to be healed.] Faith being an act of the understanding, could not be discerned by the eye of sense; this therefore is an instance of that power of discerning the inward working of men's spirits, mentioned 1 Cor. xii. 10.

[6] Ver. 11. Saying, The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men.] This was not only the imagination of the poets, Homer, and others here cited by Grotius, but even of their philosophers: for Cicero hence proves, the gods must be of human shape, because they never appeared in any other form. (See the note on xvii. 29.)

[7] Ver. 12. And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercury, because he was ἡγούμενος τοῦ λόγου, the chief speaker.] He is accounted, saith Justin Martyr,† λόγος ἑρμηνευτικὸς καὶ πάντων διδάσκαλος, the word that is the interpreter and teacher of all men; and he is called Hermes, saith Philo,‡ ὡς Ἑρμηνέα καὶ προφήτην τῶν θείων, as being the interpreter and prophet of Divine things: he is, saith Porphyry, παραστατικὸς, the exhibiter or representer of reason and eloquence: he is called Mercury, saith Seneca, quia ratio penes illum est. (De Benef. lib. iv. cap. 7.)

[8] Ver. 13. Ἐπὶ τοὺς πυλῶνας, To the gates.] Not of the temple of Jupiter, which was without the city, but the gates of the house where Paul and Barnabas lodged; for these things were done within the city. (ver. 19.) Hither the priest of Jupiter brought oxen for sacrifice, and στέμματα crowns or garlands, either to put upon the heads of Paul and Barnabas, according to the heathen custom of crowning their gods, mentioned in Jeremy's epistle to the Jews in Babylon, ver. 9. and especially of offering golden crowns to Jupiter, as Brissonius§ shews they did; or to put on the ox or heifer to be offered: hence have we mention in Virgil‖ of the "vittæ juvencum," garlands of the heifers, where, saith Servius "velatum auro vittisque juvencum," is "coronatum auro vittisque," i. e. a heifer crowned with them. Athenæus from Aristotle saith,¶ this was done, because nothing but what is perfect was to be offered to the gods; τὸ δὲ στέφειν πλήρωσίν τινα σημαίνει, now to crown signifies perfection; whence "operi coronam imponere," is to perfect a work.

Ἤθελε θύειν, He would have sacrificed.] Here see, saith Chrysostom, the devil's malice; he would have brought in ἀνθρωπολατρείαν Divine worship of men by those very persons who were sent to convert men from it, persuading them again to esteem men as gods, as formerly they had done: and how fully he hath done this in the Roman church, where innumerable men are worshipped with invocation, and even mental prayers, which suppose them to know the hearts of the supplicants, and so to have the property ascribed to God alone in the Scripture; I have fully shewed in a treatise on that subject.

[9] Ver. 16. Who in times past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways.] Not so as to allow of their manners, or to leave them without any means sufficient to convince them of the error of their ways, and their idolatrous worship; for this he had done so effectually, as to leave them without excuse, in that they did not worship him as God, neither were thankful for his benefits. (Rom. i. 20, 21.) But he so far permitted this, as that he sent them no prophet to instruct them better; and gave them no positive revelation of his will, no written instructions of that way in which he would be worshipped, as he had done to the Jews.

[10] Ver. 17. Nevertheless he left not himself without a witness, in that he did them good, and gave them rain from heaven.] From these words it appears, (1.) that the giving of rain in its season, and of fruitful seasons of the year, is even to the heathens a testimony of the Divine providence: for, this rain coming from the clouds of heaven, and these fruitful seasons depending so necessarily upon the sun, moon, and other luminaries of heaven, and being so constantly produced by them, must demonstrate, that they must derive them from, and owe them to, him, who made the heavens and the earth, (ver. 15.) and therefore, that they ought to worship and be thankful to him for them. (2.) These being good things, and such as filled their hearts with food and gladness; and being conferred freely and constantly on them, who daily provoked him by their idolatries and ingratitude, were also a clear testimony of his goodness to them, and therefore an assurance to them, that if they, knowing him by this means to be God, would turn from their dumb idols, and worship him as God, they might find grace and favour in his eyes, who was so good unto them, even whilst they did continue to provoke him: now the knowledge of the God that made heaven and earth, as the only true God, who is to be worshipped, and whose providence affords us all the blessings we enjoy, and the belief that he is well inclined to shew mercy to all that thus turn to him, and are thus thankful to him, seems to be all that God expected from the gentiles, as may be gathered from Rom. i. 20, 21.

[11] Ver. 19. And stoned Paul.] God permitting this, saith Woltzogenius, for the punishment of his sin, in being active and assistant at the stoning Stephen. (Acts vii. 58. viii. 1.)

[12] Ver. 23. Χειροτονήσαντες δὲ αὐτοῖς πρεσβυτέρους κατ' ἐκκλησίαν, And ordaining them elders in every church.] That Χειροτονεῖν πρεσβυτέρους, is not to choose elders by common suffrage, or by lifting up the hands of the apostles, is fully proved by Dr. Hammond and Mr. Selden; but then, that this constituting elders in these churches was making them fixed bishops of those churches, is not proved.

To clear up this, let it be considered, that in those times men received the gift of tongues and prophecy, or those spiritual gifts which fitted them to minister in the church, either immediately from heaven, as the apostles themselves did, and so by God himself were fitted and appointed for that work; so was it with the hundred and twenty who received the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost; (see note on Acts ii. 1.) or when they prayed with

Peter and John, (Acts iv. 31.) and with St. Paul, who was baptized and filled with the Holy Ghost; (ix. 17.) so was it with Cornelius and his kinsmen, (Acts x. 44.) for they spake with tongues and magnified God, even as the apostles did when they had received the Holy Ghost; for as they spake with tongues μεγαλεῖα τοῦ θεοῦ, the great things of God, (Acts ii. 11.) so did these men speak with tongues, μεγαλοῦντες τὸν θεὸν, magnifying God, and therefore St. Peter saith, they had received the Holy Ghost even as we: (Acts x. 47. xi. 17.) or else these gifts were given by imposition of the apostles' hands; so when the Samaritans believed, and were baptized, that they might have persons fitted to officiate in sacred things, the church of Jerusalem sends to them Peter and John, who lay their hands on some of them, and they received the Holy Ghost. (Acts viii. 17.) This being done, the apostles returned to Jerusalem, (ver. 25.) preaching the word to other villages of Samaria, but leaving the conduct of the church to those gifted men; and these seem to be the men who first officiated in all converted churches; and wherever we meet with them, we find no other persons constituted as bishops, or fixed overseers of those churches, as in the churches of Corinth, Galatia, Thessalonica, and therefore have reason to conceive there were no other elders constituted here, they being no more necessary for the churches of Lystra and Iconium, than for those of Corinth and Galatia. Moreover, we have here only mention of elders constituted in these churches, not of one deacon placed under them, which shews, these elders were not bishops; since, by the rule of Epiphanius, a bishop cannot be without a deacon. In a word, these prophetical men, though they were officers placed in the church next to the apostles, (1 Cor. xii. 26.) yet were they not fixed ministers; but from what parts soever they come, and wherever they are, they take upon them to officiate: so doth Barnabas at Antioch, (xi. 23, 24.) and the other prophets there; (xiii. 1, 2.) and so doth Silas, sent from Jerusalem to Antioch, continue there, (Acts xv. 33.) and from thence goes through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches, (ver. 41.)

CHAP. XV.

1. AND certain men which came down from Judea (to Antioch), taught the brethren (of the gentiles, saying), [1] Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses (i. e. so as by that rite to submit to, and observe, his law), ye cannot be saved.

2. When therefore Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation with them (Gr. and a dissension being made among the brethren, and no small debate or reasoning of Paul and Barnabas against them who taught this doctrine), [2] they (of Antioch) determined that Paul and Barnabas, and certain others of them, should go up to Jerusalem [3] to the apostles and elders (there), about this question.

3. And being brought on their way by the church, they (Gr. οἱ μὲν οὖν προπεμφθέντες, they therefore being sent forth by the church) passed through Phœnice and Samaria, declaring (to them) the conversion of the gentiles: and (by this) they caused great joy unto all the brethren.

4. And when they were come to Jerusalem, they were received of the church, and of the apostles and elders, and they declared (to them) all things which God had done with them, (i. e. by them, ver. 12.)

5. But there arose up certain of the sect of the pharisees which believed, saying, That it was needful to circumcise them (who believed among the gentiles), and to command them to keep the law of Moses.

6. And (then) the apostles and elders came together to consider of this matter.

7. And when there had been much disputing, Peter rose up, and said to them, Men and brethren, ye know how that [4] a good while ago (Gr. of days of old), God made choice among us (Gr. ὁ θεὸς ἐν ὑμῖν ἐξελέξατο, God chose me out among you), that the gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe; (commanding Cornelius to send for me, Acts x. 5. and me to go to him with the messengers sent for me, not making any difference betwixt him and others, ver. 20.)

8. And God, who knoweth the hearts (of all men), bare them witness (of his acceptance of them, though uncircumcised, by) giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did to us (believing Jews).

9. And (he) [5] put no difference betwixt us and them (on the account of their uncircumcision, but supplied that by) purifying their hearts by faith (and so making them a pure people, as circumcision formerly did us).

10. Now therefore why tempt ye God (i. e. why distrust ye the truth of what he hath thus declared, by attempting) [6] to put a yoke (of obedience to the law of Moses) upon the necks of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear (i. e. to perform so as to be justified by it)?

11. But we believe that through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ (or through God's favour to us in him), we shall be saved, [7] even as they (are to be saved by it).

12. Then all the multitude kept silence, and gave audience to Barnabas and Saul, declaring (in confirmation of this point) what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the (uncircumcised) gentiles by them.

13. And after they had held their peace, James answered (to the question), saying, Men and brethren, hearken to me:

14. Simeon hath declared how God at the first did (by him) visit the gentiles, to take out of them a people for (the glory of) his name.

15. And to this agree the words of the prophet (Amos), as it is written, (ix. 11.)

16. After this I will return, and build again [8] the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up, (by raising up Christ to sit upon his throne, Acts ii. 30. and giving him the throne of his father David, Luke i. 32.)

17. [9] That the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things.

18. (This he foretold by his prescience: for) known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world.

19. [10] Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them, who from among the gentiles are turned to God (with the observation of our law and ceremonies):

20. But (count it sufficient) that we write to them, that they [11] abstain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood.

21. (Nor will this liberty be prejudicial to the Jews adhering to the law of Moses:) for [12] Moses of (from) old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every sabbath-day.

22. Then pleased it the apostles and elders, with the whole church, to send chosen men of their own company to Antioch with Paul and Barnabas; namely, Judas surnamed Barsabas and Silas, chief men among the brethren:

23. And (they) wrote letters by them, after this manner; The apostles, and elders, and brethren, send greeting to the brethren which are of the gentiles in Antioch, and Syria, and Cilicia:

24. Forasmuch as we have heard that certain (men) which went out from us, (1 John ii. 19.) have troubled you with words, subverting your souls (by) saying, (Ye ought to) be circumcised, and keep the law: to whom we gave no such commandment:

25. It seemed good to us, being assembled with one accord, to send chosen men to you with our beloved Barnabas and Paul,

26. (Who are) men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.

27. We have sent therefore Judas and Silas, who shall also tell you the same things by (word of) mouth.

28. [13] For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost (falling upon the uncircumcised gentiles), and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things; (i. e. these things necessary at present, to avoid the scandal of the Jews; viz.)

29. That ye abstain from meats offered to idols (in the idol temples), and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication: from which if you keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well.

30. So when they were dismissed, they came to Antioch: and when they had gathered the multitude together, they delivered the epistle:

31. And when they had read (it), they rejoiced for the consolation (it afforded them).

32. And Judas and Silas, being [14] prophets also themselves, exhorted the brethren with many words, and confirmed them,

33. And after they had tarried there a space, they were let go in peace from the brethren to the apostles.

34. Notwithstanding it pleased Silas to abide there still.

35. Paul also and Barnabas continued in Antioch, teaching and preaching the word of the Lord, with many others also (that were prophets and teachers there, xiii. 1.)

36. And some days after Paul said to Barnabas, Let us go again (see Acts xiii. 3, 4.) and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do.

37. And Barnabas determined (or counselled) to take with them John, whose surname was Mark.

38. But Paul thought not good to take him with them, who (when they went out before) departed from them from Pamphylia (to go to Jerusalem, xiii. 13.) and went not (on) with them to the work (he had begun, xiii. 5.)

39. And the contention was so sharp between them, that they departed asunder one from the other: and so Barnabas took Mark, and sailed unto Cyprus;

40. And Paul chose Silas, and departed (with him), being recommended by the brethren to the grace (and favour) of God.

41. And he went through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XV.

[1] Ver. 1. 'ΕΑΝ μὴ περιτμηθητε, Except ye be circumcised after the manner (commanded by the law) of Moses, ye cannot be saved.] Here note,

First, That these persons were of the sect of the pharisees, (ver. 5.) and perhaps they were only the zealots of that sect, for we find the Jews of different opinions in this matter, even as to men's admission into their religion; for some of them would not only permit them of other nations, who owned the true God, to live quietly among them, but even to embrace their religion without circumcision, whilst others by no means would permit them so to do. Thus when Izates,* the son of Helen, queen of Adiabene, embraced the Jews' religion, Ananias declared he might do it without circumcision, but Eleazer maintained, that it was ἀσέβεια, great impiety to remain uncircumcised. And when two eminent persons of Trachonitis fled to Josephus, the zealots † among the Jews were urgent for their circumcision, if they would abide with them; but Josephus persuaded the multitude against it. And this controversy continued after they embraced Christianity, some allowing them to embrace Christianity without submitting to circumcision and the Jewish law; others contending, that without circumcision and the observance of the law, they could not be saved. And these were the false apostles which troubled the churches of Corinth, Galatia, and Philippi, and were great enemies to St. Paul, who taught the contrary.

Secondly, Observe, that circumcision obliged those heathens which submitted to it to observe the whole law; (Gal. v. 3.) it is the same thing to say, they must be circumcised after the manner of Moses, (ver. 1.) and to say, (ver. 5. 24.) they must be circumcised, and keep the law of Moses.

Thirdly, Observe, that they held this necessary to salvation, (ver. 1.) and by that doctrine they subverted the souls of the gentile converts, (ver. 24.) causing them to fall from the grace of the gospel offered to them without circumcision. (Gal. v. 4.) Now this they did agreeably to their common maxim, that "omnes præputiati descendunt in gehennam," all uncircumcised persons go to hell. (P. Eliezer, cap. 29. p. 66.)

Fourthly, Observe, that they who did this went out from Judea, (ver. 1.) and were men going out as from the apostles, (ver. 24.) and therefore St. John saith of them, they went out from us, but they were not of us. (1 John ii. 19.)

[2] Ver. 2. They (of Antioch) determined that Paul and Barnabas—should go up to Jerusalem, &c.] St. Paul declares that he went then up to Jerusalem, κατ' ἀποκάλυψιν, according to revelation; (Gal. ii. 2.) as therefore the prophets and teachers at Antioch had before separated Paul and Barnabas by revelation to preach to some of the gentiles, and they having fulfilled that work returned to Antioch; (xiv. 26.) so is it probable, that by another revelation made to the same persons, they were sent up to Jerusalem, as being fittest to convince those of the contrary persuasion, by declaring what God had wrought by them among the uncircumcised gentiles, and his acceptance of them without circumcision, or the observance of the law of Moses. Hence St. Paul tells us, that by what he had declared to them, (ver. 4. 12.) they saw the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed to him, as the gospel of the circumcision was to Peter; because he that wrought effectually by Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, was mighty by him towards the gentiles. (Gal. ii. 7, 8.)

[3] To the apostles and elders.] Here Dr. Hammond tells us they were sent to the apostles and bishops of Jerusalem, and to the other bishops of Judea, and so, ver. 22, 23. 28. he makes the other bishops of Judea to be a part of this council, and for the proof of this he refers us to note b on Acts xi. where he affirms that elders signify bishops, but does not prove that the elders were bishops of Judea, unless it be by saying, elders are bishops; and therefore there being but one bishop at Jerusalem, and yet more elders, the rest, excepting James, must be the bishops of Judea. But this opinion I have sufficiently confuted, notes on James v. 14. 1 Pet. v. 1. and indeed it is mere novelty, not supported by the authority of any one ancient writer: for though some of them say, the names of bishop and presbyter, that is, elder, were used promiscuously in the first age of Christianity, none of them ever thought or said, that the word presbyter or elder, in the New Testament, did always signify a bishop. My opinion of these elders is, that they were of the one hundred and eight, who received the Holy Ghost at the beginning with the apostles; (see note [1] on Acts ii.) those who had been with Christ from the beginning, out of which one was to be chosen in the place of Judas, (i. 21, 22.) and of those witnesses of his resurrection, which came up with him from Galilee, (xiii. 21.) With these who had thus received the Holy Ghost, St. Peter ranks himself, saying to the Jews, The elders that are among you I exhort, who also am an elder; (1 Pet. v. 1.) and of these St. James seems to speak to the same persons, when he saith, Is any man sick, let him send for the elders of the church: (v. 14.) and perhaps these are the ἡγούμενοι, who had the rule over them; (Heb. xiii. 7. 16.) for Judas and Silas, two of these elders, being prophets, are styled ἄνδρες ἡγούμενοι ἐν τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς, leading men, or governors, among the brethren. That there were any other bishops of Judea, I believe not, as finding nothing in antiquity concerning them, but as Christians multiplied, or grew up in Judea, though they all still were zealous for the law and customs, (Acts xxi. 20.) and so still worshipped in the synagogue; yet as they saw occasion they sent one or more of these prophets or elders, to instruct and confirm them. Thus when many Jews at Antioch believed and turned to the Lord, upon tidings of these things, brought to the church at Jerusalem, they sent forth Barnabas, one full of the Holy Ghost, that he should go as far as Antioch, (xi. 21—23.) Such also were the governors and ministers of church affairs in other places; they who received the Holy Ghost at Samaria were to officiate there, and be a nursery for other churches of Samaria, which should embrace the gospel: such were the prophets and teachers of Antioch, (xiii. 1.) such the elders in every church, (xiv. 23.) such the προιστάμενοι, those that laboured among the Thessalonians, and were over them in the Lord, (1 Thess. v. 12.) the prophets in the church of Corinth, (1 Cor. xiii. 14.) the spiritual men in the church of the Galatians, (vi. 1. see the note there,) the men who had the gifts of prophecy and teaching among the Romans, (xii. 6, 7.) and the twelve men on whom the Holy Ghost fell at Ephesus, and made them overseers of the churches there and in the neighbouring places: for at the first conversion of any church, there being none among them fitted to teach the Christian faith by their own skill and learning, it seemeth necessary they should be fitted and ordained for this work by the immediate afflatus, and the miraculous endowments, of the Holy Ghost: and when the apostles, who only had the power of giving the Holy Ghost, were about to leave the world, they placed fixed bishops and pastors in the churches. Thus St. Paul sends about Timothy and Titus for this work, giving them instructions concerning the persons to be ordained.

Moreover, that these were all elders of Jerusalem, and not of all Judea, we may learn, because Barnabas and Saul were appointed to go up only to Jerusalem to the bishops and elders there, about this question, (ver. 2.) and when they were come to Jerusalem, they were received by the apostles and elders, (ver. 4.) and (ver. 6.) the apostles and elders came together to consider of this matter. Now this meeting being not at any festival, and there being no mention of any persons sent for to come thither from any other places, we have reason to believe they were only the elders at Jerusalem, or residing there.

[4] Ver. 7. Ye know that, ἀφ' ἡμερῶν ἀρχαίων, a good while ago God made choice of me.] Not only when he actually sent him to Cornelius, but when he promised that by him he would lay the foundation of his church, which was to be erected among Jews and gentiles. (See the note on Matt. xvi. 18, 19.) And this is said to have been done ἀφ' ἡμερῶν ἀρ χαίων, from days of old, as Mnason is styled ἀρχαῖος μαθητὴς, an old disciple, Acts xxi. 16. and the first ministers of the gospel were styled οἱ ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, they that were from the beginning, and the doctrine preached to the Jews by the apostles is styled ἐντολὴ παλαία, an old commandment, which they had received from the beginning, Luke i. 2. 1 John ii. 7.

[5] Ver. 9. And he put no difference οὐδὲν διέκρινε, he made no discrimination betwixt us and them.] The argument here is plainly to this effect, That God by pouring his Holy Spirit on the uncircumcised gentiles, as he had done upon the circumcised Jews, had plainly demonstrated that he had received them to his favour, and made no discrimination, as to his choicest gifts, betwixt them and the Jews; and that legal purification, which seemed wanting to them on the account of their noncircumcision, he had fully and abundantly supplied in purifying their hearts by faith; and therefore, saith he, your endeavour to impose upon them these legal observances, to render them acceptable to God, after so signal an evidence that he accepteth them without them, must be a tempting God, as that phrase constantly imports a distrusting or disbelieving him after sufficient evidence vouchsafed of his good-will and pleasure. (See note on Matt. iv. 7.)

[6] Ver. 10. To put a yoke upon the disciples' necks, which neither we nor our forefathers were able to bear.] Though these words are, by most interpreters, applied to the numerous ritual precepts, the costly sacrifices, and to the frequent tedious journeys up to Jerusalem, required by the law, which made the observance of it difficult and irksome; I rather would refer it to that defect that the apostle hath observed in it, that it could not purge the conscience from the guilt of sin, Heb. ix. 9. x. 1. that it could not give life,

Gal. iii. 21. that it was a killing letter, leaving them under condemnation, 2 Cor. iii. 7. vi. 9. and so making it necessary for them to believe in Christ, that they might be justified, Gal. ii. 16. and redeemed from the curse of the law, Gal. iii. 13. according to those words of St. Paul, Acts xiii. 38, 39. Be it known to you, that through this man is preached to you forgiveness of sins, and by him all that believe are justified from all things from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses: for to this sense the following words incline, we could not bear this yoke; for we believe, that by the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved.

[7] Ver. 11. Even as they.] This is not to be referred to the words, our forefathers, as if the former Jews expected to be saved by the grace of Christ; for whatsoever truth may be in it with respect to the ancient Jews, it is certain that the latter Jews expected justification, not by faith, but by the works of the law, Rom. ix. 32. and believed nothing of the Messiah, who should die to procure for them remission of sins: the controversy here was concerning the necessity of circumcision, and observation of the law of Moses to salvation: (ver. 1.) this, saith St. Peter, cannot be so, because God hath purified their hearts by faith, and so prepared them by it for mercy and salvation; and as they are to be saved by the grace of Christ, so we expect salvation by the same grace; and this sense is confirmed from a like passage in St. Paul, declaring that it is the same God who justifies both Jew and gentile through the same faith, Rom. iii. 30. And again, Gal. ii. 15, 16. We Jews knowing that a man is justified, not by the works of the law, but by the faith of Christ, we have believed in him that we might be justified.

Nor is it any argument to the contrary, that our fathers are the nearest antecedent to the word ἐκεῖνοι, they, for the words our fathers are only mentioned accidentally. Now it is very common in such cases for the relative to refer to a remoter antecedent, which is the subject professedly discoursed of: so Acts vii. 19. He dealt subtilly with our fathers, not Joseph immediately preceding, but the king that knew not Joseph: x. 6. He shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do, viz. not Simon the tanner, but Simon Peter. (See the note on 1 John v. 20.)

[8] Ver. 16. The tabernacle of David which is fallen down, Hancpleth.] Hence the Jews called the Messiah, Bar Naphli, because it is written,* I will build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down, Amos ix. 10, 11. The most ancient way of dwelling being in tents and tabernacles, a man's house or habitation is usually, in the Hebrew language, called Mischeneah, his tabernacle, as you may see in the book of Job, and in the prophets; so here the tabernacle of David is the house and family of David.

[9] Ver. 17. That the residue of men might seek after the Lord,] Amos ix. 12. In the Hebrew it is, that they may possess the remnant of Edom, who being the greatest enemies to Israel, the calling of them must denote the calling of the worst of the nations; the Greek version also, which St. Luke follows, proves the thing more clearly, as making mention of all nations seeking after the Lord.

[10] Ver. 19. Wherefore my sentence is, &c.] There be many things contained in this chapter, which shew the Christians then had no apprehensions that St. Peter was by Christ appointed as the monarch of the church, or chief judge of controversies: for,

First, St. Paul and Barnabas were sent for the decision of this controversy, not to St. Peter in particular, but to the apostles and elders of the church in general.

Secondly, The decretory sentence was given by St. James, and not by Peter: κρίνω ἐγὼ, saith St. James, I judge; that is, saith Chrysostom, μετ' ἐξουσίας λέγω τοῦτο, I with authority say this; and this determination of the question was made by James, saith Chrysostom, ἐκεῖνος γὰρ ἦν τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐγκεχειρισμένος, because he had the government (viz. of the church of Jerusalem) committed to him.

Thirdly, The letters, which are directed to the gentile churches, run after this manner, The apostles, elders, and brethren, to the brethren which are of the gentiles in Antioch, Syria, and Cilicia, send greeting, without any particular mention of St. Peter, the supposed judge of this and other controversies, and the supposed governor of these and of all other churches. Now all these things are an indication, that the Christians of those times knew nothing of this supremacy of Peter, or of Christ's appointment of him to be his vicar, and the judge of controversies, to whom appeals were to be made in doubtful cases. For do any churches, which are now subject to the pope of Rome, and do acknowledge him to be Christ's vicar, send to the cardinals for the decision of their controversies, and make no mention of his holiness? Is it their custom when such disputes, as this was, do arise, to have recourse to them in general, and not particularly to the pope? Doth any cardinal take upon him to pass the decretory sentence in any question of this nature? Or, do their letters when they decide such questions run after this manner, We, the cardinals and bishops of the church of Rome, send greeting? Since therefore they who now acknowledge this vicar, neither do, nor by their principles can do, as the Christians mentioned in the Acts did, it must be certain that those Christians did not own that vicar which is now set up by the church of Rome.

[11] Ver. 20. Ἀπὸ τῶν ἀλισγημάτων τῶν εἰδώλων, From the pollutions of idols, from fornication, from things strangled, and from blood.] Dr. Spencer here rejects all the interpretations given by others of these words, and then concludes, that all these things were forbidden, as being causes, signs, and attendants, on the idolatry of the heathens; things offered to idols, whether meat or drink, being after eaten in the idol's temple to his honour; and so, saith he, were blood, and things strangled, ways of confederacy with demons, and of offering the blood, that is the very soul, to them, as by fornication they did the body. But (1.) these four are plainly reckoned as things distinguished in themselves, and from one another, and so are separated by a καὶ, or and, interposed betwixt each of them; whereas, according to this exposition, they are all εἰδωλόθυτα, things offered to idols, and much more are they all ἀλισγήματα, pollutions of idols. Moreover, the things forbidden here, saith he, comprehend not only rites of fornication, but also of adultery and masculine impurity, and all the abominable filthiness committed by the heathens in their festivals of Venus, Bacchus, &c. and were all ways of entering into confederacy with devils. Now what kind of Christians could they be at Antioch, and other places, who were in danger of these things, of consecrating things by heathenish ceremonies to an idol, and afterward eating them in honour of him? Of offering blood, and things strangled, or their bodies to fornication and adultery, by way of confederacy with devils, after they had so solemnly turned from the service of them, to the worship of the living God, and so expressly had renounced all these things in their very baptism?

Others think, that the true reason why these things were particularly forbidden, was to avoid the scandal of the Jews, among whom they conversed, and with whom many of them still joined in the worship of the synagogue. This is explained several ways; viz. (1.) that all these things being formerly forbidden to the gentiles, who conversed among them, and were made proselytes of the gate, though they were neither circumcised, nor obedient to the law, they thought it necessary, though they remitted to the Christian converts among the gentiles circumcision and the observation of the law of Moses, they should be still obliged to those things, which had been formerly required of all that dwelt among or conversed with them, especially such things as seemed not to the gentiles forbidden by the law of nature, viz. the eating of things offered to idols, of blood, and of things strangled, and simple fornication, which was generally thought lawful by the gentiles; (see the notes on Eph. v. 6. 1 Thess. iv. 5.) and of which even Maimonides saith, that before the law, common whores were not forbidden. (Treat. of Wives, cap. 1. §. 4.) I confess it may be doubted, whether those which they call the seven precepts of Noah, were precepts given to the gentiles before the law of Moses, though doubtless that of not eating blood was given to them, Gen. ix. 4. but then it is sufficient to countenance this interpretation, that the proselytes of the gate were, as Buxtorf* testifies, forbidden these four things.

Others conceive, that these things were particularly forbid the gentiles, as scandalous to the Jews, because Moses had so signally marked them out as things contrary to the holiness of a people, or to their separation from other nations to himself: so, of things strangled, or dead in their blood, God saith, Deut. xiv. 21. Thou shalt not eat of any carcass, i. e. of any thing that dieth alone, or is not orderly slain, for thou art a holy people to the Lord: fornication is declared to be a thing not to be admitted in that commonwealth, for it is expressly said, Deut. xxiii. 17. There shall be no whore of the daughters of Israel, nor any whoremonger of the sons of Israel; the eating things offered to idols is forbidden as a thing contrary to the worship of the true God; the precept which commands abstaining from blood, is not only called a statute for ever, Lev. iii. 17. but God threateneth to set his face against, and to cut him off who did eat it, Lev. vii. 26. xvii. 10. These therefore being things so solemnly forbidden the whole nation of the Jews, either because they were a people holy to the Lord, or as things not to be admitted in their commonwealth, or as things to be punished with cutting off, or as symptoms of idolatry, might for the present be forbidden the gentile converts, that they might not do things so abominable in their eyes. (See Examen Millii in locum.)

[12] Ver. 21. Μωσῆς γὰρ ἐκ γενεῶν ἀρχαίων, &c.] I cannot consent to the interpretation of these words given by Grotius and the reverend Dr. Hammond, viz. That the Christians could not be supposed to contemn the law of Moses, because that law was read in the Christian synagogues every sabbath-day, as of old was done by the Jews; for, (1.) St. James doth not say that Moses was read ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς αὐτῶν, in their synagogues, but absolutely ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς, in the synagogues, by which word, not the assembly of Christians, but the Jews, is always signified. (2.) He doth not say, as Dr. Hammond paraphrases the words, that Moses was read in their synagogues ὡς ἐκ γενεῶν ἀρχαίων, as from former ages, but that Moses ἐκ γενεῶν ἀρχαίων from former ages, had those that preached him in every city, being read from old times in the synagogues; which cannot agree to the assemblies of Christians which began but a few years before. And (3.) the Christians did more certainly and frequently read Moses and the prophets on the first day of the week, as Justin Martyr testifies, than on the sabbath-day, and therefore their reading of him could not fitly be restrained to that day. I therefore think with Chrysostom, that St. James here gives the reason why they should write only to the gentile converts, viz. because there was no reason to write to the Jewish converts, they still adhering to the synagogue, where Moses was read every sabbath, and so this liberty here granted to the gentiles only, could be no occasion to turn them from the observation of the law of Moses.

[13] Ver. 28. For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us, &c.] Vain is the pretence from these words, that other councils may use this preface to their decisions, viz. It seemeth good to us, and to the Holy Ghost. For the reason why the council here assembled use these words, is not because they challenged to themselves any infallible assistance of the Holy Ghost in their conventions, rather than in their dispersions; but only upon this account, because the Holy Ghost had by a miracle declared the truth of what they had then decreed, that is, by falling down upon Cornelius, and his friends and kinsfolk, who were Romans, and only proselytes of the gate at most, and so not circumcised, (but obliged only to observe the precepts given to Noah, to abstain from things strangled, blood, idolatry, whoredom, &c.) I say, by falling down upon these gentiles, as he did upon our Lord's disciples, he evidently declared, that without their submission to any farther Jewish rites, the gentiles might be acceptable to him, and might enjoy the promise of the Father; and therefore that it was not needful in order to their acceptance with God, to require their submission to the Judaic rites. This is the inference St. Peter makes from this miracle, when he first saw it, saying, Acts x. 47. Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, who have received the Holy Ghost even as we? This was the answer he gives to them by whom it was objected, that he held communion with the gentiles, viz. Acts xi. 17. Forasmuch as God gave them the like gift as he did to us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, what was I, that I could withstand God? This was the answer by which the sticklers for the Jewish rites were then silenced; and when the question was renewed by them, and it was vehemently contended, that the gentiles must be circumcised after the manner of Moses, St. Peter proves the contrary, by reminding them of the same instance, declaring, ver. 8—11. that God who knew the hearts, bare them witness, that without circumcision they were acceptable to him, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did to the apostles; and therefore, by imposing of this yoke upon them, they would tempt the Lord, by a distrust of that which, by this miracle he had perspicuously taught. This being then the very reason why they here say, It seemed good unto the Holy Ghost; it is apparent, that no council can have hence any warrant to use the same phrase or preface to their decrees, who have not the like confirmation of their doctrine, by a miraculous operation of the Holy Ghost, designed purposely to confirm their sentence.

[14] Ver. 32. And Judas and Silas, being prophets also themselves.] That is, saith Dr. Hammond, being two bishops of Judea; but if so, why pleased it Silas to abide there still, rather than to go back unto his charge? (ver. 34.) Yea, why, after so long a stay at Antioch, doth he go along with Paul in his travels through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches? (ver. 41.) Why do we find him still with Paul, chap. xvi. xvii. and xviii. preaching at Thessalonica, Corinth, and other places, but not at all returning to his see?

CHAP. XVI.

1. THEN came he to Derbe and Lystra; and, behold, a certain disciple was there, named Timotheus, [1] the son of a certain woman, which was a Jewess, and believed; but his father was a (-n uncircumcised) Greek:

2. Which (disciple) was well reported of by the brethren which were at Lystra and Iconium.

3. Him (therefore), would Paul have to go forth with him (to the ministry), and (laying his hands upon him, that he might receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, 2 Tim. xvi. he) took (him) and circumcised him, because of the Jews which were in those quarters (who would not endure to converse with one uncircumcised, as they might suspect Timothy was), for they all knew that his father was a Greek.

4. And as they went through the cities, [2] they delivered them the decrees to keep, that were ordained of the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem.

5. And so (by their progress, 3 John 7.) were the churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily.

6. Now when they had gone throughout Phrygia, and the region of Galatia, and [3] were forbidden (by the afflatus) of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia, (at that time;

7. And) after they were come to Mysia, they assayed to go to (-wards) Bithynia: but the (same afflatus of the) Spirit suffered them not.

8. And they passing by (or through) Mysia came down to Troas.

9. And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; (For) there stood (as seemed to him) a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia; and help us.

10. And after he had seen the vision (I Luke being with him), immediately we endeavoured to go into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us to preach the gospel to them.

11. [4] Therefore loosing from Troas, we came with a straight course to Samothracia, and the next day to Neapolis;

12. And from thence to Philippi, [5] which is the chief (πρώτη, the first) city of that part of Macedonia, (see the note on Phil. i. 1.) and a colony; and we were in that city abiding certain days.

13. And on the sabbath (day) we went out of the city by a river side, [6] where prayer was wont to be made (Gr. where there was, by law or custom, an oratory); and we sat down, and spake to the women which resorted thither.

14. And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, (formerly) of the city of Thyatira, which worshipped (the true) God, heard us: [7] whose heart the Lord (so far) opened, that she attended to things which were spoken of (i. e. by) Paul.

15. And when she, (and those of her household, were instructed in the Christian faith, and in the nature of the baptism required by it, she) was baptized, and her household; (then) she besought us, saying, If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house, and abide there. And [8] she constrained (i. e. was instant with) us (so to do).

16. And it came to pass, as we went to (the house of) prayer, (that) a certain damsel, possessed with [9] a spirit of divination, met us, which brought her masters much gain by soothsaying (i. e. by telling of strange things).

17. The same (damsel) followed Paul and us, and cried, saying, These men are the servants of the most high God, who shew to us the way of salvation.

18. And this did she many days. But Paul being grieved, turned, and said to the spirit, I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her. And he came out the same hour.

19. And when her masters saw, that the hope of their gain was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the market-place to the rulers.

20. And brought them to the magistrates (i. e. the captains of the bands of Roman soldiers), saying, These men, being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city,

21. And teach customs, [10] which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to observe, being (a colony of the) Romans.

22. And the multitude rose up together against them: and the [11] magistrates rent off their clothes, and commanded to beat them.

23. And when they had laid many stripes upon them, they cast them into prison, charging the gaoler to keep them safely:

24. Who, having received such a charge, thrust them into the inner prison, and made their feet fast in the stocks.

25. And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises to God: and the prisoners heard them.

26. And suddenly there was a great earthquake, so that the foundations of the prison were shaken: and immediately all the doors were opened, and every one's bands were loosed.

27. And the keeper of the prison awaking out of his sleep, and seeing the prison-doors open, drew out his sword, [12] and would have killed himself, supposing that the prisoners had been fled (and so he must have borne the punishment due to them).

28. But Paul (perceiving this by the Spirit) cried out with a loud voice, saying, Do thyself no harm: for we are all here.

29. Then called he for a light, and sprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas,

30. And brought them out (of the inner prison), and said, Sirs, (I, by this miracle, am induced to believe you are men sent to shew unto us the way of salvation, ver. 17.) [13] what (therefore) must I do to be saved?

31. And they said, Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house (for that faith will bring thee and them into the way of salvation).

32. And they spake to him the word of the Lord, and (to) all that were in his house.

33. And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and [14] was baptized, he and all his (house), straightway.

34. And when he had brought them into his house, he set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house.

35. And when it was day, the magistrates sent the serjeants, saying, Let those men go.

36. And the keeper of the prison told this saying to Paul, (viz.) The magistrates have sent to let you go: now therefore depart, and go in peace.

37. But Paul said, They have beaten us openly (and) uncondemned, being Romans, and have cast us into prison: and now do they (think to) thrust us out privily? nay, verily; but let them come themselves and fetch us out.

38. And the serjeants told these words to the magistrates: and they feared, when they heard that they were Romans.

39. And they came and besought them, and brought them out, and desired them to depart out of the city.

40. And they went out of the prison, and entered into the house of Lydia: and when they had seen the brethren, they comforted them, and departed (thence).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVI.

[1] Ver. 1. ὙΙΟ῾Σ γυναικός τινος Ἰουδαίας πιστῆς, πατρὸς δὲ Ἕλληνος, The son of a certain woman that was a Jewess, but his father was a Greek.] The law, saith Grotius, forbade the Jewish males to marry with a woman not subject to the law, but forbade not a Jewess to marry with a gentile, as Esther did with Ahasuerus; and this, saith he, may probably be concluded from the inquisition made by Ezra, of this crime, and the remedy prescribed for it, seeing he only inquires into those males who had taken strange wives, chapter the ninth and the tenth, but makes no mention of the women joined to strange husbands, or of their separation from them: yet is it certain from Josephus, that they esteemed this contrary to their law in his time; for he saith, that Drusilla married with Felix, an uncircumcised person, in contempt of their law; and that this is contrary to their interpretation of the law, see Ainsw. in Deut. vii. 3.

Note also, That the reason why Timothy was not circumcised, seems not to have been this, that he was under the power of his father and not of his mother; for then Paul should not have circumcised him without his father's leave; but because his father being a Greek, he was not to be circumcised but by his own choice. Now St. Paul being to preach to the Jews in all places where he came, as his custom was, could not have used Timothy in that ministry, had he not circumcised him; he therefore was only circumcised, as St. Paul became a Jew to the Jews for the gospel's sake, that he might be instrumental to gain the Jews.

I add my conjecture, that it was at or about this time that the gift given him by laying on of the apostle's hands, (2 Tim. i. 6.) might be conferred upon him; for seeing Barnabas was full of the Holy Ghost, (xi. 24.) John Mark was συνεργὸς, a coworker with Paul and Barnabas for the kingdom of God, (Colos. iv. 10.) Silas was a prophet, (Acts xv. 32.) Luke an evangelist, it seems reasonable to conceive, that Timothy, being taken with him for the same end, should be endued with the like gifts. Moreover, in the very next chapter, they came to Thessalonica, where Silas and Timotheus were so instrumental to convert them to the faith, that he indites his Epistle to them thus, Paul, and Sylvanus, and Timotheus, to the church of the Thessalonians; and speaks of him as his brother, the minister of God, and a coworker in the gospel of Christ, 1 Thess. iii. 2. yea, as an apostle of Christ, and one who was by God put in trust with the gospel, ii. 4. 6. He therefore must then have that imposition of hands, and those extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, which fitted him for the ministry; and yet this being the first time that St. Paul met with him, he could not have them by imposition of his hands before.

[2] Ver. 4. And they delivered to them to keep, τὰ δόγματα τὰ κεκριμένα ὑπὸ τῶν ἀποστόλων καὶ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων, the decrees ordained by the apostles and elders that were at Jerusalem.] Here observe, that though it be said, xv. 22. that it seemed good to the apostles and elders, with the whole church, to send men to Antioch; and though the proem of the decree runs thus, The apostles, and the elders, and the brethren, write to the church of Antioch, &c. ver. 22, 23. yet the decrees were made not by the brethren, but only by the apostles and elders. Thus, in like manner, the epistle of Clemens begins thus, The church of Rome to the church of the Corinthians.

[3] Ver. 6. They were forbidden by the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia.] viz. To preach it there at that time, not because that province belonged to St. John; for St. Paul preached there himself three years, (xx. 31.) and seven years after he leaves Timothy to correct the disorders that were then among them; in all which time, we hear not one word of St. John's being there: nor, (2.) because those of Asia Minor were not disposed to receive the gospel; for the next year they do receive it; but because the Lord would hasten them to a new work which they had not yet begun, viz. to preach to a Roman colony, (ver. 12. 21.)

[4] Ver. 11. Loosing from Troas we came.] Here Œcumenius notes, that this being the first time that St. Luke speaks in the plural number, his travels with St. Paul must begin from this time.

[5] Ver. 12. Ἥτις ἐστὶ πρώτη τῆς μερίδος τῆς Μακεδονίας πόλις, κολώνια, Which is the first city of that part of Macedonia, which is a colony.] Not the chief city or metropolis of Macedonia, for that was Thessalonica; but the first city which was a colony, which they who passed through the gulf of Strymon into Asia came unto. (See the note on Phil. i. 1.)

[6] Ver. 13. Οὗ ἐνομίζετο προσευχὴ εἶναι, Where prayer was wont to be made.] Or rather, Where a house of prayer, for the Jews and proselytes, was allowed to be by the law, or was accustomed to be; for νομίζεται signifies sometimes εἴθισται, it is accustomed, or usual; so νομίζεσθαι γυναῖκας πολλὰς ἔχειν, in Herodotus, is to have customarily more wives; γυμνοὺς εἰσιέναι νομίζεται, in Aristophanes, Nub. i. 6. it is customary to come in naked; sometimes it signifies, saith Phavorinus, νενομισμένον ἐστὶ, it is by law established, as when Aristophanes saith, Nub. iv. 3. καὶ μὴν νενόμισταί γε, for so it is by law established; and, iii. 3. ἡ σωφροσύνη νενόμισται, modesty is by law established; many instances of both these senses may be found in Stephanus. That προσευχὴ signifies an oratory, or a house of prayer, hath been noted on Luke vi. 12. and proved from the testimonies of Philo and Josephus. These synagogues, or oratories, say the Jewish writers, were often בשרות in the fields, and sometimes near rivers, as here, because of greater purity, saith Philo; and because perhaps the laws would not permit them to exercise a strange religion within the city. (See Vitringa de Synag. vet. lib. i. par. i. cap. 11.) Accordingly Epiphanius saith,* that this very place proves that the Jews had oratories out of the cities, and that the Samaritans also had the like two miles from Sychem.

[7] Ver. 14. Ἧς ὁ Κύριος διήνοιξε τὴν καρδίαν, προσέχειν, Whose heart the Lord opened to attend to the things spoken by Paul.] To open the ear, or the heart, is a phrase used to signify the rendering any person willing or inclined to any thing. So Psal. xl. 7. Mine ears hast thou opened, i. e. thou hast inclined me to hearken to thy commandments, Chald. for so it follows, then said I, Lo, I come to do thy will: so 1 Chron. xvii. 15. ἤνοιξας τὸ οὖς, Thou hast opened the ear of thy servant to build thee a house. This God is sometimes said to do by awakening men by his afflicting hand: so Job xxxvi. 8. 10. If they be bound in fetters, and holden with cords of affliction, he openeth their ears to discipline, ver. 10. and, ver. 15. he openeth their ears in oppression: and sometimes he doth it by the preaching of the word; for as they who are said to be taught by the word, (see note on John vi. 45.) or the example of God, (see note on 1 Thess. iv. 9.) are said to be taught of God; so they who have their hearts affected with it, and opened by it, may be said properly enough to have their hearts opened by him. And here it deserveth to be noted, (1.) that the Lord is said to open the heart of Lydia, not to believe, but προσέχειν, to attend to the things spoken by St. Paul, viz. to weigh and seriously to consider of the greatness of the blessings promised to believers, remission of sins and eternal life; and that attention of hers produced this faith in her. So the Lord represents himself as knocking at the door of men's hearts, (Rev. iii. 20.) i. e. by the preachers of his word, attended with the incitations of his Holy Spirit, but entering only when men open their hearts to receive him. And, lastly, Woltzogenius well notes, that if, in a place where no example of faith had been given, no name of Christ had been preached, some extraordinary assistance was vouchsafed towards the conversion of this woman, this single instance, in a case so extraordinary, must not be looked upon as a thing absolutely necessary in all cases. In a word, either she only was ἄξια worthy, i. e. prepared, disposed, and fitted to receive this influx; or, if it were absolutely necessary that she might believe, and yet she alone, though no more fitted and disposed for it than the rest, received it, the other auditors, for want of this extraordinary influence, must lie under a necessity of not believing, and so it could not be blameworthy in them that they did not believe. (See note on Matt. x. 11.)

[8] Ver. 15. Παρεβιάσατο ἡμᾶς, She constrained us.] i. e. By her urgent desires and pressing entreaties: so Gen. xix. 3. Lot κατεβιάζετο αὐτοὺς, constrained the angels to come to his house; and Jacob ἐβιάζετο, constrained Esau to receive his gift. So when Saul would not eat, κατεβιάζοντο αὐτὸν, his servants and the woman constrained him: (1 Sam. xxviii. 25.) so it is said of Christ, that the two disciples παρεβιάζοντο αὐτὸν, constrained him to go in with them, Luke xxiv. 29.

[9] Ver. 16. Πνεῦμα Πύθωνος, A spirit of divination.] For Hesychius, Suidas, and Phavorinus, agree in this, that Python is δαιμόνιον μαντικὸν, a spirit that divined, or foretold things to come. In the temple of Apollo, who was called Pytho, the organ of this oracle was always a woman, who sitting on her brazen tripos, received her enthusiasm à secretis; their god, as Origen saith,* being delighted in nothing more ἢ τοῖς κόλποις τῶν γυναικῶν, than in those parts; and the woman being thus† filled with the Spirit, and retaining in memory the phantasms raised by the agitation of the demon, did τὸ ἐσόμενον προαγορεύεσθαι, foretell what would be to those that inquired of her, as did the Pythoness here; she also delivered her answers‡ with a low voice as out of her belly, and was hence styled ventriloqua, and ἐγγαστρίμαντις; and because others who pretended to prophesy did also so, that if their answers were not true, it might be imputed to men's not hearing well what they had uttered; hence these diviners are by the Septuagint not only styled ἐγγαστρίμυθοι, speakers out of the belly, (Lev. xix. 31. xx. 6. Deut. xviii. 11. 1 Sam. xxviii. 3. 7—9. 1 Chron. x. 13. 2 Chron. xxxiii. 6. Isa. viii. 19.) but also said, to speak out of the ground. (Isa. xix. 3.)

[10] Ver. 21. Which it is not lawful for us to receive, being Romans.] For though there was as yet no express law of the senate or the emperor against the Christians, yet was there an old law of the Romans, forbidding them, "aut novos Deos, aut alienigenas colere,"§ either to worship new gods, or the gods of other nations; and requiring them to worship the gods, κατὰ τὰ πάτρια,‖ of their own country, from which Christianity dissuaded them, not suffering any of them to worship the gods of their fathers, but requiring them to turn from those dumb idols to the living God; (1 Thess. i. 10.) and hence St. Paul speaks thus to those of Lystra, We preach to you, that ye should turn from these vanities to the living God, who made heaven and earth, (xiv. 15.)

‖ "Omnes enim religione moventur, et Deos patrios sibi retinendos arbitrantur." Orat. v. in Verrem. Τὸ μὲν θεῖον αὐτός τε σέβου κατὰ τὰ πάτρια, καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους τιμᾶν ἀνάγκαζε. Mæcen. ad August. apud Dion. lib. lii. vide Liv. lib. xxxix. cap. 16.

[11] Ver. 22. The magistrates rent off their clothes.] i. e. The clothes of Paul and Silas; for so it was the custom not only among the Jews, as Dr. Hammond here notes, but among the Roman magistrates, such as these were to command the lictors, τὴν ἐσθῆτα καταῤῥῆξαι, ταῖς ῥάβδοις τὸ σῶμα ξαίνειν, to rend open the clothes of the criminal, and to beat his body with rods, as Grotius here notes. The Roman magistrates, saith Brissonius, "nudari, et spoliari hominem, virgasque expediri jubent," command him to be made naked, and spoiled of his clothes, and the lictors to be ready with their rods; and this, saith he, in Plutarch, is ἐσθῆτα παρασχίσαι, to rend his garments. (De formulis, lib. v. p. 481.)

[12] Ver. 27. Ἔμελλεν ἑαυτὸν ἀναιρεῖν, He was about to kill himself.] Self-murder being common among the Greeks* and Romans, allowed by all philosophers, and practised by most of them, to avoid, or to deliver themselves from any misery they feared, or laboured under: this gaoler therefore would have done it for fear of a severer punishment, they who let prisoners escape being to suffer the punishment they had deserved, L. ad commentariensem cap. de custodia reorum, saith Grotius.

[13] Ver. 30. What shall I do, ἵνα σωθῶ, that I may be saved?] Grotius saith here, that he had conceived some hope of a better life from tradition and the doctrine of the philosophers; I rather think he spake thus to them, as knowing, or conceiving from the words of the Pythoness, they were appointed to shew to others the way of salvation.

[14] Ver. 33. He was baptized, he and all his.] St. Chrysostom here notes, that this gaoler was that Stephanas of whom St. Paul saith, I baptized also the household of Stephanas; (1 Cor. i. 16.) but if so, he must have come from Corinth, or some other part of Achaia, and have settled at Philippi, and afterward have returned thither again; for the Stephanas there mentioned by St. Paul, was the first-fruits of Achaia, (1 Cor. xvi. 15.) and an eminent person at Corinth, (ver. 17.)

CHAP. XVII.

1. NOW when they had passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, where was a synagogue of the Jews:

2. [1] And Paul, as his manner was (where he found synagogues of the Jews), went in to them, and three sabbath-days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures,

3. Opening and alleging (Gr. explaining and setting before their eyes this doctrine), that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen (Gr. that it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise) again from the dead; and (saying), that this Jesus, whom I preach to you, is Christ (Gr. that he is Christ the Saviour whom I declare to you).

4. And some of them believed, and consorted with Paul and Silas; and (also) [2] of the devout Greeks great multitudes, and of the chief women not a few.

5. But the Jews which believed not, (being) moved with envy (or zeal), took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baser sort (or wicked men loitering in the market), and gathered a company, and set (gathering a company they set) all the city on an uproar, and assaulted (Gr. assaulting) the house of Jason, and (they) sought to bring them (Paul and Silas) out to the people (to be the objects of their rage).

6. And when they found them not, they drew Jason and certain brethren to the rulers of the city, crying (out), [3] These that have turned the world upside down (i. e. unsettled the world) are come hither also;

7. Whom Jason hath received: and [4] these all do (what is) contrary to the decrees of Cæsar, saying, There is another King (besides him, even) one Jesus.

8. And they troubled the people and the rulers of the city, when they (or who) heard these things.

9. And when they had taken security of Jason, and of the other (ver. 6. to answer to the charge laid against them), they let them go.

10. And the brethren immediately sent away Paul and Silas by night to Berea: who coming thither went into a synagogue of the Jews.

11. [5] These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they (Gr. they of them that) received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched (Gr. searching) the Scriptures daily, (to know) whether these things were so (as Paul had said).

12. Therefore many of them (i. e. those Jews) believed; also of the honourable women which were Greeks, and of (the) men (which were so), not a few.

13. But when the Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge that the word of God was preached of (by) Paul at Berea, they came thither also, and stirred up the people (against him).

14. And immediately the brethren sent away Paul to [6] go as it were to the sea (that so his persecutors might miss of him): but Silas and Timotheus abode there still.

15. And (but) they that conducted Paul brought him to Athens (by land); and receiving a commandment (directed) to Silas and Timotheus to come to him (thither) with all speed, they departed.

16. Now while Paul waited for them at Athens, his spirit was stirred (Gr. exasperated) in him, when he saw the [7] city wholly given to idolatry (Gr. full of idols).

17. Therefore disputed he in the synagogue with the Jews, and with the devout persons (of the Greeks), and in the market daily with them that met with him (or he met with there).

18. [8] Then certain philosophers of the Epicureans, and of the stoics, encountered him. And some said, What will this babbler say? Other some (οἱ δὲ, but others said), He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods: because he preached to them Jesus, and the resurrection (by him, iv. 2. or the resurrection of him).

19. And they took him, and brought him to Areopagus, saying, May we know what this new doctrine, whereof thou speakest, is?

20. For thou bringest certain strange things to our ears: we would know therefore what these things mean.

21. [9] (For all the Athenians and strangers which were there spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell or to hear some new thing.)

22. Then Paul stood in the midst of Mars' hill, and said, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things [10] ye are too superstitious.

* "Sapiens non dubitat, si ita melius sit, de vita migrare." Torquatus apud Cic. de fin. Bon. lib. i. Εὐλόγως τὸ φασὶ ἐξάγειν ἑαυτὸν τοῦ βίου τὸν σοφὸν κἂν ἐν σκληροτέρᾳ γίγνηται ἀλγηδόνι. Laert. de Sto. in Zeno. lib. vii. p. 195. Zeno, Democritus, Cleanthes, Aristotle, Menippus, Metrocles, Empedocles, Pythagoras, Cato.

23. For as I passed by, and beheld your devotions (i. e. the objects of your worship), I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I to you (who he is, and how to be worshipped).

24. [11] God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is (he being) Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands (as one contained in, or confined to, them, by human consecrations of them);

25. Neither is (he) worshipped with (the works of) men's hands, as though he needeth any thing (as needing any person's art to promote his worship), seeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things (and so is able to produce these things, were they any ways needful for his worship);

26. And (he) hath made of one blood (of Adam) all nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, (i. e. set the fixed seasons of the year, Gen. i. 14. viii. 22.) and the bounds of their habitations; (see Deut. xxxii. 8.)

27. That they should (or instructing them by those means to) [12] seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him (which in that darkness in which they lie they cannot easily do), though he be not far from every (any) one of us:

28. For in (or by) him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain also of your own poets have said, For (they have declared that) we are also his offspring.

29. Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like to gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art or man's device (i. e. that the Creator is like man, or his workmanship).

30. And the times of this ignorance God (hath hitherto) winked at (sending them no prophets to instruct them better); [13] but now (he) commandeth all men every where to repent (of this idolatry):

31. Because he hath appointed a day, in which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained (to be their judge); whereof he hath given assurance to all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead.

32. And when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, [14] some (of them) mocked (at it; but) [15] others said, We will hear thee again of this matter.

33. So Paul departed from among them.

34. Howbeit (his discourse was not wholly ineffectual, for) certain men clave to him, and believed: among the which (i. e. whom) was Dionysius the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVII.

[1] Ver. 2. AND Paul, κατὰ τὸ εἰωθὸς, as his manner was, went in to them, and three sabbath-days reasoned with them.] Here we learn, (1.) that St Paul was not restrained from preaching to the Jews by his being an apostle of the gentiles; for as the gospel was the power of God through faith, to the salvation of the Jews first, and also of the gentiles, so Paul in preaching of it testifies to the Jews, and also to the Greeks, repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ; (xx. 21.) and wheresoever he comes, his manner is to go first into a synagogue of the Jews, and to preach to them. (Acts xiii. 5. 14. 42. xiv. 1. xvi. 15. xvii. 10. xviii. 4. 19. xix. 8.) At the beginning of his conversion we find him preaching Christ in the synagogues, (ix. 20.) and throughout all the region of Judea, (xxvi. 20.) his commission authorizing him to testify what he had seen and heard to all men, (xxii. 15.) to the people and to the gentiles, (xxvi. 17.) to the gentiles and to the children of Israel, (ix. 15.) which is sufficient to confound that distinction of provinces which some have imagined among the apostles.

Moreover it is observable, that Paul enters into their synagogues, and reasons with, or preacheth to, them, only on their sabbath-days; for as here it is said, he reasoned with them three sabbath-days; so xiii. 14. he enters into the synagogues on the sabbath-day, and, ver. 42. the gentiles desire him to preach to them the next sabbath-day, and, ver. 44. almost all the whole city were assembled on the next sabbath-day; xvi. 13. he goes out of Philippi to a synagogue on the sabbath-day, and xviii. 4. he discourses in the synagogue every sabbath-day, which seems to intimate, that, whatever they did in Jerusalem, or in Judea, yet in the synagogues out of Judea they did not ordinarily meet for religious worship on the second and fifth days of the week; for otherwise why is it that St. Paul, who reasoned daily in the school of Tyrannus, xix. 9. should only go to the synagogues of the Jews to reason with them on the sabbath-day?

[2] Ver. 4. Τῶν τε σεβομένων Ἑλλήνων—γυναικῶν τε τῶν πρώτων, Of the devout Greeks, and of the chief women.] So ver. 12. and xiii. 50. That by the devout Greeks we are to understand the proselytes among the Greeks, is evident, because they are so called, ver. 12. and are distinguished from the Jews, ver. 17. xiv. 1. xvi. 14. xxiii. 4. They were proselytes, not of justice, i. e. such as received circumcision, and observed the law of Moses, but only proselytes of the gate, who owned the true God of Israel, and went up to worship him at their feasts, (John xii. 20. Acts viii. 27.) and who were permitted to read the Scriptures, as the eunuch did, and to hear them read in the synagogues, otherwise they could not have heard Paul there, and much less could they have compared what he said with the writings of the prophets as we find they did, ver. 11, 12.

As for the chief women, we learn from Josephus,* that the Jews, in many places where they dwelt, prevailed upon many of them, either wholly to embrace their religion, or to become proselytes of the gate, and many of these became Christian converts. (See more of this in the note on 1 Pet. i. 1.)

[3] Ver. 6. Οἱ ἀναστατώσαντες, They who disturb the world;] i. e. So as to unsettle things and bring them into confusion; for this they conceived the introduction of new gods tended to, as we learn from the words of the consuls† in Livy, and the Roman laws. (See the note on xvi. 21.)

[4] Ver. 7. These all do contrary to the decrees of Cæsar, saying, There is another King.] This, saith Grotius,

* "De inculis Damasci dicit eos à Judæis occidendis abstinuisse, eò quod ἐδεδίκασαν τὰς ἑαυτῶν γυναῖκας ἁπάσας πλὴν ὀλίγων ὑπηγμένας τῇ Ἰουδαϊκῇ θρησκείᾳ." De Bello Jud. lib. ii. cap. 41.

† "Quoties hoc patrum avorumque ætate negotium est magistratibus datum, ut sacra externa fieri vocarent: judicabant enim prudentissimi viri, nihil æque dissolvendæ religionis esse quam ubi non patrio, sed externo ritu sacrificarelur." Liv. lib. xxxix. cap. 16. "Qui novas et incognitas religiones inducunt ex quibus animi hominum moveantur, honestiores deportantur." Paulus Sent. 5.

was contrary to the decree of Cæsar, because the senate first, and afterward the emperor, suffered none to be called kings without their permission.

[5] Ver. 11. These were εὐγενέστεροι more noble, &c.] The Jews looked upon themselves not only as of free but noble birth, as being of the seed of Abraham. (See the note on 1 Cor. i. 28.) They are, saith Philo,* in the opinion of their calumniators, βαρβαρικοὶ, barbarians, but in truth, ἐλεύθεροι καὶ εὐγενεῖς, they are free, and of noble birth; here therefore St. Luke shews them wherein their true nobility consisted; viz. in such a disposition of the soul as inclined them to attend to the doctrine of the gospel.

[6] Ver. 14. To go as it were to the sea.] Words being designed to represent our minds to others, we cannot deceive them with ambiguous words, without acting contrary to the nature of them; but motions having no determinate signification, to use them so as to consult our safety in such a motion, as may deceive our enemies and secure us, hath nothing in it blameworthy.

[7] Ver. 16. When he saw the city κατείδωλον, full of idols.] i. e. Images, οὐ γὰρ ἦν ἀλλαχοῦ τοσαῦτα ἰδεῖν εἴδωλα, for so many images could not be seen elsewhere, Pausanias† saying that they did εὐσεβεῖν θεοῦς ἄλλων πλέον, worship the gods more than others, and exceeded all others in their diligence εἰς τὰ θεῖα, to the gods; and Strabo‡ saying, that they were hospitable to the gods, πολλὰ γὰρ τῶν ξενικῶν Ἱερῶν παραθεσαντο, for they received many strange gods, insomuch that the comedians ridiculed them upon that account; and all the rest cited by Dr. Hammond say the same thing; for in those times of heathenism they never worshipped a god without an image to represent him to them; and therefore, as St. Paul saith here, that they multiplied their idols; so ver. 22. that they were δεισιδαιμονέστεροι, more prone than others to worship demons. We may here also laugh at the absurd folly of Laurinus's caution, not to believe Stephanus, saying in his Lexicon, that εἴδωλον signifies an image, and not as he would have it, a shadow, spectrum, or phantom; for would it not be ridiculous to render St. Paul's words thus, I saw your city full of phantoms, shadows, and appearances of nothing?

[8] Ver. 18. Certain philosophers of the Epicureans and stoics—said, What will ὁ σπερμολόγος οὗτος, this babbler say, &c.] To shew the appositeness of the apostle's discourse to these philosophers, let it be noted,

First, That the Epicureans§ did not believe that the world was made by God, but by a casual conflux of atoms; nor did they own the providence of God, or think he had any care of mankind: they also held, that the gods were of human shape, and that there was no resurrection, nor any punishments after death.

The stoics‖ held the world to be a god, that matter was eternal, and God was corporeal, and that all things were subject to fate.

Secondly, As for the word σπερμολόγος, babbler, Eustathius gives us two senses of it, which seem to have been the occasion of their application of it to St. Paul: (1.) That Paul was disputing with those he met with in the market, for, saith he,* Ἀττικοὶ τοὺς σπερμολόγους ἐκάλουν τοὺς περὶ τὰ ἐμπόρια, καὶ ἀγορὰς διατρίβοντας, the Attics called them σπερμολόγοι, who were conversant in the markets, and places of merchandise. Œcumenius here saith, that a little bird that gathered up the seeds scattered in the market-place was called by this name, and hence, τοὺς εὐτελεῖς, καὶ οὐκ ἀξίους λόγου σπερμολόγους ἐκάλουν, despicable persons, not worthy to be named, were called σπερμολόγοι; and in this etymology Suidas, Phavorinus, the scholiast upon Aristophanes de Avibus, p. 569. and almost all the grammarians do agree. (2.) Because he pretended to some new systems of divinity, which they were not acquainted with, and which they thought proceeded from some vain opinions he had entertained; for the word σπερμολογεῖν, saith he, is used,† ἐπὶ τῶν ἀλαζονευμένων ἀμεθόδως ἐπὶ μαθημάτων ἐκ τίνων παρακουσμάτων, of those who, from some false opinions, boasted unreasonably of their learning.

Thirdly, They add, that St. Paul seemed to be a setter forth of strange gods, because he preached up Jesus and the resurrection, where Chrysostom and Œcumenius note, that being accustomed to worship female goddesses, they thought ἀνάστασιν θεόν τινα εἶναι, ἀνάστασις to be a god; but as Dr. Bentley‡ saith, they too well understood the notion of a resurrection to think it a goddess, and therefore I prefer the exposition in the paraphrase, as being confirmed from ver. 32. when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, some mocked.

[9] Ver. 21. The Athenians spent their time in telling or hearing some new thing.] Of this see Grotius.

[10] Ver. 22. Κατὰ πάντα ὡς δεισιδαιμονεστέρους ὑμᾶς θεωρῶ, In all things I perceive you too much superstitious.] i. e. Too much addicted to the worship of demons: for δεισιδαιμονία is, saith Phavorinus, φόβος δαιμόνων, the fear of demons. And that in this sense St. Paul doth here use the word, is evident, he styling them thus superstitious, because he found their city full of images, and an altar to the unknown God, of which Pausanias,§ Lucian, Philostratus, and others, speak. It is certain from Pausanias, and confessed by St. Jerome, that they had altars θεοῖς ἀγνώστοις, to the unknown gods, in the plural, yet it is as certain from Lucian,‖ as well as from Œcumenius,¶ that the altar was inscribed τῷ Θεῷ ἀγνώστῳ, though that was not the whole inscription, and therefore St. Jerome is too bold to correct the apostle here. If the occasion of the erecting of this altar was, as some say, the complaint of Pan,†† that he was not worshipped by them, this gave the apostle a fit occasion, by calling them to worship τὸν ἐπὶ πάντα, that God who made the heaven and earth, and all things in them, to say, him that you ignorantly worship declare I unto you, he being also, as Josephus saith, κατ' οὐσίαν ἄγνωστος, unknown as to his essence, and by the heathens called Deus incertus, because he would not be worshipped in an image, and so they were uncertain where to find him; and in the Scripture being styled the God ὃν οὐκ ἔγνω, whom the heathen world, and their philosophers, knew not. [11] Ver. 24. God that made the world, and all things therein,—is not worshipped with men's hands; ver. 25. as if he needed any thing.] To clear up the argument of the apostle here, it will be necessary to search a little into the principles of the heathens concerning God, and the worship of him; let it then be observed,

First, That the wisest heathens worshipped their gods in human shape; so Maximus Tyrius† saith of the Greeks, they thought God must have a body, and that body they generally held must be of human shape, and therefore such as might be represented in an image of gold, silver, or stone, made after the fashion of a man. Thus Velleius‡ in Cicero, inquiring of the form of the gods, speaks thus: "Ac de forma quidem partim natura nos admonet, partim ratio docet, nam à natura habemus omnes omnium gentium speciem nullam aliam nisi humanam deorum," That nature teaches they are of human shape, seeing all nations represent them in this form; nor do they ever occur to any men, sleeping or waking, in any other shape, and that men, "cum artificium effingunt, fabricamque divinam,"§ when they make an image, or Divine fabric, make all things "in hominis figura," in the shape of man; whence his conclusion is this, "homines esse specie deos confitendum est," it must be owned that the gods are like in shape to men.

Secondly, They held indeed that God must be αὐταρκης, self-sufficient, and thought with Lucian‖ it was ridiculous to conceive ὡς ἀνθρώπων δεοὶ ἐνδεεῖς εἰσι, that the gods should stand in need of men, yet they conceived those images¶ were, through the frailty of human nature, needful to the worship of the Deity, that they might view and touch them, and have them near to them; on these accounts they thought there could be no religion without images, and objected this to the Christians, that they†† worshipped a god they could not shew, and thought that even they used images, though they concealed them; yea, they pronounced both them and other nations, viz. Scythians, atheists, because they had no images. And upon this account they used a kind of magical consecration of their images to bring their gods down unto them: so Minutius‡‡ saith, "funditur, fabricatur, sculpitur, nondum deus est, ecce ornatur, consecratur, oratur; tunc postremo deus est." Here therefore is the reason why the apostle saith,

First, That God dwelleth not in temples made with hands, i. e. as one confined to them, and who could not be addressed to every where, since, as Seneca says,§§ there is no need of going to the edile that we may pray to the gods, or, as Lucian says jocularly,* Æsculapius is not deaf, that men must go near, that they may pray to him. And,

Secondly, This is the reason why he saith, He is not worshipped with men's hands, as if he could be only worshipped or spoken to in a temple, or in a consecrated image made by man. And,

Thirdly, Why he adds, that we ought not to think the Godhead like to an image made of gold or silver.

[12] Ver. 27. That they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him.] Here, first, we learn, that God framed the world with this design, that men by contemplation of it might seek after the author of it, and seeking, find him; and therefore must have made it so as to contain sufficient evidence that it was made by his power and wisdom. Now to seek after God, in the Scripture-phrase, is not only to inquire whether there be a God, but so to seek him out, that we may give him that worship which is due to him; as when the apostle saith, He that cometh to God, must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of those that diligently seek him. (Heb. xi. 6.) To find him, is to obtain his grace and favour, or to find him good and propitious to them: for to what other end should men so solicitously seek after him, but to obtain his grace and favour? Or why should they desire to find him, but that they may receive some benefit from him thus found? Is it not upon this account, that all men come to him, and do him service? And would any one do it if they expected no advantage by it? And in this sense God saith, If from thence thou shalt seek the Lord thy God, thou shalt find him, if thou seek him with all thy heart, Deut. iv. 29. If ye seek him, he will be found of you, 2 Chron. xv. 2. Note,

Secondly, That sinners cannot thus seek or hope to find God, unless they can expect to find him merciful in the pardon of those sins which they do confess and do forsake; and that this hath been a principle embraced by all nations, appears from the propitiatory sacrifices, which have so generally obtained among them, even from the beginning. And therefore all this must depend upon this foundation, or the knowledge of this one thing, that God is the maker of heaven and earth, and all that therein is; and so it evidently doth. For,

First, That which made all things, must be itself unmade, and so must be eternal; it must have power over all things, and so be almighty.

Secondly, That which made all things, must have all power to direct, govern, order, and dispose of all things, as he pleases, and so his creatures must depend on him for protection, and the disposal of all their affairs.

Thirdly, That Being which made all things in such an excellent order and dependance on each other, in such constant and unchangeable vicissitudes, fitted with such faculties, adapted to such ends and uses, must have infinite wisdom, and must design things for those ends for which he hath thus fitted them.

Fourthly, He who hath made things so, as that they constantly in their respective seasons produce things good and useful for the preservation and comfort of those creatures he hath made, filling their mouths with food, and their hearts with gladness, must be good to all, even to the unthankful and the wicked, and so his tender mercies must be over all his works; which is the argument here used, ver. 26.

Fifthly, He who vouchsafeth such kindness to, and maketh such provisions for, those bodies, which we have common to us with the brutes, must have made some provisions for that soul, which is our better part, and which is more especially derived from him; they therefore must be capable of receiving blessings and favours from him; and if lapsed and sinful creatures, and made so as that they certainly will be subject to sin, they must be capable of finding mercy with him, when they return from their iniquity.

[13] Ver. 30. God who overlooked the times of ignorance, ταυῦν παραγγέλλει πᾶσι πανταχοῦ, hath now sent his message to all men every where to repent.] The ταυῦν here seems not to refer to μετανοεῖν, to repent, as if God did not formerly require men to repent of their sins committed against the law of nature, for then they were not obliged to reform, or turn from them; but it refers rather to the word παραγγέλλει, and signifies, that whereas before he had sent no messengers, or prophets, to the heathen world, to proclaim his wrath against them for their ungodliness and unrighteousness, and to call them to repentance for those sins, he now had sent his apostles to all the ends of the earth with this message; and that by them he had given them a fresh assurance of his purpose to judge and condemn the impenitent, by the resurrection of that Son of God whom he had appointed to be the judge of all men: Mr. Dodwell therefore seems to be mistaken, when he concludes from these words, and from Acts xiv. 16. that God had not obliged all other nations, but only the peculium, to worship himself, before he had revealed his pleasure to them, and saith,* "That these words rather plainly imply the contrary, that while the supreme God was ἄγνωστος, unknown, God did excuse them from that duty, on account of their ignorance of what otherwise would have been their duty, if it had been required of them, and they had known that the supreme Being had required it:" for, first, this is directly contrary to the express words of the apostle Paul, who declares that, τὸ γνωστὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, that which might be known of God was manifested to them, for God had declared it to them, to wit, his eternal power and godhead; and also, that this was manifested to them from the beginning of the world, not by any positive revelation, but from the visible things of the creation, (Rom. i. 19, 20.) and that this manifestation rendered them ἀναπολόγητοι, without excuse, who did not glorify (and therefore worship) him as God, neither were thankful to him for his benefits conferred upon them. And this is farther evident from the two places cited by him; for though God so far suffered them to walk in their own ways, as that he sent no prophet to instruct them, nevertheless he left not himself without a witness, that it was he who did them good, &c. (Acts xiv. 17.) and who was therefore to be thanked and worshipped as their great benefactor (see the note there): and though he winked at the times of ignorance, yet even then he expected they should so seek the Lord that they might find him (Acts xvii. 17. see the note there); and it is strange, that the dreadful consequences of this assertion did not deter him from espousing it; for hence it evidently follows, first, that no man can know, who is the true God, or that he is to be worshipped, by the light of nature, without a revelation. Secondly, That either idolatry or atheism must innocently obtain throughout the whole heathen world; for if they are left ignorant of the true God, and it is not their duty to worship him, they must either not be obliged to worship any God, or left free, if not obliged, to commit idolatry, by giving the worship due to the true God alone, to them who by nature are no gods. And, thirdly, that they must either be obliged to worship the very devil, or left free to do it; the gods of the heathens (saith the Scripture) being devils; and seeing God is the fountain of all obligation, he must oblige them thus to worship his grand enemy. Fourthly, Hence it follows, that when they had the gospel-revelation imparted to them, they could not be obliged, as he saith they were, to repent of their former idolatry, in giving the worship due to the true God to idols or false gods; because he plainly here asserts, they could not know, that it was their duty to worship the true God, and so the first and second commandments must be only positive precepts, but no parts of the law of nature, or the moral law, that being of perpetual and universal obligation.

CHAP. XVIII.

1. AFTER these things Paul departed from Athens, and came to Corinth;

2. And found a certain Jew named Aquila, born in Pontus, lately come from Italy, with his wife Priscilla (because that [1] Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome): and (he) came to them.

3. And because he was of the same craft, he abode with them, and wrought (at it): for by their occupation they were tentmakers.

4. And he reasoned in the synagogue every sabbath (day), and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks (that Jesus was the Christ).

5. And when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul [2] was pressed in spirit, and testified (again) to the Jews that Jesus was (the) Christ.

6. And when they opposed themselves (to this doctrine), and blasphemed (Christ), [3] he shook his raiment (in token of his intention to leave them to their infidelity), and (therefore) said to them, Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean (from it); [4] from henceforth I will go (and preach) to the gentiles.

7. And he departed thence, and entered into a certain man's house, named Justus, (being) one that worshipped (the true) God, whose house joined hard to the synagogue.

8. And Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians hearing (the word) believed, and were baptized.

9. Then spake the Lord to Paul by night in a vision (saying), Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace:

10. For I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee: (speak freely,) for [5] I have much people in this city.

11. And he continued there a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them.

12. And when Gallio was the deputy of Achaia, the Jews made insurrection with one accord against Paul, and brought him to the judgment-seat (of Gallio),

13. Saying, This fellow persuadeth men to worship God contrary to the law (of the Jews).

14. And when Paul was now about to open his mouth, Gallio said to the Jews, If it were a matter of wrong or wicked lewdness, O ye Jews (which you object against this man), reason would that I should bear with you:

15. [6] But if it be a question (only) of a word and names, and of your law, look you to it; for I will be no judge of such matters.

16. And he drove them from the judgment-seat.

17. Then all the Greeks took [7] Sosthenes the chief ruler of the (Jewish) synagogue, and beat him before the judgment-seat. And Gallio cared for none of these things.

18. And Paul after this tarried there yet a good while, and then took his leave of the brethren, and sailed thence into Syria, and with him Priscilla and Aquila; [8] having shorn his head in Cenchrea: for he had a vow (of Nazaritism upon him, which being expired, he was to shave his head according to the law, Numb. vi.)

19. And he came to Ephesus, and left them there: but he himself entered into the synagogue, and reasoned with the Jews.

20. (And) when they desired him to tarry longer time with them, he consented not;

21. But bade them farewell, saying, I must by all means keep this feast that cometh in Jerusalem, but I will return again to you, if God will. And he sailed from Ephesus,

22. [9] And when he had landed at Cæsarea (Stratonis), and gone up (to Jerusalem), and saluted the church, he went down to Antioch.

23. And after he had spent some time there, he departed, and went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia in order, strengthening all the disciples.

24. And a certain Jew named Apollos, born at Alexandria, (being) an eloquent man, and mighty in the Scriptures, came to Ephesus.

25. This man was (somewhat) instructed in the way of the Lord; and being fervent in spirit, he spake and taught diligently (Gr. exquisitely) the things of the Lord, [10] knowing only the baptism of John (which called the Jews to repentance, in expectation of the Messiah, who was suddenly to appear, and to baptize them with the Holy Ghost).

26. And he began to speak boldly (or openly) in the synagogue (that the time of the promised Messiah must be come): whom when Aquila and Priscilla had heard, they took him to them, and expounded to him the way of God more perfectly.

27. And when he was disposed to pass into Achaia, the brethren (at Ephesus) wrote, exhorting the disciples to receive him: who, when he was come, helped them much [11] who had believed through (the) grace (of God):

28. For he mightily convinced the Jews, and that publicly, shewing by the (testimony of) the Scriptures that Jesus was (the) Christ.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVIII.

[1] Ver. 1. CLAUDIUS had commanded all the Jews to depart from Rome.] Though Orosius fixeth this edict to the ninth year of Claudius, yet did it not come forth till the twelfth of Claudius; for the sedition of the Jews, mentioned by Eusebius from Josephus, happened in the eleventh year of Claudius, under Quadratus, president of Syria, and concerned not the Romans, the calamity falling only on the Jews; but after it followed another the same year, in which the thieves in Judea assaulted Stephen, the servant of Cæsar, took away his baggage, and killed the Roman soldiers, as both Tacitus* and Josephus† do inform us: and then Claudius "causis rebellionis auditis," having heard from the president the causes of this rebellion, made this edict, of which Tacitus saith nothing, because it came not from the decree of the senate, but was the edict of Claudius only; and of which Suetonius‡ saith thus, "Judæos impulsore Christo assiduè tumultuantes Româ expulit," he expelled the Jews from Rome, they making continual tumults by the impulse or persuasion of Christ; where, as he mistakes in the name, so in the thing, the Jews having had then no contests at Rome that we read of with the Christians; and the Christians to be sure causing no tumults there. The true cause of their banishment was therefore that which hath been hinted from Tacitus.

[2] Ver. 5. Συνείχετο τῷ πνεύματι, He was pressed in spirit.] i. e. Either his own or the Holy Spirit so powerfully urged and constrained him, that he could not refrain from speaking: so Luke xii. 50. I have a baptism to be baptized with, καὶ πῶς συνέχομαι, and how am I straitened till it be accomplished? 2 Cor. v. 14. The love of Christ, συνέχει, constraineth us, i. e. it will not suffer us to rest from promoting the service of Christ. When this word is joined with a passion that restrains from action, then it is to be rendered restrain, as συνέχεσθαι φόβῳ, to be restrained by fear, Job iii. 24. Luke viii. 37. when the motive is both ways, then is the pressure so also; as when St. Paul saith, συνέχομαι ἐκ τῶν δύο, I am pressed between two, urged to depart that I may be with Christ, restrained from it that I may do farther service to his church. (Phil. i. 23.)

[3] Ver. 6. He shook his raiment, and said, Your blood be upon your own heads.] The command of our Saviour was to shake off the dust from their feet; and so St. Paul and Barnabas do, xiii. 51. but here Paul also shakes it off from his raiment, as a testimony to them, that he had now renounced any farther dealings with them of that place, as being a refractory people; adding, that now their blood or ruin would lie upon their own heads, that is, they only would be guilty of it. (See Matt. xxvii. 24, 25. Acts xx. 26.)

[4] From henceforth I will turn to the gentiles.] This at first sight seems to be a declaration, that he would leave off preaching to the Jews wherever he came, and wholly apply himself to the conversion of the gentiles; but by comparing his actions with the places where this phrase, or something like it, doth occur, it appears he only did intend to say, he would no longer preach to the Jews of that place; for after this is said, we find him still entering into the synagogues, and preaching to the Jews, or calling them to him to hear the word: so he speaks to the Jews, xiii. 46. Seeing ye refuse the word, lo, we return to the gentiles; and yet, xiv. 1. he enters at Iconium into the synagogue of the Jews, and preacheth to them: so also xix. 9. xxviii. 28.

[5] Ver. 10. I have much people in this city.] So they are called who are still heathens, not because of any absolute decree of their election to eternal life, but because Christ saw they were disposed to believe, and by faith become his people; as elsewhere, Job x. 16. he calls them sheep, who should hereafter believe on him.

[6] Ver. 15. But if the question be περὶ τοῦ λόγου, of a word and names.] Of the word Paul preaches to you, whether it accord with your law or not, (ver. 13.) or, whether the name of the Messiah, or Christ, belong to that Jesus whom Paul preacheth; of things of this nature I will be no judge.

[7] Ver. 17. Sosthenes, the chief ruler of the synagogue, and beat him.] They beat the Jews, saith Grotius, to chase them from the judgment-seat; he adds, that in great cities there were more synagogues than one; every one of which had a chief ruler, as here Crispus is the chief ruler of one synagogue, and Sosthenes of another; so likewise, saith he, was it in great churches; they having at Rome, Antioch, and other places, excepting Alexandria (of which Epiphanius saith, it had but one bishop), more bishops than one at a time; but as this is uncertain, so have I shewed, note on Phil. i. 1. that Epiphanius speaks not of the primitive and apostolic times, but of the times of the Meletians, saying, That though in other churches there were Meletian as well as catholic bishops at the same time, yet it was never so in Alexandria.

[8] Ver. 18. Having shorn his head in Cenchrea: for he had a vow.] The text leaves it uncertain whether it were Paul or Aquila that made this vow; though Aquila being left at Ephesus, and not going up to Jerusalem, as St. Paul did, hence I conclude the vow was made by St. Paul; moreover, this is certain, that it was the vow of Nazaritism now finished, and which by Philo* is styled εὐχὴ μεγάλη, the great vow, which caused this votary to shave his head; for this vow was either for a term of life, as in the instances of Samson and John the Baptist, or for a term of days, which being completed, the Nazarite was to shave his head, and bring offerings. (See Numb. vi. 13, 14. Acts xxi. 26, 27.) But whosoever is the Nazarite, the question is, why he shaves his head at Cenchrea, as if his hair was to be consecrated to Apollo, and not at Jerusalem, according to the commandment? What some imagine, that this votary was casually defiled, and so stood bound, according to the law, to shave his head, and to begin his vow again, answers not the doubt; because he could not begin his vow anew till he had offered his sin-offering, (Numb. vi. 9—12.) and that was only to be offered at the tabernacle and temple. Others say, this law of shaving at the door of the temple, and offering these oblations, obliged those only who thus vowed in the land of Judea, not those that were out of it; and if this will not satisfy, because we find so little of it in the ancient Jews, we may perhaps say, there was in the vow of the Nazarites a moral part, viz. the consecration of themselves to the service of God, and a greater degree of purity; and in this Christians might comply with it without scruple; and it had a ceremonial part, the cutting off the hair, and the offering sacrifices when it was accomplished; and as to this, St. Paul, and other Christians, knowing the law was not now obligatory, might dispense with themselves; omit, or do them, as prudence and the case of scandal did require. For though St. Paul went up now to Jerusalem, we read not of any offering that he made according to the law, nor perhaps would he have shaved his head on this account, had not some scrupulous Jews at Corinth been conscious to his vow.

[9] Ver. 22. And when he had landed at Cæsarea, and gone up, and saluted the church.] Here the question is, whether St. Paul went up from the ship to the church of Cæsarea, or from Cæsarea to the church at Jerusalem. And in favour of the latter sense, let it be observed, (1.) that in the language of the author of the Acts, to go from Cæsarea to Jerusalem, is to go up, and to go from Jerusalem to Cæsarea, is to go down. So Festus went up from Cæsarea to Jerusalem, Acts xxv. 1. and, ver. 5. he speaks to the rulers at Jerusalem συγκαταβαίνειν, to go down with him from thence to Cæsarea; and, ver. 6. καταβὰς, going down to Cæsarea, he sits on the tribunal, and they of Jerusalem καταβαίνοντες, going down, accuse Paul, ver. 7. and ver. 9. he asks Paul, whether ἀναβὰς, going up to Jerusalem, he would be there judged: so Peter ἀνέβη, went up from Cæsarea to Jerusalem, Acts xi. 2. (See also xxi. 8. 12.) So that to interpret these words of his going up from Cæsarea to Jerusalem, is suitable to the phrase of the evangelist. (2.) St. Paul declares, he must by all means keep the feast at Jerusalem, (ver. 21.) and that he therefore could not tarry with them; and yet if he went not now to Jerusalem, he went not at all thither at this time: for, from this church, he goes down to Antioch in Syria, and so through Galatia and Phrygia, ver. 22, 23. and so comes back to Ephesus, xix. 1. according to his promise, ver. 21. I will return again to you.

[10] Ver. 25. Knowing only the baptism of John.] That this Apollos had not only the gift of eloquence, but the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost, by which he was made an able minister of the gospel, is evident from the Epistle to the Corinthians; for he is there styled a minister, by whom they believed according to the gift that God had given him, 1 Cor. iii. 5. he is a coworker with God, ver. 9. But how he came by these gifts, which rendered him so fit to water these churches, and made him St. Paul's brother, is not easy to determine. Grotius saith, that the phrase διὰ τῆς χάριτος, by grace, belongs to him, he helping the church by the gifts he had received before baptism in the name of Christ; the grace of God preventing the hands of the apostles, but where, or by whom he was baptized, he saith not. Lorinus saith, he was baptized by Aquila, or some of Ephesus, but the text only saith, that Aquila and Priscilla instructed, not that they baptized him. I conjecture, therefore, that he had been baptized already by those who instructed him in the way of the Lord: (ver. 25.) for in those times persons were baptized immediately upon their profession of faith in Christ Jesus, as appears from the instances of the eunuch, Lydia, the gaoler, and many others; and that when it is here said, he knew only the baptism of

* De Vict. p. 654. E.

John, that relates only to the knowledge he had received in Judea, before he returned to Alexandria, where he received farther instruction concerning the death and resurrection of Christ; but yet perhaps knew not why he suffered, the Jewish nation having then no notion of a Messiah that was to suffer for the sins of the people, nor that his kingdom was to be only spiritual, they all expecting that he should erect a temporal kingdom; nor that he was to be a light to the gentiles, or to receive them into favour without circumcision or observance of the law of Moses; this being not made known to the apostles after the Holy Ghost had fallen on them, till it was revealed to St. Peter by a vision; nor seems the freedom of the Jews, from the Mosaic law, to be made known to the apostles or the disciples at Jerusalem for a long time after, as we may learn from Acts xxi. 20, 21. 24.

[11] Ver. 27. Who had believed through grace.] i. e. Through the gospel, saith Dr. Hammond, or through the favour of God, in vouchsafing them the knowledge of it. (See the note on 2 Cor. vi. 1.)

CHAP. XIX.

1. AND it came to pass, that while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul having passed through the upper coasts (of Asia Minor, to wit, Galatia and Phrygia, xviii. 23.) came to Ephesus: and [1] finding certain disciples (abiding there),

2. He said to them, Have ye received the (gift of the) Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said to him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any (extraordinary gift of prophecy, or of the) Holy Ghost (restored again, or vouchsafed to the church).

3. And he said to them, Into what (baptism) then were ye baptized? And they said, Into John's baptism.

4. Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying to the people, that they (repenting) should believe on him who should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus, (who would baptize them with the Holy Ghost, Matt. iii. 11.

5. And) when they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.

6. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came upon them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied.

7. And all the men (that did so) were about twelve.

8. And he went into the synagogue (of the Jews there), and spake boldly for the space of three months, disputing (discoursing of) and persuading the things concerning (Gr. persuading them concerning the things of) the kingdom of God.

9. [2] But when divers were hardened, and believed not, but spake evil of that way before the multitude, he departed from them, and separated the disciples, disputing daily in the school of one Tyrannus.

10. [3] And this (practice he) continued by the space of two years; so that all they who dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks.

11. And God wrought special miracles by the hands of Paul:

12. So that from his body were brought to the sick handkerchiefs or aprons, and the diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them.

13. Then certain of the vagabond Jews, (being) [4] exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits the name of the Lord Jesus, saying, We adjure you by Jesus whom Paul preacheth (to come forth).

14. And there were seven sons of one Sceva, a Jew, and chief (among the orders) of the priests, which did so.

15. And the evil spirit answered, and said, Jesus I know, and Paul I know (to be persons having authority to command me); but who are ye (that ye should take upon you to do it)?

16. And the man in whom the evil spirit was leaped on them, and overcame them, and prevailed against them, so that they fled out of the house naked and wounded.

17. And this (being done publicly) was known to all the Jews and Greeks also dwelling at Ephesus; and fear (of this powerful name) fell on them all, and the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified.

18. And many that believed came, and confessed (their former magical practices), and shewed their deeds.

19. Many also of them which used [5] curious (i. e. magic) arts, brought their books together, and burned [6] them before all men: and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of silver.

20. So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed.

21. After these things were ended, Paul purposed in the Spirit, when he had passed through Macedonia and Achaia, to go to Jerusalem, saying, After I have been there, I must also see Rome.

22. So he sent into Macedonia two of them that ministered to him, (viz.) Timotheus and Erastus; but he himself stayed in Asia (at Ephesus, 1 Cor. xvi. 8. here, ver. 26. 30.) for a season.

23. And the same time there arose no small stir about that way (which Paul preached).

24. For a certain man named Demetrius, (being) a silversmith, who [7] made silver shrines for Diana, brought no small gain to the craftsmen;

25. Whom he called together with the workmen of like occupation, and said (to them), Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth.

26. Moreover you see and hear, that not alone at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath turned away much people (Gr. that this Paul hath persuaded much people, not only of Ephesus, but of all Asia), saying that they be no gods, which are made with hands (there being no divinity residing in them):

27. So that not only this our craft is in danger to be set at nought, but also that the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed, whom all Asia and the world worshippeth (in her images).

28. And when they heard these things, they were full of wrath, and cried out, saying, Great is Diana of the Ephesians!

29. And the whole city was filled with confusion: and (the men of it) [8] having caught Gaius and Aristarchus, men of Macedonia, Paul's companions in travel, they rushed with one accord into the theatre.

30. And when Paul would have entered in to the people, the disciples suffered him not.

31. And certain of the [9] chief of Asia (Gr. of the priests or magistrates of Asia, who governed the games), who were his friends, sent to him, desiring him that he would not adventure himself into the theatre.

32. Some therefore cried one thing, and some another: for the assembly was confused, and the most part knew not wherefore they were come together.

33. And they drew Alexander out of the multitude, the Jews putting him forward (either to plead the common cause against images, or to expose him to the people's rage, because he was turned Christian). And Alexander beckoned with his hand, and would have made his defence to the people.

34. But when they knew that he was a Jew, (and so a professed enemy to their religion and to image-worship, they) all with one voice, about the space of two hours, cried out, Great is Diana of the Ephesians!

35. And when the [10] town-clerk (or register) had appeased the people, he said, Ye men of Ephesus, [11] what man is there that knoweth not how that the city of Ephesus is a worshipper of the great goddess Diana, and of the image which fell down from Jupiter?

36. Seeing then that these things cannot be spoken against, ye ought to be quiet, and to do nothing rashly (in punishing those men ye have now laid hold on).

37. For ye have brought hither these men (for that end), who are neither robbers of churches, nor yet blasphemers of your goddess (and so not worthy to be thrown to the wild beasts).

38. Wherefore if Demetrius, and the craftsmen that are with him, have matter (of complaint) against any man, [12] the law is open, and there are deputies (Gr. there are judicial days of pleading, and the proconsuls are present): let them implead one another.

39. But if ye inquire any thing concerning other matters (than those relating to your private injuries), it shall be determined [13] in a lawful assembly (and ought not to be prosecuted in this tumultuous manner).

40. For we are in danger to be called in question (by the Romans) for this day's uproar, there being no cause whereby we may give an account of this concourse.

41. And when he had thus spoken, he dismissed the assembly.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIX.

[1] Ver. 1—6. HE finding certain disciples, &c.] Observe here,

First, That these disciples were converts to the Christian faith, i. e. that they believed that Jesus was the Christ, and that he was risen from the dead, is evident, because St. Paul not only calls them believers, but inquires whether they had received the Holy Ghost; which none but they who thus believed did or could receive: the gift of prophecy, which is the Jewish import of the Holy Ghost, being not given, (Acts ii. 33.) nor to be given till Jesus was glorified. (John vii. 37—39.)

Secondly, When therefore they say, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost, their meaning is, We have not as yet heard that the gift of prophecy, which, for the space of about four hundred years, had been restrained from the Jewish church, was yet restored. Now that which rendered them thus unacquainted with this new effusion of the Holy Ghost was this, that as Apollos had left Jerusalem, and gone to Alexandria before the miraculous effusion of the Holy Ghost on the apostles at the day of Pentecost, so had they also done, and had been travelling into other parts of the world, where the gospel had not yet been planted. Observe,

Thirdly, That these persons, who were before baptized with the baptism of St. John, are again baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, as is evident from these words, and when they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus; for they are manifestly mistaken, who say, these are the words not of St. Luke, but of St. Paul, and make the sense of the words run thus, John baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying, that men should believe in him that should come after him, that is, in Christ Jesus; and they that heard John were by his baptism baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. For, (1.) That Paul laid his hands on these persons is certain from ver. 6. and that he baptized them when he laid his hands on them, seems evident from the connexion of the words, They were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, and when St. Paul laid his hands on them, the Holy Ghost fell upon them; whereas, according to the former sense, Paul must have laid his hands upon all that were baptized by the Baptist, and they who were baptized by John must have received by St. Paul's hands the Holy Ghost: for either these words must signify at large, they that heard John and were baptized of him, and then the words following must import that Paul laid his hands on all that heard John, and they received the Holy Ghost; or they must refer to those that heard Paul, and then they must first be baptized by him, and then receive the Holy Ghost by imposition of his hands. (2.) This is evident from the words of St. Peter, to all those many thousands that heard him, Be ye baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost; for since he spake to the men of Jerusalem in general, Acts ii. 14. and of Judea, and all Jerusalem and Judea were baptized of John, saith St. Matthew, iii. 5, 6. all, or at least many of those to whom he spake, must already have been baptized with the baptism of John, and yet he makes it necessary for them to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. Whence two things are extremely evident, and consequent from each other; viz. (1.) That he exhorts them who had been baptized with John's baptism, to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. (2.) That therefore they who were baptized with his baptism, were not baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus; and this is visible even in the words of St. Paul here, John said to those that came to his baptism, ἵνα πιστεύσωσιν, not that they did, but that they should believe in him that was coming after him, that is, in the Lord Jesus; now they were not to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, till they did actually believe in him, which they who had received John's baptism were so far from doing, that they were musing whether John himself were not the Christ, Luke iii. 15. and asking, Why baptizest thou if thou art not the Christ? John i. 25. And, (3.) as our Saviour never said openly and expressly to the Jews, that he was the Christ, so he charges his apostles to tell no man that he was so till his resurrection. But to what end should he do this, if both the Baptist and his disciples had before baptized all men into this faith, that he was the Christ, and so had published this faith to all Judea? Only here note, that this is no ground for rebaptizing any now, by reason of the great difference betwixt the baptism of John then, and that in the name of Jesus after his resurrection; of which see the note on Matt. iii. 11. (4.) Observe, that after the imposition of the apostles' hands, these men spake with tongues and prophesied, receiving the same gifts of the Holy Ghost, which the apostles and others had received to fit them for the ministry, which was then generally performed by such gifted men commissionated for that work by the Holy Ghost thus falling on them; whence we find these prophets and teachers λειτουργοῦντας, ministering to the Lord in their assemblies, Acts xiii. 1—3. and this renders the opinion of Bishop Stillingfleet very probable, viz. that St. Paul designed these twelve men for a nursery of the churches in Asia, or persons to be sent from Ephesus to preach among them.

[2] Ver. 9. Ὡς δέ τινες ἐσκληρύνοντο, But as some were hardened.] I have shewed, note on Mark viii. 17. that men are then said to be hardened, when, having had sufficient evidence of what they ought to do, or believe, they refuse to believe, or do it: and thus were these persons hardened here, i. e. they would not believe, after sufficient evidence, that Jesus was the Christ.

[3] Ver. 10. And this continued for the space of two years; so that all that dwelt in Asia heard the word, both Jews and Greeks.] Here it is carefully to be noted, that we read not of Paul's coming to Ephesus at all, till xviii. 19. and then he would not tarry with them, ver. 20. but makes haste up to Jerusalem; when he had saluted the church there, he goes thence to Antioch, and tarries there some time, ver. 23. then he goes through Phrygia and Galatia, confirming the brethren, ibid. and then to Ephesus; there he disputes three months in the synagogues of the Jews, then two years more in the school of Tyrannus; after he leaves Ephesus, he goes through Macedonia and Achaia to Jerusalem, as he had before determined to do, ver. 21. xx. 1. not coming at all to any part of Asia till he came to Miletus, ver. 10. 17. They therefore who make him spend three quarters of a year in other parts of Asia, do not only say this without proof, or without assigning any other city of Asia, where he preached; but they say this against the account here given of him by St. Luke; his three years therefore, mentioned xx. 31. must be reckoned from his first coming to Ephesus.

[4] Ver. 13. Ἰουδαίων ἐξορκιστῶν, Of the Jewish exorcists.] That the Jews were wont to exorcise devils, or to cast them out, not only by invocation of the name of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, but by skill in magic, we learn from Josephus,* who mentions one Eleazer before Vespasian, his sons, his captains, and a great number of his soldiers, τοὺς ὑπὸ δαιμονίων λαμβανομένους ἀπολύοντα τούτων, delivering them who were possessed with evil spirits from them, and drawing forth διὰ τῶν μυκτήρων τὸ δαιμόνιον, the devil by the nose, by putting to his nose who was possessed a ring, having under the seal of it a root, of which Solomon had discovered the virtue, and adjuring him by the adjuration taught by Solomon, καὶ τὰς ἐπῳδὰς ἃς συνέθηκεν ἐκεῖνος ἐπιλέγων, and saying over him the incantations which Solomon composed: they had also books of enchantments, καὶ τρόπους ἐξορκώσεων, and modes of exorcising demons, συνταξομένους, composed, as they gave it out, by Solomon; and they (saith he) are of great use to this day. As for the root of which he speaks, he informs us, that it was a very dangerous thing to pluck it up, and prescribes a very superstitious way of doing it; but being thus gathered, and brought to those that are possessed, saith he, δαιμόνια τοῖς ζῶσιν εἰσδυόμενα ταχέως ἐξελαύνει, it quickly expels the demons out of men's bodies. (De Bell. Jud. lib. vii. cap. 23. p. 981.)

[5] Ver. 19. They that used περίεργα, curious arts.] That is, arts of magic. That this is the import of the word, Grotius and Dr. Hammond prove from the account that Irenæus* gives us of the disciples of Simon Magus, that they used "amatoria et agogima, et quæcunque sunt alia parerga, l. perierga," love-charms and philtres, and all other curious arts. For Porphyry,† speaking of these magicians, saith, διὰ τούτων φίλτρα καὶ ἐρωτικὰ κατασκευάζουσιν οἱ κακοδαίμονες, they by these evil spirits make their philtres and love-charms; and it seems to have had this signification, because the magi, as Origen‡ saith, were περιεργαζόμενοι τῶν δαιμονίων ὀνόματι, καὶ δυνάμεις, καὶ πράξεις, καὶ ἐπῳδὰς, καὶ βοτάνας οἰκείας δαίμοσι, καὶ λίθους, curiously employed about searching into the names, the forms, the powers, the actions, the incantations of demons, and the herbs, stones, and sculptures, made in them, proper to these demons; whereas (saith he), ἀπερίεργον ἦθος, a life free from these curiosities is acceptable to God, and the Lord Christ would leave, to be vexed with evil spirits, περιεργαζόμενον δαιμονίων ὀνόματα, him that is thus curious about the names of demons, and seeks after ways of enchanting them: hence the books here brought to be burnt are by the fathers styled γοητικαὶ βίβλοι, books of sorcery. Nor is it to be wondered that these arts should abound at Ephesus, where Plutarch§ speaks, περὶ τῶν μάγων ἐν Ἐφέσῳ διατριβόντων, of magicians conversing; that city being so famous for sorcery and enchantments of demons, that the magical words used to that effect were styled Ἐφέσια γράμματα, Ephesian letters; and Plutarch‖ tells us, that the magicians bid them who were possessed with devils to read and recite the Ephesian letters.

[6] They burnt their books before all men.] Note also, that they sold not those books, though they were of great value, because, saith Œcumenius, they would not be gainers by such wicked arts, nor would they contribute, by selling them, to the teaching others the same arts.

[7] Ver. 24. Ποιῶν ναοὺς ἀργυροῦς Ἀρτέμιδος, Who made silver shrines for Diana.] That these shrines were Κιβώρια μικρὰ little chapels, representing the form of a temple with an image in it, which being set upon an altar, or some other solemn place, and the leaves of the door being opened, the image stood, or sat in state, and so was represented to the spectators, see Dr. Hammond on the place, and Chrysostom.

[8] Ver. 29. Having caught Gaius and Aristarchus, Paul's companions—they rushed into the theatre,] Say some, to throw them to the wild beasts, as blasphemers of their goddess; on which account, the town-clerk seems to say, You have brought these men here, who are neither robbers of churches, nor yet blasphemers of your goddess, ver. 37. for that the theatre was the place where they did θηριομαχεῖν, fight with beasts, see note on 1 Cor. iv. 9. and that this was done at Ephesus, see note on 1 Cor. xv. 32.

[9] Ver. 31. Chief of Asia, Gr. Ἀσιαρχαί.] Here again Grotius and Dr. Hammond note, that among the heathens there were games instituted, "ad placanda bona numina," to appease the good gods, or in honour of them; of these the pontifices or chief priests were presidents at Rome; in other provinces the priests or magistrates presided, saith Salmasius,* and these were called from their provinces, Asiarchæ, Syriarchæ, Bithyniarchæ, officers belonging to these games in those provinces. Thus in the martyrdom of Polycarp,† bishop of Smyrna in Asia, they ask τὸν Ἀσιαρχὴν Φίλιππον, Philip, the ruler of the games there, to let out a lion upon Polycarp, which he declares he could not do, because the games were ended; whence it appears, that it belonged to these Asiarchæ here mentioned, to let loose the wild beasts upon malefactors; accordingly, they are here present, and being kind to St. Paul, send to him not to come thither.

[10] Ver. 35. Ὁ γραμματεὺς, The town-clerk.] This word is rendered by Budæus, the chancellor; he was an officer chosen by the people to preside over the games, saith Dominus, cited by Johannes Antiochenus, and so the fitter to appease their tumults.

[11] Who knows not, τὴν Ἐφεσίων πόλιν νεωκόρον οὖσαν, that the city of the Ephesians is a worshipper of the great goddess Diana?] After all the learning our critics have spent upon this place, I see no reason to change our translation; for though the city or people of Ephesus may have this title in the coins, it cannot here be an epithet of the city, for then it should be νεωκόρων as it is in the coins. Again, it being plain from Julius Pollux,‡ that the νεωκόροι were οἱ τῶν θεῶν θεραπευταὶ, the servants, ministers, and worshippers of the gods; and from Phavorinus, that νεωκόρος was ὁ τοῦ ναοῦ ἐπιμελούμενος, one that took care of the temple; and from Hesychius, Suidas, and Phavorinus, that he was one who did adorn and beautify it, it may be very reasonable to bestow this title on the Ephesians, who were so peculiarly addicted to her worship, who had there that temple of Diana which was accounted the miracle of the world, and who had expended so much in the beautifying and adorning of it, and in this sense only could they be styled Neocori of the image which fell down from Jupiter.

[12] Ver. 38. Ἀγόραιοι ἄγονται, The law is open.] i. e. Court days are kept, for so the word with an accent in the antipenultima signifies, ἡμέραι being understood; for ἀγόραιος, says Suidas and Phavorinus, is ἡ ἡμέρα ἐν ᾗ ἀγορὰ τελεῖται, a day in which a court is kept.

[13] Ver. 39. Ἐννόμῳ ἐκκλησίᾳ, In a lawful assembly.] Three days in every month, saith Œcumenius, were appointed for assemblies to hear causes, of which this being none, it was an unlawful assembly.

CHAP. XX.

1. AND after the uproar was ceased, Paul called to him the disciples, and, embracing them, departed to go into Macedonia.

2. And when he had gone over those parts, and had given them much exhortation, he came into Greece,

3. And there abode three months. And when the Jews laid wait for him, as he was about to sail into Syria (to carry alms to Jerusalem), he purposed (or resolved) to return through Macedonia.

4. And there accompanied him into Asia (without going from him) Sopater of Berea; and (but) of the Thessalonians, Aristarchus and Secundus; and Gaius of Derbe, and Timotheus; and of Asia, Tychicus and Trophimus.

5. These (were persons who) going before tarried for us at Troas.

6. And we sailed away from Philippi after the days of unleavened bread (were ended), and came to them to Troas in five days, where we abode seven days.

7. [1] And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread (i. e. to celebrate the eucharist), Paul preached to them, (being) ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his discourse until midnight.

8. And there were many lights in the upper chamber, where they were gathered together (for religious worship: see the note on i. 13.)

9. And there sat in a window a certain young man named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep sleep: and as Paul was long preaching, he sunk down with sleep, and fell down from the third loft, and was taken up (as one) dead.

10. And (but) Paul went down, and fell on him, and embracing him said, Trouble not yourselves (more about him), for his life is (safe) in him.

11. When he therefore was come up again, and had [2] broken bread, and eaten (i. e. had celebrated the sacrament of the Lord's body and blood), and had talked a long while, even till break of day, so he departed, (as he had designed to do on the morrow, ver. 7.)

12. And they brought the young man (up) alive, and were not a little comforted (at it).

13. And we went before to the ship, and sailed to Assos, there intending to take in Paul: for so had he [3] appointed (Gr. so he was disposed), minding himself to go (thither) on foot.

14. And when he met with us at Assos, we took him in, and came to Mitylene.

15. And we sailed thence, and came the next day over against Chios: and the next day we arrived at Samos, and tarried at Trogyllium: and the next day we came to Miletus (ten miles distant from Ephesus).

16. For Paul had determined to sail by Ephesus (not touching there), because he would not spend the time in Asia: for he hasted, if it were possible for him, to be at Jerusalem the day of Pentecost.

17. [4] And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the church.

18. And when they were come to him, he said to them, Ye know from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons,

19. Serving the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears, and temptations, which befel me by the lying in wait of the Jews:

20. And how I kept back nothing that was profitable for you, but have shewed you, and have taught you (what was necessary to be known) publicly, and from house to house,

21. Testifying both to the Jews, and also to the Greeks, (that they should exercise) repentance towards God, and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ (i. e. that they should turn to God, doing works meet for repentance, and should believe in the Lord Jesus).

22. [5] And now, behold, I go bound in the Spirit (i. e. foreseeing by the Spirit that I shall be bound) to Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befal me there:

23. Save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying, that bonds and afflictions abide me.

24. But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear to myself, so that I might finish my course with joy; and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God.

25. And now, behold, I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, shall see my face no more.

26. Wherefore I take you to record this day, that [6] I am pure from the blood of all men (i. e. not guilty of their ruin, if they perish).

27. For I have not shunned to declare to you all the counsel of God, (the whole Christian doctrine, which if you keep in memory and practice, ye shall be saved, 1 Cor. xv. 3.)

28. [7] Take heed therefore to yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, [8] to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.

29. For I know this, that [9] after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing (to tear) the flock.

30. [10] Also (out) of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them.

31. Therefore watch, and remember, that by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one (of you) night and day with tears.

32. And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up (in your holy faith), and to give you an inheritance among all them that are sanctified.

33. I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel.

34. Yea, you yourselves know, that these hands have ministered to my necessities, and to (the necessities of) them that are with me.

35. I have shewed you all (these) things (to instruct you), how that so labouring you ought to support the weak, and (to) remember the words of the Lord Jesus, [11] how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive.

36. And when he had thus spoken, he kneeled down, and prayed with them all.

37. And they all wept sore, and fell on Paul's neck, and kissed him,

38. Sorrowing most of all for those words that he spake, that they should see his face no more. And they accompanied him to the ship.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XX.

[1] Ver. 7. Ἐν δὲ τῇ μιᾷ τῶν σαββάτων, And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples were gathered together to break bread.] These words seem fairly to evince, that it was the custom of the first Christians, and of the apostles, to keep the Lord's-day holy, or as a day appointed for religious worship: for,

First, That μία τῶν σαββάτων, the first day of the week was the Lord's-day, is fully proved, note on 1 Cor. xvi. 1.

Secondly, Observe, that on this day the disciples were not summoned extraordinarily to come together, that St. Paul did not μετακαλεῖν call them together, as he did the assembly of the elders of the church, ver. 17. but the disciples were themselves συνηγμένοι, met in their synaxis, or assembly; the text informs us, that St. Paul tarried with them seven days, and in none of them have we any mention of an assembly to this purpose, but only on the first day of the week.

Thirdly, Observe, that they then met together to break bread; which phrase doth signify the sacred action performed in celebration of the holy sacrament, which it was the custom of the primitive Christians to receive in all their church assemblies on the Lord's-day: this the apostle intimates when he complains of his Corinthians, 1 Cor. xi. that they came together for the worse, because, when they came together in the church, there were divisions among them, so that they did not eat together of the table of the Lord. Now, thus to come together in one place (saith he), is not to eat the Lord's supper; i. e. it is not so to do it as that sacred action ought to be performed: this therefore when they came together in the church they did, and therefore, what is coming together, ver. 17. coming to the church, ver. 18. coming to one place, ver. 19. is coming together to eat, ver. 33. Accordingly, it was the custom of the church from the apostles' times thus to communicate upon the Lord's-day: for Pliny, in his epistle * to the emperor Trajan, tells him, that he found nothing to allege against the Christians, but their obstinacy in their superstition; and that it was their custom to meet together on a set day before it was light, and to bind themselves by the sacrament to do no evil. Now this epistle was writ only six years after the death of the evangelist St. John. And Justin Martyr,† who wrote but forty years after his death, thus speaks, On Sunday all the Christians in the city or country meet together, because that is the day of our Lord's resurrection, and then we have read unto us the writings of the prophets and apostles; this done, the president makes an oration to the assembly, to exhort them to imitate and do the things they heard; then we all join in prayer, and after that we celebrate the sacrament, and they that are willing and able give alms, &c.

[2] Ver. 11. And had broken bread.] Though here be mention only of breaking bread, yet that the cup was also consecrated and distributed, is evident from the doctrine of the church of Rome; for they agree with the protestants in this, that the priests always ought to consecrate the eucharist in both kinds, and say, that if one species be consecrated without the other, ‡ "sacrilegium committitur," it would be sacrilege; and yet if this place prove any thing for communion in one kind, it proves as much for consecration in one kind, and for the sumption of one kind only by the priest that consecrates, though they hold it necessary for him to receive both. And hence it was declared in the council of Trent,§ that these places, and the reasons from them, must be laid aside, because by them it would be concluded, that it was not sacrilege to consecrate one kind without the other; which is contrary to all the doctors, and the meaning of the church, and overthroweth the distinction of the eucharist, as it is a sacrifice, and as it is a sacrament.

* "Soliti sunt stato die ante lucem convenire." Ep. lib. x. ep. 97.

† Τὴν δὲ Ἡλίου ἡμέραν κοινῇ πάντες τὴν συνέλευσιν ποιούμεθα, ἐπειδὴ Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς ὁ ἡμέτερος Σωτὴρ τῇ αὐτῇ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀνέστη. Apol. ii. p. 98. 99.

[3] Ver. 13. For so he had appointed, οὕτω γὰρ ἦν διατεταγμένος, for so he was disposed.] Here is an evidence, that the word τεταγμένοι, used xiii. 48. may there signify disposed, as here apparently it doth.

[4] Ver. 17. And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the church.] From these words, compared with the twenty-sixth verse, where the same persons are called bishops, who are here styled πρεσβύτεροι, elders, Chrysostom, St. Jerome, Theodoret, Œcumenius, and Theophylact, have inferred, that the same persons were in the first ages of the church styled bishops or presbyters indifferently: Dr. Hammond, on the contrary, and others do contend, that the word πρεσβύτεροι, elders, here signifies only bishops; and because there lies this obvious objection against this interpretation, that then there must have been many bishops in the church of Ephesus, since all these elders were called from Ephesus; he answers, that those elders were all the bishops of Asia, and saith, that Paul sending to the metropolis of Asia, by that means gave notice to the bishops of Asia to come to him: this he confirms, (1.) from the testimony of Irenæus, who saith, they were called * " ab Epheso, et reliquis proximis civitatibus," from Ephesus, and the rest of the cities that were near; (2.) from the words of the text, for the flock (saith he) was not the Christians of one city, but the Christians of all Asia; those with whom Paul had been from the first day he came to Asia, ver. 18. all among whom he had gone preaching the kingdom of God, ver. 25. But to the first argument it may be answered,

First, That Chrysostom, St. Jerome, Theodoret, Œcumenius, and Theophylact, knew nothing of St. Paul's sending to any other bishops besides those of Ephesus, for otherwise they could not have argued as they do from this place, that those persons could not be bishops, properly so called, because there could be only one bishop of one city. Bishop Stillingfleet also saith, that St. Paul was in so great haste, that he would not so much as go to Ephesus, nor send any whither but to that city; and yet those to whom he committed the whole flock then in Asia, came from Ephesus to Miletus. But (2.) let it be granted that he sent to other cities also, though it be plainly contrary to the text, which mentions Ephesus only, yet it is evident, both from Irenæus and the text, that the same persons are called presbyters in the seventeenth verse, who are called bishops, ver. 28.; for, from ver. 18. to the twenty-seventh inclusively, he continues his discourse to those presbyters whom he had called, and in ver. 28. bids them take care of the church, over which the Holy Ghost had made them bishops: this is also plain from Irenæus, for he saith expressly, that " convocatis episcopis et presbyteris," having called the bishops and presbyters, he gave them charge of the church,† " in quo eos Spiritus proposuit episcopos," in which the Spirit had made them bishops.

Secondly, To the second argument the answer is evident from the note made on xix. 10. that St. Paul, from the second time he came to Ephesus, stirred not thence, till he, in prosecution of his purpose, mentioned there, ver. 21. went from thence to Macedonia, in order to go to Jerusalem; whence we learn, how he had been with them of Asia, from the first day he came to Ephesus, preaching to Jews and gentiles, viz. by disputing daily in the school of Tyrannus in Ephesus, so that all they that dwelt in Asia heard the word, both Jews and Greeks, xix. 20. and by disputing thus, he persuaded much people, οὐ μόνον Ἐφέσου, ἀλλὰ σχέδον πάσης τῆς Ἀσίας, i. e. not as we have the words rendered, not only at Ephesus, but throughout all Asia, but, not only of Ephesus, but of all Asia.

[5] Ver. 22. And now, behold, I go δεδεμένος τῷ πνεύματι, bound in the Spirit.] i. e. Not resolving in his own spirit, but, as Grotius saith truly, foreseeing by the Spirit that I shall there be bound; for so it follows, ver. 23. The Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying, that bonds and afflictions abide me.

[6] Ver. 26, 27. I am free from the blood of all men, for I have not shunned to declare to you all the counsel of God.] Hence we learn, that it is necessary for a pastor to declare to his people all that is necessary for them to believe and do, in order to salvation, that the guilt of their ruin may not lie upon him.

[7] Ver. 28. Take heed therefore to yourselves, and to all the flock, over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers.] I have shewed in the note on 1 Cor. xii. 8—10. that in those times the Holy Spirit did enable the apostles to discern who were fit to be governors of the church, and accordingly by this afflatus of the Holy Ghost they were chosen for that work; and to this the words of the apostle may refer. But it is also to be noted from xix. 6, 7. that, at Ephesus, Paul having laid his hands upon twelve men, the Holy Ghost fell on them, and they spake with tongues, and prophesied; and Bishop Stillingfleet conceives, these were men kept at Ephesus as a nursery, to be sent forth as occasion served, to preach and preside among the converts of Asia; and if so, these words may more peculiarly relate to them.

[8] Ποιμαίνειν τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, To feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.] If this be the true reading, it follows unavoidably, that Jesus Christ, who shed his blood for us, is here styled God; now this reading is confirmed by the Vulgar, Arabic, Ethiopic, by Chrysostom and Œcumenius on the place. It is true, indeed, that in Irenæus, lib. iii. 14. in the Alexandrian MSS. and in the Syriac, we read τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τοῦ Κυρίου, the church of the Lord, which may be construed, the church of the Lord Jesus, but it may also be construed from the Arabic, and other MSS. the church of our Lord God; if we consider that the church of God is a phrase very frequent in the New Testament, (see 1 Cor. i. 2. x. 32. xi. 22. xv. 9. 2 Cor. i. 1. Gal. i. 13. 1 Tim. iii. 5.) but the church of the Lord is a phrase never used in the New Testament.

[9] Ver. 29. After my departure shall grievous wolves enter in, not sparing the flock.] Such were Cerinthus who set up in Asia, see the note on Colos. ii. 10. and other false apostles, and deceitful workers of the Jews, of whom see note on 1 Tim. i. 7. on iv. 2, 3. on vi. 21. on 2 Tim. i. 15. and on iii. 2—4.

* Lib. iii. cap. 14. † Lib. c. cap. 14.

[10] Ver. 30. Also of yourselves shall men arise, speaking perverse things.] Such as Hymenæus and Alexander were, who made shipwreck of the faith, 1 Tim. i. 20. Hymenæus and Philetus, who taught that the resurrection was past already, 2 Tim. ii. 17. for these Epistles being written chiefly for the Ephesians, it is reasonable to think he speaks of men dwelling there who disp ers edthese doctrines among them.

[11] Ver. 35. How he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive.] This saying of Christ we find not in the gospels, but yet these and the like words are so far from giving any patronage to unwritten traditions, that they are a demonstration against them, it being certain that we had never known any such thing, had not St. Luke recorded it.

CHAP. XXI.

1. AND it came to pass, that after we were gotten from them (of Ephesus), and had launched (into the sea), we came with a straight course to Coos, and the day following to Rhodes, and from thence to Patara:

2. And finding a ship sailing over into Phœnicia, we went aboard, and set forth.

3. Now when we had [1] discovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand, and sailed into Syria, and landed at Tyre: for there the ship was to unlade her burden.

4. And finding disciples, we tarried there seven days: who (being endued with the gifts of the Holy Ghost) said to Paul [2] through the Spirit, that (if he regarded his safety, ver. 11.) he should not go up to Jerusalem.

5. And when we had accomplished those days, we departed and went away; and they all brought us on our way, with (their) wives and children, till we were out of the city: and (then) we kneeled down on the shore, and prayed.

6. And when we had taken our leave one of another, we took ship; and they returned home again.

7. [3] And when we had finished our course (Gr. and finishing our sail) from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais, and saluted the brethren, and abode with them one day.

8. And the next day we that were of Paul's company departed, and came to Cæsarea: and we entered into the house of Philip the evangelist, who was one of the seven (deacons mentioned chap. vi.) and abode with him.

9. And the same man had [4] four daughters, virgins, who did prophesy, (according to the prophecy mentioned ii. 17.)

10. And as we tarried there many days, there came down from Judea a certain prophet, named Agabus.

11. And when he was come to us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands (first) and (then afterward his) feet (with it), and said, Thus saith the Holy Ghost, [5] So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the gentiles.

12. And when we heard these things, both we (that were with him), and they of that place, besought him (with tears) not to go up to Jerusalem.

13. Then Paul answered, What mean ye to weep, and to break my heart? (Gr. τί ποιεῖτε κλαίοντες, why do you this, weeping and breaking my heart?) for I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus.

14. And when he would not be persuaded, we ceased (our importunity), saying, The will of the Lord be done.

15. And after those days we took up our carriages, and went up to Jerusalem.

16. There went with us also certain of the disciples of Cæsarea, and brought with them one [6] Mnason of Cyprus, an old disciple, with whom we should lodge.

17. And when we were come to Jerusalem, the brethren received us gladly.

18. And the day following [7] Paul went in with us to James; and all the elders (of Jerusalem) were present.

19. And when he had saluted them, he declared particularly what things God had wrought among the gentiles by his ministry.

20. And when they heard it, they glorified the Lord, and said to him, Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of Jews there are which believe; [8] and they are all zealous (for the observance) of the law (by all that are Jews):

21. And they are informed of thee, that thou teachest all the Jews which are among the gentiles to forsake Moses, saying that they ought not to circumcise their children, neither (ought they) to walk after the customs (of our forefathers).

22. What is it therefore? (τί οὖν ἐστι; what is therefore to be done, seeing) the multitude (which have been thus informed of thee) must needs come together? for they will hear that thou art come.

23. Do therefore this that we say to thee: (to wit,) We have four men which have a vow on them;

24. Them take, and purify thyself with them, and be at charges with them (making provision of sacrifices for them, as the law requires), that (when the days of their purification are ended) they may shave their heads: and (by this practice) all may know that those things, whereof they are informed concerning thee, are nothing (have no truth in them), but that thou thyself also walkest orderly, and keepest the law.

25. As touching the gentiles which believe, we have written and concluded that they observe no such thing, save only that they keep themselves from things offered to idols, and from blood, and from (things) strangled, and from fornication.

26. Then Paul took the men, and the next day purifying himself with them (i. e. beginning the separation of a Nazarite) he entered into the temple, to [9] signify (when would be) the accomplishment of the days of purification, until (ἕως οὗ, even to the time) that an offering should be offered for every one of them, (as the law required at the close of them, Numb. vi. 13.)

27. And when the seven days (i. e. the time designed for this separation) were almost ended (or were about to be accomplished), the Jews which were of Asia, (where Paul had preached three years, xx. 31. with great opposition from the Jews, xix. 9. xx. 19. 1 Cor. xvi. 9.) when they saw him in the temple, stirred up all the people, and laid hands on him,

28. Crying out, Men of Israel, help: (for) this is the man, that teacheth all men every where against the people (of the Jews), and (against) the law, and this place: and farther (or also hath) brought Greeks into the temple, and (by so doing) hath polluted this holy place.

29. (And this they said,) for (because) they had seen before with him in the city Trophimus an Ephesian, whom they supposed that Paul had brought into the temple.

30. And all the city was moved (at these words), and the people ran together: and they took Paul, and drew him out of the temple (that it might not be defiled with his blood): and forthwith the doors were shut.

31. [10] And as they went about to kill him, tidings came to the chief captain of the band (of Romans), that all Jerusalem was in an uproar.

32. Who immediately took soldiers and centurions, and ran down to them: and when they saw the chief captain and the soldiers, they left beating of Paul.

33. Then the chief captain came near, and took him, and commanded him to be bound with two chains; and demanded who he was, and what he had done (to incense them so against him).

34. And some cried one thing, some another, among the multitude: and when he could not know the certainty for (i. e. by reason of) the tumult, he commanded him to be carried into the castle (of Antonia).

35. And when he came upon the stairs, so it was, that he was borne of the soldiers for the violence of the people.

36. For the multitude of the people followed after, crying, Away with him, (let him not live, xxii. 22.)

37. And as Paul was (about) to be led into the castle, he said to the chief captain, May I speak to thee? Who said, Canst thou speak Greek?

38. [11] Art not thou that Egyptian, which before these days madest an uproar, and leddest out into the wilderness four thousand men that were murderers?

39. But Paul said, I am a man which am a Jew of Tarsus, a city of Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city: and I beseech thee suffer me to speak to the people.

40. And when he had given him licence, Paul stood on the stairs, and beckoned with the hand to the people (to be silent). And when there was made a great silence, he spake to them in the Hebrew tongue, saying.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXI.

[1] Ver. 3. ΑΝΑΦΑΝΕΝΤΕΣ δὲ τὴν Κύπρον, And discerning or discovering Cyprus.] So ἀναφαίνειν γῆν τινα, is to discover such a land; and therefore both Stephanus and from him Schmidius render these words thus, quum cernere Cyprum cæpissemus, all other readings orconjectures being by Schmidius confuted.

[2] Ver. 4. Who said to Paul by the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem.] If this had been said absolutely by an afflatus of the Holy Ghost, St. Paul could not have acted contrary to it without sin, in opposing what the Holy Ghost required, and doing what he did forbid; seeing then Paul persists in his resolution, after what both they here, and the prophet Agabus had said, ver. 11. these words must admit of the limitation mentioned in the paraphrase, that if he would not be there bound, and evilly entreated, he should not go up thither; and this was only what the Spirit had before told him; for, saith he, I go bound in the Spirit to Jerusalem, xx. 22. Or, they said to him, the Spirit revealing to them what he was to suffer there, they would not have him go up, as also did the disciples of Cæsarea, and they that came up with him from Troas on the same account.

[3] Ver. 7. Διανύσαντες τὸν πλοῦν, And when we had finished our course.] There is no need to read here διαναύσαντες, or to think that this phrase signifies only, having sailed; it truly imports, that finishing our voyage by sea, we came from Tyre to Ptolemais; for from thence they went by land to Cæsarea, and from thence to Jerusalem, and so were then finishing their navigation or their course by sea.

[4] Ver. 9. He had four daughters.] Hence Œcumenius observes, that τῷ κοινωνήσαντι γάμων διακονεῖν ἔξεστι, one that useth matrimony may be a deacon.

[5] Ver. 11. So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind this man.] Not so as to the girdle, for he was only bound with chains; nor so as to the binding of his feet, for St. Paul seems only to have the chains fastened to his hands; but so as to be as truly and as much bound as Agabus was, not personally by the Jews, but by the Romans at their instigation, and on their account.

[6] Ver. 16. One Mnason, an old disciple,] Converted by Paul and Barnabas when they were at Cyprus, say Grotius and Dr. Hammond, but very improbably; for that they were at Cyprus we find, Acts xiii. 4. but there is not a word of him, or any other convert that they made there: the words, an old disciple, rather induce us to conceive he was one of the disciples or followers of Christ.

[7] Ver. 18. And Paul went in with us to James, and all the elders were present.] All the bishops of Judea, saith Dr. Hammond, without one word to prove it; for there is nothing of this matter in his note on Phil. i. b. to which he refers; and without all probability: for if there were then any other bishops constituted in Judea, of which we read nothing in Scripture, or primitive antiquity, how came they all, unsent for, to be absent from their flocks, and present at Jerusalem, especially when all the apostles, except James, seem to be absent? More probable, and modest is the observation, that here we find James bishop of Jerusalem, οἱ πρεσβύτεροι, his presbyters, or elders, with him, and his seven deacons, mentioned ver. 18. and so have reason to believe, that other celebrated churches conformed to this model, having bishops, presbyters, and deacons.

[8] Ver. 20. And they are all zealous of the law.] The zealots among the believers were urgent for the circumcision of the gentiles, and for requiring them to observe the law of Moses. (Acts xv. 1. 5.) But the whole body of the converted Jews, bishops, and elders, as well as the laity, were zealous for the observation of their laws and customs by the Jews, and that because they knew the law to be of a Divine original; and therefore thought they could not throw off the observance of it without apostacy from God, as is insinuated in these words, Thou teachest ἀποστασίαν, apostacy from Moses, (ver. 21.) Thus Philo * doth inform us, that they believed their laws to be λογία θεόχρηστα, Divine oracles, and this doctrine they being taught from their infancy, they are so afraid of offending against them in the least, that they will rather suffer the loss of all human blessings, than be guilty of it; yea (saith he †), they are wont willingly to suffer death as the way to immortality, rather than permit their rites to be violated. Josephus* saith the same, that they are taught from their cradle to call them Θεοῦ δόγματα, the doctrines of God, and therefore continue in the observance of them, not adding any thing to them, or taking any thing from them, and when it is necessary, dying freely for them. And again, We (saith he †) think it our only wisdom and virtue, neither to do, nor think any thing contrary to our laws; and being persuaded from the beginning that they are suitable to the will of God, we think nothing else so holy as to keep them, for who can remove any thing of them, or find any thing better? He also frequently declares that they were thus addicted to the observation of their laws, from an opinion of the eternal punishments they must expect to suffer, who even for fear of death durst violate them, and from a firm assurance of eternal happiness, if they were faithful to the death in the observance of them.‡ It is not therefore to be wondered that men who had imbibed such opinions of them from their infancy, that they derived from God, and knew of no revelation made by him that they were to cease after the death of their Messiah, should be still zealous for them; or that they, who thought they could not be removed, or that any better laws could be given, should think them fit to be observed; or that they, who feared such dreadful evils if they did forsake them, expected so great blessings from being faithful to them to the death, should be averse from any doctrine, which taught them to apostatize from, or to forsake the law of Moses; and yet it pleased God as yet not to convince them of this error by any revelation, or any afflatus of that Spirit, which many of them had received; partly because he saw this might have obstructed the faith even of the little remnant, which belonged to the election of grace; partly because he knew the time would shortly come, when the destruction of their temple, and their exclusion from their own land, would render it impossible for them to observe this law, and the severity of Divine judgments on them, would convince them, as it did some, that§ God had utterly cast off that nation from being any more his people.

[9] Ver. 26, 27. Διαγγέλλων τὴν ἐκπλήρωσιν τῶν ἡμερῶν τοῦ ἁγνισμοῦ, Signifying the accomplishment of the days of purification.] i. e. Not signifying that those days were already accomplished, for that is contrary to the following verse, which shews that Paul was apprehended in the temple before the seven days were ended, or, as the Greek may be rendered, as they were about to be accomplished; but, as Grotius well notes, signifying by that action that he would accomplish seven days of purification, even to the time that the sacrifices were to be offered for them, with whom he had thus joined in this purification; for whereas some would evade this, by saying, that the seven days, mentioned ver. 27. were the seven days wherein those sacrifices were to be performed; that is contrary to the law, which appoints the same day in which they shaved their heads, and so concluded their purification, for the oblation of their offerings. (Numb. vi. 13, 14.)

But here it may reasonably be inquired, how the apostle, who knew that our Saviour by his death had abolished the hand-writing of ordinances, and taken it out of the way, (Eph. ii. 15. Colos. ii. 14.) that Christians were dead to the law by the body of Christ, (Rom. vii. 4.) that the Jewish sacrifices were only to continue till the time of reformation, (Heb. ix. 10.) and that Christ had taken away these sacrifices by the sacrifice of himself, (x. 9.) should yet submit to these rites, and make provision for these sacrifices. To this it may be answered, (1.) that the vow of Nazaritism being only a stricter sort of separation of themselves from all pollution to the service of God, and to be holy, and free from all kind of defilement, seems very well consistent with the design and spirit of Christianity. (2.) Observe, that the offerings of the temporary Nazarite, at the completion of his vow, being a burnt-offering, a sin-offering, and a peace-offering, (Numb. vi. 14.) and two of these being not sacrifices appointed to expiate sin, but offerings of thanksgiving to God, who had enabled them to perform their vow, and of acknowledgment of God's sovereign dominion; and the advice here being not personally to make or present these offerings, but only to purify himself, καὶ δαπανᾶν ἐπ' αὐτοῖς, to help the Nazarites in bearing some part of the charges of these offerings; which, saith Maimonides, others might help the Nazarites to do; this action seems to have little or nothing inconsistent with the doctrine of St. Paul. But, thirdly, though St. Paul knew these constitutions were not now obliging in themselves, yet seeing they were rites belonging to that temple, which was yet standing, and God had not, by any express declaration made to the Jews, prohibited the continuance of them, St. Paul might lawfully submit to this compliance with them, to prevent the scandal of the unbelieving Jews, which might divert them from that Christianity they had embraced, and to promote their salvation by his preaching Christ unto them; for upon this account he circumcised Timothy, (Acts xvi. 3.) and to the Jew became as a Jew, that he might gain the Jew; to them that were under the law, as under the law, that he might gain them that were under the law. (1 Cor. ix. 20.) Whence we may learn, what great condescension in lesser matters may be used for the promotion of the salvation of others.

[10] Ver. 31. And as they went about to kill him.] To wit, with the rebels' beating, which, saith Dr. Lightfoot here, was stripes without measure, even unto death, and that without judicial proceeding; and this they did, either as presuming that he had brought an uncircumcised person within the step of the temple, which was, saith Philo,* present death; or, because they conceived he had spoken against the law and the temple, for which cause they before had stoned Stephen.

[11] Ver. 38. Art not thou that Egyptian that before these days leddest out four thousand men which were murderers?] It seems to be a mistake in Grotius and others, to say, the Egyptian mentioned by Josephus was later than these times: for it is apparent from Josephus, both in his Antiquities, lib. xx. cap. 6. and his History of the Jewish Wars, that this Egyptian did this in the first or second year of Nero, whereas Paul came not to Jerusalem till the fourth of Nero. But whereas here are mentioned only four thousand, and by Eusebius in his Chronicle, three thousand; Josephus, and out of him Eusebius, say, that he gathered περὶ τρισμυρίους, about thirty thousand: to this some say, that in the wilderness they increased to that number; others, that of this number only four thousand were sicarii, murderers; I had rather say, that τρισμύριοι, in Josephus, only signifies three thousand; for he tells us, De Bell. Jud. lib. ii. cap. 23. that the Egyptian fled with a few; and that πλεῖστοι τῶν μετ' αὐτοῦ, most of those that were with him were taken, and yet saith, that only four hundred of them were killed, and two hundred were taken, Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 6.

CHAP. XXII.

1. MEN, brethren, and fathers, hear ye my defence which I make now to you (Gr. my apology to you for my change from a zealous Jew to an assertor of the Christian faith).

2. And when they heard that he spake in the Hebrew tongue to them (i. e. as a Hebrew of the Hebrews, Phil. iii. 5. and not as a Hellenistic Jew: see note on vi. 1.) they kept the more silence: and he saith (i. e. spake to them thus),

3. I am verily a man which am a Jew, [1] born (indeed) in Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, yet (but) brought up in this city [2] at the feet of Gamaliel, (a pharisee, and celebrated doctor of the law, Acts v. 34.) and (was) taught (by him) according to the perfect manner (Gr. ἀκρίβειαν, the exactness) of the law of the fathers (i. e. delivered from our fathers to us), and was zealous towards (or for the observance of the law of) God (in the same manner) as ye all are this day.

4. And I persecuted (the men of) this way (i. e. the Christians) to the death, binding and delivering into prison both men and women (professing Christianity, that they might be punished with death as blasphemers of the law, Acts vi. 13.)

5. As also the high-priest [3] doth bear me witness (Gr. will, I suppose, if asked, bear me witness), and all the estate (or senate) of the elders: from whom also I received letters to the brethren, and went (Gr. receiving letters went) to Damascus, to bring (Gr. καὶ ἄξων, and was about to bring) them which were there bound to Jerusalem, to be punished.

6. [4] And it came to pass, that, as I made my journey (on this errand), and was come nigh to Damascus about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me, (and them that journeyed with me, xxvi. 13.)

7. And (through the terror of it, both) I (and they that were with me) fell to the ground, (xxvi. 14.) and (I) heard a (-n articulate) voice saying to me, (in the Hebrew tongue, ibid.) Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?

8. And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? And he said to me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest.

9. And they that were with me saw indeed the light, (and heard a voice, ix. 7.) and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me.

10. And I said, What shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said to me, Arise, and go to Damascus; and there it shall be (farther) told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do, (and suffer for me, ix. 16.)

11. And when I (being risen) could not see for the glory of that light (which shone upon me), being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came to Damascus.

12. And one Ananias, (a Christian indeed, but still) a devout man according to the law, (and) having a good report of (from) all the Jews that dwelt there,

13. Came to me, and stood (by me), and said to me, Brother Saul, receive thy sight, (for the Lord Jesus hath sent me to thee for that end, ix. 17.) And the same hour I looked up upon him.

14. And he said, The God of our fathers hath chosen thee, (designing) that thou shouldest know his will, and see that Just One (who appeared to thee), and shouldest hear the voice of his mouth.

15. For (this being done) thou shalt be his witness to all men of what thou hast seen and heard.

16. And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized (Gr. arising, be baptized), and (so) wash away thy sins, [5] calling upon the name of the Lord (Jesus, who thereupon will consecrate thee to, and enable thee for, this work, by filling thee with the Holy Ghost, ix. 17.)

17. And (accordingly) it came to pass, that, when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, (Gr. and it happened to me returning to Jerusalem, and praying in the temple, that) I was (Gr. to be) in a trance (or ecstacy);

18. [6] And saw him (Gr. and to see, i. e. perceive him,) saying to me, Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem: for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me.

19. [7] And I said, Lord, (it is wonderful that they should not receive my testimony, seeing) they know that (formerly) I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue them that believed in thee:

20. And (that) when the blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed, I also was standing by, and consenting to his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him.

21. And (but) he said to me, (Argue not, but) depart: for I will send thee far hence to the gentiles.

22. And they gave him audience to (i. e. until) this word, and then (they) lifted up their voices, and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth: for it is not fit that he should live.

23. And as they cried out, and [8] cast off their clothes, (as persons ready to stone him, v. 57.) and threw dust into the air (to shew their rage against him),

24. [9] The chief captain commanded him to be brought into the castle, and bade that he should be examined by scourging; that (by his confession) he might know wherefore they cried so against him.

25. And as they bound him with thongs (in order to the scourging of him), Paul said to the centurion that stood by, Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman, and (is) uncondemned?

26. When the centurion heard that (this), he went and told the chief captain, saying, Take heed what thou doest: for this man is a Roman.

27. Then the chief captain came, and said to him, Tell me, art thou a Roman? (And) he said, Yea.

28. And the chief captain answered, [10] With a great sum (of money) obtained I this freedom (of a citizen of Rome). And Paul said, But I was free born (viz. in a city which had this privilege, and so needed not to acquire it by money).

29. Then straightway they departed from him which should have examined him: and the chief captain also was afraid, after he knew that he was a Roman, and (he thus feared) because he had bound him (in order to the scourging him).

30. On the morrow, because he would have known the certainty wherefore he was accused of the Jews, he loosed him from his bonds, and commanded the chief priests and all their council to appear, and brought Paul down (from the castle), and set him before them.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXII.

[1] Ver. 3. Born in Tarsus,] The metropolis of Cilicia; where they applied themselves so much, saith Strabo,* to the study of philosophy, and all the liberal sciences, ὡς ὑπερβέβληνται καὶ Ἀθήνας καὶ Ἀλεξανδρείαν, as that they excelled the men of Athens and of Alexandria, and of all other places dedicated to the study of those sciences.

[2] At the feet of Gamaliel.] It was, saith Pseud-Ambrosius,† the tradition of the synagogue to dispute sitting; the seniors in dignity, in chairs; those next to them on benches; and the last on the pavement upon mats. For the disciples, saith Buxtorf,‡ sat at the feet of their masters, and therefore, by way of advice to others, to become disciples of their wise men, they used to say, "pulveriza te pulvere pedum sapientum," put thyself in the dust of their feet. Accordingly we find Mary sitting at the feet of Christ, Luke x. 39. Note also, that this Gamaliel was so far from being well affected to Christianity, that some of the Jewish writings say, he added to their daily prayers that which they used in their synagogues against the progress of Christianity, called the prayer against heretics. (See Lightf. Hor. Hebr. in Matt. vi. 9.) By this Gamaliel, saith he, was I taught according to the exactness of the law of our fathers, being by sect a pharisee, and very well skilled in the traditions pretended to be delivered to us from our forefathers: (Gal. i. 14. see note on xxvi. 5.) and I was, saith he, ζηλωτὴς Θεοῦ, zealous towards God, as ye all are. Now they being not all of the sect of the zealots, which obtained then among them, this phrase cannot necessarily import, that St. Paul was of that sect.

[3] Ver. 5. Doth bear me witness.] Μαρτυρεῖ here being not of the present tense, but the second future, should be rendered, will witness, as in the paraphrase.

[4] Ver. 6. And it came to pass as I made my journey, and was come nigh to Damascus, &c.] I have in the notes on chap. ix. of this book, given the exposition of this history, and shall here establish the truth of it, and consequently of that faith to which he was converted. In order to this end, let us consider,

First, Who St. Paul was before this wonderful conversion; and here the Scripture doth inform us, that his education was in the schools of Tarsus; from thence he came to the university at Jerusalem for the study of divinity and of the Jewish law: his tutor was Gamaliel, a man of special note among the people; he was, by his profession, of the most strict and most exact sect of the pharisees, a sect of all men most estranged from, and enraged against, Christianity: and for the truth of this, St. Paul appeals to the whole Jewish nation in these words: My manner of life from my youth, which was at the first among mine own nation at Jerusalem, know all the Jews, which know from the beginning, if they would testify, that, after the most strict sect of our religion, I lived a pharisee; by practice and employment he was an early, zealous, and industrious persecutor of the professors of the Christian faith. When Stephen, the first martyr, perished by law, or by judicial sentence, Saul was consenting to his murder; being inflamed by this zeal, he instantly proceeds to make great havoc in the church, entering into every house, and haling men and women into prison, breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord; he obtains letters from the high-priest and elders of Jerusalem, or a commission, if he found any of this way, whether men or women, to bring them bound to Jerusalem, to be there sentenced by the Sanhedrin; (ver. 2.) and in pursuance of this commission, he persecutes Christians to the death, binding and delivering up unto it men and women; he punished them oft in the synagogues, and compelled them to blaspheme; and being exceeding mad against them, he persecuted them to strange cities. And for the truth of these particulars, he solemnly appeals to those chief priests and elders from whom he had received his commission; for of this, saith he, the high-priest can bear me witness, and all the estates of the elders: yea, it was a thing notorious to all that heard him preach that faith which he had formerly destroyed; for they were all amazed at it, and said, Is not this he that destroyed them that called on this name in Jerusalem, and who came hither for this intent, that he might bring them bound to the chief priests? so that he was by education, by profession, by employment, as fully prejudiced against the Christian faith as any of the Jews could be. And therefore, though he was not, as St. Austin and some others say, converted by an irresistible force, or such a violence as took away the freedom of his will, for then he could not have been disobedient to the heavenly vision, since there can be no disobedience to, where there is no resistance of, the will of God; yet was it wrought in that stupendous manner, and with that signal evidence, which could not be resisted without wilful sin and obstinate perverseness: for,

First, This scene was opened with a heavenly light, transcending that of the meridian sun: now this was by the Jews still looked on as the symbol of a Divine and glorious presence, and is in Scripture often styled Schechinah, the majestic presence and the glory of God; wherefore both Saul and his companions fell on their faces, not only through the terror of this light, but also as it were an indication of the appearance of some Divine and glorious person to them, it being usual both for the patriarchs and Jews to fall flat on their faces at such a glorious appearance; for so did Abraham, Gen. xvii. 3. so did the Jews, Lev. ix. 24. so did Moses and Aaron, when the glory of the Lord appeared to them, Numb. xxix. 6. so did Balaam, Numb. xxii. 21. Joshua, Josh. v. 14. Manoah and his wife, Judg.

‡ In vuce אבק Pirk Avoth, cap. 1. §. 4.

xiii. 20. David and all the elders, 1 Chron. xxi. 16. Ezekiel, i. 1. and Daniel, viii. 17.

Secondly, He hears a voice directed from this shining cloud, and saying to him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? and giving him assurance that it was Jesus of Nazareth who then appeared to him, and who complained that he was persecuted by him in all the cruelties which he inflicted on the living members of his body; so that he could no longer question either the resurrection or ascension of the holy Jesus, or his advancement to the right hand of glory.

Thirdly, He by the glory of this light is struck stark blind, and so continues till one of Christ's disciples comes and lays his hands upon him, and in the name of Jesus restoreth his lost sight unto him: he prays to him he had so lately persecuted, and doth in answer to that prayer receive a vision of that very person who should restore unto him his lost sight: he lastly is baptized in the name of Jesus, and with that baptism receives a plentiful effusion of the Holy Ghost: so that he had the greatest evidence imaginable, both of the presence and the power of the holy Jesus, and of the glorious things which were performed in his name, and were vouchsafed to the professors of the faith of Christ. Now for the truth of these particulars, that in his journey to Damascus that glorious light appeared, and a voice spake unto him, all his companions, whose eyes beheld that light, and whose ears heard that voice, could testify: that for a season he was blind, both they who led him to Damascus, and the whole family of Judas where he lodged, must be sufficient witnesses: that he was afterward restored to his sight the same persons could attest: that he was thereupon converted to the Christian faith, all they who, to their admiration, heard him preach that faith, which before he had laboured to destroy, must know. Moreover, had not this persecutor been turned to a promoter of the Christian faith, why were the Jews so vehemently incensed against him? Why do they lie in wait to kill him even in the place of his conversion? Why do they watch the gates continually that he might not escape their bloody hands? Why were the Hellenists of Jerusalem still thirsting for his blood? Why do even forty of them bind themselves under a curse that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul? Why do they with such violence cry out, Away with such a fellow from the earth, it is not fit that he should live? Why was it that the chief priests and elders and all the multitude of the Jews were so desirous of his death, crying out before all the Roman governors, that he ought not to live any longer? This sure is evidence sufficient, that he, whom they commissionated to persecute the Christian faith, was now become a convert to, and an industrious promoter of, it; and hence also it must be evident, that he who spake unto him was no other than the holy Jesus; that upon his conversion he received the gifts and the miraculous operations of the Holy Ghost, must be apparent from the tongues he spake, the miracles he did for confirmation of that faith; that his sight was recovered by the name of Jesus, as it depends upon the testimony of Ananias, so is that Ananias declared to be a devout man according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews that lived at Damascus, and so a witness against whom those Jews could make no just exception. And surely the conversion of a person so fully prejudiced against the Christian faith, to that faith he did so vehemently oppose and persecute by such a visible appearance of this very Jesus to him, with such glorious circumstances, the sight which was restored to him by one of his disciples, the effusion of the Holy Ghost upon him when baptized, whereby he was enabled to preach the gospel with demonstration of the Spirit, and with power, must give sufficient demonstration not only of the truth of his conversion, but also of that doctrine which he preached, viz. that Jesus was the Son of God.

[5] Ver. 16. Ἐπικαλεσάμενος τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου, Calling upon the name of the Lord.] Here Grotius would have us read αὐτοῦ, his name, and refer this, not to Christ, but to God the Father, mentioned ver. 14. whereas even Woltzogenius here saith, we are to understand Jesus Christ, of whom here mention is made both in the antecedent and subsequent words; and this is evident from the interpretation of Ananias, who, to prevent such a mistake, saith, ὁ Κύριος, the Lord, even Jesus, who was seen of thee, hath sent me to thee; (ix. 17.) and having told us that Christians were persons who called upon the name of Christ, ver. 14. we have reason to conceive that he adviseth Paul thus to profess, and shew he was a Christian; and hence the inference of Chrysostom * from this place is this, that by these words he shews that Christ was God, because it is not lawful to invoke any besides God.

[6] Ver. 18. Καὶ ἰδεῖν αὐτὸν, And to see him.] That is, saith Grotius, an angel instead of Christ; but this is plainly contrary to the text, both here and chap. xxvi. for here the promise made to him is, that he should see that Just One, and hear the words of his mouth, ver. 14. and there it is said, that he would appear to him to teach him what he was to preach, ver. 16. and therefore here Paul calls him Lord, ver. 19. and elsewhere saith, Am I not an apostle, have I not seen the Lord Jesus Christ? 1 Cor. ix. 1.

[7] Ver. 19. And I said, Lord, they know that I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue them that believed in thee.] i. e. Lord, my former zeal against those that believed in thee is so well known to them all, by so many remarkable instances shewed among them, that sure they must be convinced that it is upon some certain and irresistible grounds of persuasion that I am now become a preacher of that faith I formerly destroyed and persecuted with so great zeal; and so I am apt to think, they should more diligently attend to the narrative I give of my wonderful change, and to the reasons I now offer to confirm the truth of the Christian faith.

[8] Ver. 23. And as they cast off their clothes, and threw dust into the air.] They cast off their clothes, as in the instance of St. Stephen, vii. 58. that they might be the more ready to stone him; and they threw dust into the air, to shew their rage against him, and their abhorrence of him, as of a person not fit to be conversed with any longer, it being usual to testify this by shaking the dust from their feet. (Luke ix. 5. Acts xiii. 35.)

[9] Ver. 24. The chief captain commanded μάστιξιν ἀνετάζεσθαι αὐτὸν, to examine him by scourging.] Ἀνετάζειν is to examine by way of torment, to find out, or cause men to confess, a crime; so in Hesychius and Phavorinus ἐτάζεσθαι is κρίνεσθαι καὶ βασανίζεσθαι, to be punished and tormented, and ἐξέτασις is βασανισμὸς, torment: so Gen. xii. 17. καὶ ἤτασεν ὁ Θεὸς τὸν Φαραὼ ἐτασμοῖς, God plagued Pharaoh with great plagues; and Esth. ii. 22. the king ἤτασε, examined, or tormented, the two eunuchs: so the wicked say of the righteous, βασάνῳ ἐτάσωμεν αὐτὸν, let us try him with torments, Wisd. ii. 19. and the author of that book, vi. 6. that the mighty δυνατῶς ἐτασθήσονται, shall be mightily tormented; and in the son of Sirach, xxiii. 9. οἰκέτης ἐξεταζόμενος, is a servant that was beaten. This examination was used by the Romans, and by other nations, to force them who were thus scourged to confess what they had done, why, and who were conscious to the fact, as Tacitus * saith of Herennius Gallus, that he received stripes that they might know, "quo pretio, et quibus conscüs prodidisset exercitum," at what price, and with what confederates, he betrayed the Roman army. (3.) They who were thus scourged had their arms extended, and their bodies tied to a pillar, as Lipsius † shews; and thus here they seem προτείνειν, to stretch out St. Paul's body to the whip and scourge. (4.) This punishment of scourging, not with rods, but μάστιξι καὶ ἱμᾶσι, with whips and thongs, as here, was not used to a Roman, but to strangers only; on which account Cicero, in his oration pro Rabirio, speaks against Labienus thus, "Porcia lex virgas ab omnium civium corpore amovit; hic misericors flagella retulit," the Porcian law permits not a citizen to be whipped with rods; but he hath done it with scourges; and upon this account St. Paul here saith, Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned? ver. 25.

* Ἐπικαλεσάμενος τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Χριστοῦ· τοῦτο δεικνύντός ἐστιν αὐτὸν Θεὸν ὄντα· οὐ γὰρ ἔνι ἕτερόν τινα ἐπικαλέσασθαι εἰ μὴ τὸν Θεόν.

[10] Ver. 28. With a great sum of money obtained I this freedom. And Paul said, But I was free born.] Dion ‡ and Tacitus inform us, that about the time of Claudius the rights of a Roman citizen were bought with little money; but it is more difficult to shew how St. Paul came to be free born; Grotius and Le Clerc will not have it to be on the account of his being born in Tarsus, that being no Roman colony; but it makes fair for the opinion of those who think Tarsus had obtained this freedom through the favour of some emperor, that Dion Cassius § says, that they so favoured Julius Cæsar in the civil war, and afterward Octavius, that it obtained the name of Juliopolis, and was honoured with the greatest privileges; and that Dio Chrysostom in his oration saith, it received from Cæsar all that honour and power which one could give to his friends and companions: but Carthusianus, and the gloss upon 2 Tim. iv. 12. say more fully, that they received this freedom because they met the Roman ambassadors with peace and crowns, and that then the father of Paul going out with them received the penula or cloak which St. Paul sent for, as an ensign or mark of a Roman citizen.

CHAP. XXIII.

1. AND Paul, earnestly beholding the council, said, Men and brethren, [1] I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day.

2. And the high-priest Ananias commanded them that stood by him to smite him on the mouth.

3. Then said Paul to him, [2] God shall smite thee, thou whited wall (i. e. thou hypocrite): for sittest thou (as a magistrate) to judge me after the law, and (yet) commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law? (which saith, Thou shalt do no unrighteousness in judgment, Lev. xix. 15.)

4. And they that stood by said, Revilest thou God's high-priest?

5. Then said Paul, [3] I wist (or knew) not, brethren, that he (who commanded me to be smitten) was the high-priest: (the knowledge of that might haply have restrained me from speaking thus,) for it is written, Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people.

6. But when Paul perceived (or, then Paul knowing) that the one part (of the council and of the people) were sadducees, and the other pharisees (who asserted the resurrection of the body, which the sadducees denied), he cried out in the council, Men and brethren, I am a pharisee, the son of a pharisee: of (i. e. concerning one of their doctrines, viz.) [4] the hope and resurrection (i. e. the hope of the resurrection) of the dead I am called in question.

7. And when he had so said, there arose a dissension between the pharisees and the sadducees: and the multitude was divided.

8. (These words of St. Paul being a plain declaration of his opposition to the doctrine of the sadducees;) [5] for the sadducees say that there is no resurrection (of the body), neither (is there any permanent) angel, nor spirit: but the pharisees confess both (angels and other spirits remaining after their separation from the body).

9. And there arose (upon this dissension) a great cry (or clamour): and (for) the scribes which were of the pharisees' part arose, and strove (in defence and justification of St. Paul), saying, We find no evil in this man: but if a spirit or an angel hath spoken to him, let us not fight against God.

10. And when there arose a great dissension (Gr. and the dissension growing great), the chief captain, fearing lest Paul should have been pulled in pieces of them, commanded the soldiers to go down, and to take him by force from among them, and to bring him into the castle (of Antonia).

11. And the night following [6] the Lord (Jesus) stood by him, and said (to him), Be of good cheer, Paul, for as thou hast testified of me at Jerusalem, [7] so must thou bear witness also (of me) at Rome.

12. And when it was day, certain of the Jews banded together, [8] and bound themselves under a curse, saying (with an imprecation) that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul.

13. And they were more than forty (persons) who had made this conspiracy (against him, out of zeal to their religion).

14. And (the better to accomplish it) they came to the chief priests and elders, (men as zealous for his destruction as themselves, xxv. 15.) and said (to them), We have bound ourselves under a great curse, that we will eat nothing till we have slain Paul.

15. Now therefore ye with the (whole) council signify (your request) to the chief captain that he (would) bring him down to you to-morrow, as though you would inquire something more perfectly concerning him: and we, or ever (i. e. before) he come near (to the council), are ready to kill him.

§ Lib. xlvii.

16. And when Paul's sister's son heard of their lying in wait, he went, and entered (Gr. being present, and entering) into the castle, and (Gr. he) told Paul.

17. [9] Then Paul called one of the centurions to him, and said, Bring this young man to the chief captain: for he hath a certain thing to tell him.

18. So he took him, and brought him to the chief captain, and said, Paul the prisoner called me to him, and prayed me to bring this young man to thee, who hath something to say to thee.

19. Then the chief captain took him by the hand, and went (with him) aside privately, and asked him, What is it that thou hast to tell me?

20. And he said, (certain of) the Jews have agreed to desire thee (by intercession of the council) that thou wouldest bring down Paul to-morrow to the council, as if they would inquire something of him more perfectly.

21. But do not thou yield (this) to them: for there lie in wait for him of them more than forty men, who have bound themselves with an oath, that they will neither eat nor drink till they have killed him: and now are they ready, looking for a promise from thee (to bring him down).

22. So the chief captain let the young man depart, and charged him (saying), See thou tell no man that thou hast shewed these things to me.

23. And he called to him two centurions, saying (to them), Make ready two hundred soldiers to go to Cæsarea, and horsemen threescore and ten, and spearmen two hundred, at the third hour of the night;

24. And provide them beasts, that they may set Paul on, and bring him safe to Felix the governor.

25. And he wrote a letter (to him) after this manner:

26. Claudius Lysias to the most excellent governor Felix sendeth greeting.

27. This man (whom I send to thee) was taken of the Jews, and should have been killed of them: then came I with an army, and rescued him, having understood (Gr. this man taken by the Jews, and being about to be killed by them, I, knowing it, with my army rescued him, understanding) that he was a Roman.

28. And when I would have known (Gr. being willing to know) the cause wherefore (for which) they accused him, I brought him forth into their council:

29. Whom I perceived to be accused of (i. e. concerning) questions of their law, but to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death or of bonds.

30. And when it was told me how that the Jews laid wait for the man (or when I was told of a conspiracy that would be against him from the Jews), I sent (him) straightway to thee, and gave commandment to his accusers also to say before thee what they had (to say) against him. Farewel.

31. Then the soldiers, as it was commanded them, took Paul, and brought him by night to Antipatris.

32. (And) on the morrow they left the horsemen to go (on) with him, and (the foot) returned to the castle:

33. Who (i. e. which horsemen), when they came to Cæsarea, and delivered the epistle to the governor, presented Paul also before him.

34. And when the governor had read the letter, he asked of what province he was. And when he understood that he was of Cilicia;

35. I will hear thee, said he (to Paul), when thine accusers are also come. And he commanded him (in the mean time) to be kept in Herod's judgment-hall.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXIII.

[1] Ver. 1. I HAVE lived in all good conscience to this day.] Not as a good conscience signifies a conscience void of error and offence, for he owns himself to have been guilty of great sin in persecuting the church of Christ, 1 Tim. i. 13. 15. but as it signifies a conscience acting according to his persuasion that he ought to act; and in this sense, when he blasphemed against Christ, and persecuted his church, he did this even through a persuasion that he ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus, Acts xxvi. 9, 10. Moreover, by saying that he lived in all good conscience, whilst he professed Judaism, and was, as to the righteousness of the law, blameless, Phil. iii. 6. he gives them to understand that he left not the religion of the Jews out of any hardships which it did require, or any prejudice he had against the precepts of it; and by adding, that he also had lived unblamably in the profession of the Christian faith, he intimates that he became and continued a Christian out of a full conviction that he was bound in conscience so to be, and so to act, and that he still served God from a pure conscience. (2 Tim. i. 3.)

[2] Ver. 3. God shall smite thee, thou whited wall.] He elegantly compares him to a whited wall, because, as that had a fair outside, but nothing but dirt, sticks, or stones within, so he had an outward appearance of a righteous judge, sitting as one that would pass judgment according to the law, and yet commanding him to be punished for speaking the truth, and so condemning the innocent against the law of nature and of Moses, which saith, Thou shalt do no unrighteousness in judgment, Lev. xix. 15. And he foretells that God shall smite him, by that gift of prophecy which God had given him, which came to pass, he being slain, saith Chrysostom; he perishing in the siege of Jerusalem, saith Dr. Lightfoot; he being deposed, and sent bound to Rome, saith Josephus, Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 5. p. 692. E.

Καὶ σὺ κάθῃ κρίνων με κατὰ τὸν νόμον, καὶ παρὰ νόμον κελεύεις με τύπτεσθαι; For sittest thou to judge me according to the law, and yet commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law?] Here Stephanus makes two easy emendations, κρινῶν and παρανομῶν, and so renders the words thus; Sittest thou as one about to judge me according to the law, and yet violating that law, commandest me (uncondemned) to be smitten? The first I think unnecessary, because Ananias was then actually on the seat of judgment, and executing the office of a judge; the second seems not to be an emendation, but the more common reading of the text.

[3] Ver. 5. Οὐκ ᾔδειν ὅτι ἐστὶν ἀρχιερεύς, &c. I wist not that he was the high-priest: for it is written, &c.] I am not willing to own that St. Paul, who doubtless was filled with the Holy Ghost, and had a share in the promise of his assistance and direction, when they came before governors, should here be guilty of a transgression of the law, especially when I suppose him acted by a prophetic impulse; and yet it is not easy to put any likely sense upon these words by which we can avoid it. We cannot do it according to our translation, or the observation of some critics, that οὐκ ᾔδειν signifies, I considered not; for that seems plainly to insinuate, that if he had well considered or weighed his words, he should not have uttered them, as being contrary to the precept, not to speak evil of the ruler of the people; which surely is to confess, that he had by them violated that command, had he considered to whom he spake. Nor (2.) according to the exposition of Dr. Hammond; for though he saith he was not truly the high-priest, (note on Luke iii. c.) yet he confesseth that Ananias was then ruler of the people, and so makes St. Paul to say in his paraphrase, I confess I did amiss. Dr. Lightfoot and Grotius think as I do, that St. Paul does not go about to excuse his mistake, but rather saith, I know well enough that God's high-priest is not to be reviled, but that this Ananias is a high-priest I know not, i. e. I do not own him as such, who hath procured this title by bribery; our celebrated rabbins * having declared that such a one is neither a judge, nor to be honoured as such; in which sense the blind man saith of Christ to the pharisees, that he is a sinner, οὐκ οἶδα, I know not, John ix. 25. and this he might say, because the high-priest had not then on him those robes peculiar to him, by which he was distinguished from other priests. Or, (2.) the latent sense may be this, The prophetic impulse that was upon me, and inwardly moved me thus to speak, permitted me not to advert that it was the high-priest, lest that law I mention might have restrained me from complying with that impulse; and it is certain from the example of Christ styling Herod, fox, Luke xiii. 32. and of St. Paul calling Nero, lion, 2 Tim. iv. 17. and acknowledged by the Jews, that he who acted as a prophet was not under the obligation of this precept, as others were; but St. Paul speaks so obscurely, because, saith Grotius, he knew he would find no credit from them in this assertion.

[4] Ver. 6. For the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question.] That is, for the hope of the resurrection of the dead; so, χάρις καὶ ἀποστολὴ, is the grace of apostleship, ζωὴ καὶ πνοὴ, the breath of life, Acts xvii. 25. (See Glassius Philol. i. lib. iii. tr. de nom.) but then it is inquired, why St. Paul here saith he was called in question for this hope in general, and xxiv. 15. xxvi. 6. repeats the same thing, when he was only called in question concerning the resurrection of the Lord Jesus. Now the reason of this will appear from this observation; that before our Saviour's passion the doctrine which he preached being chiefly levelled against the vain traditions of the scribes and pharisees, and his woes denounced against them, they still appear in opposition to him, the sadducees being scarce ever mentioned as his adversaries; but after his resurrection the testimony of the apostles being this, that Christ was risen from the dead, and so directly contrary to that which distinguished the sadducees from the pharisees, we find them most forward to oppose their testimony; then the sadducees came upon them, being grieved that they preached the resurrection of the dead through Jesus, iv. 1, 2. then the high-priest and all the sect of the sadducees] were filled with zeal against them, v. 17. the scribes, which were of the sect of the pharisees, rather siding with St. Paul in this matter. Another reason, why St. Paul thus mixed these things together, might be this, that the apostles testified the resurrection of the dead through Jesus, Acts iv. 2. and taught that God would raise us up by Jesus, 1 Thess. iv. 14. and so the proof of the one, viz. that Christ was risen, was a confirmation of the general resurrection.

[5] Ver. 8. The sadducees say there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit.] That the sadducees did not believe the resurrection of the body, as all the ancient Christians* plainly do assert, so this scripture, and Matt. xxii. 23. plainly testify. (2.) They said, that after the giving of the law at least, there was no angel; and that when they are said to appear so often in the law of Moses, they were framed for that purpose, and after ceased to have any being; for otherwise it is hard to conceive, how they could believe the law of Moses, and yet deny that angels ever did exist. And (3.) when they are said to deny any spirits, this is not to be so understood, as if they denied God to be a spirit, or that there was any spirit of man within him, but, as Josephus† testifies, they denied τῆς ψυχῆς τὴν διαμονὴν, the permanency of the soul after death; and so they denied any spirits separated from bodies which could appear, or reveal any thing to them: the pharisees held the contrary, as is apparent from these words, ver. 9. If an angel or spirit hath spoken to him: of such apparitions, believed by the apostles, we have mention Matt. xiv. 26. Luke xxiv. 37. and the Jews believed that Samuel thus appeared to Saul, and Elias frequently to them, the sadducees denying all such apparitions.

[6] Ver. 11. The Lord stood by him,] "Per angelum," by an angel, saith Grotius, without all ground; an angel never being styled ὁ Κύριος, the Lord, in the New Testament, but only the angel of the Lord, Matt. i. 20. ii. 13. xix. 21. xxviii. 2. Luke i. 11. ii. 9. Acts v. 19. viii. 26. xii. 7, 23. and said, θάρσει Παῦλε, be of good courage, Paul; for as when thou testifiedst of me in Jerusalem, and they went about to kill thee, (Acts ix. 29, 30.) I delivered thee; so will I also deliver thee from the gentiles at Rome, according to my promise made to thee. (Acts xxvi. 17.)

[7] Δεῖ σε εἰς Ῥώμην μαρτυρῆσαι, Thou must testify of me at Rome.] Here is an instance of Divine appointment, without any necessity laid upon the will of Paul; whose appeal to Cæsar was only made as an expedient to preserve him from the rage of the Jews, (Acts xxv. 11. 24. xxviii. 19.) and so was only a matter of prudence, and not of absolute necessity.

[8] Ver. 12. Who bound themselves under a curse.] It was a thing too common among the zealots of the Jews, to cut off, without any judicial process, those whom they looked upon as transgressors of their laws, and enemies to the Jews. Josephus‡ informs us, that they committed infinite slaughters, τὰ μέγιστα κακῶν ἀγαθὰ νομίζοντες, thinking the vilest things were good when done by them. And Philo § speaks of some among them οἱ ὀμνύουσιν τραύματα καὶ σφαγὰς, who swore to wound and kill others, καὶ ἀνυπερθέτως αὐτὰ δρῶσι, and did so without delay; and that the chief priests and Sanhedrin approved of such murders done out of such pernicious designs, we learn from their confident address to them, ver. 14, 15. and their consent to the fact, ver. 20.

plainly proving by their lying and murderous dispositions, that they were children of the devil, John viii. 44. (See xxv. 2, 3.)

[9] Ver. 17. Then Paul called one of the centurions, &c.] Hence it appears, that even after a promise of our safety, (see note on ver. 11.) we ought not to neglect any honest means of our preservation, though it be to be accomplished by our addresses to men alien from the faith.

CHAP. XXIV.

1. AND after five days Ananias the high-priest descended with the elders, and with a certain orator named Tertullus, [1] who informed the governor (Gr. shewed themselves to the governor) against Paul.

2. And when he was called forth, Tertullus began to accuse him, saying (to the governor), [2] Seeing that by thee we enjoy great quietness, and that very worthy deeds are done to this nation by thy providence,

3. We accept it always, and in all places, most noble Felix, with all thankfulness.

4. Notwithstanding, that I be not (Gr. but that I may not be) farther tedious to thee, I pray thee that thou wouldest hear us of thy clemency a few words.

5. For we have found this man a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect (called from one Jesus of Nazareth, the sect) of the Nazarenes:

6. Who also hath gone about to profane the temple (of Jerusalem, by bringing into it heathens, xxi. 28.) whom we (therefore) took, [3] and would have judged according to our law.

7. But the chief captain Lysias came upon us, and with great violence took him away out of our hands,

8. Commanding his accusers to come to thee: by examining of whom (thou) thyself mayest take knowledge of all these things, whereof we accuse him.

9. And the Jews also assented (to this accusation), saying that these things were so.

10. Then Paul, after that the governor had beckoned to him to speak, answered, Forasmuch as I know that thou hast been for many years a judge to this nation (and so canst not be ignorant of the things belonging to Christianity, or to the Jews), I do the more cheerfully answer for myself (before thee):

11. Because that thou mayest understand, that there are yet but twelve days since I went up to Jerusalem to worship.

12. And (since my coming thither) they neither found me in the temple disputing with any man, nor (have they found me) raising up the people (Gr. making a sedition among the multitude), neither in the synagogues, nor in the city:

13. Neither can they prove (any other of) the things whereof they now accuse me.

14. But (as for that part of their accusation which relates to the sect of the Nazarenes) this I confess unto thee, that [4] after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers (viz. through Jesus Christ), believing all things which are written in the law and the prophets (concerning him):

15. And I have hope towards God (in God), which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection from the dead, [5] both of the just and of the unjust.

16. And [6] herein (therefore) do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence towards God, and towards men.

17. Now [7] after many years (from my conversion), I came to bring alms to my nation, and offerings (from the Christians of Macedonia and Achaia, Rom. xv. 26.)

18. Whereupon certain Jews (that came) from Asia found me purified in the temple (after the manner of the Nazarites, Acts xxi. 24. 26. and in compliance with the law of Moses concerning them that had a vow upon them, as then I had, xviii. 18. but I was there) neither with multitude, (i. e. concourse of any to profane the temple, as they imagined, xxi. 23.) nor with (any) tumult (made by me whilst I was there).

19. Who (being my accusers) ought to have been here before thee, and object (it, as doubtless they would do) if they had aught against me.

20. Or else, let these same here (who have assented to the accusation of Tertullus, ver. 9.) say, [8] if they have found any evil doing in me, whilst I stood before the council,

21. Except it be (their pleasure to accuse me) for this one voice, that I cried standing among them, (viz. That) touching the resurrection of the dead I am called in question by you this day.

22. And when Felix heard these things, [9] having (as being many years a judge of that nation, ver. 9.) more perfect knowledge of that way (Gr. τῆς ὁδοῦ, of the way of Christianity), he deferred (the farther hearing of) them, and said, When Lysias the chief captain shall come down (to Cæsarea), I will know the uttermost of your matter (Gr. I shall know the business between you).

23. And (then) he commanded a centurion to keep Paul, and to let him have liberty (from his bonds), and that he should forbid none of his acquaintance to minister or come to him.

24. And after certain days, when Felix came with his wife Drusilla, which was a Jewess (who had left her husband Isis or Azizus, king of the Emisseni, and had married Felix, an uncircumcised person, contrary to the law), he sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith of Christ.

25. And as he (Paul) reasoned of [10] righteousness, temperance (Gr. justice and continence), and (of) judgment to come, Felix trembled, and answered, Go thy way for this time; (and) when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee.

26. He hoped also (being a taker of bribes) that money should have been given him of Paul, that he might loose him (from his chain): wherefore they sent for him the oftener, and communed with him.

27. But [11] after two years (not of the government of Felix, ver. 10. but of St. Paul's imprisonment), Portius Festus came into Felix's room: and Felix, (being) willing to shew the Jews a pleasure, left Paul bound.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXIV.

[1] Ver. 1. "ΟΙΤΙΝΕΣ ἐνεφάνισαν τῷ ἡγεμόνι, Who informed the governor.] This word answers to the Hebrew יָדַע, as it in Hiphel signifies to make known, shew, declare, appear; and where a dative case follows, an accusative is to be understood, and is most frequently added; as when Moses says, Exod. xxxiii. 13. ἐμφάνισόν μοι σεαυτὸν, shew to me thyself: thus Esther, ἐνεφάνεσε τῷ βασιλεῖ τὰ τῆς ἐπιβουλῆς, shewed or declared the conspiracy to the king, Esth. ii. 22. so John xiv. 21. How is it ὅτι ἡμῖν μέλλεις ἐμφανίζειν σεαυτὸν, that thou wilt manifest thyself to us, and not to the world? And accordingly here and xxv. 2. 15. ἑαυτοὺς is to be understood, and the whole should be rendered, who shewed or declared themselves to the governor against Paul; not that they informed the governor; for the information follows, ver. 5, 6. and so our translators have rendered the word, xxiii. 22. and Heb. xi. 14.

[2] Ver. 2. Πολλῆς εἰρήνης τυγχάνοντες διὰ σοῦ, Seeing we enjoy great peace by thee, &c.] In this and in the following verses, the orator is guilty of sordid flattery and falschood: for though it be true, that Felix did some kindness to the Jewish nation in delivering them from the thieves and the magicians which infested them, as Josephus* doth acknowledge; yet that he otherwise was guilty of great injustice towards the Jews, and was on that account accused before Nero by the chief of the Jews dwelling at Cæsarea, and had been punished for his wickedness, had not his brother Pallas, who was then high in favour with Nero, succoured him, the same Josephus† testifies. (2.) That St. Paul moved the Jews to sedition against the government, or that he went about to profane the temple, was utterly false, see xxi. 28. and so was it also, that they took him to judge him according to their law; for they took him by violence, and drew him out of the temple, and went about to kill him without any judicial process, (xxi. 30, 31.)

[3] Ver. 6. And would have judged him according to our law.] From this, and from the complaint of violence used by Lysias in taking Paul out of their hands, it seemeth to appear, that the Jews still either had or claimed a power of inflicting death upon capital offenders against their law.

[4] Ver. 14. After that way which they call heresy;] They accusing St. Paul as a ringleader τῆς τῶν Ναζαραίων αἱρέσεως, of the heresy of the Nazarenes, that is, of the Christians, so styled both by Jew and gentile from their faith in Jesus of Nazareth. Now the word αἵρεσις bears often an indifferent sense, both in the Scriptures, as when it is said, Acts xv. 5. that some believers were ἐκ τῆς τῶν φαρισαίων αἱρέσεως, of the sect of the pharisees; and when the Jews at Rome inquire of Paul, what he thought περὶ τῆς αἱρέσεως ταύτης, of the sect of Christians, xxviii. 22. and when St. Paul saith in commendation of himself, that he lived κατὰ τὴν ἀκριβεστάτην αἵρεσιν, according to the exactest sect (or heresy) of their religion, xxvi. 5. and also in the ancient Jewish writers; as when Josephus gives an account of the three αἱρέσεις, heresies, or φιλοσοφίας, philosophical opinions of the Jews, Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 2. et de Bello Jud. lib. ii. cap. 12. yet seeing the prayer against the Christians, called beracoth haminim, if we may credit the Jews, was made by R. Samuel in the time of Gamaliel; and seeing Justin Martyr‡ doth inform us, that they very early sent their emissaries to all nations against the Christians, representing them as αἵρεσις ἄθεος καὶ ἄνομος, an atheistical and wicked heresy, we have reason to believe, that in this sense they accused St. Paul as a ringleader of the heresy of the Nazarenes.

[5] Ver. 15. Both of the just and of the unjust.] This seemeth necessarily to be added, because the doctrine of the pharisees, according to Josephus,* restrained the resurrection to the just, condemning the unjust to perpetual torments without any resurrection, the entrance into another body belonging only to the souls of the just.

[6] Ver. 16. Ἐν τούτῳ δὲ, And herein.] The critics say, that here and 2 Cor. v. 2. ἐν τούτῳ signifies interim, interea, in the meantime, but I think without any necessity; for in both places it may either signify ἐπὶ τοῦτο, ob hanc rem, for this cause, or have relation to the former verse; so here ἐν τούτῳ hath relation to ἐλπίδα ἔχων, and signifies having hope in this thing; and in the other place it hath relation to ὄντες ἐν τῷ σκήνει, and signifies being in this tabernacle, we groan.

[7] Ver. 17. After many years I came to bring alms.] The alms brought by him from Antioch, (xi. 29, 30.) cannot be here intended, they being brought by him and Barnabas, but seven years at most after his conversion; and nothing which he here relates touching purification, and concerning the Jews of Asia finding him in the temple, happening then; but only when he went up to Jerusalem with the alms and oblations of the churches of Macedonia and Achaia; then had he his vow upon him, (xviii. 18.) then did the Jews from Asia take hold of him in the temple, (xxi. 17.)

[8] Ver. 20. If they have found any evil doing in me while I stood before the council.] Hence it appears that he thought not he did evil in saying to Ananias the high-priest, God shall smite thee, &c.

[9] Ver. 22. Ἀκριβέστερον εἰδὼς τὰ περὶ τῆς ὁδοῦ.] It seems to me evident, that these words cannot admit the explication of Grotius and others, that Felix deferred them that he might have a more exact knowledge of Christianity; but that having his residence at Cæsarea, where Cornelius the centurion and his friends were converted, where Philip the evangelist dwelt, and where there were many disciples, (xxi. 8. 16.) he became thus acquainted with the way of Christianity.

[10] Ver. 25. Περὶ δικαιοσύνης καὶ ἐγκρατείας καὶ τοῦ κρίματος, Of justice and continency, and of the judgment to come.] Of this Felix, Tacitus† informs us, that "per omnem sævitiam et libidinem jus regium servili ingenio exercuit," he practised all cruelty and lust in his government, thinking that he might do‡ "cuncta malefacta impunè," all wickedness without punishment. And Josephus§ informs us of Drusilla, that leaving her husband, king Isis, she married with a heathen Felix, doing evil, and transgressing τὰ πάτρια νόμιμα, the laws of her country: to persons so unjust, St. Paul discourseth very appositely of justice and chastity, against which they had both so highly offended, as knowing that it was to little purpose to speak to them of Christianity till they forsook their sins: and discoursing also of a judgment to come, where Felix could not hope to escape unpunished, as here he did, it is no wonder that Felix trembled; and that Drusilla did not so also, was an argument of her Jewish confidence, that she might then escape by being a daughter of Abraham.

[11] Ver. 27. Διετίας δὲ πληρωθείσης, But after two years.] Baronius is here mistaken, who conceives that these two years are the two first years of Nero's reign, whereas indeed he continued procurator, as Bishop Pearson saith, till the sixth year of Nero. The two years plainly relate to St. Paul's being taken by the Jews in the temple; and put into the castle by the chief captain Lysias, which was, saith the same bishop, in the fourth year of Nero.

CHAP. XXV.

1. NOW when Festus was come into the (government of the) province, after three days he ascended from Cæsarea to Jerusalem.

2. Then the high-priest and the chief of the Jews informed him against Paul, and besought him,

3. And desired (Gr. desiring this) favour against him, that he would send for him to Jerusalem, (they) [1] laying wait in the way to kill him.

4. But Festus answered, that Paul should be kept at Cæsarea, and that he himself would depart shortly thither.

5. Let them therefore, said he, which among you are able, go down with me, and accuse this man, if there be any wickedness in him (for which he ought to be punished by the Roman laws).

6. And when he had tarried among them more than ten days, he went down (from Jerusalem) to Cæsarea; and the next day sitting in the judgment-seat (he) commanded Paul to be brought (before him).

7. And when he was come, the Jews which came down from Jerusalem stood round about, and laid many and grievous complaints against Paul, which they could not prove.

8. While he answered for himself, (Gr. he apologizing, That) [2] neither against the law of the Jews, (Acts xxviii. 17.) nor against the temple, (xxiv. 12.) nor yet against Cæsar, have I offended any thing at all.

9. But Festus, (being) willing to do the Jews a pleasure, answered Paul, and said, Wilt thou go up to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these things before me?

10. Then said Paul, I stand at Cæsar's judgment-seat, where I (being a Roman) ought to be judged: to the Jews have I done no wrong, as thou very well knowest; (they being now unable to prove any charge they lay against me, ver. 7.)

11. For if I be an offender (Gr. if indeed I have been unjust), or have committed any thing worthy of death, I refuse not to die; but if there be none of these things whereof they accuse me (true, or punishable by death), [3] no man may deliver me to them (who wait for an opportunity to kill me, ver. 3.) [4] I appeal unto Cæsar.

12. Then Festus, when he had [5] conferred with the council, answered, Hast thou (or, thou hast) appealed to Cæsar; (and therefore) unto Cæsar shalt thou go.

13. And after certain days king Agrippa (tetrarch of Galilee) and Bernice (his sister) came to Cæsarea to salute Festus.

14. And when they had been there many days, Festus declared Paul's cause to the king, saying, There is a certain man left in bonds by Felix:

15. About whom, when I was at Jerusalem, the chief priests and the elders of the Jews informed me, desiring to have judgment (of death, ver. 16.) against him.

16. To whom I answered, (Gr. That) [6] it is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he who is accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself concerning the crime laid against him.

17. Therefore, when they were come hither, without any delay on the morrow I sat on the judgment-seat, and commanded the man to be brought forth.

18. Against whom when the accusers stood up, they brought no accusation of such things as I supposed (they would, no charge of sedition or of offence against the Roman laws):

19. But had certain questions against him of their own superstition, and of (i. e. concerning) one Jesus, who was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive (again).

20. And because I doubted (whether I ought to judge) of such manner of questions, I asked him whether he would go to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these matters.

21. But when Paul had appealed to be reserved to the hearing of Augustus, I commanded him to be kept till I might send him to Cæsar.

22. Then Agrippa said to Festus, I would also hear the man myself. To-morrow, said he, thou shalt hear him.

23. And on the morrow, when Agrippa was come, and Bernice, [7] with great pomp (or retinue), and was entered into the place of hearing, with the chief captains, and principal men of the city, at Festus's commandment Paul was brought forth.

24. And Festus said, King Agrippa, and all (ye) men which are here present with us, ye see this man, about whom all the multitude of the Jews have dealt with (or besought) me, both at Jerusalem, and also here, crying (out) that he ought not to live any longer.

25. But when I found that he had committed nothing worthy of death, and that he himself had appealed to Augustus, I have determined to send him.

26. Of whom I have no certain thing to write to my lord. Wherefore I have brought him forth before you, and especially before thee, O king Agrippa, that, after examination had (of him), I might have somewhat to write.

27. For it seemeth to me unreasonable to send a prisoner, and not withal to signify the crimes laid against him.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXV.

[1] Ver. 3. LAYING wait in the way to kill him.] We need not wonder that the high-priest, and chief of the Jews, should be thus bloody-minded against Paul, when about this time they were arming one against the other. For at the latter end of the procuratorship of Felix, Josephus* informs us, that there was, τοῖς ἀρχιερεῦσι στάσις πρὸς τοὺς ἱερεῖς, καὶ τοὺς πρώτους τοῦ πλήθους τῶν Ἱεροσολυμιτῶν, a sedition betwixt the high-priests, and the priests, and chief men of Jerusalem, and that every one of them gathered a band of the most bold and seditious men, and became a leader of them; and that they reviled, and threw stones at one another; and that the high-priests were so impudent, as to send their servants to take away the tithe-corn of the priests, so that some of them perished for hunger.

[2] Ver. 8. Neither against the law of the Jews.] For he had committed nothing against the customs of their fathers, (xxviii. 17.) and to the Jews he became as a Jew, (1 Cor. ix. 20.) nor against the temple, for he had not profaned it, nor raised any tumult in it, (xxiv. 18.) nor against Cæsar, whom he commanded all men to obey as God's ordinance. (Rom. xiii.)

[3] Ver. 11. Οὐδείς με δύναται χαρίσασθαι αὐτοῖς, No man can deliver me to them.] i. e. No man can justly do it; I being not only an innocent person, having done them no wrong, (ver. 10.) but also a Roman, and therefore one who ought to be judged not by them, or their laws, but at the tribunal of Cæsar, by the Roman laws: so the word δύναται is often used to signify that only which may be lawfully done, as, v. g. Exod. viii. 26. οὐ δύναται γενέσθαι οὕτω, it is not meet so to do; Deut. xii. 17. οὐ δυνήσῃ φάγειν, thou mayest not eat of it within thy gates; Acts x. 47. τίς δύναται; who can forbid water? (See the note on Mark ii. 19.)

[4] I appeal unto Cæsar.] Hence it appears that St. Paul owned even Nero for his prince and supreme governor upon earth; and, (2.) that in cases of necessity, Christians may have recourse even to heathen judicatures, especially when they have to do with persons who are aliens from the faith.

[5] Ver. 12. Συλλαλήσας μετὰ τοῦ συμβουλίου, Conferring with the council.] Not with the council of the Jews, as Chrysostom conceives; for they never would have advised him to admit of St. Paul's appeal, or to send him to Cæsar out of their reach; but, as Grotius saith, with his own Roman council, which assisted him.

[6] Ver. 16. It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die before—he have his accusers face to face, &c.] Thus Philo * saith of them, that they yielded themselves to be common judges, hearing equally the accusers and defendants, and condemning no man unheard. And Appian in Grotius saith the same: this also was the law of the Jews, to which Nicodemus appealed in the case of Christ, John vii. 51.

[7] Ver. 23. Μετὰ πολλῆς φαντασίας, With great pomp.] i. e. With a great train of attendants, as the word signifies in Laertius, when he saith,† Bion had φαντασίαν ἀκολουθῆσαν αὐτῷ, a great train of mariners following him; or with great splendour, as when Athenion‡ was carried to Athens in a chair of state with silver and purple hangings, the people ran out to see the sight, no Roman ever entering the city, ἐν τοσαύτῃ φαντασίᾳ, in so great splendour; though after there is mention of many servants going before, and following after him, which makes for the first sense. See more instances of this acceptation of the word in Dr. Bois on the place. And to them add that of Bardesanes in Eusebius, that the Bastrian women appeared on horses adorned with gold and jewels, μετὰ πολλῆς φαντασίας, with great pomp, and with a train of young men and maidens attending them. (Euseb. Præp. Evan. lib. vi. cap. 10. p. 276.)

CHAP. XXVI.

1. THEN Agrippa said to Paul, Thou art permitted to speak for thyself. Then Paul stretched forth his hand (to the people to keep silence), and (then he) answered for himself; (saying,)

2. [1] I think myself happy (i. e. I judge it no small advantage to me and my cause), king Agrippa, because (that) I shall answer for myself this day before thee, touching all the things whereof I am accused of the Jews:

3. Especially because I know thee to be (not only a person of a good temper and sedate mind, but also) expert in all customs and questions which are among the Jews: wherefore I beseech thee to hear me patiently.

4. My manner of life from my youth, which was at the first among my own nation at Jerusalem, (where I was bred up at the feet of Gamaliel, xxii. 3.) know all the Jews;

5. Who knew (this of) me from the beginning, if they would testify (the truth of me), that [2] after the most straitest sect of our religion I lived a pharisee.

6. [3] And now I stand, and am judged for the hope (ἕστηκα κρινόμενος ἐπ' ἐλπίδι, I stand questioned about the hope) of the promise made of God to our fathers, (I saying, that it is accomplished by the coming of Jesus Christ; and that this is proved by the resurrection of him from the dead; they denying his resurrection, and therefore expecting the accomplishment of this promise by the coming of some other person to be their Messiah):

7. [4] To which promise (of the Messiah) our twelve tribes, instantly (or earnestly) serving God day and night, hope (yet) to come. For which hope's sake (περὶ ἧς ἐλπίδος, concerning which hope), king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews, (for saying, that Jesus, whom they have crucified, God hath raised from the dead, and that he is the hope of Israel, xxviii. 10. some of them saying, on the contrary, that there is no resurrection of the dead at all; others denying that Christ is risen from the dead.

8. Of the first I inquire,) Why should it be thought (τί κρίνεται, why is it judged) a thing incredible with you, that God (infinite in power and wisdom) should (be able to) raise the dead?

9. (As for the second, I was once of their opinion; for) I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth (i. e. in opposition to those who believed that he was the Christ, and that he was risen from the dead).

10. Which thing I also did in Jerusalem; and many of the saints (i. e. the Christians) did I shut up in prison, having received authority from the chief priests (and elders so to do, xxii. 5.) and when they were put to death, I gave my voice against them, (i. e. I, in the instance of St. Stephen, approved of the sentence, viii. 1.)

11. And I punished them oft in every synagogue (where I found any of them), and (by these punishments) compelled them to blaspheme (the name of Jesus); and being exceedingly mad against them, I persecuted them (forcing them to fly from Judea) even to strange cities.

12. Whereupon as I went to Damascus (the metropolis of Syria), with authority and commission from the chief priests, (that if I found any of them there in the Jewish synagogues, I should bring them bound to Jerusalem, ix. 2.)

13. At midday, O king, I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me and (about) them which journeyed with me.

14. And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking to me, and saying in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? it is (or will be) hard for thee to kick against the pricks, (i. e. to fight against God. See ix. 5.)

15. And I said, Who art thou, Lord? And he said, I am Jesus (of Nazareth) whom thou persecutest.

16. But rise, and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared to thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of those things which thou hast seen (now), and of those things in which (i. e. for the discovery of which) I will appear to thee;

17. (And in testifying of them, I will be with thee,) delivering thee from the people (of the Jews), and (of) the gentiles, to whom now I send thee,

18. To open their (blind) eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and (an) inheritance among them that are sanctified by faith that is in me.

19. Whereupon, O king Agrippa (having had this convincing testimony of the resurrection of this Jesus), [5] I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision:

20. But shewed first to them of Damascus (where this vision happened), and (then to them) at Jerusalem, and (so) throughout all the coasts of Judea, and then to the gentiles, that they (of the Jews) should repent (of their great sin in crucifying this Jesus), and (should) turn to God, and do works meet for (Gr. meet works of) repentance.

21. For these causes the Jews caught me (as I was) in the temple, and went about to kill me, (xxi. 31.)

22. Having therefore obtained help of God, (according to the promise made by Jesus, ver. 17.) I continue to this day, witnessing both to small and great (the resurrection of Jesus; and in this) saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come (to pass:

23. Viz.) [6] That Christ (the Messiah of the Jews) should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, (so as to return no more to death, Acts xiii. 34.) and (that he) should shew light to the people, and to the gentiles.

24. And as he thus spake for himself, Festus said with a loud voice, Paul, thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad (or transport thee).

25. But he said, I am not mad, most noble Festus; but I speak forth the words of truth and soberness (or, of a sound mind).

26. For the king knoweth of these things, before whom also (πρὸς ὃν καὶ, to whom therefore) I speak freely (of them): for I am persuaded that none of these things (concerning the resurrection of Christ, or even my conversion,) are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner (but was of public cognizance).

27. King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets (to whose testimonies I appeal for the truth of Christ's sufferings and his resurrection? ver. 22, 23.) I know that thou believest (them; to them therefore I remit thee).

28. Then Agrippa said to Paul, [7] Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian.

29. And Paul said, I would to God, that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds (i. e. as to faith in Christ, though not as to the bond I suffer for it).

30. And when he had thus spoken, the king rose up, and the governor, and Bernice, and they that sat with them:

31. And when they were gone aside, they talked between themselves, saying, This man doth nothing worthy of death or of bonds (by the Roman laws, by which he is to be judged).

32. Then said Agrippa unto Festus, This man might have been set at liberty, if he had not appealed to Cæsar (to whose judgment he is therefore now to be reserved).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXVI.

[1] Ver. 2. ΗΓΗΜΑΙ ἐμαυτὸν μακάριον, I count myself happy.] Though this phrase may signify no more than, I look upon it as a considerable advantage, as when we call a lucky man a happy man, and so the word μακάριος and Felix are often used in profane authors, and אשׁר in the Hebrew, as when Leah calls her son Ashur, Gen. xxx. 13. saying, I am happy, for the daughters shall call me happy; and Jeremy inquires, wherefore are all they happy, i. e. prosperous, who deal very treacherously? (see Psal. cxxvii. 5. cxxviii. 3. cxxxvii. 8, 9.) yet I believe the apostle here respects not any personal advantage, but the benefit Christianity might receive from what he was to say before a person so able to judge of it.

[2] Ver. 5. Κατὰ τὴν ἀκριβεστάτην αἵρεσιν, &c. According to the exactest sect of our religion, I lived a pharisee.] That they were so according to the opinion of the Jews, Josephus* testifies, by saying, this was a sect of the Jews, which was thought εὐσεβέστερον εἶναι τῶν ἄλλων, καὶ τοὺς νόμους ἀκριβέστερον ἀφηγεῖσθαι, to be more pious than others, and more exact in the interpretation of their laws, that they did† μέγα φρονοῦν ἐπ' ἀκριβώσει τοῦ πατρῴου νόμου, esteem highly of themselves for their exactness in the law, and that they were the sect οἱ περὶ τὰ πάτρια νόμιμα δοκοῦσι τῶν ἄλλων ἀκριβείᾳ διαφέρειν, who seemed to excel others in their exact knowledge of the customs of their fathers,‡ καὶ οἱ δοκοῦντες μετ' ἀκριβείας ἐξηγεῖσθαι τὰ νόμιμα, and to be most exact in the interpretation of their laws: and indeed, comparatively, they seem to have been the exactest of their celebrated sects; for the sadducees, by denying the resurrection, and all future punishments, took away the rewards of a virtuous, and gave liberty to a vicious life. The Essenes, being Jews by nature, were guilty of a great schism, in separating themselves wholly from the worship of the temple, and of equal disobedience in not bringing their sacrifices§ to the temple, and of idolatry in making prayers or religious addresses‖ to the sun, as Josephus, who lived three years among them, testifies, if πρὸς αὐτὸν refers to ἥλιον; but seeing the same Josephus saith, that they were πρὸς τὸ θεῖον ἰδίως εὐσεβεῖς, especially religious towards God, and brings the words following as a proof of that, I think these prayers were offered rather to God than to the sun. [3] Ver. 6, 7. And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made to our fathers.] Why St. Paul here speaks as if he were questioned touching the article of the resurrection of the dead in general, see the note on xxiii. 6. and why he speaks of the twelve tribes, see note on James i. 1. but whereas he styles the resurrection, the promise made to their fathers, and saith, the twelve tribes served God in expectation of it, this needs a little explication, because many deny that any such promise was made to the fathers, or can be found in the Old Testament. I therefore assert,

First, That it is evident from the history of the Maccabees and other writings, both sacred and profane, that the Jews then, and the pharisees afterward, did believe the resurrection of the body. Thus the second son saith, 2 Macc. vii. 9. The King of the world shall raise us up, who have died for his laws, unto everlasting life, εἰς αἰώνιον ἀναβίωσιν ζωῆς ἀναστήσει· the third and fourth express their hope to be raised up by God to life again, ver. 11. 14. and the mother of them bids them not doubt, but the Creator of the world would give them breath and life again. That the pharisees believed this doctrine, we learn not only from Josephus, but from their satisfaction that Christ had put the sadducees to silence in that matter, Matt. xxii. 34. and for their stickling for St. Paul himself upon this declaration, that he was called in question for the hope of the resurrection, Acts xxiii. 9.

Secondly, That they conceived this hope was built upon the covenant of God made with them, and the promise of God made to them, is also evident from their words; for the last of these seven martyrs is introduced, saying, Our brethren are dead under God's covenant of everlasting life, ver. 36. Josephus* introduceth the mother of these seven children, comforting her dying sons with those words of Moses, I kill, and I make alive, Deut. xxxii. 39. and it is your life and length of days, ver. 47. and that of Solomon, Prov. iii. 18. Wisdom is a tree of life to them that lay hold on her, and that of Ezekiel, xxxvii. 3. Shall these dry bones live?

Thirdly, They had just reason both from the law and prophets for this hope; from the law, for thence our Saviour proves the resurrection of the body, Matt. xxii. 31, 32. (See the note there.) And that our Saviour did not there argue for the felicity of the souls of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob only, is evident from this, that he argues for something future, which should happen to them ὅταν ἀναστῶσι, when they shall arise; whereas in truth, and in the opinion of the Jews themselves, the souls of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, were with God already: Josephus† saith, that they who die for God, ζῶσι τῷ Θεῷ ὥσπερ Ἀβραὰμ, Ἰσαὰκ, καὶ Ἰακὼβ, καὶ πάντες οἱ πατριάρχαι, shall live with God, as do Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the patriarchs.

2. From the prophets; the words of Daniel being these, many of them that slept in the dust shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to everlasting confusion, xii. 2. where note, that though men in misery and affliction are sometimes said to sit, or dwell in the dust, Isa. xxvi. 19. xxvii. 1. Nehem. iii. 18. yet οἱ καθεύδοντες, they that sleep in the dust, doth always signify they that die, as Job vii. 21. xx. 11. xxi. 6. and hath no other sense in Scripture. And, (2.) that though men that sit in the dust may be raised out of that afflicted, into a very comfortable and pleasant state, yet, seeing they must shortly die, they can in no propriety of speech be said to arise to life eternal. (3.) From the law and the prophets; for, saith St. Paul, xxiv. 14, 15. I worship the God of our fathers, believing all things that are written in the law and the prophets, having hope that there shall be a resurrection both of the just and the unjust; and here, ver. 23. I say nothing but what is contained in the law and the prophets, that Christ shall be the first ἐξ ἀναστάσεως νεκρῶν, of those that rise from the dead, plainly insinuating, that the resurrection of others after Christ was contained in the law and the prophets. Hence the apostle tells us, that the champions of the Jewish church all died in faith, in expectation of a better resurrection, Heb. xi. 35. 39.

And, lastly, that this hope was rightly built upon the covenant of God, that he would be their God, (Gen. xvii. 7.) is evident, for that to be the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, is to be that God, who will raise them from the dead, we learn from our Saviour's argument, Matt. xxii. 32. and that he was therefore called their God, because he had prepared for them a heavenly city, from Heb. xi. 15. and from his promise made to the spiritual seed of Abraham, according to those words of the apostle, Gal. iii. 29. If ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed; and heirs according to the promise (see the note there). And, (3.) from the promise of entering into his rest, Heb. iv. 3. 9. (see the note there). And, (4.) from the promise of a Messiah, it being one of their fundamental articles, that their Messiah shall raise the dead, and bring them into paradise. (See Maimonides Expl. 10. Tract. Sanhedrin, p. 136. and Dr. Pocock's notes, p. 109, 110.) And, lastly, this seems evident from the nature of the thing; for God being the Father of our spirits, which are immortal, and must live for ever, it is absurd to think his promises to the obedient should relate only to this present life, and yet he should engage them to be faithful to the death, and suffer here the worst of evils for his sake; since if they had hope only in this life, they must of all men be most miserable. (1 Cor. xv. 19.)

[4] Ver. 7. To which promise τὸ δωδεκάφυλον ἡμῶν, &c. our twelve tribes—hope to come.] That some of the twelve tribes remained in, and some of them returned to, the land of Israel, see proved, note on James i. 1. Why St. Paul saith he was questioned touching this hope of the resurrection in the general, when he was only questioned concerning the resurrection of Christ from the dead, see the chief reason, note on xxiv. 15. To which add, that St. Paul connects these things thus, because in the truth of the thing, and according to the testimony of the apostles, and even the sentiments of the Jews, the resurrection was to be effected by the Messiah, or by Jesus Christ, saying, that God would raise us up by Jesus, (1 Thess. iv. 4.) and that God had appointed him to be the judge both of the quick and dead, (Acts x. 47.) and had given assurance that he would judge all men by him, in that he had raised him from the dead, (Acts xvii. 31.) he being risen as the first that should rise from the dead (ver. 23. of this chapter), or the first-fruits of them that sleep. (1 Cor. xv. 22.) Hence it is so expressly noted, iv. 1, 2. that the sadducees were grieved, not that the apostles declared that Jesus was the Christ, or that he was risen, but that they taught through Jesus the resurrec- tion from the dead. Note also, that he represents this as the hope of the twelve tribes, though it was denied by the sadducees; because, as Josephus* informs us, εἰς ὀλίγους ἄνδρας οὗτος ὁ λόγος ἀφίκετο, they were but few, and these few when they designed to be magistrates were forced to profess the doctrine of the pharisees, διὰ τὸ μὴ ἄλλως ἀνέκτους γενέσθαι τοῖς πλήθεσιν, seeing the common people would not otherwise have endured them. And that the apostle here spake with respect to the doctrine of the sadducees, appeareth from the following words, ver. 8. Why should it be judged a thing incredible that God should raise the dead? It being only the sect of the sadducees, which held this incredible, and that which did exceed even the power of God. (Matt. xxii. 29.)

[5] Ver. 19. I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision.] For, saith Grotius, though this vision gave him sufficient conviction of the truth, it left it in his power to obey or disobey it, as you will find it proved in the appendix to the sixth chapter of the Second Epistle to the Corinthians.

[6] Ver. 23. Εἰ παθητὸς ὁ Χριστὸς, That Christ hath suffered.] Τὸ εἰ, ἀντὶ τοῦ ὅτι. Εἰ here being put for ὅτι, that, saith Œcumenius. (See note on 1 Tim. v. 10. Heb. iii. 11.)

[7] Ver. 28. Ἐν ὀλίγῳ με πείθεις, &c. Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian.] So Plato, ἔγνων οὖν καὶ περὶ ποιητῶν ἐν ὀλίγῳ τοῦτο, I almost knew the same touching the poets; and ἐπ' ὀλίγον is interpreted χέδον, schol. Aristoph. p. 837. And that they, who interpret these words thus, wouldest thou in so little time persuade me to be a Christian? must mistake, is evident from the following words of the apostle, I would to God, that not only ἐν ὀλίγῳ, ἀλλ' ἐν πολλῷ, all that hear me were not almost only, but altogether such as I am.

CHAP. XXVII.

1. AND when it was determined that we should sail into Italy, they delivered Paul and certain other prisoners to one named Julius, a centurion of Augustus's band (i. e. of the band of the legion of Augustus).

2. And entering into a ship of Adramyttium (a sea-town of Mysia), we launched (forth), meaning to sail by the coasts of Asia; [1] one Aristarchus, a Macedonian of Thessalonica (and a companion of Paul), being with us.

3. And the next day we touched at Sidon. And (there) Julius courteously entreated Paul, and gave him liberty to go to his friends to refresh himself.

4. And when we had launched from thence, we sailed under Cyprus, because the winds were contrary (to us).

5. And when we had sailed over the sea of Cilicia and Pamphylia, we came to Myra, a city of Lycia.

6. And there the centurion found a ship of Alexandria sailing into Italy; and he put us therein.

7. And when we had sailed slowly many days, and scarce were come over against Cnidus, the wind not suffering us (to go on directly), we sailed under Crete, over against (the promontory of) Salmone;

8. And, hardly passing (by) it, came to a place which is called The fair havens; nigh whereunto was the city of Lasea.

9. Now when much time was spent, and when [2] sailing was now dangerous, because the (yearly) fast (of expiation) was now already past, Paul admonished them,

10. And said to them, Sirs, I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives.

11. Nevertheless the centurion believed the master and the owner of the ship, more than those things which were spoken by Paul.

12. And because the haven was not commodious to winter in, the most part (of the passengers) advised (us) to depart thence also, if by any means they might attain to Phenice to winter (there); which (Phenice) is a haven of Crete, and lieth towards the south-west and north-west.

13. And when the south wind blew softly, supposing that they had obtained their purpose, loosing (from that haven), [3] they sailed close by Crete.

14. But not long after there arose against it (the ship) [4] a tempestuous wind, called Euroclydon.

15. And when the ship was caught (i. e. driven along by it), and [5] could not bear up into (i. e. resist) the wind, we let her drive.

16. And running under a certain island which is called Clauda, we had much work to come by the boat (i. e. to draw it to us):

17. Which when they had taken up, they used helps, undergirding the ship (with ropes, to preserve it from splitting); and, fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands, (they) struck sail, and so were driven.

18. And being exceedingly tossed with a tempest, the next day they lightened the ship;

19. And the third day we cast out with our hands the tackling of the ship.

20. And when neither sun nor stars in many days appeared, and no small tempest lay upon us, all hope that we should be saved (or escape) was then taken away.

21. But after long abstinence Paul stood forth in the midst of them, and said, Sirs, ye should have hearkened to me, and [6] not have loosed from Crete, and to have gained (i. e. sustained) this harm and loss.

22. And now I exhort you to be of good cheer: for there shall be no loss of (any man's) life among you, but of the ship (only).

23. For there stood by me this night the angel of God, whose (apostle) I am, and whom I serve,

24. Saying, Fear not, Paul; thou must be brought before Cæsar: and, lo, God hath given thee (the life of) all them that sail with thee (provided they will hearken unto thee).

25. Wherefore, sirs, be of good cheer: for I believe (in) God, (and therefore rest assured) that it shall be even as it was told me.

26. Howbeit we must be cast upon a certain island.

27. But (and) when the fourteenth night was come, as we were driven up and down in Adria, about midnight the shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country;

28. And (they) sounded (with their plummet), and found it twenty fathoms (of water): and when they had gone a little farther, they sounded again, and found it (the water) fifteen fathoms (deep).

29. Then fearing lest they should have fallen upon rocks, they cast four anchors out of the stern, and wished for the day (that by the help of the light they might discern the shore).

* Antiq. Jud. lib. xviii. cap. 2. p. 617.

30. And as the shipmen were about (Gr. and the shipmen seeking) to flee out of the ship, (to that end) when they had let down the boat into the sea, under colour as if they would have cast anchor out of the foreship,

31. Paul said to the centurion and to the soldiers, [7] Except these (mariners) abide in the ship (to conduct it), ye cannot be saved.

32. Then the soldiers cut off the ropes of the boat, and let her fall off.

33. And while the day was coming on, Paul besought them all to take meat (i. e. he exhorted them to eat, till the day appearing they might employ themselves otherwise), saying, [8] This day is the fourteenth day that ye have tarried and continued fasting, having eaten nothing (i. e. observed no times of eating).

34. Wherefore I pray you to take some meat: for this is for your health (and let not the fear of death hinder you): for there shall not a hair fall from the head of any of you (ye shall not die).

35. And when he had thus spoken, he took bread, and gave thanks to God in the presence of them all: and when he had broken it, he began to eat.

36. Then were they all of good cheer, and they also took some meat.

37. And we were in all in the ship two hundred threescore and sixteen souls (i. e. persons).

38. And when they had eaten enough, they lightened the ship, and cast out the wheat into the sea.

39. And when it was day, they knew not the land: but they discovered a certain creek, with a shore, into which they were minded, if it were possible, to thrust in the ship.

40. And when they had taken up the anchors, they committed themselves to the sea, and loosed the rudder-bands, and hoisted up the mainsail to the wind, and made towards shore.

41. And falling into a place where two seas met, they ran the ship on ground: and the forepart stuck fast, and remained unmoveable, but the hinder-part was broken with the violence of the waves.

42. And the soldiers' counsel was to kill the prisoners, lest any of them should swim out, and escape (justice).

43. But the centurion, (being) willing to save Paul, kept them from their purpose; and commanded that they who could swim should cast themselves first into the sea, and get to land.

44. And the rest (got) some on boards, and some on broken pieces of the ship. And so it came to pass, that they escaped all safe to land.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXVII.

[1] Ver. 2. ONE Aristarchus.] He was a convert of Macedonia, who accompanied Paul in his travels from Macedonia to Jerusalem, (Acts xix. 29. xx. 4.) was a coadjutor with him in the work of the gospel, (Philem. 24.) went with him to Rome, and was there in bonds with him, (Colos. iv. 10.) and is therefore here taken notice of as a companion of St. Paul's.

[2] Ver. 9. And sailing was now dangerous, διὰ τὸ καὶ τὴν νηστείαν ἤδη παρεληλυθέναι, because the fast was now already past.] That is, the annual fast of expiation for the sins of the people of Israel, which began on the tenth of the month Tisri, answering to the twenty-fifth of our September, was already past, and so the time of sailing became dangerous by reason of the winter, and of the Michaelmas flows which were then upon the sea. Thus Philo * informs us, that this feast of tabernacles was held μετὰ τὴν μετοπωρινὴν ἰσημερίαν, after the winter equinoctial; and the same feast of tabernacles, which was on the fifteenth of the same month, is said by Josephus † to be celebrated, τρεπομένου τὸ λοιπὸν τοῦ καιροῦ πρὸς τὴν χειμέριον ὥραν, when it began to be winter: and Philo ‡ adds, that Flaccus was carried from Egypt to Rome, ἀρχομένου χειμῶνος, at the beginning of winter, ἔδει γὰρ αὐτὸν καὶ τῶν ἐν θαλάττῃ φοβερῶν ἀπολαῦσαι, it being fit that he who had disturbed all things by land should be disturbed by the tempests of the sea; and in his Legatio ad Flaccum, § he saith, that the beginning of autumn was τελευταῖος πλοῦς τοῖς θαλαττεύουσιν, the last time for mariners to put to sea. See more of this in Dr. Hammond's note upon the place.

[3] Ver. 13. Ἄσσον παρελέγοντο τὴν Κρήτην, They sailed close by Crete.] The Vulgar hath made this the proper name of a place, and indeed there was such a place near Troas and Mitylene, mentioned Acts xx. 13, 14. but that was at too wide a distance from Crete to be here mentioned; there were four other places of that name mentioned by Schmidius here, but none of them were near Crete; Stephanus, as he is cited by Lorinus, saith, Assos is πολίχνιον Κρήτης, a little city of Crete; but then Pliny informs us that it was not a sea-port, but situated "in Mediterraneo," in the Mediterranean, lib. iv. cap. 12. p. 213. Others therefore think this is an adverb, used by Homer, Hesiod, and Herodotus, to signify quickly, or near to the place, as Phavorinus and other grammarians say it doth, and so the whole should be rendered thus, loosing from the incommodious harbour, mentioned ver. 12. with a favourable wind, "propius præterlegebant Cretam," they sailed by Crete near to it.

[4] Ver. 14. Ἄνεμος τυφωνικὸς, ὁ καλούμενος Εὐροκλύδων, A tempestuous wind called Euroclydon.] "Ventus typhonicus," saith Pliny, ‖ is a whirlwind, and the name of it here mentioned is thought by Grotius, Bochart, and Dr. Hammond, to be εὐροακύλων, as it is rendered by the Vulgar, that is, the north-east wind, that being opposite to the south-west wind, mentioned ver. 12.

[5] Ver. 15. We could not, ἀντοφθαλμεῖν τῷ ἀνέμῳ, bear up against the wind.] So the word properly imports, but metaphorically, we could not resist or stand up against the force of it; so Polybius ¶ saith of the Messenians, that they could not, ἀντοφθαλμεῖν πρὸς τὸ βάρος τῶν Λακεδαιμόνιων, resist the force of the Lacedemonians; and that they could not πρὸς τὴν ὁρμὴν ἀντοφθαλμεῖν, resist their impressions. (See more instances in Budæus and Bois.)

[6] Ver. 21. Ἔδει μὲν μὴ ἀνάγεσθαι, You should not have loosed from Crete, κερδῆσαί τε τὴν ὕβριν ταύτην καὶ τὴν ζημίαν, to have gained this harm and loss.] Great industry is used here to carry off these words from their native sense, to make ὕβρις signify a tempest, and κερδαίνειν, to escape, whereas there needeth no such artifice, for it was indeed ὕβρις, an infamy to them to be such unskilful mariners as to put to sea when the season of the year rendered their voyage so dangerous; and having been forced for their own safety to lighten the ship, and to cast out some of her lading and tackling to preserve themselves, they might well be said, κερδαίνειν τὴν ζημίαν ταύτην, "jacturam hanc lucri in loco ponere," or to count this loss their gain; the particle μὴ, which here seems necessary to be repeated, shews that κερδαίνειν here cannot signify to escape, seeing the sense would then run thus, Ye should not have escaped this loss. Though, since κερδαίνειν seems to bear this sense in those words of Aristotle,* ᾧ κατὰ λόγον ζημίαν ἦν λαβεῖν, τὸν τὸ τοιοῦτον κερδαίνοντα εὐτυχῆ φαμεν, we call him fortunate who escapes that punishment or damage he reasonably might have suffered; in this sense the words run thus, You should not have loosed from Crete, but stayed there, that you might have escaped this infamy and loss.

[7] Ver. 31. Except these abide in the ship ye cannot be saved.] This shews, as Grotius well notes, that what was said, ver. 21. was to be understood with this limitation, "si me audiatis," if ye will hearken to my counsel; and also with this proviso, that you will do that which is in your power, and God hath given you skill and ability to do; those that could swim being saved by swimming, and they that could not by getting upon boards and broken planks of the ship: (ver. 43, 44.) for in all promises in which God is said to give this or that, this must be understood, because he hath already given that which he hath given us, faculties, or abilities and wisdom to obtain; so that we cannot want or fall short of it, unless we wilfully neglect to use the faculties which God hath given us for that end: they therefore having with them mariners, skilled in conducting of the ship, and power sufficient to retain them in it, St. Paul informs them, that God's promise of their safety was to be effective by their means, and belonged not to them who fully neglected them.

[8] Ver. 33. This is the fourteenth day that ye have continued fasting, having taken nothing.] It being impossible for them, without a miracle, to continue fasting fourteen days without eating any thing, some render the words thus, You have continued expecting the fourteenth day as a critical day, which they were either to find safety in, or were not like to outlive; but as we read nothing of such a critical day, so the πολλὴ ἀσίτια, long fasting, mentioned ver. 21. and continued till this day, proves the contrary. The meaning therefore seems to be this, that they had not set times of eating, but what they ate was seldom, little, and without order, or assembling together for that end. Thus Zetzes saith,† that Hesiod speaks thus, οὐδέ τι σῖτον ἤσθιον, they ate no meat, διὰ τὸ μηδ' ἐν τοῖς καιροῖς τῶν τραπεζῶν—ἐσθίειν, because they ate not at meal-times.

CHAP. XXVIII.

1. AND when they were escaped (to land), then they knew that the island was called [1] Melita (now Malta).

2. And the [2] barbarous people shewed us no little (or ordinary) kindness: for they kindled a fire, and received us every one (into their houses), because of the present rain, and because of the cold.

3. And when Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks, and laid them (Gr. but Paul turning many sticks, and laying them) upon the fire, there came [3] a viper out of (from) the heat, and fastened (herself) upon his hand.

4. And when the barbarians saw the venomous beast hang on his hand, they said among themselves, No doubt this man is a murderer, whom, though he hath escaped the sea, yet (Divine) vengeance suffereth not to live.

5. And he shook (Gr. then he shaking) off the beast into the fire, (and) felt no harm.

6. Howbeit they looked when he should have swollen, or fallen down dead suddenly: but after they had looked a great while (i. e. expected this long), and (yet) saw no harm come to him, they changed their minds, and (Gr. changing their minds, they) [4] said that he was a god.

7. (And) in the same quarters (Gr. in that place) were possessions (habitations) of the chief man (the governor) of the island, whose name was Publius; who received us (into them), and lodged us three days courteously.

8. And it came to pass, (Gr. so it was) that the father of Publius lay sick of a fever and of a bloody flux: to whom Paul entered in, and prayed, and laid his hands on him, and healed him.

9. So when this was done, others also, who had diseases in the island, came, and were healed:

10. [5] Who also (Gr. and they) honoured us with many honours (or presented us with much provisions); and when we departed, they laded us with such things as were necessary (for us).

11. And after three months we departed in a ship of Alexandria, which had wintered in the isle, [6] whose sign was Castor and Pollux.

12. And landing at Syracuse, we tarried there three days.

13. And from thence we fetched a compass, and came to Rhegium: and after one day the south-wind blew, and we came the next day to [7] Puteoli:

14. Where we found (Christian) brethren, and were desired (I and Aristarchus) to tarry with them seven days: and so we went towards Rome.

15. And from thence, when the [8] brethren (of Rome) heard of us, they came to meet us, (some) as far as Appii-forum, and (others to) The three taverns: whom when Paul saw, he thanked God, and took courage.

16. And when we came to Rome, the centurion delivered the (other) prisoners to the captain of the guard (i. e. of the prætorian band): [9] but Paul was suffered to dwell by himself with a soldier that kept him.

17. And it came to pass, that after three days Paul called the chief of the Jews together: and when they were come together, he said to them, Men and brethren, though I have committed nothing against the people, or customs of our fathers, yet was I delivered prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans.

18. Who, when they had examined me, would have let me go, because there was no cause of death in me.

19. But when the Jews spake against it, I was constrained to appeal to Cæsar; not that I had aught to accuse my nation of.

20. For this cause therefore have I called for you, to see you, and to speak with you: because, that for (that Messiah and that resurrection which is) [10] the hope of Israel [11] I am bound with this chain.

* Magn. mor. lib. ii. cap. 8. † Fol. 28.

21. And they said to him, We neither received letters out of Judea concerning thee, neither any of the brethren which came (hither) shewed or spake any harm of thee.

22. But we desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest (of them who are called Nazarenes): for as concerning this sect, we know that every where it is spoken against.

23. And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; [12] to whom he expounded and testified (that) the kingdom of God (was come), persuading them concerning Jesus (that he was the Christ), both out of the law of Moses and out of the prophets, from morning till evening.

24. And some believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not.

25. And when they agreed not among themselves, they departed, after that Paul had spoken (Gr. Paul having spoken) one word (that nearly touched them, viz. ὅτι, That) well spake the Holy Ghost (i. e. rightly) by Esaias the prophet to our fathers,

26. Saying, Go to this people, and say (prophetically to them), [13] Hearing ye shall (will) hear, and shall (will) not understand; and seeing ye shall (will) see, and (will) not perceive:

27. For the heart of this people is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing (Gr. they hear heavily with their ears), and their eyes have they closed; lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their hearts, and should be converted (Gr. should turn themselves), and I should heal them.

28. Be it known therefore to you, that the salvation of God is sent to the gentiles, and that they will hear it.

29. And when he had said these words, the Jews departed, and had great reasoning among themselves.

30. [14] And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came into him,

31. Preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXVIII.

[1] Ver. 1. ΜΕΛΙ'ΤΗ, The island was called Melita.] It is now called Malta, and is famous for the knights of Rhodes, and hath yet a place called the arrival or haven of St. Paul; that it was this African Malta, and not the other Illyrican Melite, or Melatine, see proved by Bochart. Phaleg. par. iii. lib. i. cap. 26.

[2] Ver. 2. Οἱ δὲ βάρβαροι, The barbarous people.] Dr. Lightfoot thinks, that these barbarians were Africans brought thither by the Carthaginians when they had possession of that island. Bochartus from Diodorus Siculus saith, they were Φοινίκων ἄποικος, a colony of the Phœnicians, who sailing upon their merchandise to the western ocean,* καταφευγὴν εἶχον ταύτην τὴν νῆσον εὐλίμενον οὖσαν, made this island their refuge, for the convenience of its havens; but the Phœnicians abounding in Africa, the difference betwixt these two opinions is not great. As for the word barbarous, Strabo† informs us, that it was the name πάντων δὴ παχυστομούντων, given to all that spake gross and rough language; and that afterward the Greeks used it, ὡς ἐθνικῷ κοινῷ ὀνόματι ἀντιδιαιροῦντες πρὸς τοὺς Ἕλληνας, as a common name by which they distinguished themselves from other nations. However, these barbarous people were taught humanity by the light of nature; they had their notions of Divine justice, or nemesis, from tradition; they therefore did believe there was a providence which did protect and reward the good, and punish the evil-doer.

[3] Ver. 3. Ἔχιδνα, A viper.] Of this viper, see Bochart. Hieroz. par. ii. lib. iii. cap. 2.

[4] Ver. 6. They said he was a god.] Perhaps Hercules ἀλεξίκακος, who was worshipped in that island, saith Ptolemy,* and was one of the gods of the Phœnicians. Vide Lucian. de Dea Syra, et Euseb. Chron. N. 142.

[5] Ver. 10. Πολλαῖς τιμαῖς ἐτίμησαν ἡμᾶς, Who honoured us with many honours.] i. e. Gave us many gifts and provisions for our voyage: so what is thy name, saith Manoah to the angel, that we may do thee honour? Judg. xiii. 17. Ἵνα δωρεὰν παράσχωμεν, that we may tender thee a gift, saith Josephus. See this import of the word τιμὴ, note on 1 Tim. v. 3.

[6] Ver. 11. Παρασήμῳ Διοσκούροις, Whose sign was Castor and Pollux.] The picture of these two supposed sons of Jupiter was painted on the forepart of the ship, they being, in conjunction, thought propitious to mariners, and looked upon, when thus appearing, as a sign of a tempest ceasing; and yet in a ship having such an idolatrous image, St. Paul refuses not to sail, nor doth St. Luke refuse to use that name; these being used only as the name of the ship in which they sailed, as Dr. Hammond here notes.

[7] Ver. 13, 14. We came to Puteoli, where we found brethren.] It is not to be wondered that there should be Christians there, seeing Strabo† informs us, that it was ἐμπόριον μέγιστον, a very great mart town, where there were havens made by art for the goodness of the river.

[8] Ver. 15. The brethren came to meet us as far as Appii-forum, and The three taverns.] These three taverns were nearer to Rome than Appii-forum, as appears from the words of Cicero to Atticus.‡ It is not to be wondered that there should be many Christians then at Rome, though perhaps no apostle had been there to preach to them. For since Christianity had now continued twenty-eight years from the ascension of our Saviour, and the sound of it had gone through all the world, Rom. x. 18. it is reasonable to expect, that as it converted Cornelius and his kinsmen to the faith, so it should prevail on many other Romans in all places; and that Rome being the place to which "ob majorem principatum," there was a general conflux from all places of the world,§ as both heathen and Christian writers have observed, it should be stocked with Christian brethren from all parts.

*præfectus prætorii, or general of the camp; it was therefore a favour that St. Paul was thus permitted to dwell in his own hired house; and this kindness perhaps was shewn him, either through the testimony the centurion had given of him as a good and virtuous man, or by reason of a letter sent by Festus to Cæsar concerning him, that he was guilty of no crimes committed against the Roman laws.

[10] Ver. 20. For the hope of Israel.] i. e. Either for my faith in Jesus, the true Messiah, who is the hope of Israel; or for the hope of the resurrection of the dead, (Acts xxvi. 6.) which the Jews expected from the Messiah.

[11] I am bound with this chain.] Having a chain on his right hand, by which he was bound to the soldier that kept him: the chain being also on the soldier's left hand; and so long that they may go conveniently together. Thus Athenion† tells the men of Athens, that Mithridates had made Quintus Oppius δέσμιον, a prisoner, or one bound with a chain, as St. Paul often speaks, and had bound Manlius Aquilius ἀλύσει μακρᾷ, with a long chain to one Bastarne, who being on horseback, dragged him along on foot, bound to him with a chain five cubits long. Sometimes, for greater security, they were bound to two soldiers, by two chains, one fastened to their right, the other to their left hand, as St. Peter was, Acts xii. 6, 7. and St. Paul, Acts xxi. 13.

[12] Ver. 23. Οἷς ἐξετίθετο, διαμαρτυρόμενος τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, To whom he expounded, testifying the kingdom of God,] Which they expected, Luke ii. 25. 38. xix. 11. was already come; and persuading them of the truth of the things which he asserted concerning the birth, life, miracles, the death, the resurrection, and ascension of the Lord Jesus; he expounded what related to them out of the law and the prophets, as Christ had done to his disciples after his resurrection. (Luke xxiv. 26, 27.)

[13] Ver. 26, 27. Hearing ye will hear, and will not understand, &c.] See the note on Matt. xiii. 12. 15.

[14] Ver. 30, 31. Paul continued two years—no man forbidding him.] Hence it appears, that there was no edict of Nero, or any preceding emperor, against the Christians, till the tenth of Nero, i. e. the year after that Paul was loosed from his bonds. (2.) Here we have the plain reason, why St. Luke ends his history, because, as the bishop of Chester saith, St. Paul came not to Rome till the seventh of Nero, in the month of February, and in the ninth of Nero, i. e. after two years, he was set at liberty, and leaving Rome went into some other part of Italy, intending to go from thence into Judea, (Heb. xiii. 23, 24.) and so here ends St. Paul's stay at Rome, and with that St. Luke's history.

APPENDIX

TO CHAP. II. VER. 27.

I KNOW not one objection against that exposition, which I have given of the phrase, Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; only it may be said, that if this be the proper import of the words, we have no reason to believe that Christ descended into hell; for this can never be an article of Christian faith, unless it be either expressly or virtually delivered in that Scripture which is the rule of faith: now it is certain that it is not delivered in any other place of Scripture; not in those words of the apostle Paul, He that ascended is the same that descended first into the lower parts of the earth, (Eph. iv. 9.) for that phrase only signifies that Christ's body was buried in the earth, as Chrysostom, Theodoret, and Photius, there say, not that his soul descended into hell; the phrase is plainly taken from the Psalmist's words, They that seek my soul to destroy it shall go into the lower parts of the earth, Psal. lxiii. 9. where if it signifies they shall go to hell, the foxes must go thither also; for the words following are, they shall be a portion for foxes. Not from that passage of St. Peter, 1 Pet. iii. 19. by which spirit he went and preached to those in prison: for as they in prison do not there signify those who were naturally dead, but only the gentiles dead in trespasses and sins, and by the prophet Isaiah thrice styled οἱ ἐν φυλακῇ, they who are in prison; so certain it is, the spirit, by which he is said to go, and preach to them, was not his own spirit, by separation of which from the body he was dead, but the Holy Spirit by which he was quickened; for which reason St. Austin, Ep. 99. pronounceth of this place, that "omnino ad inferos non pertineat," it belongs not at all to Christ's descent into hell; if then it cannot be proved from this place, it must be owned that it hath no sufficient ground at all in Scripture.

To this I answer, first, in the words of Bishop Pearson, "That in the Aquileian creed, where this article was first expressed, in the fourth century, there was no mention of Christ's burial; but the words of their confession ran thus, Crucified under Pontius Pilate, he descended in inferna. From whence there is no question but the observation of Ruffinus, who first expounded it, was most true, that though the Roman and oriental creeds had not these words, yet they had the sense of them in the word buried. It appeared therefore that the first intention of putting these words in the creed, was only to express the burial of our Saviour, or the descent of his body into the grave." Now doubtless the burial of Christ's body, or its descent into the grave, is an article of faith clearly delivered in Holy Scripture.

Secondly, I add, that the phrase καταβαίνειν, or κατελθεῖν εἰς ᾅδην, or εἰς ᾅδου (τόπον), to descend into hades, in the Old Testament, and the Apocryphal writers, still signifies, to go down into the grave, or sepulchre, and so cannot refer to the soul, but the body only; in this sense Jacob says, Gen. xxxvii. 35. καταβήσομαι εἰς ᾅδου, I will go down to the grave to my son mourning: so Numb. xvi. 30. 33. if the earth swallow them up, καὶ καταβήσονται ζῶντες εἰς ᾅδου, and they go down alive into the pit, καὶ κατέβησαν εἰς ᾅδου, and they went down alive into the pit; Job vii. 9. ἐὰν ἄνθρωπος καταβῇ εἰς ᾅδην, if a man go down to the grave he shall come up no more; and, xvii. 16. καταβήσονται εἰς ᾅδην, they shall go down to the grave, they shall rest in the dust; Isa. xiv. 11. κατέβη εἰς ᾅδου ἡ δόξα σου, thy pomp is gone down to the grave, the worm is spread under thee; and, ver. 19. thou shalt be as those that are dead, καταβαινόντων εἰς ᾅδου, like those that go down into the grave: so Esth. xiii. 7. κατελθόντες εἰς ᾅδην, they going down to the grave, we shall be free from trouble; and Baruch iii. 19. they are vanished, καὶ εἰς ᾅδου κατέβησαν, and gone down to the grave. And according to this sense, which Dr. Hammond and others put upon the words, he continued for some time in the grave, it is also a plain article of Christian faith.

* "Vinctus mitti ad præfectum prætorii mei debet." Trajan. ad Plin. lib. x. ep. 65.

Thirdly, It is most certain, that though the creeds of the church were very numerous, yet in none of them was this descent into hell found till the close of the fourth century, when it was first put into the symbol of the church of Aquileia; for, saith the roverend Bishop Pearson, "It is not to be found in the rules of faith delivered by Irenæus, lib. i. cap. 2. by Origen, lib. περὶ ἀρχῶν, in Procem. or by Tertullian, adv. Praxeam. cap. 2. de Virg. veland. cap. 1. de Præscrip. adv. Her. cap. 13. It is not expressed in those creeds, which were made by the councils, as larger explications of the Apostles' Creed: not in the Nicene or Constantinopolitan; not in that of Ephesus or Chalcedon; not in those confessions made at Sardica, Antioch, Seleucia, Sirmium, &c. It is not mentioned in several confessions of faith delivered by particular persons; not in that of Eusebius Cæsariensis, presented to the council of Nice, Theodoret, lib. i. cap. 2. not in that of Marcellus, bishop of Ancyra, delivered to Pope Julius, Epiphan. Hær. lxxii. not in that of Arius and Euzoius, presented to Constantine, Socrat. lib. i. cap. 19. not in that of Acacius, bishop of Cæsarea, delivered in to the synod of Seleucia, Socrat. lib. ii. cap. 40. not in that of Eustathius, Theophylus, and Silvanus, sent to Liberius, Socrat. lib. iv. cap. 11. There is no mention of it in the creed of St. Basil, Tract. de fide in Asceticis; in the creed of Epiphanius, in Ancorato, cap. 120. or of Gelasius, Damasus, Macarius, &c. It is not in the creed expounded by St. Cyril, though some have produced that creed to prove it; it is not in the creed expounded by St. Austin, de fide et Symbolo; not in that de Symbolo ad Catechumenos, attributed to St. Augustine; not in that which is expounded by Maximus Taurinensis; not in that so often interpreted by Petrus Chrysologus; nor in that of the church of Antioch, delivered by Cassian, de Incarn. lib. vi. neither is it to be seen in the MS. creeds set forth by the learned archbishop of Armagh. Indeed it is affirmed by Ruffinus, that in his time it was neither in the Roman nor the oriental creeds, 'Sciendum sane est, quod in ecclesiæ Romanæ symbolo non habetur additum, descendit ad inferna, sed nec in orientis ecclesiis habetur hic sermo.' (Ruff. in Exposit. Symboli.) It is certain therefore (nor can we disprove it by any acknowledged evidence of antiquity), that the article of the descent into hell was not in the Roman, or any of the oriental creeds." Now had they conceived those creeds in which this article was wanting deficient in a necessary point of Christian doctrine, could they have styled all, or any of them, a perfect confession, comprising the whole doctrine of faith, the whole of Christian doctrine, the comprehension and perfection of the Christian faith, a comprisal of all the articles of faith, a symbol that speaks of every part of faith, the faith sufficient for salvation, the life-giving, the saving faith, the saving knowledge, the only truth, which they received from the apostles, the only rule which admits of no correction, no addition, and no diminution, the only faith delivered by the church to be kept by her children? Could they have told us, that the most learned could believe no more, and the meanest Christian did believe no less; that they needed to know no more, that they desired to believe no more, that they believed this first, that nothing more was to be believed, that in it nothing was to be innovated? Could they have said expressly, that tho apostles delivered in it whatsoever they thought necessary for all believers; and that they indited it to be a mark by which he should be known, who preached Christ truly according to the rules of the apostles; and by producing of which it might be known (saith Ruffinus) whether he were an enemy or a companion? And, lastly, could their great and general councils have defined so often, that *it should be lawful for no man ἑτέραν πίστιν προφέρειν, ἢ συγγράφειν, ἢ συντιθέναι, to introduce, write, or compose another faith besides that which was defined by the Nicene council? These are the words of the third general council, where presided that Cyril of Alexandria, who, in his letter to John of Antioch, saith, We by means permit the faith defined ἤτοι τὸ τῆς πίστεως σύμβολον, or the symbol of faith made by the holy fathers met at Nice, to be shaken by any; nor do we suffer ourselves or others to change one word, or transgress one syllable of what is there contained. This epistle, saith Mark, bishop of Ephesus, was read and approved by the fourth general council, which also decreed,† μηδενὶ μηδόλως ἐξεῖναι, προσθεῖναι τῷ συμβόλῳ τούτῳ, ἢ ἀφελεῖν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ, that it should be lawful for no man to add any thing to this symbol, or take any thing from it, or to change it at all, or transform it into another symbol. Athanasius,‡ speaking of the synod of Ariminum, saith, that the orthodox, and true servants of the Lord defined, that men should be contented with that faith alone, which was held at Nice, καὶ μηδὲν πλέον ἢ ἔλαττον παρ' ἐκείνην ζητεῖν καὶ φρονεῖν, and mind, and seek for nothing more or less, and that they deposed them who taught the contrary. And again, that they should§ μηδὲν πλέον ζητεῖν, seek for nothing more than what was confessed by the fathers at Nice. In the fifth general synod, John, patriarch of Constantinople, saith, We have taken care,‖ τὸν θεμέλιον τῆς πίστεως κατὰ τὴν ἁγίων πατέρων παράδοσιν ἀῤῥαγῆ διαμένειν, that the foundation of faith might remain inviolate according to the tradition of the holy fathers. And this determination they declared was made,

First, Because this venerable symbol, saith the general council of Chalcedon,¶ ἀρκεῖ εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν ἐντολῆς τῆς ἀληθείας, sufficeth to the perfect knowledge of the truth; and as the bishop of Ephesus well notes upon that place, *It is manifest, ὅτι τῷ τελείῳ οὐδὲν ἐλλείπει, nothing is wanting to what is perfect; they also said there was no need of adding any thing to it, because it was sufficient,†† εἰς ἀνατροπὴν πάσης ἀσεβοῦς αἱρέσεως, for the subversion of every wicked heresy, πᾶσαν ἀσεβεστάτην αἵρεσιν ἀνατρέψαι, to overthrow all the most ungodly heresies, and that it was στηλογραφία κατὰ πάσης αἱρέσεως, an inscription as upon a pillar against all heresies.

Secondly, Because they would not alter the traditions they had received from their forefathers: We (saith Cyril, in the general council of Ephesus,) have taken this care that nothing shall be added to, or altered in, the Nicene symbol, as being mindful of him that said,‡‡ μὴ μέταιρε ὅρια αἰώνια ἃ ἔθεντο οἱ πατέρες σου, Remove not the ancient bounds which thy fathers have set.

Thirdly, Because they would not give occasion to any to suspect their faith as imperfect, or that any article of faith was wanting in the creeds already made. Thus the synod of Sardis decreed, μηδὲν ἔτι περὶ πίστεως γράφεσθαι, that nothing more should be written touching the faith, but *that all should rest satisfied with the faith confessed by the Nicene fathers, διὰ τὸ μηδὲν αὐτῇ λείπειν, because it was deficient in nothing; and ἵνα μὴ ἡ Νεκαίᾳ γραφεῖσα ὡς ἀτελὴς οὖσα νομισθῇ, lest that of Nice should be esteemed imperfect, and a pretence should be given to as many as will to write and define touching the faith. The orthodox fathers in the council of Ariminum professed,† that they were children of the Nicene fathers; but if (say they) we should dare to take away any thing from what they have written, ἢ προσθεῖναί τι, or add any thing to it, we should be spurious children, κατήγοροι τῶν γεγενηκότων γενόμενοι, as being accusers of what they did, who delivered τὸν ἀκριβῆ κανόνα τῆς πίστεως, an exact rule of faith. And again they declare it,‡ ἐπικίνδυνον, a dangerous thing to add any thing to, or take any thing from, the Nicene creed, because if either of these things should be done, ἔσται τοῖς ἐχθροῖς ἄδεια τοῦ ποιεῖν ἅπερ βούλονται, the enemies would have liberty to do what they would. And Athanasius in his epistle§ to John and Antiochus his presbyters commands them, τοὺς πλέον τι ταύτης ἢ ἔλαττον λαλεῖν θέλοντας ἀποστρέφειν, to reject them who would say more or less than was contained in that creed. And the bishop of Ephesus well argues,‖ that we can suffer nothing by keeping to the same faith, which the Divine fathers confessed and believed, since none but madmen can accuse it of imperfection.

Now hence it demonstratively follows, that these creeds which wanted this article must be a perfect digest of all things necessary to be believed now, and throughout all succeeding ages of the world; for how can it be necessary for any Christian to have more in his creed than the apostles and the Christians of the four first centuries had? May the churches of after-ages make the narrow way to life more narrow than our Saviour, his apostles, and the fathers left it? When the whole church hath so expressly taught that this faith was sufficient for the perfect knowledge of the truth, that in it nothing was deficient, may others yet come after them, and by adding to them any other article remove the ancient bounds which our fathers have set? What reason can any man give, why any person should not be saved now by the same faith, which was sufficient for salvation in the first days of the apostles, and the first four centuries? Are we wiser than they? Or, are our doctors more learned, or more faithful? Is there another covenant made with the church since their days? Are other terms of salvation since made? Or, is God less merciful to us than he was to them? Is not the famous rule of Lirinensis this, "Quod ab omnibus, quod ubique, quod semper?" That which was always, and every where believed of all, that is the rule of faith? And must it not hence follow, that there can be no new article, no declaration obliging us to believe any thing, which was not always matter of the Christian faith? I conclude this head with the words of the judicious Dr. Barrow, "That the inserting this not only as an article distinct from Christ's death, burial, and continuance in the state of death, but also necessary to be believed as such, reflects upon the more ancient compilers, both of this and other breviaries of faith, as the Nicene and Constantinopolitan councils, Irenæus, Tertullian, &c. who left it out; which they should not have done, if it contain any thing highly material, and different from what is here otherwise expressed; whose credit is (as I conceive) more to be tendered than that of their juniors and followers, unknown to us; and so much the more, for that in a matter of this kind, defect or omission is less tolerable than any redundance of expression; which inconvenience may seem in a manner to reach higher, even to St. Paul himself, who, in the fifteenth chapter of his First Epistle to the Corinthians, declaring the sum of what he both learned and taught concerning our Saviour's last grand performances, only mentions his death, burial, and resurrection; I delivered unto you first (says he) that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and that he was buried, and thath e arose again the third day; which enumeration of his we may, it seems, well acquiesce in, as sufficient and complete, and may thence, with great probability, infer, that no other descent of our Saviour into hell, besides his death and burial, was by him understood, or delivered in his catechetical discourses and preachings, as a point of faith."

Fourthly, I add, that these words may be admitted as a distinct article of faith, contained in the Holy Scriptures, in a very good sense, very agreeable to the word descent, and to the import of the word hades; for the Scripture doth assure us, that the soul of the holy Jesus being separated from his body, went to paradise: (Luke xxiii. 43.) and thence it must descend into the grave or sepulchre to be united to his body, that it might be revived, and thus it may be truly said, he was dead and buried, his soul descended afterward into hades, to be united to his body, and his body being thus revived, he arose again the third day. Hence Grotius, on that place of St. Luke, saith, "qui symbolo fidei Christianæ asciipserunt κατέβη εἰς ᾅδου Christi verbis optime id tueri potuerunt," they who added this article to the symbol of faith, may best defend themselves by those words: nor, saith he, was this addition superfluous, seeing it proves the separate existence of the soul from the body, which many philosophers denied, and others doubted of.

PARAPHRASE AND COMMENTARY

ON

THE EPISTLES.

TO THE RIGHT REVEREND FATHER IN GOD,

GILBERT,

LORD BISHOP OF SALISBURY,

CHANCELLOR OF THE MOST NOBLE ORDER OF THE GARTER.

MY LORD,

THOUGH, since I had the happiness to be admitted to an acquaintance with a person of your character and merit, and have had a large share of your favour, I have had obligations to make some public acknowledgment of it; yet had I never so fair an opportunity to do it, as this work, which now craves your Lordship's acceptance, doth afford.

For, such a particular veneration and profound affection for the sacred records as your Lordship, upon all occasions, shews, may not only render this attempt to add some light unto them acceptable, but even cover the imperfections that you must needs discover in it.

Since therefore it is customary to dedicate works of this nature to persons of great eminence in station, and more raised worth, I thought myself obliged to set forth these labours under your Lordship's patronage, not only to express my gratitude, but also out of justice to that goodness which moved your Lordship not only to peruse, but to approve this work, and to suggest many things, which otherwise would have been wanting to it.

I am here carried to say somewhat of the pattern you set us in an unwearied diligence in the discharge of your high function; but I know you cannot bear it, and that you had much rather see your clergy imitate you in this, than hear them commend you for it. I will therefore rather study from your example, how to do my own duty, than publish to the world how you do yours.

That God would still continue your good Lordship as great a blessing as you are an honour to our church, and give you a sure but late enjoyment of celestial blessings, to which your soul, by its devout affections and indefatigable labours, still aspires, is the continual prayer of,

My Lord,

Your Lordship's most obliged,

Most humble, and most obedient servant,

DANIEL WHITBY.

PREFACE

TO THE READER.

BY way of preface to this work, some things there be of which I think fit to advertise the reader, and some things in which I shall beg his favour. And,

First, Because it may be useful to read the Epistles of St. Paul, not in the order in which they are placed in our Bibles, but rather in that order of time in which they were written, I here think fit to place them according to that order, following the chronology of Bishop Pearson.

A. D. 52.	The First Epistle to the Thessalonians.
A. D. 53.	The Second Epistle to the Thessalonians.
A. D. 57.	The First Epistle to the Corinthians.
	The Epistle to the Galatians.
	The Second Epistle to the Corinthians.
	The Epistle to the Romans.
A. D. 62.	The Epistle to the Ephesians.
	The Epistle to the Philippians.
	The Epistle to the Colossians.
	The Epistle to Philemon.
A. D. 63.	The Epistle to the Hebrews.
A. D. 65.	The First Epistle to Timothy.
	The Epistle to Titus.
A. D. 67.	The Second Epistle to Timothy.

I have in the prefaces to these Epistles given the reasons why I place the writing of them about the time assigned; only of the time of writing the Epistle to the Galatians I have there said nothing: I therefore here subjoin the reason why it is placed in the same year with the First Epistle to the Corinthians; viz. because St. Paul, at his first coming to Galatia, converts them to the Christian faith, (Acts xvi. 6.) at his second advent, he strengthens the brethren there, (Acts xviii. 23.) and in his Epistle to them, he marvels that they were so soon removed from him that called them to another gospel; (i. 6.) it therefore could not be written long after he had been with them to strengthen them, which yet was before he had begun his three years' abode at Ephesus, (Acts xix. 1. 31.) at the very close of which the First Epistle to the Corinthians is supposed to have been written.

I desire the reader to take an estimate of the true date of these Epistles, not from what may have slipped from me by the bye in a note, and hath been overlooked in the review of my papers, but from what is here set down, and is confirmed in the prefaces to these Epistles.

The use that may be made of observing this order, I shall exemplify in two instances; of which the First is that of Demas, concerning which Dr. Lightfoot, Harm. p. 137. Beza, Esthius, and others say, that though he left St. Paul for a season, yet after he returned to him: because, say they, in two Epistles, written after that to Timothy, in which he is said to have forsaken him, having loved this present world, (2 Tim. iv. 10.) he is reckoned among the coworkers with St. Paul, viz. Colos. iv. 14. Philem. 24. But I have destroyed the foundation of this argument by establishing the opinion of the ancients, that the Second Epistle to Timothy was the last that St. Paul writ; and therefore the opinion of Chrysostom, Theodoret, Œcumenius, and Theophylact, that he did μετὰ ταῦτα ῥαθυμεῖν, afterward become slothful, and, saith Œcumenius, returned again, εἰς ἑλληνισμὸν, to heathenism, is the more probable.

The second relates to that opinion of Grotius, that St. Paul spake for a time as if he had believed that the day of judgment might happen in his time, and that this is proved from 1 Cor. xv. 53. 2 Cor. v. 1—3. Whereas in his Second Epistle to the Thessalonians, writ four years before those to the Corinthians, he saith what is sufficient to shew he could not be of that opinion, or have declared any thing of that nature, and therefore could not afterward say any thing to that purpose. (See the note on 1 Thess. iv. 15.)

Secondly, I advertise the reader that this work has been retarded by the animadversions of Mr. Le Clerc upon the reverend and learned Dr. Hammond; which having perused, I found so many things said in favour of the Arians, and so many unworthy reflections upon the writings of St. Paul, that I chose rather to review and transcribe a considerable part of this work, than suffer those things to pass without an antidote. I acknowledge him to be a learned person, and honour his parts, and I know he cannot justly be offended with me, for being concerned for what I judge to be the truth, and for the honour of St. Paul, who has been somewhat rudely handled by him.

Thirdly, That I have been so often forced to differ from the same reverend person he attacks sometimes so indecently, is to be a matter of regret; but it hath truly been observed by others, that this great man had two darling opinions, viz. That the heresy of the gnostics, and the destruction of Jerusalem, were the great things to which no little part of these Epistles had relation; in which I have offered my reasons why I dissent from him, retaining still a just veneration for his parts and piety.

Fourthly, I advertise him, that though in the fourth edition of the Epistles I have put the whole paraphrase of every chapter before the annotations belonging to that chapter, that so they might the better agree with the Gospels contrived in that method; and that the chief additions to, or alterations in, the annotations, are now transferred to their proper places; yet they are also printed apart* for the use of them who have the first edition.

Lastly, I advertise him, that I have, as exactly as I could, made indexes, (1.) of all the Greek words and particles, (2.) of all the Scripture phrases explained, and (3.) of all the material doctrines handled in these annotations.

The things in which I beg the reader's favour are,

First, That where he finds or thinks that I have erred either in point of doctrine, or the interpretation of the Scriptures, as doubtless in the latter I have sometimes done, he would be so kind as to let me know my errors; which, upon conviction, I will not only own, but do it with all due acknowledgments and thankfulness to him who shall do that kind office to me.

Secondly, That if in any thing I seem to him to differ from the received doctrine of the church of England, as some may haply conceive I do in the annotations on the fifth chapter to the Romans; he would do me the justice to believe, that as he thinks I do, so I conceive I do not, contradict her doctrine; and also would consider, that even the church of Rome allows her commentators to vary from the sense of any particular scripture on which they build their doctrines, provided they say nothing which doth expressly contradict them.

Thirdly, That if he should receive any advantage from this work, especially if it should be so happy as to suggest to him any thing which may render him the better man, he would give God the glory of it, and pray for,

His friend and servant,

DANIEL WHITBY.

* This remark is not applicable to the present edition of 1821.

THE

GENERAL PREFACE,

CONCERNING

THE DIVINE AUTHORITY OF THESE EPISTLES,

AND OF

THE TRUTH OF THE CHRISTIAN FAITH.

CONTENTS.

§. I. That what is delivered in these Epistles as necessary to be believed or done, must be as necessary to be believed and done, as what is contained in the Gospels: that there are some things necessary to be believed and done, contained in these Epistles, which are not clearly delivered in the holy Gospels. §. II. The truth of the Christian religion proved, (1.) from what our Saviour promised and undertook, and what the apostles declared concerning the gifts and operations of the Holy Ghost. §. III. (2.) From plain matter of fact concerning this effusion of the Holy Ghost, and his miraculous gifts related in the Epistles. §. IV. (3.) From the confident appeals of the apostles and primitive professors, to these gifts, in their contests and debates with friends and adversaries, believers and rejecters of the Christian faith. §. V. (4.) From the prayers and thanksgivings made for them, the exhortations and directions given in these Epistles concerning these miraculous gifts. §. VI. (5.) From what is required to be done and suffered by all Christians upon no other inducements or enjoyments, than what depended on the truth and certainty of these gifts. §. VII. (6.) That these Epistles were indited whilst the apostles lived, and are proved genuine by more authentic arguments than can be produced for any book, writing, charter, law, or statute. The external arguments to prove them genuine. §. VIII. The internal arguments. §. IX. The truth of Christianity proved, (7.) from a particular consideration of these gifts; as, (1.) the gift of healing. §. X. (2.) Of ejecting devils out of men, their temples, and their oracles. §. XI. (3.) From the gift of tongues. §. XII. (4.) Of prophecy. §. XIII. (5.) Of discerning spirits. §. XIV. That these extraordinary gifts were conferred upon all other churches not mentioned in these Epistles. §. XV. That they continued in the two first ages of the church. §. XVI. What engagements the truth of Christianity lays upon us to live suitably to the rules delivered in those sacred records. The danger of those who neglect their salvation.

THAT these Epistles were indited by Divine assistance, and were received from the beginning, as epistles written by the conduct and assistance of the Spirit of God, I have endeavoured to evince in the general preface to the Gospels.

§. I. Hence then it follows, that what the apostles have delivered in these Epistles as necessary to be believed or done by Christians, must be as necessary to be believed and practised in order to salvation, as what was personally taught by Christ himself, and is contained in the Gospels; they being, in the writing these Epistles, the servants, apostles, ambassadors, and ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God; and the doctrines and precepts they delivered in them, being the will, the mind, the truth, and the commandments of God.

Now evident it will be to any one who judiciously reads these Epistles, that they contain some things delivered and done which were not clearly taught by Christ whilst he was on earth, nor are clearly delivered in the Gospels; as we may learn,

First, From the doctrines contained in these Epistles: as, v. g. that by the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified; (Rom. xiii. 20.) that both Jew and gentile, being under condemnation, were only to be justified freely by God's grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, whom God had set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood; (ver. 25.) that if righteousness came by the law, then was Christ dead in vain; (Gal. ii. 21.) that as many as are of the law are under the curse; (iii. 16.) that if we be circumcised, Christ shall profit us nothing; Christ is become of none effect to them that are under the law, they are fallen from grace; (v. 2. 5.) that the law was to continue only till the time of reformation, (Heb. ix. 10.) and was then to be disannulled for the weakness and unprofitableness of it; (vii. 18.) that Christ is a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec; (v. 5, 6.) that he hath an unchangeable priesthood; that he in heaven is continually making intercession for us, and therefore is able to save us to the utmost: (vii. 24, 25.) for all these doctrines clearly delivered in these Epistles, are either not to be found at all, or not so clearly, in the Gospels.

Secondly, In these Epistles only have we instructions about many great and necessary duties; as, v. g. that all our thanksgivings are to be offered up to God in the name of Christ: (Eph. v. 8. 20. 1 Thess. v. 18. Heb. xiii. 14, 15.) the duties which we owe to our civil governors are only hinted in these words of Christ, Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, but are enlarged upon in the Epistles to the Romans, chap. xiii. to Titus, iii. 1. and in the First Epistle of St. Peter, ii. 10. 17.: so also are the duties we owe to our spiritual superiors taught more expressly in these Epistles, Gal. vi. 6. 1 Thess. v. 12, 13. Heb. xiii. 17, 18. In fine, all the particular duties belonging to the relations of husbands and wives, parents and children, masters and servants, are particularly handled in these Epistles, Eph. v. 28. 33. vi. 1. 9. Colos. iii. 11. 25. but are scarce ever mentioned in the Gospels. But it may be objected,

Obj. 1. That "these Epistles were written to those who were in the faith already, and so could not be designed to teach them the fundamental articles, and points necessary to salvation, or to instruct them in what was necessary to make them Christians."

Ans. It follows not from their being Christians already, that the apostles designed not to write to them in these Epistles of any fundamental articles or points necessary to salvation, for it is very plain they do so. St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Corinthians, 1 Cor. xv. 3. writes of the resurrection of the dead, and of Christ's death and resurrection, as of doctrines necessary to be believed; and in his Epistle to the Galatians, of seeking justification by the works of the law, as a thing opposite to, and destructive of, the grace of Christ. And since there were among them false apostles, and deceitful workers, who corrupted the word, and handled the word of God deceitfully; (2 Cor. ii. 17. iv. 2.) yea, corrupted their minds from the simplicity of Christ, (xi. 3.) turned them from him that called them to another gospel, (Gal. i. 6.) sought to deprive them of their reward, (Colos. ii. 18, 19.) and separate them from their head, Christ Jesus; who put away a good conscience, and so made shipwreck of the faith; (1 Tim. ii. 19.) whose doctrine did spread as a gangrene, and overthrew the faith of some; (2 Tim. ii. 16.) many disputers of corrupt minds turning from the truth, (1 Tim. vi. 5.) many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, who subverted whole houses, teaching things that they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake: (Tit. i. 10, 11.) must not these things administer occasion to these sacred penmen to endeavour to establish and confirm them in the faith, by letting them they wrote to know the moment of those articles, the necessity of that faith they had been taught, and the pernicious consequences of those practices to which they were seduced by these deceivers?

Again, seeing these writings were intended as a rule, not to them only to whom they were sent, but to all future ages of the church; and the Spirit expressly told them, that in the latter days some should depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; (1 Tim. iv. 1; 2.) that the time would come when they would not endure sound doctrine, but would turn their ears from the truth; (2 Tim. iv. 3, 4.) when false prophets should arise among them, bringing in damnable doctrines, whose pernicious ways many should follow; (2 Pet. ii. 1, 2.) seeing they knew, that after their departure grievous wolves would enter in, not sparing the flock; (Acts xx. 29, 30.) must not all these considerations give just occasion to them to write of the great articles of Christian faith, and the necessary points of Christian conversation, to preserve them, and those that come after them, from their damnable doctrines and pernicious ways?

Moreover, this objection is therefore insignificant, because the apostles do inform us, that they found it safe to write the same things to them they had heard, (Phil. iii. 1.) though they knew the truth, and were confirmed in it, (1 John ii. 21.) that they might have these things always in remembrance; (2 Pet. i. 12. 15.) and that some who, for the time of their conversion, might have been great proficients in the faith, had yet need to be taught again the first principles of the oracles of God. (Heb. v. 12.)

Obj. 2. It also may be said, "that these Epistles were writ upon particular occasions, and without those occasions had not been written; and so cannot be thought necessary to salvation."

Ans. This objection is neither exactly true of all the Epistles, nor of all that is contained in them. Not of all the Epistles, for it appears not that five of the general Epistles, or that the Epistles to the Romans, to the Ephesians, and to the Hebrews, were writ upon particular occasions, unless the instructing men in the faith, and preserving them from heresy, or apostacy, be called particular occasions; and where this doth appear, it is very evident, that when the apostles had writ what they thought proper upon those occasions, they add many excellent rules of piety and virtue.

Ans. 2. Secondly, Were it exactly true that all the Epistles were writ upon particular occasions, it will not follow hence that they were not directed in writing them by the Holy Spirit; or that they contain nothing necessary to be believed or done, in order to salvation: for the book of Psalms was not only writ upon particular occasions, but was also adapted to and fitted for them. The prophets were all sent by God to testify against, and call the Jews to repentance for sins committed in their time, to reform their manners, or comfort them in their distresses, that is, upon particular occasions; but will it therefore follow, that they did not write by the assistance of the Spirit of God, or that there is nothing in the Psalms, or in the prophets, which was necessary to be believed or practised by the Jews? Moreover, the Gospel of St. Luke was writ upon a particular occasion, viz. to instruct Theophilus in the certainty of the things he had been taught, and yet Epiphanius informs us, that *the Holy Ghost compelled and stimulated him to the work. The Gospel of St. Mark was writ, say the ancients, at the request of the converts at Rome, and yet he writ it, saith Epiphanius, πνέυματι ἁγίῳ ἐμπεφορημένος, by the impulse of the Holy Ghost.† They also say, that St. John was importuned by all the Asiatics to write his Gospel; and yet, saith Epiphanius, the Holy Spirit did inwardly impel him to the writing of it.‡ The Gospel of St. Matthew, say they,§ was indited at the request of the Hebrews, that he might supply by writing the want of his presence with them. So that we see the writings of the apostles and evangelists may be occasionally penned, and yet be the products of the Holy Ghost, and contain things necessary to be believed and done.

Ans. 3. The particular occasions of some of these writings being the errors or waverings of Christians in fundamental points, as appears from the Epistles to the Corinthians, Galatians, &c. and in others the busy industry of false apostles and deceitful workers, to pervert them from the faith; that these Epistles were writ on such occasions, is rather a presumption that they were writ upon some fundamental points, than that they could not be indited upon these occasions.

Moreover, great advantages arise from the occasional writing these Epistles, and such as might induce the Holy Spirit to excite them to that work. For,

1. All the occasions which they took to write from the disorders, errors, heresies, and mistakes, which at first crept into the church, render these writings standing rules for the decision of like cases through all future ages.

2. The deportment of the apostles towards these erroneous persons and disorderly walkers, the care they used to recover, or inform them better, the zeal and tenderness they shewed, and the rules they laid down in those cases, are excellent precedents and directions for all church governors, in cases of like nature.

3. All the occasions which they had to write for the direction of church governors, how to behave themselves in the church of God, to give rules for the qualifications of those who were to be admitted to those offices, and touching their behaviour in them for the settlement of the affairs of the church, and the decent and regular performance of Divine service, afford us standing rules of government, and of admitting and ordaining a succession of those divers orders in the church.

Lastly, These various occasions give us full assurance, that these Epistles must be written in those very times when these disorders happened, and these errors crept into the church, and so take off all jealousy or suspicion that they were writings contrived in the following ages of the church; whereas, had their writings been only systems of theological doctrines and rules of life, which equally concerned all the ages of the church, it might have been more plausibly objected, that they were framed by some Christian bishops assembled for that end.

Obj. 3. But if all or most of the truths declared in these Epistles were to be received and believed as fundamental articles, what then became of those Christians who were fallen asleep before those things in the Epistles were revealed to them?

Ans. 1. This question equally concerns the evangelists, and more especially the Gospel of St. John, which, say the ancients, was either the last portion of Scripture* which was written, or the last save his Epistles, it being written after his return from his exile in Patmos to Ephesus; and so if it contain any fundamental articles, as necessary rules of life, what became of those Christians who died before they were revealed in it?

Ans. 2. We say not, that all or most of the truths, declared either in the Epistles or Gospels, are to be accounted fundamental or necessary articles; but only that some of them ought to be so accounted, especially those which have this character of a necessary article, or rule of life; that the denial or nonpractice of them, is represented as that which will endanger our salvation, or cut us off from the communion of the church.

Ans. 3. It is also a precarious supposition, that they who died before the Epistles were writ to them, must die before the necessary things contained in them were revealed to them, seeing we know that the apostles writ the same things which they had preached before; and St. Luke writ his Gospel, that Theophilus might know the certainty of the things he had been taught; and in those times of the effusion of the Spirit of wisdom and of knowledge, they had an unction which could teach them all things, (1 John ii. 27.) and so supply the unavoidable defects of outward teachers.

Obj. 4. The gospel was to be preached to the poor; now they are not capable of sublime notions, nor can they comprehend mysterious reasonings.

Ans. 1. Whether this objection be intended against the necessity of believing the Epistles of St. Paul only, or also the Gospel of St. John, is uncertain; the sublime notions and mysterious reasonings being common to both.

Ans. 2. There seemeth no necessity of troubling the poor common people with sublime notions, or mysterious reasonings, since both the ancient church and our own catechism declare, That all the articles of Christian faith, common to all that bear that name, are comprised in the Apostles' Creed. For when the child saith, My godfathers and my godmothers promised I should believe all the articles of the Christian faith, since it is evident they only stipulated for the belief of the Apostles' Creed in baptism, and when he doth rehearse those articles, he only doth rehearse the Apostles' Creed; it is certain that, by our catechism, it must be supposed to contain all the articles of the Christian faith.

Moreover, it is very difficult, if not impossible, to make such persons have a right conception of the spiritual nature and the attributes of God, or to enable them, by reason, to prove the providence of God, or the immortality of the soul; but yet these things must be proposed to them as articles or foundations of their faith. And as it is not very difficult for them to learn from Scripture the truth of these things, so neither is it difficult from the same Scripture to learn the truth of all the articles of the Apostles' Creed, even in that sense in which all Christian ages did receive them.

In a word: were these mechanics as much concerned for spirituals as they are for temporals, as many of them have attained to great proficiency in their respective arts, so might they also, by a Christian diligence, attain a competent proficiency in all the necessary articles of Christian faith, and in the rules of Christian piety, or of their duty to God and man. Now Christianity being that doctrine which is after godliness, (Tit. i. 1.) I believe nothing is proposed in it as necessary to be believed to salvation, which hath not some tendency to the promotion of true piety.

§. II. Having thus established the Divine authority of these Epistles, I shall endeavour to confirm the truth of the Christian faith from what is copiously delivered in them.

This is of absolute necessity in this degenerate age, in which all manner of impiety exceedingly abounds, and men are by their lives disposed and even concerned to question the truth of that religion, and of those writings, which threaten the severest punishments to their enormities; and so industriously, and even impudently, pursue this black design both in their discourses and writings.

Now to prove against these enemies of revealed religion, the truth and certainty of the Christian faith, from what is copiously delivered in these Epistles, it will be only requisite to shew, that they contain a declaration of such things as could not possibly be true, but they must also be a full and convincing demonstration of the truth of the Christian faith, and that we have great reason to believe the truth of what is thus related by them. And,

I. That they contain a declaration of such things as could not possibly be true, but they must also be a full and convincing declaration of the truth of the Christian faith, the declaration they afford will be sufficient to evince: for it was this,

That the miraculous gifts and powerful operations of the Holy Ghost were plentifully afforded to them who preached the gospel to the world, and also to those Christian churches which received the gospel, and embraced the faith they taught.

By way of preface to what I shall collect from these Epistles, concerning these miraculous gifts and operations of the Holy Ghost, it may deserve to be considered, that as the blessed Jesus spake as never man spake, that is, delivered such just, holy, beneficial commands, as never were before made known to the world; and did, for confirmation of his doctrine, the works that no other man did: so was he pleased to lay the truth of his prophetic office upon such future and miraculous events, as no impostor that had any wit would undertake, or could be able to perform.

For the prophecies which he had undertaken to fulfil, and his own frequent declarations, made it necessary, 1. That he should die a peculiar death, i. e. by being lifted up upon the cross. 2. That in three days he should rise again. 3. That after his resurrection his gospel should in the space of forty years, or before the destruction of Jerusalem, be propagated throughout the world, or the whole Roman empire. 4. That, in order to the propagation of it, the Holy Ghost should plentifully be vouchsafed to his apostles, and should endue them with power from on high, and even enable them to do greater works than he himself had done. (John xiv. 12.)

At the great day of the feast of tabernacles, when all the Jews assembled at Jerusalem were joyful in their beth haschoavah, or house of drawing water, and were (say their traditions) in expectation that the Holy Ghost should fall upon them, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink: he that believeth in me, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living waters. This spake he of the Spirit, which they that believed on him should receive. (John vii. 37, 38.) And at the close of his life on earth, he comforts his disciples with the promise of this Holy Ghost, who should continue with them, not only to teach them all things, and bring all things to their remembrance; but also to convince the world of sin, because they believed not in him; and of his righteousness, who was so gloriously exalted to the right hand of God his Father; and of a future judgment, because the prince of this world, being cast out from those he had possessed, was judged. (John xvi. 7. 11.) And after his resurrection he speaks thus to them: Behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you, for ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost, not many days hence: (Luke xxiv. 49.) and ye shall receive power, after the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses to me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and to the utmost parts of the earth. (Acts i. 8.) And, lastly, to encourage others to believe the doctrine which they taught, he saith, These signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils, they shall speak with new tongues, they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover. Now I desire to know whether any thing of this nature was ever undertaken, or laid as the foundation of their credit, by any other author of any doctrine, religion, sect, or heresy? Whether they ever made their own violent death and resurrection the foundation of their veracity; or promised the like powers and assistances, when they were risen, to those who should promote or should embrace their doctrine? Or, whether that which no man else durst undertake, was not performed by the holy Jesus so effectually, as that his doctrine presently prevailed, and was received throughout the world, in spite of all the opposition of men and devils made against it, and wrought in Christians such a lasting faith, as time and vice, though most concerned to do it, were never able to deface?

But though we have no instances of any other persons that made the like attempts, yet do our Lord's disciples tread exactly in their Master's steps: for the first thing, which they declared to the world was this, that the forerunner of their Lord, John the Baptist, when Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the regions about Jordan, and in particular the pharisees and sadducees, the publicans and soldiers, repaired to his baptism, declared in the audience of them all, There was one shortly to come after him, one that stood then among them, who would baptize them with the Holy Ghost, and fire. (Matt. iii. 11.) They also add, that their Lord both before and after his resurrection made a like promise to them, that he would suddenly send down upon them the Spirit promised by the Father, that they should receive power from on high, and be baptized with the Holy Ghost, and so should be enabled to be witnesses of his resurrection and of his doctrine.

When these apostles had themselves received the Holy Ghost, they declare, they only had received what God had promised by the prophet Joel, saying, ii. 28. It shall come to pass in the last days, I will pour my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams, Acts ii. 16. where note, that it is a received rule among the Jews, that the last days, when used by the prophets, do signify the times of the Messiah. (See the note on 1 Tim. iv. 1.) Note also, that God of old revealed his will to his people by visions, dreams, and by prophetic revelations; so that this is a promise, that in the days of the Messiah God would miraculously pour his Spirit upon men, and by that Spirit would enable them to prophesy, and to reveal his will to others. Yea, they say boldly to all that stood amazed at it, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost; for the promise is to you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. Here then we see how fully they both claim a promise of the Holy Ghost made by their Master to them, and also promise the like gift to them who should believe and be baptized in his name.

Now, these promises were actually performed and made good before they were indited, and put in the records of the Christian faith, the writings of the apostles and evangelists, or they were not; if all these promises were fulfilled before the records which contain them were indited, then had Christ sent the Holy Ghost upon the apostles, and given them the promise of the Father, then the believing Jews and gentiles were actually baptized with the Holy Ghost, and were enabled to speak with tongues and prophesy; and so Christ must have given certain demonstration both of his resurrection and his promises: but if these promises were not made good before these records were indited, then the whole story of St. John, and of the Acts of the Apostles, might easily have been convinced of falsehood by many thousand living witnesses, both in Jerusalem and in all other places where they lay the scene of this great dispensation; because they had heard nothing of these things, but from their histories: then, by the suffrage of our own evangelists, our Lord's forerunner must be a deceiver, when he declared the Messiah should baptize them with the Holy Ghost and fire, whom he had then baptized with water; yea, in those very histories designed to convince others that Jesus was Christ, they must leave on record a promise, made not to them only, but to all believers, which never was fulfilled; the apostles also must be falsely introduced, saying, This was that which was spoken by the prophet Joel, and with the greatest impudence promising that Holy Ghost to others which they themselves had not received; and surely then those Jews, which after all Christ's miracles required a sign, would have required of the apostles, Where is that great effusion of the Spirit promised by the prophet Joel, which may assure us, that the times of the Messiah are now come? Where is that fiery baptism? Where are those rivers of spiritual water which your pretended Christ, and his forerunner, promised? Let us see them that we may believe him. With what face could St. Peter promise that Holy Ghost to others, upon faith in Christ, which they themselves had not received? or with what face could Luke declare he did this before such an audience, of which the greatest part must be then living, and so as with that promise to convert three thousand souls, had neither these converts, nor this audience, found any experience of that affair? In fine, if these apostles were not assisted with these miraculous powers of the Holy Ghost, they must be well assured, that he who had so oft engaged whilst he lived to send this Comforter to them, and at his resurrection promised, that in a few days they should all be baptized with the Holy Ghost, was a deceiver and false prophet; and then what motive could they have, or how could they conceive it a thing possible, to be his witnesses successfully to the uttermost parts of the earth? If by the coming of the Holy Ghost upon them they were indeed enabled to speak all languages; this gift was a sufficient confirmation of the resurrection and ascension of that Jesus who thus made good his promise to them. If they had no such gift, how was it possible that such unlearned persons, who only understood their mother-tongue, should discourse in their several languages to the Romans, Grecians, Egyptians, Persians, Armenians, Scythians, Indians, and all the barbarous nations of the world? And to what purpose was it for them to travel to those nations, to stand mute among them, or else to tell a story to them of which they could not understand one word? If, as the sacred story doth inform us, they preached the word with demonstration of the Spirit, and power; if they went forth preach- ing every where, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following, God also bearing witness to them by signs and miracles, and by divers powers and distributions of the Holy Ghost, then might they boldly say, We are his witnesses of these things, and so is the Holy Ghost, which God hath given to those that obey him. (Acts v. 32.) But if no such assistance was vouchsafed to them, what evidence could they give to the world that he had sent them on this errand? or how could they expect to reverse all the ancient laws and religions of the world, and to persuade all nations to own and worship, as the great Saviour of the world, one who was lately hanged on a tree? Their compliance therefore with this mission, and their continuance in this testimony under those dreadful miseries they suffered for it, as well as their incredible success in the propagation of the Christian faith to every nation, will not suffer us to doubt that they were well assured of the completion of this promise to them, and so of Christ's miraculous assistance of them.

§. III. Moreover, these Epistles do almost severally contain sufficient proofs of the effusion of the Holy Ghost upon believers, and of his miraculous assistance of the first preachers of the Christian faith, and jointly do concur to make this evidence triumphant over infidelity. For,

First, St. Paul writes to the Romans thus; I long to see you, that I may impart to you some spiritual gift, to the end you may be established, Rom. i. 11. (See the note there.) For I know (saith he), that when I come to see you, I shall come in the fulness, τῆς εὐλογίας, of the blessing of the gospel of Christ, xv. 29. i. e. that fulness of spiritual gifts with which all Christians were blessed in Christ Jesus, according to that promise of the prophet Isaiah, xliv. 2, 3. Fear not, Jacob my servant, and Israel whom I have chosen, for I will put my Spirit on thy seed, καὶ τὰς εὐλογίας μου, and my blessings on thy children. Now that the apostle came to Rome, both Scripture and the whole current of antiquity attest: either then he came to them with the fulness of the blessings of the gospel of Christ, and did impart unto them those spiritual gifts which tended to confirm them in the Christian faith, or he did not: if he did impart them, he gave them an assured demonstration of the certainty of Christian faith; if he did not, he himself ministered to them a full objection against his own apostleship: for this must render him a vain-boaster of things he was not able to perform, and a deceiver of the church of Rome. And why then doth he speak thus to them? I have whereof I may glory through Jesus Christ in those things which pertain to God: for I will not dare to speak of any thing which Christ hath not wrought by me, to make the gentiles obedient in word and deed, in the power of signs and wonders, and in the power of the Spirit of God. (Rom. xv. 17—19.) These powers, saith he, have accompanied my preaching from Jerusalem, round about unto Illyricum, and this grace, saith he, was given to me of God, that I should be the minister of Jesus Christ to the gentiles, ministering the gospel of God to them, that the offering up of the gentiles might be acceptable, being sanctified by the Holy Ghost. Where he compares himself, preaching the gospel, to the priest, conversant about his sacrifice, to prepare and fit it to be offered: the gentiles dedicated by him to the service of God, are his sacrifice or oblation; the Holy Spirit conferred upon them is the libamen by which they are sanctified, and rendered acceptable to God. Moreover, the Epistle to the Romans must be false, or else it must be sent by the apostle before he had seen Rome, for it contained an intimation that he had not then seen them, a desire to see them, and a promise to come to them; for, saith he, I make it my request to God, if by any means, now at length, I might have a prosperous journey by the will of God, to come to you, for I long to see you; (Rom. i. 10, 11. 13.) and, I often purposed to come to you, but was let hitherto: and again, I have been much hindered from coming to you; having therefore a great desire these many years to come to you, whensoever I take my journey into Spain I will come to you, (xv. 22—24.) It is also certain that he afterward did see them; for after his appeal to Cæsar he was sent to Rome, and lived there at least two years: he therefore must have sent his Epistle to them, and they must have received it before that time. In a word, from those words in the close of this Epistle, xv. 25, 26. But now I go to Jerusalem to minister to the saints; for it hath pleased them of Macedonia and Achaia to make a certain contribution for the poor saints that are at Jerusalem; it is evident he writ this Epistle before that collection was carried by him to Jerusalem in the third year of Nero, and sent it from Corinth, as the postscript saith. Note also, that this Epistle is often cited by St. Clemens and Polycarp.

In his Epistle to the church of Corinth, he declares, they were enriched with all utterance and knowledge, or in tongues and prophecy, 1 Cor. i. 5. (see the note there:) that they abounded in every thing, in faith, in utterance, and knowledge, (2 Cor. viii. 7.) so that they came behind the other churches in no gift. His twelfth chapter begins thus: Now concerning spiritual gifts, I would not have you ignorant, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed; and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost. Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit; and there are differences of administrations (or offices in the church to which these gifts belong), but (all proceeding from) the same Lord; and there are diversities of operations (performed by these gifted men), but it is the same God who worketh all (these operations) in (them) all, (ver. 4—6.) Then he proceeds to the enumeration of the gifts conferred upon the officers and members of the church, viz. the gifts of knowledge, wisdom, prophecy, and the discerning of spirits; the gift of miracles, of faith, of healing, of divers kinds of tongues, and the interpretation of them; saying, that God had placed in the church, first apostles; secondly, prophets; thirdly, teachers; after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues; concluding with this question, Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles? have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret? But covet earnestly the best gifts; and yet shew I to you a more excellent way, even that of charity: for, though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I can remove mountains, and have no charity, I am nothing: (xiii. 1, 2.) for prophecies shall fail, and tongues shall cease, and knowledge shall be done away, but charity never faileth, (ver. 8.)

Now this Epistle must be indited and sent to them whilst their schisms, contentions, and disorders remained, because it was designed to correct them, and whilst St. Paul was in a capacity to come to them, and so before his bonds, because he saith, The rest will I set in order when I come, (xi. 34.) Hence, after notice given of their schisms, contentions, and divisions, he adds, These things have I in a figure transferred to myself and Apollos for your sakes, that you might learn in us, not to think of men above that which is written, that no one of you be puffed up, for one against another, (iv. 6.) saying, I have also sent Timotheus to you, and I myself will come unto you shortly; and then he puts the question to them thus, What will you? that I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness? (ver. 16—19.) Chap. v. he commands them to put away from them, and to deliver up to Satan, the incestuous person; and that accordingly they did so, his Second Epistle shews, in which he writes to them to forgive and comfort him. (2 Cor. ii. 7.)

Moreover, he writes part of this Epistle in answer to some questions they had sent to him, which required a speedy answer, as being cases of conscience which concerned their conversation, their freedom from idolatry, and the preservation of weak Christians. The rest of his Epistle is spent in endeavouring to correct their great disorders about the sacrament, their church-assemblies, and the use of their spiritual gifts, (chap. xi. and xiv.) and their great error touching the resurrection, (chap. xv.) and to give directions touching their charity, (chap. xvi.) All which things required speedy instructions; and that this Epistle was sent accordingly, the words do manifest: When I come, whomsoever you shall approve by your letters, them will I send to bring your liberality to Jerusalem; and if it be meet that I go also, they shall go with me, (xvi. 3, 4.) Now I will come to you when I pass through Macedonia, and it may be that I will abide, yea, and winter with you, (ver. 5, 6.) I say, hence it is evident, that they soon received this Epistle; for they accordingly made their collections, with which he went up to Jerusalem; and in his Second Epistle he apologizes for not coming to them, according to those words, i. 16, 17. Moreover, the Second Epistle is a strong confirmation of the First, in which he hath pointed out unto them those disorders which he would have remedied, those things he would have done before his coming; for in this he tells them, their obedience to his former letter had filled him with joy and comfort, that his instructions concerning the incestuous person had found so good effect, that they approved themselves to be clear in this matter, and caused him to rejoice, that he could have such confidence in them in all things, (chap. vii.) Whence it is evident, they had not only then received, but in some measure had complied with the instructions given them in that Epistle.

Add to this, that Clemens Romanus, with the whole church of Rome, in an epistle sent to the Corinthians, not many years after this of St. Paul's was written, declares, (§. 2.) that there was πλήρης ἁγίου πνεύματος ἔγχυσις ἐπὶ πάντας, a full effusion of the Holy Ghost upon them all; and that St. Paul had written to them an Epistle touching their divisions about himself, (§. 37.) and Cephas and Apollos; which is a great confirmation, both of the early knowledge and use of this Epistle in the church, as also of the truth of what St. Paul relateth in it, touching the gifts of the Holy Ghost conferred upon them.

In his Epistle to the Galatians, he compares himself with the chief of the apostles, and the pillars of the church, declaring, that he that wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, was as efficacious in him towards the gentiles; that these pillars saw, and perceived by the grace given to him, that the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed to him, as the gospel of the circumcision was to Peter, and therefore gave to him the right hand of fellowship; that he with Barnabas should go to the gentiles, and they to the circumcision; (ii. 7—9.) adding, for consolation to the gentiles, that Christ had redeemed them from the curse of the law, that the blessing of Abraham might come upon the gentiles, that they might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith; (iii. 13.) and also, that through the Spirit they did wait for the hope of righteousness by faith, (v. 5.)

Now in this Epistle, he mentions the life that he now lived in the flesh, (ii. 20.) his fear of them, his desire to see them, and the desire of the false brethren to exclude him from any share in their affections, and the persecutions he yet suffered in the flesh: (iii. 2. iv. 11. 15. 17. 20. v. 11.) and he concludes it thus: You see how large a letter I have written to you with my own hand; and from henceforth let no man trouble me, for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus, (vi. 11. 17.) Which words demonstrate, that this Epistle must be written and sent to them whilst he lived, after he had suffered greatly for the name of Christ. Moreover, the occasion of it shews it must be written by St. Paul himself; for it was written upon occasion of some Judaizers, who preached up the necessity of circumcising the gentiles, and requiring them to observe the law of Moses, and who endeavoured to disparage this apostle, who had taught the contrary, as inferior to other apostles, and his doctrine as contrary to what they taught: now these distempers requiring a speedy remedy, we cannot doubt but the apostle sent this Epistle to them, as soon as he had heard how they had been perverted from the sincerity of the faith. It is also cited by Polycarp ad Philip. §. 5.

In his Epistle to the Ephesians, he tells them, he was made a minister of the gospel according to the gift of the grace of God given to him, by the effectual working of his power; (iii. 7.) and, that to every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ: for, he ascending up on high, gave gifts unto men: and, he gave some apostles, some prophets, some evangelists, some pastors and teachers; and that all these had their spiritual gifts: (see the note on iv. 7, 8. 11.) and adds, that after they believed, they were sealed with the spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance, till the redemption of the purchased possession, (i. 13, 14.)

Now in this Epistle he makes mention of his bonds, and of his being then an ambassador in bonds, (vi. 20.) saying, I Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you gentiles; I Paul, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you, (iii. 1. iv. 1.) This Epistle therefore must be sent unto them whilst he was in bonds at Rome; and so it must be sent unto them anno Christi 62. since Paul was set at liberty the next year. He also adds, that it was sent by Tychicus, whom he sent to them on purpose, to make known his affairs whilst he abode at Rome, and begs their prayers for courage in making known the mystery of the gospel, whilst he was thus in bonds, (vi. 19—22.)

Moreover, this Epistle is cited by St. Clemens, (Ep. ad Cor. §. 46.) about six years after the writing of it. It is twice cited by Polycarp, (§. 1. 12.) in his epistle to the Philippians. Ignatius (§. 12.) in his epistle to the Ephesians, saith, that St. Paul in his whole Epistle made mention of them in Christ Jesus: so early was this Epistle known to and read by the Christians.

In his Epistle to the Colossians, he declares, that he had laboured in preaching the gospel to them, according to the energy of him that wrought with him, ἐν δυνάμει, by a mighty power, (i. 29.) and saith, Let the word of God dwell in you richly in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns, and spiritual songs, (iii. 16.) Now in this Epistle he saith, that he then rejoiced in the afflictions which he suffered for them, (i. 24.) He also speaks of his solicitude for them, and those of Laodicea, and for as many as had not seen his face in Christ, of his salutation with his own hand, (iv. 18.) and of his bonds, and of his sending Tychicus and Onesimus, to give them an account of his affairs, and of the salutations of many brethren. He therefore, and they also, must be all alive when this Epistle was sent to them.

In his Epistle to the Thessalonians, he testifies, his gospel came unto them not in word only, but in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance, and that they received the word with much affliction, but yet with joy of the Holy Ghost; (1 Thess. i. 5, 6.) and for this he appeals to their own experience, adding these words, Ye know what manner of persons we were amongst you for your sakes; whence he infers, that he that despised his admonitions, despised not man, but God, who also had given them his Holy Spirit, (iv. 8.)

Now in this Epistle he speaks of his absence from them, and of his great desire to see them, (1 Thess. ii. 17.) of his solicitude for their steadfastness under their sufferings, (iii. 5, 6.) his sending Timothy to give him an account of it, his comfort when he heard that they stood firm; and maketh Sylvanus and Timotheus his associates in sending it. This Epistle therefore must be written whilst both they and he were living, and it is cited by Polycarp in his Epistle to the Philippians, §. 11.

In his Epistle to Titus, he speaks thus, (iii. 5, 6.) According to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost, which he shed on us abundantly, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Now, of epistles thus written to particular persons, I think it needless to prove, that they were written whilst both St. Paul and they were living, and were not sent unto them from, or in another world: though that is here sufficiently proved from these words, iii. 12. When I shall send Artemas to thee, or Tychicus, be diligent to come to me to Nicopolis.

Arg. 2. §. IV. Secondly, That God vouchsafed to the professors and first propagators of the Christian faith these admirable powers, and various distributions of the Holy Ghost, is farther evident from this consideration, that the apostles in all their contests and debates with friends and adversaries, believers and rejecters of the Christian faith, false apostles, antichrists, corrupters of it, and apostates from it, appeal with greatest confidence to these miraculous operations and distributions of the Holy Ghost.

In their first controversy, touching the resurrection of our Lord, gainsaid by the rulers of the Jews, St. Peter speaks thus to them: The God of our fathers hath raised up Jesus whom ye slew and hanged on a tree. Him hath God exalted to his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance to Israel, and remission of sins. And we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also that Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him. (Acts v. 30—32.) And again, This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses: therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shewed forth this, which ye now see and hear. (Acts ii. 32, 33.) Now evident it is, this plea could not be offered to convince these rulers, by an appeal to their own senses, without the highest impudence and plain confusion of their cause, had there been no effusion of the Holy Ghost imparted to the apostles who attested, and believers which embraced this faith; nor could it have been published in that generation, and recorded by St. Luke, as made by the apostles before so great an auditory, if it had been false, so many witnesses being then living to confute this story.

Secondly, The next dispute arose betwixt St. Peter and the converts of the circumcision, accusing him as a transgressor, for eating and conversing with Cornelius, and other uncircumcised persons; in which case his apology runs thus: As I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, as upon us at the beginning. Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost. Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did to us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ; what was I, that I could withstand God? (Acts xi. 15—17.) And thus he puts to silence the zealots for the circumcision, men too tenacious of their rites, too zealous for the law, to be satisfied with any thing that did not carry with it a convincing evidence.

Thirdly, A third contest arose at Antioch, where some believing Jews contended, that it was necessary to circumcise the gentile converts, and to command them to observe the law of Moses: this vain pretension St. Peter baffles by this argument, that God who knows the hearts bare them witness, that whilst uncircumcised they were accepted with him, by giving them the Holy Ghost even as he did to us, and putting no difference betwixt them and us, purifying their hearts by faith; and thence concluding, that by endeavouring to put this yoke on the believing gentiles, they would tempt, that is, would disbelieve, and even oppose themselves to that God who had vouchsafed so clear a demonstration of his acceptance of them, not being circumcised. (Acts xv. 8, 9.) Hence also the whole college of the apostles write unto them thus: It seemed good to the Holy Ghost to lay upon you no such burden, (ver. 28.)

Fourthly, When the zealots had infected the church of the Galatians with the pernicious doctrine of the necessity of circumcision, and of the observation of the law of Moses, St. Paul writes thus to them: O foolish Galatians! who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth? This only would I learn of you: Received ye the spirit (in his miraculous gifts and operations) by (obedience to) the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? (Gal. iii. 1, 2.) If by the latter, as ye know ye did, this is a demonstration that your justification and acceptance with God, is the fruit of faith in Christ, not of obedience to the law of Moses; this the apostle reassumes, saying, He that ministereth the Spirit to you, and worketh miracles among you, doth he it by (virtue of your obedience to) the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? We see then, this was the chief argument which carried the cause in the council at Jerusalem, and which is urged by St. Paul to confirm the Galatians in the truth, and silence those who laboured to prevail upon them to admit of circumcision, and the observance of the law of Moses: this confirmation therefore of the truth of the Christian faith was such, as none concerned to do it then were able to gainsay, much less can any now find reason to doubt of it.

In the Epistle to the church of Corinth, he is even forced to prove the truth of his apostleship, against those false apostles and deceitful workers who had set up against him, and for the satisfaction of those Corinthians who sought a proof of Jesus Christ speaking in him. (2 Cor. xiii. 3.) He therefore justifies and confirms it by declaring, that the signs of an apostle have been wrought among them by him, in all patience, in signs and wonders, and in mighty deeds; (2 Cor. xii. 12.) that he was not a whit behind the very chief of the apostles in these gifts; (xi. 5, 6.) that both he and his fellow-labourers among them approved themselves as the ministers of Christ by the Holy Ghost, by the word of truth, and by the power of God; (vi. 6, 7.) that they to whom he writ were manifestly declared to be his letters commendatory, as being the epistle of Christ ministered by him, written not with ink, but by the Spirit of the living God, (chap. iii.) and that they came behind the other churches in no gift, (xii. 13.) To the Galatians infected with the like distemper, he declares, that he who wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, was as efficacious in him towards the gentiles; and that this was so manifest even to the chief of the apostles, that they were by the grace vouchsafed to him convinced that the gospel of the uncircumcision was by Christ committed to his charge.

Some there seem to have been among the members of the church of Corinth, who had not the knowledge of the truth, and who even questioned whether Christ was among them or not: to them he testifieth, that the church of Corinth came behind the other churches in no gift, and that by this the testimony of Christ was confirmed among them; (1 Cor. i. 5—7. see the note there:) that the word he preached was not delivered in the enticing words of human wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit, and of power, that their faith might not seem to consist in the wisdom of man, but in the power of the Holy Ghost; (ii. 4, 5.) that God had established them in Christ, by giving the earnest of his Spirit in their hearts. (2 Cor. i. 21, 22.) Now for the truth of what he thus delivers, he makes a solemn and religious appeal to their own hearts and consciences, saying, We are made manifest to God, and we trust also we are made manifest in your own consciences, (2 Cor. v. 11.) for we are not as many who corrupt the word, but as of sincerity, as of God, in the sight of God speak we in Christ, (ii. 17.) We do by manifestation of the truth commend ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God, (iv. 2.) Yea, he appeals to all the prophets and spiritual men among them, not only for the truth, but also for the Divine authority of his Epistles, saying, If any man be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things I write unto you are the commandments of God. (1 Cor. vii. 3. 7.) Now evident it is, that arguments of this nature neither could be urged by this apostle without confusion to his cause, and the impairing of his credit; nor, being offered, could prevail upon the church of Achaia, and other churches, to own him as a true apostle, and his Epistles as the commandments of the Lord, had not the matter of fact, on which they did entirely depend, been incontestable. For, had these things been false, or questionable, they whom he styleth false apostles and deceitful workers, must have been able to reply, that he himself, in his appeal to the miraculous operations of the Holy Ghost for confirmation of his doctrine and apostleship, must have been guilty of that very crime he laid to their charge; and all the churches to which he had directed these epistles, must rather be confirmed in the suspicions they had entertained against him, than wrought off from them by these vain pretences and false surmises of those distributions of the Holy Spirit of which they had found no experience, and had received no convincing evidence.

The believing Jews lay under two dangerous distempers: the first was that which St. James takes notice of in his Epistle, viz. that faith alone would be sufficient to save them without works; and upon this the heretics mentioned by Irenæus,* and others, grounded their licentious doctrines, that they might live as they listed, they being not to be saved by good works, but by faith only. The second was a proneness to apostacy, or falling back from the faith to Judaism, to avoid persecution: and this the heretics also so far improved, as to declare it lawful, in times of persecution, to commit idolatry,† and to deny Christ with the mouth. Now in opposition to the first assertion, St. Paul, in his second chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews, shews the necessity of taking more abundant heed to the precepts of Christianity, as being all confirmed by signs and miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost; and therefore puts to them the question thus: If the word spoken by angels was firm, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompence of reward; how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation, which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed to us by them that heard it? God also bearing them witness both with signs and wonders, and divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will. In opposition to their proneness to apostacy, he declares it a most dreadful thing to fall from the profession of the Christian faith, after they had received such strong convictions of it, by those gifts of the Holy Ghost they had received with it: for, saith he, it is impossible for them who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and have been made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and yet fall away, to be renewed to repentance, seeing they crucify again the Son of God, and put him to an open shame, (vi. 4—6. see the note there.) Again, to such, there remains no more sacrifice for sin, but a fearful looking-for of judgment and fiery indignation, seeing they trample under foot the Son of God, and count the blood of the covenant, by which they were sanctified, an unholy thing, and reproach the Spirit of grace, (x. 26. 29. see the note there.) Now visible it is, that the foundation of both these arguments depends upon the certainty of this matter, that God confirmed the truth of the doctrine delivered by Christ and his apostles, by divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost, and that Christians then were made partakers of those gifts.

* "Ut liberoa agere quæ velint, secundùm enim ipsius gratiam salvari homines, et non secundùm opera justa." Iren. lib. i. cap. 20. Theodoret. Hær. Fab. lib. i. cap. 1.

Lastly, Against the seductions of the antichrists and the deceivers, which were then crept into the church, St. John fortifies the believers with these words: These things have I written concerning them that deceive you. But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any one teach you, but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie; and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him. (1 John ii. 26, 27.) And again, Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God; for many false prophets are gone out into the world. By this ye shall know the Spirit of God; every spirit that confesseth Jesus Christ coming in the flesh, is of God; and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God, (iv. 1—3. see the strength of the argument in the note there.) And it is the Spirit that witnesseth that Jesus is the Son of God, because the Spirit is truth, (v. 6.) He that believeth in the Son of God hath the witness in himself, (ver. 10.) Now when men thus lay claim in their epistles to their converts to the power of God co-operating with them in the promotion of the faith, declaring, that he testified to the truth of what they preached by divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost; when they confidently speak of an unction of the Spirit of truth abiding in them, of which they to whom they write were made partakers, and by this very argument endeavour to convince them what a dreadful thing it would be for them to despise the admonitions they had given, or to neglect the great salvation they had tendered to them; there can remain no cause of doubting of the truth of these assertions, especially when they to whom they write not only do continue steadfast in the faith, but also do admit those writings which assert these things, as Divine records, and the word of God.

And this argument will be much strengthened from this consideration, that the primitive professors, in all the conflicts with Jews, gentiles, magicians, false prophets, heretics, and false pretenders to be the successors of the apostles, still used this argument from the miraculous operations the Christians then performed, and the gifts of the Holy Ghost they still received and exercised, as an effectual confirmation of the Christian faith, and a sufficient confutation of the pretences of their adversaries; v. g.

First, From this they prove to the Jews, that God had deserted them, and was now graciously present with the Christian assemblies; that the Schechinah and prophetic gifts,* which were long since departed from them, were still extant among Christians, and exercised both by men and women.

Secondly, Hence they triumph over the heathen deities,† that by the name of Jesus such cures were wrought on the diseased, as none of their supposed deities could perform; and that they by this name expelled those devils which their conjurors could not expel, and forced them to confess they were evil spirits.

Thirdly, They triumph over the Simonians* and gnostics, the magicians and heretics of their times, by the same arguments, that they could neither cure all diseases, nor expel all kinds of devils, as the Christians did.

Fourthly, By this they, after the example of St. Paul, 1 Cor. xii. 3. and of St. John, 1 John iv. 1—3. taught Christians to distinguish† betwixt true and false prophets; and by this they confuted the Montanists, because they left no succession of prophets, which yet continued in the true church of Christ. Some heretics finding themselves unable even to pretend to such a gift of prophecy as the Gospel of St. John had promised, and the Epistles of St. Paul mentioned, rejected both that Gospel and those Epistles. Now these, saith Irenæus,‡ are unhappy men, "qui gratiam prophetiæ repellunt ab ecclesia," who go about to exclude the grace of prophecy from the church, and thereby make themselves false prophets, i. e. assertors of things in God's name which they have not received from him.

Lastly, As for the true successors of the apostles, Irenæus§ informs us, that "cum successione apostolatûs charisma veritatis certum secundùm beneplacitum patris acceperunt," with their succession they received the gift of truth; and hence infers, that "ubi igitur charismata Domini posita sunt, ibi discere oportet veritatem," where therefore these gifts of the Lord are placed, there the truth is to be learned.

Arg. 3. §. V. The prayers and the thanksgivings made for these Divine assistances, the charges the apostles gave concerning them, the exhortations and directions which they send to Christian governors and churches, touching these gifts and operations of the Holy Ghost, are a convincing demonstration that they were frequent, and notoriously exercised in the church of God. For instance, I thank my God (saith the apostle to the church of Corinth) for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ, that in every thing ye are enriched by him in all utterance and all knowledge (or in tongues and prophecy), so that ye come behind the other churches in no gift. (1 Cor. i. 5—7. see the note there.) He begins his Epistle to the church of Ephesus thus: Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly things in Christ: (Eph. i. 3. see the note there.) praying that the same God would give to them the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him, (ver. 17.) He prays for the Romans, that they may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost, (xv. 13.) and for his Colossians, that they may be filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding, (i. 9.)

Having convened the Asiatic bishops, he requires them to take heed to the flock over which the Holy Ghost had made them overseers. (Acts xx. 28.) To the church of Rome he speaks thus: Having therefore, χαρίσματα διάφορα, different gifts, whether prophecy, let us do it according to the proportion of faith; or ministering, let us wait on our mi- nistering; or he that teacheth, on teaching, Rom. xii. 6—8. (See the note there.) He exhorts the Ephesians and Colossians to be filled with the Spirit, speaking to themselves in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, Eph. v. 18, 19. Colos. iii. 16. Two of his admonitions to his Thessalonians are conceived in these words, Quench not the Holy Spirit, despise not prophecy, 1 Thess. v. 19, 20. To his son Timothy he speaks thus: Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, 1 Tim. iv. 14. And in his Second Epistle, Stir up the gift that is in thee by the putting on of my hands, i. 6. for, saith he, God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, love, and wisdom, ver. 7. He exhorts him also to keep the good thing committed to him by the Holy Ghost that dwelleth in him, ver. 14. Now, in these Epistles he speaks of himself as a prisoner and a sufferer for the cause of Christ, saying, Be not thou ashamed of the testimony of the Lord, nor of me his prisoner; he tells him, he was ready to be offered, and the time of his departure was at hand; informs him, that Demas had forsaken him, and desires him when he came to him to bring Mark with him, 2 Tim. i. 8. ii. 8. 10. iv. 6. 10—12. He speaks of Hymenæus and Alexander, whom he had delivered up to Satan, and saith, These things I write unto thee, hoping to come to thee shortly, 1 Tim. i. 20. iii. 14. All which are evident proofs that these Epistles must be sent to Timothy, whilst St. Paul was living and was a prisoner at Rome. St. Peter advertiseth the converted Jews that the gospel was preached to them by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; and he gives these instructions to them for the use of their extraordinary gifts: As every man hath received the gift, so let him minister, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God; if any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; if any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth, that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ, 1 Pet. iv. 10, 11. Now the messenger by which he sent this Epistle, and the salutations in the close of it, shew that it was written whilst St. Mark and Sylvanus were living.

But the great scene of these directions and admonitions lies in the First Epistle to the Corinthians, where he exhorts them to covet earnestly spiritual gifts, but chiefly that of prophecy, 1 Cor. xiv. 1. to covet to prophesy, and forbid not to speak with tongues, ver. 39. Moreover, he directs them in the due exercise of these spiritual gifts after this manner: Forasmuch as ye are zealous of spiritual gifts, seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church, ver. 12. Wherefore let him that speaketh in an unknown tongue pray that he may interpret, ver. 13. And again, If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at most by three, and let one interpret; but if there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the church, ver. 27, 28. Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the others judge, ver. 29. If any thing be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace: for ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted, ver. 30, 31. In the same chapter he chides them for using these spiritual gifts without profit to the hearer, and so as to breed confusion in the church. How is it (saith he), brethren, that when you come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation? Let all things be done to edifying, ver. 26. declaring, that by using tongues not understood in the assembly, they would give to the infidel and unbeliever occasion to say they were mad, ver. 23. But if all prophesy (saith he), and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all; he is judged of all: and thus are the secrets of his heart made manifest; and so falling down on his face, he will worship God, and report that God is in you of a truth, ver. 24, 25. So notorious are these gifts supposed to be, not only to the saint, but to the infidel, and so powerful for his conversion. Now had these great apostles given thanks for gifts conferred upon these churches which they never had enjoyed; had they exhorted them to desire, and earnestly to covet, to stir up and excel in gifts they never had, and which were not imparted to any members of the church; had they given these grave directions and solemn charges, touching those gifts of prophecy and revelation of tongues, and the interpretation of them, which never had been exercised in that of Corinth, or any other Christian church; had they severely chid them for abusing those gifts they never had, and shewed themselves so much concerned to correct an abuse of which they were incapable, as having not the use of what they are supposed to abuse; had they condemned the murmurings of them who had them in a less, the boastings of them who had them in a higher measure, by such inquiries as these, What hast thou which thou hast not received? And if thou hast received (them), wherefore dost thou boast, as if thou hadst not received (them)? 1 Cor. iv. 7. (see the note there); and shewing the necessity that there should be such a diversity of gifts and operations in the body, 1 Cor. xii. 14—27. and done and said all this without a just foundation; this must have rendered those Epistles in which these passages are contained, the matter of their derision and disdain, rather than worthy to be owned as the oracles of God: and those apostles which indited them, must rather have been esteemed by them brainsick enthusiasts, than men inspired by the Spirit of God.

Since then these writings generally were received as Divine records by all Christians, and by those very churches to which they were indited, it must be certain, that in all these assertions they contain matter of unquestionable truth, and only spake of those spiritual gifts of which these churches had a full experience; there being, saith Clemens Romanus, in his epistle writ soon after to them, a full effusion of the Holy Ghost upon them all.

Arg. 4. §. VI. This will still be more evident, if we consider what Christianity the author and the propagators of it required of all that would embrace the Christian faith, and what were the encouragements they tendered as the chief inducements so to hope, believe, and act, or suffer, as Christianity required. And,

First, They call upon all Christians to take up the cross of Christ daily, and for his sake to forsake father and mother, wife and children, goods and relations, and even life itself, declaring that without this they cannot be Christ's disciples, Luke xiv. 26, 27. informing them, that all that will live godly must suffer persecution, 2 Tim. iii. 12. that through many tribulations they must enter into the kingdom of God, Acts iv. 22. that they were called to suffer, and were appointed to this very thing, 1 Thess. iii. 3, 4. 1 Pet. ii. 21. Accordingly we find that the Corinthians were partakers with them of their sufferings, 2 Cor. i. 7. that the Galatians had suffered many things, Gal. iii. 4. that to the Philippians it was given, not only to believe in Christ, but also to suffer for his sake, Phil. i. 29. that St. Paul commends the Colossians for their steadfastness in the faith under all their persecutions, i. 11. and prays they may be strengthened with all might, according to his glorious gospel, to all patience, and long-suffering, with joyfulness, ii. 5. He saith the Thessalonians suffered the same from their countrymen, as did the believing Jews from theirs, 1 Thess. ii. 14. that he sent Timothy to stablish and to comfort them concerning their faith, and to exhort them not to be moved at those afflictions to which they were appointed, iii. 34. adding, that he gloried in them in the churches of God, for their patience and faith in all their persecutions, 2 Thess. i. 4. In his Epistle to the Hebrews he saith, they suffered a great fight of afflictions, partly while they were made a gazing-stock, both by reproaches and afflictions, and partly whilst they became companions of them who were so used, and that they took joyfully the spoiling of their goods; and he exhorts them not to cast away their confidence, because they had need of patience, Heb. x. 32. 36. and after the example of that cloud of witnesses which he had set before them, to run their Christian race with patience, xii. 1. St. Peter tells the same believing Jews they were in heaviness for a season through manifold temptations, 1 Pet. i. 6. desiring them not to think it strange concerning the fiery trial which was come to try them, iv. 12. These tribulations they exhort them to endure with faith and courage, patience and perseverance, joy and triumph; and yet the only thing they offer them to raise this joy and comfort, engage them to this perseverance, and to support them under their fiery trials, is the promise, or the actual vouchsafement, of the Holy Ghost helping their infirmities, that as they were partakers of the sufferings of the apostles, so should they be also of their consolations, 2 Cor. i. 7. that if they suffered for the name of Christ, happy were they; for the Spirit of glory and of God should rest upon them, 1 Pet. iv. 14. This, say they, ye have found, for you became followers of the Lord, and of us, having received the word with much affliction, and with joy of the Holy Ghost, 1 Thess. i. 6. and may well suffer hardships as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, for God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but τῆς δυνάμεως, of courage, to endure, of that love which casts out fear, and of that prudence which will instruct us how to bear or to escape them. (2 Tim. i. 7.) Now if this promise was sensibly made good to them under these afflictions, they by it did receive an earnest of the truth of Christian faith, and an assurance of God's concern to comfort and reward their Christian patience in his cause. But if under these fiery trials they found no sensible experience of the Holy Ghost thus helping their infirmities, no inward joys, supports, and consolations of the promised Comforter, what reason had they to continue to take joyfully the spoiling their goods, the loss of credit, life, and all their worldly comforts, for the profession of that faith which had so palpably deceived them, in the chief motive which it offered, to engage them to suffer for the name of Christ, or for the truth and Divine authority of those Epistles which contained these apparent falsehoods?

This argument may be enforced from the consideration of the multitude of Christian martyrs in the three first ages of the church, all which could have no other motive thus to suffer, but this promised assistance of the Holy Ghost at present, and the assurance which this earnest of the Spirit gave them of an eternal state of happiness hereafter; and so if they had no experience of this assistance under sufferings, and no assurance of such an earnest of the Spirit in their hearts, must suffer all these dreadful things without just ground or motive, which even a heathen Cicero* doth represent as a thing impossible to be performed, the hardness of some Jewish zealots, and some deluded Christian sects, in suffering, being no instance to the contrary; for though they mistake the application of this future happiness, in prospect of which they thus endure, to themselves, the principle upon which they suffer is indisputably true, and owned even by Epicurus himself; "Ut voluptates omittantur majorum voluptatum adipiscendarum causâ, aut dolores suscipiantur majorum dolorum effugiendorum gratiâ," That we should part with our temporal enjoyments for a season here, for a better and more enduring substance, and suffer these light afflictions, which are for a moment, that we may escape more lasting and intolerable torments, this being only, saith Torquatus,† the choice which the wise men of Epicurus ought to make. In a word, the manner of their sufferings doth give us full assurance that the assistance of the Holy Ghost, which Christ and his apostles promised to the true believers, was accordingly vouchsafed to the Christian martyrs and confessors, they being enabled to bear the greatest sufferings, not only with undaunted courage, putting off the body, saith Origen,‡ more cheerfully than a philosopher would put off his coat; despising death, saith Lucian,§ and willingly submitting to it; but with great joy and exultation, being strengthened to all long-suffering with joyfulness, (Colos. ii. 5.) ‖ rejoicing in tribulations, counting it all joy when they fell into divers temptations, and happy when they did endure them, (James i. 3. 12.) and rejoicing when they were in heaviness through manifold afflictions: (1 Pet. i. 6.) yea, sometimes with ¶ miraculous experience of consolations under all their sufferings, causing this joy and gladness in them; and sometimes with a perfect freedom from all sense of pain under the most afflicting torments; as in the case of the evangelist St. John, and of Blandina,†† these sufferings not being able to extort from them one complaint or groan.‡‡

Now this being done as well by * children and the weakest sex, by the idiot as well as by the wisest sages, gives a full demonstration of the truth of that assertion of Eusebius,† That the love of Christ, the hopes of immortality, and the Spirit of the Father, inspired them with this courage; for what else could create such joys and exultations, or suggest such comforts and supports under the sharpest trials? What could procure to them a freedom from the sense of pain under the greatest torments and most intolerable burdens to flesh and blood?

Secondly, Again, they engage all Christians in the most difficult acts of self-denial and mortification of all carnal lusts, in the cutting off their right hands, and the plucking out their eyes; in patience under, and the forgiveness of, the greatest injuries; in love and charity to the worst of enemies, in temperance as to the pleasures and honours of this present life, in a deadness to the world, and the enjoyments of it, in piety, and purity, and heavenly-mindedness, because they cannot otherwise be Christ's disciples, cannot be worthy of him, (Matt. x. 37, 38.) they cannot enter into his kingdom, (Matt. xix. 23, 24.) but shall hereafter be denied and rejected by him. (Matt. x. 32, 33.) Now what could such threats signify to them who were not by his miracles, and by experience of the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, convinced that he was indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world? The encouragement they give them to be thus steadfast, immoveable, always abounding in the fear of the Lord, was only the promise of a future and unseen reward, chiefly to be enjoyed after the resurrection of the body, which to the sadducees among the Jews, and the whole race of heathen sages, seemed a thing incredible. It is therefore not to be imagined, that so many myriads of Christian converts should renounce all the pleasures of the flesh, all the gratifications of this present world, all their old rites, religions, customs, evil habits, submit to all this self-denial and mortification, only to be partakers of these unseen blessings after the resurrection, without a full assurance that they hereafter should enjoy them. Now the only assurance which the apostles and Holy Scriptures did afford them of this blessed resurrection and eternal happiness, was the miracles by which their doctrine was confirmed, the powers, gifts, and distributions of the Holy Ghost vouchsafed to them. After the dissolution of this body, we expect, say they, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens: we groan, desiring to be clothed with this house from heaven, that mortality may be swallowed up of life. Now he that hath wrought this hope within us, is that God who hath given us the earnest of the Spirit, (2 Cor. v. 1—5.) And again, the promises of God are all yea and amen, or sure and certain, in Jesus Christ; and he who hath established us with you, in expectation of them, is that God who hath anointed us, and sealed us, and given the earnest of his Spirit in our hearts; (2 Cor. i. 20, 21.) enabling us by the Spirit to wait for the adoption, even the redemption of the body, (Rom. viii. 23.) adding, that by the Spirit of adoption they were enabled to cry, Abba, Father; (ver. 15, 16.) that he bore witness with their spirits that they were the sons of God, the love of God being shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Ghost, which God had given them. (Gal. iv. 6.) Hence they continually declare, that after they believed, they were sealed with the Spirit of promise, which was the earnest of their inheritance till the redemption of the purchased possession; (Eph. i. 13, 14.) that by him they were sealed up to the day of redemption; (iv. 30.) that he was the earnest of their future inheritance; that they were not ashamed of their hope, they through the Spirit waiting for the hope of righteousness, (Gal. v. 5.) and abounding in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost. (Rom. xv. 13.) Hence he is styled by St. John, the witness of God within them, 1 John v. 10. and by this, saith he, do we Christians know, that God abideth in us, and we in him, even by the Spirit that he hath given us, iv. 13. By all which sayings it appears, that if these things were true, they to whom this assistance of the Holy Spirit was vouchsafed, must be very sensible of his dwelling and his acting in them; that they could plainly know they had this unction from the Holy One, and could be hence assured of the Divine affection to them, and of their future hopes and expectations, since otherwise he could be no such seal, pledge, and earnest to them, and no such witness of God within them, and no such confirmation of their faith, or token of the love of God: and if these things were false, and they had no such sensible experience of the good Spirit acting and abiding in them, if they found no such confirmation of their hopes from any inward testimony and outward operations of the Holy Ghost, they must not only have no certain ground or motive to assure them of that future recompence, which was the only reason which could induce them to embrace and to continue steadfast in the Christian faith, but must have a convincing demonstration that the whole doctrine of Christianity depended on a false suggestion of such a sensible and certain testimony of these future hopes, of which they never had, nor could have, any knowledge or experience; and that the apostles and first assertors of this faith had laid the whole foundation of their hopes upon a false and a precarious appeal to their own consciences, concerning that of which they had no knowledge or experience. And being once assured of this, that the great fundamentals of the Christian faith were bottomed on a confident appeal to their perception of those things, of which they who embraced this faith had yet not found the least experience, it is incredible to believe they should continue steadfast in and endure such continual persecutions for that faith, and should receive those very records as the word of God, which made these false appeals unto their conscience and experience.

§. VII. I think I have sufficiently made it appear, that these Epistles, which contain these things, must be indited whilst the apostles lived, and so they must be sent to those churches and persons to whom they are directed, at a time when all the members of those churches must be able to discern the truth or falsehood of what is thus asserted in them: yet, because the pretence that it might be otherwise, containeth the whole strength of scepticism, let it be farther noted;

First, That these Epistles from which these things are cited, one alone excepted, bear the names of the apostles, by whom they are supposed to be written: now had they

* "Pueri nostri et mulierculæ nostræ, cruces, et tormenta, feras, et omnes suppliciorum terriculas, inspirata patientia doloris illudunt." Minut. p. 42. Athenag. Legat. pro Christ. p. 12. A.

† Ἐκείνους μὲν γὰρ ἐπικούφιζει ἡ χαρὰ τῆς μαρτυρίας, καὶ ἡ ἐλπὶς τῶν ἐπηγγελμένων, καὶ ἡ πρὸς τὸν Χριστὸν ἀγάπη, καὶ τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ πατρικόν. Hist. Eccles. lib. v. cap. 1. p. 160. C.

not been really indited by them, this could not have been done by any, but he must put a cheat upon all Christians, and substitute his own inventions for the word of God.

Secondly, That all of them, excepting one, which is yet proved to be genuine in the preface to the Epistle to the Hebrews, have been delivered down unto us by the perpetual and uncontrolled tradition of the whole church of Christ, as the undoubted works of these apostles, and as the word of God. Moreover, it is apparent from the writings of St. Clement, St. Ignatius, Polycarp, Justin Martyr, Irenæus, that even from the apostles' days they have been cited, read, and generally received as such. Now this is a tradition more general, and of a firmer credit, than any other book, writing, charter, law, or statute whatsoever can pretend to. Consider,

Thirdly, That the tradition which concerns these books was a tradition concerning things of the highest moment, and which it was the interest of all Christians to be well assured of, these writings being at present the chief ground of their support under their sharpest trials, and of their future hopes; they therefore must be writings which they were concerned to get and keep, to hear and read. There were books written to whole churches and nations, yea, to all that called on the name of Christ Jesus in every place; who could not easily have received and yielded such a firm assent unto them, as we know they did, had the apostles, by whom they were converted, given no intimations of them. They were also books of the greatest opposition to the vain tradition of the Jews, and to the superstition of the heathens, to the false apostles and deceitful workers, and which denounced upon them the greatest plagues and judgments, which must oblige them narrowly to search into the flaws that could be spied in them, and, as much as possible, to labour to discover the falsehood or imposture of them; and yet these works were not denied by them to be the books of those apostles whose names they bear, though the apostles themselves, especially St. Paul, was persecuted by them with a restless malice, as an apostate from the law; and upon this account all his Epistles were rejected by those Jewish Christians, who maintained the necessity of the observance of the law of Moses: most of them also are writ about that very controversy, and against those very men who pleaded the necessity of circumcision, and of observing the whole law of Moses; which yet could be no controversy after the ruin of Jerusalem and the destruction of the temple, seeing that rendered the observation of the precepts of that law for the most part impossible. They were books which could not be spread abroad in the apostles' days, and in their names, unless the apostles had indited and sent them to these churches; or be esteemed as the great charters of the Christian faith, if the apostles were so forgetful of them as not to let those persons, for whose sake they were written, know it. They were books which pretended to a commission from the holy Jesus, to leave a rule of life and doctrine to mankind, which was intrusted only in the hands of the apostles, all others still pretending to deliver only what they received from them. They also were indited, partly to confirm the Christian faith, and to engage men to believe it; partly to put an end to the contentions, and rectify the errors which had crept into the church in the apostles' days, and needed speedy reformation; partly to justify themselves against false brethren, and to assert the truth of their apostleship; and partly to preserve their proselytes from such as did pervert the faith, and to instruct them how to bear up in fiery trials, and to support the souls of Christians under the miseries they suffered from a persecuting world: and therefore they were written on such grounds as did require a quick dispatch upon these errands to the churches for which they were intended; and so the apostles must be supposed to give early notice of them, and to divulge them to the Christian world, whilst they to whom they were committed were able to disprove them if they had been false.

Let us consider all the writings which pass for true authentic records in the world, and we shall find there is not any reason to conceive them such which is not with advantage applicable to these books.

The arguments which can be offered to prove a book or writing genuine, are only of two kinds; external, from the testimony of persons who lived near to the times of the author; and internal, from the things contained in and asserted by those writings, and the firm faith they obtained among them to whom they were directed and committed.

The external testimonies have their force partly from the number and the eminence of the testators, their nearness to the times when such a book is said to be written, or such a writing published by the original copies, preserved by those to whom they were at first committed, and from the general reception and citation of them as such writings and records.

Now as for these external evidences, no writings can compare with those Epistles I have mentioned, they having all the circumstances by which any writing can be proved genuine, and many others of great weight, which are peculiar to them, and which no other writing can pretend to. I say, they have all the circumstances to prove them genuine, which any other writing can pretend to. For,

First, Their originals were preserved in their respective churches till Tertullian's time; who speaks thus to the heretics of his age, or of the third century,* Go to the apostolical churches, where their authentic Epistles are still recited, representing the voice and face of each of them.

Secondly, They were not doubted of, but, as St. Clement† and Origen say, all that I have cited, excepting only the Epistle to the Hebrews, mentioned by St. Peter, were generally received by all orthodox Christians throughout the world.

Thirdly, The writers by whom they were cited, lived either in those times when they were written, as St. Clemens Romanus, or in the very next age, as Ignatius, Polycarp, Justin Martyr, Irenæus, and were therefore styled apostolical men.

Fourthly, They were very eminent both for their learning, and for their sufferings for the faith contained in them, or for their opposition to it, as Celsus was: now sure we have unquestionable certainty of such books as have been handed down to us by the tradition of all ages of the church, inserted into all her catalogues, cited by all her writers as books of a Divine authority, and by her very adversaries, preserved so long in their originals, and of which never any doubt was made by any genuine member of the church of Christ. I add,

Secondly, That there are many circumstances of great weight to confirm these testimonies, which are peculiar to these writings: as,

First, A general dispersion of them through those places which were converted to that faith which the apostles preached: for the apostles, saith Irenæus, first preached the gospel, and after, by the will of God, " in scripturis nobis tradiderunt," delivered it to us in the Scriptures, to be hereafter the pillar and foundation of our faith. (Lib. iii. cap. 1.) Eusebius saith, that the first successors of the apostles, leaving their countries, preached to them who had not yet heard of the Christian faith, and then delivered to them, as the foundation of their faith, τὴν τῶν θείων εὐαγγελίων γραφὴν, the writings of the holy evangelists. (Hist. Eccles. lib. iii. cap. 37.)

Secondly, The translation of them into other languages; that of the Syriac being so ancient that it leaves out the Second Epistle of St. Peter, and the Second and Third Epistles of St. John, and the Revelation, as being for a time controverted in some of the eastern churches: that of the Latin, styled in Jerome's time the old translation, and very probably made from the beginning of a settled church among them; for the Latin church could not be well without a Latin version, it being the custom of all churches to read these Scriptures on the Lord's-day; which sure they would not do in a language not to be understood by those that heard it.

Thirdly, The constant reading of them in public and in private, in their assemblies, and in their closets and families. On Sunday (saith Justin Martyr*) all the Christians in the city or country meet together, and then we have read unto us the writings of the prophets, and τὰ ἀπομνημονεύματα τῶν ἀποστόλων, the monuments of the apostles; and having read them, they did publicly† τὰς θείας ἑρμηνεύειν γραφὰς, expound them to the people: that they were also read by the most eminent and pious Christians every day, that‡ " discat unusquisque ex Scripturis sanctis officium suum," every one might learn his duty from the Holy Scriptures, we learn from the question in the Constitutions of St. Clement, § Whether a man ought the day after he had done the duties of wedlock, or been subject to any involuntary defilement, βιβλίου θίγειν, touch the book; and the declaration of St. Clement,‖ that the matrimonial duties should not be done, ὑπηνίκα εὐχῆς καὶ ἀναγνώσεως ὁ καιρὸς, when was the time of prayer, or reading of the Scriptures; and that the sacrifices of the true gnostic¶ were, εὐχαί τε καὶ αἶνοι, καὶ αἱ πρὸ τῆς ἐστιάσεως ἐντεύξεις τῶν γραφῶν, prayers and praises, and the reading of the Holy Scriptures before meals. And seeing Irenæus saith, that he who had a care of his salvation might read the form of his faith in the epistle of Polycarp to the Philippians; since that Epistle,†† and the epistle of St. Clement* to the church of Corinth, which were their genuine works; yea, the epistle of St. Barnabas,† and the book of Hermas,‡ which two were reckoned as apocryphal, were read publicly in many churches, doubtless they must be more concerned to read the undoubted writings of the apostles, which they esteemed the rule of faith, which they styled§ "libri deifici," books which transformed them into a Divine nature; which they looked upon as the records of their eternal interests, as books by which they must be judged at the last day, and according to which they should be punished or rewarded everlastingly.

Fourthly, The early perusal of them both by Jews and heathens, who writ against them, and did endeavour to destroy them, that so they might cause the Christian faith to perish, but never did deny them to be indeed the works of the apostles, whose names they bore: by Jews, for Trypho‖ speaks thus at least of the Gospels, The precepts contained in your Gospels are so great, that I suspect no man can keep them, ἐμοὶ γὰρ ἐμέλησεν ἐντυχεῖν αὐτοῖς, for I took care to read them. The Ebionites,¶ who also were Jews, rejected all the Epistles of St. Paul, as gathering from them that he was an apostate from the law of Moses. The heathens; for Celsus not only boasts that he knew all things belonging to the Christians, but often carps at the writings of the evangelists and of St. Paul. And indeed the Christians freely offered them to be perused by them: For that we may not seem to impose upon you (saith Justin Martyr to the Roman emperor), we offer to you some of the doctrines of Christ; and you, being emperors,†† may ἐξετάσειν, search whether we truly have been taught, and teach these doctrines. And again, The prince of evil spirits is by us called a serpent, Satan, and the devil, ὡς καὶ ἐκ τῶν ἡμετέρων συγγραμμάτων ἐρευνήσαντες μαθεῖν δύνασθε, as you may learn by searching into our writings.‡‡ Thou who thinkest we are not concerned for the safety of Cæsar (saith Tertullian§§), look into the words of God, " quas neque ipsi supprimimus, et plerique casus ad extraneos transferunt," which we do not suppress, and which many accidents bring into the hands of heathens. From their endeavours to destroy the Christian faith by burning these books, came the edicts of Dioclesian,‖‖ τὰς γραφὰς ἀφανεῖς πυρὶ γίνεσθαι προστάττοντα, commanding that the Scriptures should be committed to the flames, and the¶¶ actual burning of them where they could be found, and the tormenting of the Christians to deliver up the Scriptures.

Fifthly, The direful torments which the Christians chose to suffer, rather than they would desert the faith contained in these books, or deliver them up to their tormentors, and the infamy of those that did so, they being branded with the odious name of traditors. Now what writings in the world have been so generally dispersed, and so much perused by all sorts of persons, friends, foes, assertors of, and enemies to, the faith of Christians? What laws, or writings whatsoever, have been so early translated into other languages? Who were so much concerned to peruse them, as were all Christians to peruse the laws of Christ? Who suffered so much for them, as the Christians did? Since then this early reading of them in public, and in private, by the Christians, this general dispersion of them through all Christian churches, this quick translation of them into other languages, this constant suffering for them, are all corroborating circumstances of the unquestionable evidence all Christians had obtained that they were genuine works, and truly what they did pretend to be; it is also clear these writings are more worthy to be received as genuine, and writings of unquestionable truth, than any profane writings in the world.

§. VIII. The internal arguments, which usually are or can be offered to prove other writings genuine, are only taken from the things contained in them, that they were proper to the times in which the author was supposed to write, and from the freedom of them from any thing, which is not well consistent with those times, which are all mean and trifling things, compared to those internal arguments which these Epistles do afford; that they are the authentic records of those apostles whose names they bear, and that those things which they assert touching the gifts and powerful operations of the Holy Ghost, both exercised by them and conferred on other churches, were unquestionably true. For,

First, It is not once nor twice, it is not by the bye, but it is frequently, professedly, and upon all occasions, they refer to these miraculous powers and spiritual gifts, as yielding a full proof and confirmation of the testimony they gave of Christ, and that Christ was among them, and as a demonstration of the truth of their apostleship against all opposers, and of the preference of that faith which was attended with them, above the law, which some desired to observe; spending whole chapters in discoursing of these spiritual gifts, distinguishing them somewhat nicely into gifts, administrations, and operations; ranking them under nine several heads, and specifying the very names of those who did by office exercise them, and shewing the necessity there was of this variety of gifts and operations in the body, appealing to the senses, the consciences, and the experience of those to whom they wrote, touching the truth and certainty of what they had asserted touching those spiritual gifts, by such inquiries as these: What! know ye not that Christ is among you? 2 Cor. xiii. 5. Am I not an apostle? Surely I am so to you: for the seal of my apostleship are ye in the Lord, 1 Cor. ix. 1, 2. It is manifest you are the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God, 2 Cor. iii. 3. Surely the signs of an apostle have been wrought among you in all patience, in signs and wonders, and mighty deeds, 2 Cor. xii. 12. Have you received from the false apostles another spirit which ye have not received from us? xi. 14. This only would I learn of you, he that ministered to you the Spirit, and wrought miracles among you, did he it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye (desirous to be) made perfect in the flesh? Gal. iii. 3—5. Our gospel came not to you in word only, but in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance, as ye know what manner of persons we were among you, 1 Thess. i. 5. Which words are either plain inquiries upbraiding their doubtfulness and hesitation in so plain a case, or else appeals unto their certain knowledge of these things; nor is it to be wondered that they should make these confident inquiries and appeals, seeing the external miracles, and the internal gifts and distributions of the Holy Ghost, mentioned in those Epistles, were either such of which even infidels might from the nature of them be convinced, or such as, from some outward and sensible appearances and effects, or by their inward operations, made themselves known to them who heard and saw them. For instance, the working of miracles, the casting out of devils by the name of Jesus, and the healing the sick through faith in his name, the gift of prophecy, or foretelling things future, the discernings of spirits, the gift of tongues, and the interpretation of them, if truly done, were things self-evident, and could not well be exercised without a sensible demonstration to all that saw, perceived, heard, or felt them, that they were performed; and therefore God, by assisting the apostles, and by enabling others to perform them, must give full testimony to the word of his grace: and the apostles, by this constant appeal to them as to things which their own eyes had seen, and their consciences bore witness to, and they in person had performed, must appeal to the senses and experience of those to whom they writ in matters subject daily to their experience, and to the senses of the members of those respective churches, touching the truth of their apostleship, and of the confirmation they pretend to have given of it. Now, as it seemeth highly incredible that persons able to write the deepest mysteries and the exactest precepts of morality, should be so foolish as to confirm them only by an appeal to the senses and experience of those very men of whom they were assured that they had never seen or done, or found the least experience of any of the things they mentioned; so is it still far more incredible, that an appeal of such apparent falsehood made to the consciences of men, who never saw these miracles, or found these comforts of the Holy Ghost, and never had these gifts of tongues, interpretation, healings, prophecy, which these Epistles tell us were their daily exercise, should embrace these very Epistles as Divine, these records as the word of God. And yet we know both they and other churches did thus actually esteem them, and receive them as such, and therefore must be well assured, that what they thus asserted of the gifts of the Holy Ghost, were things confirmed to them by their own senses and experience.

Secondly, Add to this, that these men, in these very writings, confidently say, that this was their rejoicing, even the testimony of their conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity they had their conversation in the world, and more abundantly towards them, 2 Cor. i. 13. and that they writ no other things than what they did acknowledge, and they trusted would acknowledge to the end, v. 11. We are (say they) made manifest to God, and we trust also we are made manifest in your consciences, v. 11. They represent it as a great absurdity, that they should be found false witnesses of God, 1 Cor. xv. 15. They distinguish themselves from others they call false apostles and deceitful workers, by this very character of their sincerity. For we (say they) are not as many, who corrupt the word of God; but as of sincerity, as of God, in the sight of God speak we in Christ,

2 Cor. ii. 17. We have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully, but by manifestation of the truth, commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God, iv. 2. yea, for this they appeal to the searcher of all hearts, and to the consciences of those to whom they write, saying, Our exhortation was not of deceit, or guile: for neither at any time used we flattering words, as ye know; nor of men sought we glory, neither of you, nor yet of others: ye are witnesses, and God also, how holy, and justly, and unblamably, we behaved ourselves among you that believe, 1 Thess. ii. 3. 5, 6. 10. Now with what face could these things be asserted by men, who knew that they, in these Epistles, had told such things as even the senses and experience of those to whom they wrote must know to be the greatest falsehoods? Or how could they to whom they wrote give credit to such impudent untruths as these must be, if the relations which they made of these miraculous operations of the Holy Ghost had been fictitious things? This therefore is a farther evidence of their sincerity and truth in these relations.

Thirdly, Let us consider how the apostle treats those churches of Corinth and Galatia, in which he speaks most copiously of these operations of the Holy Ghost, and how they stood affected to the apostle Paul. The Corinthians, in his first chapter, are represented as schismatical; in his third, as carnal; in the fifth, as glorying in an incestuous person; in the sixth, as contentious, to their own shame, and to the scandal of Christianity; in the eighth, as murderers of them for whom Christ died; in the tenth, as murmurers, tempters of Christ, fornicators, idolaters, partakers of the table of devils; in the eleventh, as coming to the Lord's supper, not for the better, but the worse, offending in it both against the rules of charity, and temperance, and faith, in not discerning the Lord's body; in the twelfth and fourteenth, as guilty of emulations, schisms, and contentions, touching spiritual persons, and of vain-glory, scandal, and confusion in the exercise of their spiritual gifts; and in the fifteenth, as deniers of that resurrection, which was the great foundation of all the future hopes of Christians. In his Second Epistle he declares his fears that he might find among them debates, envyings, wrath, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings; and that he should find among them many who had not yet repented of the uncleanness, fornication, and lasciviousness, which they had committed, 2 Cor. xii. 20, 21. And for these things, if not reformed, he threatens he would use sharpness, and come to them with a rod, 2 Cor. x. 6. xiii. 2. He charges the Galatians with apostacy, admiring that they were so soon removed from him that called them to another gospel, i. 6. and represents them as foolish and bewitched for falling from that gospel, by which they had received these spiritual gifts, to the beggarly elements of the law, iii. 1. 5. Now how could the Corinthians be guilty of such emulations about spiritual persons, or such disorders in the exercise of their spiritual gifts, provided there were among them no such persons, and they had no such gifts? How could they fear the lashes of his rod, on the account of crimes of which they neither were nor could be guilty? Why should they not be rather for Cephas or Apollos, than for Paul, if Paul imposed upon them with false stories, and sensible untruths? Or why should not the Galatians even quit that gospel in which he endeavoured to confirm them only by an appeal to that which they must know to be a lie?

Moreover, the affections of the members of these churches were not so firm to him, their esteem of him was not so great, as that he might securely lessen it by venturing on these arts of falsehood, for he found some of his Corinthians puffed up against him, and preferring others much before him, (1 Cor. iv. 18.) charging him with lightness and inconstancy, (2 Cor. i. 17.) and walking according to the flesh, (x. 2.) looking upon him as a man too much transported, and almost besides himself, (2 Cor. v. 13.) as base in person, and in speech contemptible: (x. 10.) he complains, that they were straitened in their bowels of affection towards him, and that the more he loved them, the less he was beloved by them, (2 Cor. xii. 15.) that they questioned his apostleship, and even sought a proof of Christ speaking in him, (xiii. 3.) He represents the Galatians as men who questioned his apostleship and doctrine, or at least thought him much inferior in both to others, chap. i. and in the second, as supposing he dissembled with them, and elsewhere preached himself that circumcision he condemned in them, v. 11. yea, who looked upon him as their enemy, and were even ready to exclude him, iv. 16, 17. Now under these circumstances could he hope to repair his credit with them, and to establish his apostleship they questioned, by an appeal to and a relation of such things as both their senses and experience knew to be manifest untruths? But,

Fourthly, Could it be supposed that these churches were so stupid and insensible, that they did not, or so partially affected to these apostles, that they would not, take notice of these things? These Epistles inform us of other subtle and industrious adversaries, men zealous to oppose, and to adulterate the gospel which he preached, and desirous to find occasions to depress and lessen the promoters of it, and to advance themselves above them. (2 Cor. x. 12. xv. 11, 12.) St. Paul complains, that the Corinthians had among them false apostles, and deceitful workers, who transformed themselves into the apostles of Christ, when in truth they were ministers of Satan, 2 Cor. xi. 13. 15. men who corrupted the word of God, ii. 17. and sought to corrupt them from the simplicity that is in Christ, xi. 3. That among the Galatians there were evil agents, who troubled them, and would pervert the gospel of Christ, i. 7. false brethren, who come in privily to spy out their liberty, ii. 4. men that desired to exclude the apostles, that they might be affected by them, iv. 17. men who constrained them to be circumcised, and observe the law, and yet keep it not themselves, but only did this lest they should suffer persecution for the cross of Christ, vi. 12, 13. wishing they were cut off who did thus trouble them, v. 12. The like he saith, Phil. i. 15, 16. iii. 18. Colos. ii. 4. 8. 19, 20. 1 Tim. i. 5, 6. vi. 3—5. 2 Tim. ii. 17—19. iii. 5. 8. Tit. i. 10, 11. Now if he himself were a vain talker, and deceitful worker, one who endeavoured to impose upon them with false tales, with what face could he object those things to others of which he was himself so guilty? Or how could they whom he so confidently doth accuse as guilty of these things, neglect this obvious reply to such an accusation, that he himself, in his appeal to the miraculous operations of the Holy Ghost, for confirmation of his doctrine and apostleship, had done the very thing he laid to their charge? We have no reason to suspect that all, or any of these adversaries neglected any pains or diligence to search into the truth of what St. Paul thus offered to confirm his doctrine, and magnify his office; and to vindicate himself from the aspersions which they cast upon him. Since then we never find the truth of these relations questioned by any of those Jews, who so insatiably thirsted for his blood, or by those Judaizing Christians, those of the circumcision, who so vehemently inveighed against his doctrine, his person, and his office; and since we are assured by the event, that if they ever made any such attempts they all proved ineffectual, and insufficient to impair the credit of those writings in the Christian world; it may be certainly concluded, that these Epistles could not be convinced of falsehood, but contained matter of unquestionable truth in these assertions touching the powerful operations of the Holy Ghost.

Lastly, Let us consider what the apostles suffered for this testimony, and what it cost them to propagate this faith throughout the Christian world, and in what tragical expressions they are set forth in Scripture; God (saith St. Paul) hath set forth us the apostles last, as it were appointed to death, for we are made a spectacle to the world, to angels, and to men. Even to this present hour we both hunger, and thirst, are naked, and buffeted, and have no certain dwelling-place; and labour, working with our hands. Being reviled, we bless; being persecuted, we suffer it: being defamed, we entreat: we are made as the filth of the world, and the off-scouring of all things to this very day, 1 Cor. iv. 9. 11—13. that they died daily; or stood in jeopardy of it every hour, 1 Cor. xv. 31. that they approved themselves as ministers of Christ in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labours, in watchings, in fastings, 2 Cor. vi. 4, 5. We were (saith he) pressed above measure, beyond strength, insomuch that we despaired of life, 2 Cor. i. 8. and in the eleventh chapter he gives such a dreadful account of his own afflictions as can scarcely be read without trembling. Now by what motive could they be acted in the publication of that faith, for which they suffered all that wit and malice could inflict upon them, but the conviction of the truth of what they published; seeing they actually lost all in this, and could expect no blessings in another world for calling God to witness to a lie? The moralists assure us, that it is impossible for men to act without appearance of some good to be pursued by that action; that love of life, and a desire of self-preservation, is common to us with the brutes, and it is as natural both for them and us to avoid misery and torments: if then the apostles did actually abandon all the enjoyments and expectations both of this and of a better life, and wilfully subject themselves unto the worst of misery and torments, in propagation of a testimony from which they could expect no profit or advantage, they must be even bereft of common sense, renounce the natural instincts of mankind, and be in love with misery and ruin. I confess, it is possible for men to lay down their lives for false opinions, provided they believe them true; but if the apostles were guilty of any cheat at all in this matter, they must be guilty of a known imposture, and so must sacrifice their lives for falsehood, i. e. for that from which they could expect no good at all; which seems so inconsistent with the common principles of reason and self-love, that nothing can be more incredible.

And this, I hope, may be sufficient to convince any reasonable person that these Epistles must be written whilst the apostles lived, and be their genuine writings, and then the truth of what they do so copiously assert concerning the miraculous gifts and operations of the Holy Ghost, vouchsafed to the believers of those times, cannot be reasonably contested.

First, From a particular consideration of the gifts they mention.

Secondly, From the reason we have to believe that these extraordinary gifts were equally conferred upon all other Christian churches, as upon those which the apostles mention in their Epistles, and also were of a lasting continuance among them.

First, From a particular consideration of the miraculous operations and the gifts they mention. Now they were of two sorts:

The healing of the sick, and the curing of the lame, blind, and maimed, the raising of the dead, the ejecting of devils out of men, and from their oracles and temples; which being performed by the apostles and primitive professors of Christianity upon others, I style outward operations.

Or else those inward gifts by which the understanding was enlightened, and was enabled to discern that which their natural powers could not reach, as, the gift of speaking with unknown tongues, of prophecy, of discerning spirits. I begin with

The gift of healing the sick, and the diseased. Of which let it be noted,

First, That this gift was not confined to the apostles, but was conferred on the inferior clergy, and other members of the church indifferently: for amongst the gifts conferred upon the church, the apostle mentions χαρίσματα ἰαμάτων, those of healing, 1 Cor. xii. 9. and, ver. 29. they who exercised those gifts are reckoned after apostles, prophets, teachers, as being both distinct from them, and inferior to them; and ver. 30. the question is thus put, Have all the gifts of healing? St. James directs the sick and the diseased to the rulers of the church, with promise that the prayer of faith, joined with the holy oil, should heal the sick, James v. 14, 15. And this is by our Saviour promised as one of the signs that should follow them that believed in his name; They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover, Mark xvi. 18. This being therefore made as well the matter of a promise, as of their frequent prayers; had not these prayers been answered, and this promise verified, Christianity would have, in probability, been blasted by it.

Secondly, This gift continued frequent and notorious in the three first ages of the church, and the salutary influences of it were dispersed throughout the world. Soon after the destruction of Jerusalem, the Christians, saith Epiphanius,* returned from Pella, σημεῖα μέγαλα ἐργαζόμενοι ἰάσεων, working great miracles of healing. Amongst the operations of the Holy Ghost conferred at baptism upon the converts of his time, Justin Martyr† enumerates, τὸ τῆς ἰάσεως, the gift of healing. Irenæus‡ proves the certainty of our Lord's resurrection, from those miracles which his disciples performed still in his name: For some of them (saith he) cast out devils, others heal those that are diseased, and even now the dead have been raised, and continue with us many years. The spirits of many dead men have returned again, and the man hath oft been given to the prayers of the saints, the whole church of that place requesting it with prayer and fasting.—Even to this day (saith Origen*), there remain footsteps of that Holy Spirit, who appeared in the shape of a dove among the Christians; for ἐξεπάδουσι δαίμονας, καὶ πολλὰς ἰάσεις ἐπιτελοῦσι, they cast out devils, and perform many cures. And again,† Even now the name of Christ exempts men from ecstasies, scares away δαίμονας ἤδη δὲ καὶ νόσους, devils and diseases. Some footsteps and remainders of the miracles which Christ performed ‡ ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις καὶ μέχρι νῦν γίνεται, are to this day done in the church by the name of Jesus. And, lastly, to that inquiry of Celsus, What magnificent work hath your Jesus done? he answers,§ This is one magnificent work, that μέχρι σήμερον, even to this day his name doth heal diseases. Now of the truth of what they thus deliver, they pretend,

First, To be themselves eye-witnesses. We can produce (saith Origen ‖) a vast number of Greeks and barbarians who believe in Christ; some of whom, as a token of the power of that faith they have embraced, heal diseases by invocation of the name of God and Christ: καὶ ἡμεῖς ἑωράκαμεν, and we ourselves have seen many delivered by these things from dangerous symptoms, ecstasies, and madness, and ten thousand other evils which neither men nor devils could exempt them from.

Secondly, They call the God of heaven to witness to the truth of what they say: We have seen many such things (saith Origen¶), being present, and beholding them with our eyes, which should we write, the heathens would laugh at them as things feigned, ἀλλὰ γὰρ Θεὸς μάρτυρ τοῦ ἡμετέρου συνειδότος, but God is witness to my conscience, that I do not endeavour by false testimonies to commend the doctrine of Christ.

Thirdly, They appeal to the testimonies of their very enemies. For thus Tertullian speaks to Scapula, a judge in Carthage: All these things may be suggested to thee from thy office, and the advocates of it, who have received these advantages from Christians; for the notary of one, the child and kinsman of another, have been freed by us from devils: "Et quanti honesti viri (de vulgaribus enim non dicimus) aut à dæmoniis, aut valetudinibus remediati sunt?" And how many honourable men (for we speak not of the vulgar) have been delivered from devils or diseases by the Christians? It was Proculus (saith he), the Christian, that healed with oil Evodus; which so ingratiated him to Severus, that he kept him in his palace to his death. And,

Lastly, By this very argument they triumph over the like attempts of heretics and heathens, who pretend to do these things by magic, or that their gods performed the same. 1. Over those heretics, who, knowing these miraculous cures were frequently performed by the orthodox, were forced to pretend the like. Thus Irenæus comparing the miracles of Christians with the magical operations of Simon Magus, Carpocrates, and others of that gang: This (saith he*) is sufficient to confute them, that they can neither give sight to the blind, nor hearing to the deaf, nor cure the weak, the lame, the paralytic, nor those that are diseased in any other part of the body; which yet (saith he) was often done by Christians to the benefit of the heathens. 2. Over the like pretences of the heathens, who boasted that † πολλαὶ σωμάτων πηρώσεις ἰάσθησαν, that their gods did many cures, that they gave ‡ "morbis medelam, spem afflictis, opem miseris," medicine to the diseased, hope to the afflicted, help to the miserable; and that their gods had often cured § "multorum hominum morbos valetudinesque," the diseases of many. For to this they do not only answer, by saying they had no assurance that their demons, however courted by them, could heal the infirmities of human bodies, as Origen ‖ replies to Celsus; and that if they had any thing of this kind, it was only by applying medicines, and directing them to such meats, such potions, and such juices of herbs, that is, saith Arnobius, by shewing the skill of a physician rather than the power of a god: but that they could do nothing of this nature worthy to be named with that which Christ and his apostles did; he (say they) with a word commanded the blind to see, the lame to walk, and cured all diseases with a touch of his hand. Now, can you shew us any among all your magicians,¶ "consimile aliquid Christo millesima ex parte qui fecerit," who have done any thing in the least resembling Christ? Yea,  "Quid simile Dii omnes quibus opem dicitis ægris et periclitantibus latam?" What like to this have any of your gods, to whom you do ascribe the cure of the sick, performed? That whereas their gods could not transmit their supposed powers to others, our Jesus derived this power to the meanest, to rustics, fishermen, day-labourers, †† and did himself nothing which he gave not them also power to do: and that the name of Jesus restored them to perfect health, who were incurable by all the powers of human art, the assistance of the demons or of heathen deities. Seeing you have the confidence (say they) to bring the cures of heathen deities into contest with those of Christ, how many thousand shall we instance in, who have in vain repaired with supplications to all the temples of the gods; in vain have tired the ears of your admired Æsculapius? ‡‡ "Quid ergo prodest ostendere unum aut alterum fortasse curatos, cum tot millibus subvenerit nemo?" And what availeth it, to tell us of the good success of two or three, when the complaints of thousands receiving no help from them shew their want of power to assist the needy?

Let it be then considered, that the Christians, for three whole centuries together, healed many myriads throughout the world, who laboured under those diseases, which were incurable by all the arts of men and devils; that they made frequently the lame to walk, the deaf to hear, the blind to see, and sometimes raised the dead, by invocation of the name of Jesus; and we shall find just reason to conclude, This was the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes.

§. X. Secondly, Our Lord promised, that they who believed in him should cast out devils, which promise he performed with such a constant scene of glorious instances, and such amazing circumstances, if in this matter we may credit the primitive professors of, and martyrs for, Christianity, that it is not possible for any man to doubt the truth and certainty of the Christian faith, who does not look upon them as impudent untruths and lying legends. For,

First, Let us consider to whom this power was committed over this strong man armed, over these principalities, and the rulers of the darkness of this world. Our blessed Saviour having said, Behold, I give you authority over all the power of the enemy, great multitudes of Christians gave a continual demonstration of the truth of this prediction. For that our Lord was sent for the destruction of these evil spirits, καὶ νῦν ἐκ τῶν ὑπ' ὄψιν γινομένων μαθεῖν δύνασθε, you may now learn (saith Justin Martyr*) from what is done before your eyes; for many Christians throughout all the world, and in the very city of your empire, have healed many that were possessed of the devil, and still do they eject them by invocation of the name of Jesus, whom none of your enchanters, conjurers, or sorcerers, were able to expel. —Those Christians are not few (saith Origen†), who eject devils from them that are possessed with them, and this they do without all curious arts, or any sorcery or magic, only by prayers, and simple adjuration of them, ὡς ἐπίπαν γὰρ ἰδιῶται τὸ τοιοῦτον πράττουσι, for mostly this is done even by the meanest Christians, the grace assistant to the word of Christ demonstrating by this the devil's weakness; that to expel them from the soul or body of a man, there is no need of men of wisdom, or powerful in demonstration of the faith. Now (saith he‡) were not Christ of a Divine composition, the devils would not thus quit the bodies they possess at the bare invocation of his name. "Fidelis quisque dæmonibus imperat," Every Christian hath command over the devils, saith Clemens.§ Yea, such is the efficacy of the name of Jesus (saith Origen‖), ὡς ἔσθ' ὅτε καὶ ὑπὸ φαύλων ὀνομαζόμενον ἀνύειν, that it sometimes profits when it is used by wicked men, according to our Lord's prediction, that at the dreadful audit many should be rejected who could make this plea, in thy name we have cast out devils. (Matt. vii. 22.) It was sometimes efficacious even when used by them who were no followers of the holy Jesus; as in the instance mentioned by St. John, Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and we forbade him, because he followed not us; (Mark ix. 38.) and this gave courage to the Jewish exorcists, the sons of Sceva, to adjure evil spirits by the name of Jesus. (Acts xix. 14.) And not the Jews ¶ only, but other enchanters also, saith St. Austin,  mixed the name of Jesus with their incantations.

Secondly, This name was efficacious against all evil spirits whatsoever, none of them being able to resist the power of it. Even now (saith Justin Martyr*), we who believe in Jesus, τὰ δαιμόνια πάντα καὶ πνεύματα πονηρὰ ἐξορκίζοντες, ὑποτασσόμενα ἡμῖν ἔχομεν, adjuring the whole herd of devils and malignant spirits, have them all subject to our power. And again, By the name of the Son of God, πᾶν δαιμόνιον ὁρκιζόμενον νικᾶται, καὶ ὑποτάσσεται, all kinds of devils, being adjured, are overcome, and brought into subjection.—It is evidently seen (saith Origen†), that by the name of Jesus ten thousand devils have been expelled from the souls and bodies of those who were possessed by them. On this account they triumphed over the heathen exorcists, that by the name of Jesus they expelled those devils, which none of their sorcerers, enchanters, or magicians (saith Justin Martyr ‡), could expel; and over all the heathen deities. Bring one possessed, mad, and raging (saith Lactantius§), to your Jupiter, or, because he is not skilful in those matters, bring him to Æsculapius, or Apollo; let both their priests adjure him in the name of their supposed deities, to quit his station, they in vain attempt it; but let the same devils be adjured in the name of the true God, and instantly they fly; "Quæ ratio est ut timeant Christum, Jovem non timeant?" Were this Jove any better than themselves, why do they fear our Christ, and not their Jupiter? And on the same account they triumphed over those heretics, which then appeared to corrupt the truth: for we by this (saith Irenæus‖) confound the heresies of Simon Magus; Carpocrates, and the whole tribe of these deceitful workers, that they cannot, "omnes dæmones effugare," expel all kinds of devils, but only such as are confederate with them, if they indeed do that. Consider,

Thirdly, That they expelled them not only out of men, but also from their temples, oracles, and altars. We are so far (saith Origen ¶) from worshipping of demons, that we expel them ἀπὸ τόπων ἐν οἷς αὐτοὺς ἱδρύκασιν, from the places where they are seated.—Go no more (saith Clemens of Alexandria, in his exhortation to the Greeks ), to your Castalian, or other fountains: all these prophetic streams are now dried up, and they are passed away with their own fables.—Divination and oracles (saith Strabo ††) were by the ancients much regarded; but now they are as generally neglected and contemned, the oracle at Delphos and at Hammon being wholly silent.—Not above one or two remains (saith Plutarch‡‡), the rest are wholly silent, or entirely desolate.—The spirit of the gods (saith the apostate Julian §§) comes now σπανίως μὲν καὶ ἐν ὀλίγοις, but rarely, and to very few. Thus are the very heathens forced, with Porphyry,‖‖ to confess the triumphs of our Jesus over their supposed deities. Nor did they only silence their oracles, and stop the mouths both of their priests and of those demons that inspired them; but they did open them, at the same time, to force them to confess, even before their priests and votaries, that they were evil spirits. This most men (saith Minutius*) know, and some of you, that all your demons, when they are forced out of bodies by our words and prayers, do with grief confess what they are, not belying their own filthiness, even in your presence; "ipsis testibus esse eos dæmones de se verum confitentibus credite," believe their testimony, when truly they confess themselves to be but devils.—All the dominion we have over them (saith Tertullian†), proceedeth from the name of Christ, and the commemoration of those things they are to suffer from him as their judge; this causeth them, at our command, to come forth of the bodies they possess, with great reluctance, and grief, and shame, when you are present: you who have credited their lies, believe them when they speak the truth of themselves, for none will lie to their disgrace, but for their honour; they are more to be believed who confess against themselves, than who deny for themselves.—These devils (saith Cyprian‡), being adjured by the true God, do instantly confess, and are compelled to come out of the bodies they possess; you may see them by our voice, and by the power of the invisible Majesty, as it were whipped and scorched, and as their torment doth increase, you may hear them howling, groaning, deprecating, confessing even in the audience of their votaries, whence they come, and when they will depart. In his epistles to Donatus, § this is made one property of a Christian, to force impure spirits to confess what they are, and to urge them by their powerful strokes to depart. Consider,

Fourthly, This was done not in Rome and Carthage only, and other cities of the chiefest note, but, as it is observed by Justin Martyr,‖ κατὰ πάντα τὸν κόσμον, throughout all the world, not only for some weeks or months together, but, as these records testify, from the first rise of Christians to the days of Constantine; for even about that time Lactantius ¶ speaks thus: As Christ himself, whilst he conversed with men, did with a word expel all kind of devils, "ita nunc sectatores ejus," so now his followers expel these filthy spirits by their Master's name, and by the sign of his passion. Eusebius adds, that εἰσέτι καὶ νῦν, even now he shews the virtue of his Divine power, by expelling wicked and hurtful devils from the bodies and the souls of men, only by mention of his name, ὡς αὐτῇ πείρᾳ κατειλήφαμεν, as from experience we have found. This they did,

Lastly, Say these authors, without the use of medicines or magical incantations, only by invocation of the name of Jesus, or by reciting the sacred books, saith Origen,†† without deceit, or without gain, saith Irenæus;‡‡ "sine præmio, sine mercede," without advantage or reward, saith Tertullian;§§ it being then conceived criminal to gain by such spiritual gifts, and contrary to that injunction of their Lord, Matt. x. 8. Freely ye have received, freely give. And truly to conceive these things were done by any medicines, or magical enchantments, is the greatest folly; for how should multitudes of mean and simple Christians arrive at such a skill in any of those arts, which neither Jew nor gentile, who had long exercised them, could attain unto, and which none of these numerous apostates or heretics which fell off from them in the times of persecution could discover, or instruct others to perform, or themselves exercise? And much less is it to be thought that Satan should assist them to build Christianity upon the ruins of his own kingdom, and to promote an interest as contrary both to his nature and designs, as is light to darkness. Moreover, that none might doubt the truth of these particulars;

First, They frequently appeal even to the senses of the very infidels. If you are willing (saith Justin Martyr*), καὶ νῦν ἐκ τῶν ὑπ' ὄψιν γινομένων ῥᾷον ὑμῖν πεισθῆναι, it is easy for you even now to be assured of these things with your own eyes. "Dictis non stetis, si oculi vestri et aures permiserint vobis," Disbelieve these things (saith Tertullian†), if your eyes and ears will suffer you to do so. Admirable are those words of Cyprian‡ to Demetrianus, a persecutor of the Christians, "Veni et cognosce vera esse quæ dicimus: Come and experiment the truth of what we say; and since thou sayest thou worshippest the gods, believe the gods thou worshippest; or, if thou wilt, believe thyself; for he that now dwells in thy breast, and holds thy soul in ignorance, shall in thy audience speak of thee; thou shalt see them entreating us whom thou entreatest, them whom thou fearest fearing us; thou shalt see them bound, and trembling under our hand, whom thou adorest as gods; sure this must be sufficient to confound thee in thy errors, when thou seest and hearest thy gods, at our command, instantly confessing what they are, and not daring to conceal their cheats in thy presence.

Secondly, They also appeal to their consciences; We expel devils out of men (saith Tertullian§), "sicut plurimis notum est," as very many know.—Most men are very well acquainted with these things (saith Minutius‖), "pars vestrum," and so some of you heathens are. They appeal,

Thirdly, To the confessions of the very devils, as hath been proved already from the testimonies of Tertullian, Minutius, Cyprian; and by this very argument Theophilus ¶ proves them to be evil spirits, that μέχρι τοῦ δεῦρο, even at this day being exorcised by the name of the true God, they confess themselves to be deceitful spirits. And,

Fourthly, They appeal to the effects produced upon the persons thus dispossessed, even their conversion by this means to the Christian faith. Some Christians (saith Irenæus) have the gift of casting out devils so firmly, and so certainly, ὥστε πολλάκις πιστεύειν αὐτοὺς ἐκείνους καθαρισθέντας ἀπὸ τῶν πονηρῶν πνευμάτων, that many times they who are healed, and delivered from these evil spirits, believe, and do continue in the church. "Hæc denique testimonia Deorum vestrorum Christianos facere consuèverunt," These testimonies of your gods do oft make Christians (saith Tertullian††);

believing them, we believe in Christ, they advance the credit of our writings, and build up our hope; for you worship them even with the blood of Christians, they therefore would not lose such profitable votaries, lest turning Christians, you should, with us, expel them, " si illis, sub Christiano volente vobis veritatem probare, mentiri liceret," if they durst lie to a Christian attempting to confirm you in the truth. Lactantius,* accounting for the multitude of Christians, saith, this is no small reason of it, that the devils being cast out by Christians, " omnes qui resanati fuerint, adhærent religioni cujus potentiam senserunt," they who are healed, embrace that faith whose benefit and power they have felt.

Fifthly, They encourage others to embrace the Christian faith, by promising to them this power of ejecting devils, when they should cordially embrace it. Be ye baptized (saith Clemens†) in the name of the most holy Trinity; and then, if you believe with an entire faith, and with true purity of mind, " etiam ex aliis vos malignos spiritus effugetis, et dæmones," you shall expel impure spirits and devils out of others, and free men from diseases; for the devils know and own those who have given up themselves to God, and sometimes at their very presence are cast out; we exhort you therefore to be of our religion, and we assure you that when you do advance to the same faith and innocence of life with us, " erit par vobis atque eadem etiam contra dæmones potestas," you shall obtain like power over the evil spirits.

Lastly, They offer upon pain of death, and all that could be dear to them, to make this experiment before the eyes of heathens, i. e. not only to eject those very demons they invoked, but even to force them to confess they were cheats, and own themselves to be but devils. I come now (saith Tertullian‡) to the demonstration of the point, " Edatur hic aliquis coram tribunalibus vestris," Let any one be placed before your tribunals who manifestly is possessed by the devil, being commanded by any Christian to speak what he is, he shall as certainly truly confess himself to be a devil, as elsewhere he doth falsely profess to be a god; produce any of them who profess to be inspired by any of your gods, " nisi se dæmones confessi fuerint, Christiano mentiri non audentes, ibidem illius Christiani procacissimi sanguinem fundite," if they do not confess themselves to be devils, not daring to lie to a Christian, let the blood of that malapert Christian be shed before you in that very place. What is more manifest than this experiment, more faithful than this proof? Here is plain evidence laid before you, whose virtue will assist itself; here can be no suspicion; even say, that magic, or some such fallacy, is imposed upon you, if your eyes and ears will permit you.

All this we have delivered upon certain knowledge, and confirmed to us with the highest attestations, by men of greatest wisdom, to distinguish betwixt truth and falsehood, and so discern matters of real fact from vain impostures; by men of that sincerity and undisguised piety, as renders their veracity, in matters subject to their senses and their experience, incontestable; by men who suffered all that is terrible to human nature, for the profession of a faith whose truth depended on the certainty of these events, and which, in this world, called for continual acts of self-denial and austerity, and the renouncing all that tends to gratify the sensual appetite, only for the enjoyment of inward and spiritual pleasures here, and of celestial joys hereafter. Again, all this is said in their discourses directed to heathen emperors and judges, or to the heathen world, partly to mitigate their hatred of them, and their severities against them, and partly to engage them to embrace the Christian faith, which sure no person of sincerity would, no men of wisdom could attempt by such untruths as might be easily detected by them: for could they boast of their continual triumphs over Satan's kingdom throughout all the world, and send the heathens to Rome and Carthage, and other famous cities, to be convinced of the truth of what they said: would they talk of the multitude of converts they had made to the Christian faith by dispossessing men of devils, or forcing evil spirits in their presence to confess they were but devils: would they encourage others to embrace the Christian faith, by promise of like power when they did cordially believe and practise suitably to it: would they appeal to the senses, to the ears and eyes, to the conscience and experience of their most spiteful adversaries: would they provoke them to make the experiment of the truth of what they said with the hazard of their lives, and even encourage them to shed their blood, if, upon trial, they should fail of the performance: or could they by such means as these prevail upon the world, and daily gain new proselytes, had not the evidence of truth confirmed their sayings? And if in these assertions they speak the words of truth and soberness, they give the clearest evidence of the power of that Jesus whose name so mightily prevailed over the host of these infernal legions. For is it reasonable to conceive these devils, without constraint from a superior power, should not only quit the power they so long had exercised over the bodies and the souls of them who worshipped them as gods; but also should confess so oft, even in the presence of their votaries, at the command of them who sought the ruin of their kingdom, and used their confessions to that purpose, that they were evil spirits? or could the name of Jesus, without the power to which he pretended, have been so great a terror and a torment to them, or be thus efficacious even in the mouths of wicked men, and those who followed not him, had not this also tended to the confirmation of his power? Did ever any of the heathen jugglers, with all their arts of magic, extort such plain confessions from them? Did they thus force them to desert the bodies and the temples they possessed, and to exert their power to the ruin of themselves, and the amendment of those souls they had ensnared? This therefore being only done by our Jesus, or others in his name, demonstrates his Divine commission.

Obj. Against this signal demonstration of the truth of the Christian faith, the only cavil which the infidels and sceptics raise, is this, that we find no mention of persons thus possessed with the devil among Jews or gentiles before our Saviour's advent; nor have we now experience of any such thing, either among Christians or in the heathen world, and therefore cannot easily believe it was so then, but rather, that the persons represented as demoniacs were only persons afflicted with some strange diseases, fits of the mother, convulsions, falling-sickness, madness, and the like.

Ans. 1. To this I answer, That were this granted, yet must this be a demonstration of the power of Christ, and of the truth of the Christian faith, that it enabled its professors every where, by virtue of the name and invocation of the holy Jesus, thus to heal all manner of distempers, which no physicians could cure by their art, much less by speaking of a word.

Secondly, Moreover, I have sufficiently confuted this cavil, by shewing that the Christians of those times ejected devils, not only out of men, but also from their temples, oracles, and altars; and that so signally, that even the best historians of those ages, though by religion heathens, and some of them professed enemies of Christianity, are forced to confess their oracles were silent, and that Christianity had thus triumphed over their supposed deities; and also by shewing, that they forced these evil spirits to confess they were but devils. Besides, we find, both in the sacred records, and in the writings of those fathers, a constant and a plain distinction betwixt these two things, the curing diseases, and the casting out of devils; so Mark i. 34. He healed many that were sick of divers diseases, and cast out many devils, and suffered not the devils to speak, because they knew him; Matt. x. 1. He gave to the apostles power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness and diseases. The Christians, saith Irenæus,* truly cast out devils and heal the sick by imposition of hands. Ἐξαπῴδουσι δαίμονας, καὶ πολλὰς ἰασεις ἐπιτελοῦσι, They cast out devils and heal many diseases, saith Origen.† How many honest men have by us been healed, or freed from devils? is the inquiry of Tertullian.‡

Thirdly, The falsehood of the suggestion, that men possessed with evil spirits were not known among the Jews in former ages, appears from the plain testimonies of Josephus,§ who saith, that God taught Solomon this wisdom for the benefit of men; and that he left behind him those ways of exorcising demons, which so effectually expelled them, that they never entered into them more; and from that time to this hath that way of curing those who were possessed been very powerful. He also talks of a strange herb, or shrub, which being artificially pulled up,‖ τὰ καλούμενα δαιμόνια ταχέως ἐξελαύνει, presently expels devils. We also read in the Acts of seven sons of one Sceva, a Jew, who were exorcists, Acts xix. 13. and of their children casting out devils, Matt. xii. 27. And both Justin Martyr¶ and Irenæus inform us, that they did this before the time of our Saviour, by the invocation of the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

That among the heathens there were persons thus possessed, appears sufficiently by this, that otherwise the Christians could not have pretended to cast them out; and from the exorcists and magicians in every nation, of whom Plutarch†† saith, that they advised those who were possessed to repeat the Ephesian letters: and Lucian‡‡ mentions it as a thing known to all, that they had those who did dispossess demons. Justin Martyr§§ saith, the Jews exorcised them, τῇ τέχνῃ ὥσπερ καὶ τὰ ἔθνη χρώμενοι, using that art as the heathens did. The names of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, are used, saith Origen,* not only by the Jewish exorcists, Ἀλλὰ γὰρ χεδὸν καὶ πάντας τοὺς τὰ τῶν ἐπῳδῶν καὶ μαγειῶν πραγματευομένους, but almost by all that practise the art of magic or enchantment. So that it is certain that the history of Christ and his apostles casting out devils in Judea, and of the Christians casting them out throughout the world, was therefore never questioned by Jew or gentile, because they had among themselves in every place pretenders to it.

And if after the triumphs of the gospel there now continue among Christians no footsteps of this power of Satan, this is a testimony of the truth of what our Lord foretold, Now is the prince of the world cast out, John xii. 31.

§. XI. Of those internal gifts, which shew the power of the Holy Ghost engaged to promote the Christian faith,

First, That of tongues is most illustrious. This was a gift exceeding requisite to the speedy propagation of the gospel, which in the space of forty years was by our Lord's prediction, Matt. xxiv. 14. to spread itself throughout the world. And therefore it was daily exercised among the heathens to convert them, and by themselves, when they embraced the Christian faith; for the family, the friends, and kindred of Cornelius, received the Holy Ghost; and, to the amazement of the Jewish converts, spake with tongues, and magnified God, Acts x. 46. Upon the twelve disciples of the Baptist, the apostle lays his hands, and they receive the Holy Ghost, and speak with tongues, Acts xix. 6. St. Paul in his Epistle to the church of Corinth, saith, They were enriched with, and they abounded, ἐν παντὶ λόγῳ, in all tongues, 2 Cor. i. 5. (See the note there.) Among the gifts imparted to them, he reckons divers kinds of tongues, and the interpretation of them, 1 Cor. xii. 9. and puts the question to them thus, ver. 30. Do all speak with tongues? This he objecteth as their crime, that when they came together every one had his tongue, 1 Cor. xiv. 26. and adds, that if they thus continued to use this gift, it would breed confusion in their churches, and cause their auditors to say, That they were mad, ver. 23. Whence he adviseth them, who used these tongues, to pray they might interpret, ver. 23. permitting only two or three to speak with tongues in one assembly, and that by course, and with interpretation, ver. 26—28. imposing silence on them when no interpreter was present; and order, saith he, being thus observed, Let no man forbid to speak with tongues, ver. 39. And if this gift was so abundantly conferred upon that church, in which the apostle found so great miscarriages, and of which only he saith, They came behind the other churches in no gifts; we reasonably may suppose others, and better churches, had an equal share in this gift. Accordingly, we have heard (saith Irenæus, lib. v. cap. 6.) many brethren who have received the Spirit of God, καὶ παντοδαπαῖς λαλούντων διὰ πνεύματος γλώσσαις, and by that Spirit spake all languages.

And now, what can the unbeliever offer to invalidate the strength of this convincing demonstration? Will he ascribe this gift to the assistance of the devil? Let him produce one instance of like nature from any heathen writer, to shew that ever this was done by any besides Christians: or tell us, why that subtle spirit should thus concern himself to propagate and to confirm that faith, which bears the clearest opposition both to his nature and designs? Will they ascribe it to some fit of melancholy, or some distemper of the brain? What can be more absurd, than to assert, that at the preaching of a sermon, the rushing of a mighty wind, the laying on of an apostle's hands, or the baptizing of a person in the name of Jesus, such unaccountable diseases should seize on many thousands, and should enable them to speak a language they had never learned? Or, is it reasonable to think this distemper should be so peculiar to Christian constitutions, as that no other persons should pretend to it? and that it should wholly cease from them, when once the Christian faith had spread itself over all nations, Christians themselves never pretending that it lasted beyond the second century?

§. XII. The second internal gift, of which the Scripture maketh frequent mention, is that of prophecy; of which let it be noted,

That seeing the Jews, from the foundation of their church to the completion of the canon of the Old Testament, had a continual succession of prophets to instruct them in the mind of God; it seemeth highly requisite, that the like gift should for some season be conferred upon the church of Christ, which was not only to succeed, but highly to excel, the Jewish economy. Especially, if we consider, that their own prophet Joel had foretold, touching the times of the Messiah promised to the Jews, God would then pour his Spirit upon all flesh, and their sons and daughters should prophesy; (Joel ii. 18.) and also, that our Lord had promised to send the Spirit of truth to his disciples, to lead them into all truth, and to declare unto them things to come, (John xvi. 13.) and to send to the Jewish nation prophets and wise men; (Matt. xxiii. 34.) and some of these must be supposed to speak, when he engageth, that he that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet, shall receive a prophet's reward. (Matt. x. 41.) So that you see, the Christians had just reason to expect the spirit of prophecy should be again revived in their days, and plentifully conferred upon them; and that both Jew and gentile must have had sufficient cause to question the whole truth of Christian faith, had not this spirit of prophecy been found amongst them: and therefore of the completion of this promise, we are assured,

First, From the catalogue of Christian prophets, mentioned in the New Testament and ancient writers of the church. For Acts xi. 27, 28. mention is made of Christian prophets coming from Jerusalem; and of Agabus, who foretold the famine that happened in the days of Claudius Cæsar, as Josephus,* Suetonius,† and Dion testify.‡ In the thirteenth chapter, we are told of five prophets in the church of Antioch, who, whilst they were employed in the public ministry, received a Divine afflatus, commanding them to separate Barnabas and Saul, to some special work, to which the Holy Spirit had designed them, ver. 3. And xv. 32. we read of Judas and Silas, who, being prophets, exhorted the brethren with many words: and xix. 6. of twelve disciples, who when St. Paul had laid his hands upon them, spake with tongues and prophesied. In the Revelation of St. John, mention is made of Christ's servants, the prophets, xvi. 6. and of the blood of the prophets slain by the beast, xviii. 20. 24. and of the prophets his brethren, xix. 10. Eusebius* cites an ancient author, who speaks of Quadratus and others, as πνευματοφορηθέντες προφηται, inspired prophets, and who declared, that the prophetic gift continued still in the church. Moreover, as Joel had foretold, that in those days their daughters and their handmaids should prophesy; so we read in the history of the Acts, of four daughters of Philip the evangelist who did prophesy, Acts xxi. 9. in the Epistle to the Corinthians, of women prophesying, 1 Cor. xi. 5. and in the Ecclesiastical History, of Ammia† of Philadelphia, a prophetess.

In a word, there was not any church in which this gift of prophecy was not frequent. We read of prophets at Jerusalem, the mother of all churches, Acts xi. 27. in the church of Antioch, Acts xiii. 1. of the gift of prophecy in the church of Rome, Rom. xii. 6. in that of Corinth and of Thessalonica, 1 Thess. v. 20. and of spiritual persons in the church of Galatia, vi. 1. They are said to be placed in the church in general: For God (saith the apostle) hath set some in the church; first, apostles; secondly, prophets; thirdly, teachers: as therefore the apostles and the teachers, so did the prophets exercise their functions in all churches. They were given to the church for ends which equally concerned all their assemblies, Christ having given some apostles, some prophets, some evangelists, some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the works of the ministry, for the edifying the body of Christ, Eph. ix. 11, 12. Now these are ends in which all churches must be equally concerned, and therefore we have reason to believe, that as apostles, evangelists, and pastors, so prophets also were vouchsafed to them all.

Moreover, it seems evident, that at the first foundation of a Christian church among the gentiles, there were no settled pastors to perform the public offices in their assemblies; but they were generally performed by prophets, or by spiritual men, who had the gift of prophecy, or were in the assembly excited to that work by an afflatus of the Holy Spirit. To clear up this, let it be noted:

First, That as soon as any person then embraced the Christian faith, they received with it the gift of prophecy, or of the Holy Ghost; so when Peter and John laid hands on the Samaritan converts, they received the Holy Ghost; (Acts viii. 15.) when Peter preached to Cornelius and his friends, the Holy Ghost fell on all them that heard the word, and they spake with tongues, and magnified God; (Acts x. 44. 46.) so also the twelve disciples of the Baptist, when St. Paul laid his hands upon them, spake with tongues and prophesied: (Acts xix. 6.) so that this gift of prophecy was still contemporary with a Christian church, or family of Christian converts.

Note, secondly, That the apostles did not presently, upon the conversion of any number of persons to the Christian faith, ordain them elders in every church, but left them for a season to the conduct of those prophets and spiritual men the Holy Ghost had fitted for that work. The church of Antioch was converted, saith Dr. Lightfoot, in the fortieth year of our Lord, and a great number of them turned to the Lord, (Acts xi. 21.) and yet no elders were ordained among them, till the fiftieth year: (Acts xiv. 23.) but in this interval, there were prophets among them who ministered in their assemblies to the Lord, (xiii. 2.) The inhabitants of the isle of Crete were converted for some considerable time before St. Paul sent Titus to them, to set in order the things which were lacking, and ordain elders in every city, (i. 5.) How were they then in the meantime supplied with teachers, and men that ministered in their assemblies, unless by men assisted by that Spirit which was shed on them abundantly at their conversion? (iii. 5, 6.) And if we may take an estimate of other churches, by what was certainly performed in the assemblies of the church of Corinth, we cannot reasonably doubt the truth of this assertion. For, whereas all the public offices performed then in the church were prayer and psalmody, expounding or preaching of the word, and eucharistical oblations; all these are in the fourteenth chapter of the First Epistle ascribed to the prophets in that church, or to the men endowed with spiritual gifts among them: for when they came together, some of them prayed, others composed sacred hymns by their spiritual gift, ver. 15. Their prophets did then teach for edification, exhortation, and comfort, ver. 3. 31. they also did then εὐλογεῖν, bless, which is the word used for consecration of the eucharist, x. 16. and εὐχαριστεῖν, give thanks, which is the word used in our Lord's institution of this sacrament, 1 Cor. xi. 21. and at this thanksgiving the people answered, *Amen, as they were wont to do at the celebration of the sacrament, ver. 16, 17. That all, or any of these things were done by stated pastors, we never read in the Epistles to that church. And this seems yet more probable, touching the church of Corinth, because there seems no order observed among them in their prophesying, and no subjection of the prophets in their assemblies, to any ruler in that church. When the incestuous person was to be delivered up to Satan, this was done by the authority of St. Paul, with the concurrence of the whole assembly; When you are met together (saith he), to deliver such a one to Satan, (1 Cor. v. 4.) put away from yourselves that wicked person, (ver. 13.) And when he speaketh of this act of discipline, he calls it ἐπιτιμία ὑπὸ τῶν πλείονων, the punishment inflicted by many, 2 Cor. ii. 6. (See the note there.) And when the same person was to be absolved, there is no direction sent to any rulers of the church to give him absolution, but all seems immediately to be done by the authority of St. Paul, and by the whole assembly. And, lastly, in the Epistle sent from Corinth to the church of Rome, we find not any salutation sent to Rome from any bishop or elder of the church of Corinth, but only from the kindred of St. Paul, from Gaius the host of that church, Erastus the chamberlain of the city, and Quartus a brother, (xvi. 21—23.) All which things put together, render it more than probable, there were then no settled pastors in the church of Corinth, which makes it necessary, that the affairs of their church-assemblies should be wholly managed by their prophets and spiritual persons.

* Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 2. † Cap. 18. ‡ Lib. lx.

* Hist. Eccles. lib. v. cap. 17. † Ibid.

It seemeth also highly probable, this was the case of other churches, since the apostle, directing his Epistles to many of them, maketh no mention of any church-governors amongst them, either in the beginning of them, as he doth in his Epistle to the Philippians, or the salutations at the close of them, as he doth in that to the Hebrews, saying, Salute all them who have the rule over you, xiii. 24. For instance, there is no direction of the Epistle writ to the Galatians to any church-governors among them, no salutation of them in the close of it, no charge against them for suffering those great disorders which had obtained in that church, no exhortation to them to take heed to their ministry, or to oppose themselves to the deceivers then crept in among them; but there are plain directions given to the spiritual men, or to the prophets then among them, in these words, Brethren, if any man be overtaken with a fault, ye that are spiritual, i. e. who are endowed with those spiritual gifts which enable you for public ministrations in the church, restore such a one in the spirit of meekness, vi. 1. (see the note there); which makes it highly probable, that church was managed, not by stated pastors, but by prophets and spiritual teachers of the word.

Thus also seems it to have been in the church of Thessalonica. For (1.) we find no notice taken of them in the front of the Epistles to them, no salutation of them in the close; the words of salutation being only these, Salute all the brethren with a holy kiss. (2.) We find no directions given to them in particular, but only to the brethren in general, touching such matters as must have related to their office only, or chiefly, had they been settled rulers in that church. The charge, 1 Thess. v. 14. runs thus: We exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak: and, 2 Thess. ii. 6. thus: We command you, brethren, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walks disorderly, and not according to the tradition which ye have received from us: and, ver. 13, 14. And ye brethren,—if any man obey not the word by this Epistle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed; yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother: and, lastly, to these brethren the adjuration, mentioned v. 27. is directed, charging them by the Lord, that this Epistle be read to all the holy brethren.

The same may be observed of the Epistle directed by the same apostle to the church of Rome; for it is directed in the general, to all that are in Rome beloved of God, and saints called; and among the numerous salutations in the close, we find not one directed to any stated pastors of that church: but this we find, that having finished his great dispute concerning justification, and the rejection of the Jews, he exhorts them to be wise to sobriety, as God had distributed to every one the measure of faith, xii. 4. and adds, Having therefore gifts differing according to the grace given us, whether it be prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith, ver. 6. or ministry, let us wait on our ministry; or he that teacheth on teaching. Now evident it is, that both the prophets and teachers in those times are reckoned as men who exercised those offices by a spiritual afflatus, and were enabled to perform them by the miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit then vouchsafed to them; whence they are styled in the words now cited χαρίσματα, spiritual gifts. Hence therefore it is highly probable, these were the men who then presided in their assemblies, and exercised those sacred offices in the church of Rome. Now if these things were so, all Christian churches, at their first conversion to Christianity, must have a sensible and constant demonstration of the exercise of these spiritual gifts in their assemblies, and so a certain evidence of the Divine presence with them, and of the truth of the profession they embraced.

* Justin Mart. Apol. ii. p. 97. Constit. Ap. lib. viii. cap. 12.

This will be farther evident, if we consider what is ascribed to these prophets, what demonstrations they afforded, that they were truly acted by a Divine afflatus.

In prosecution of this head, I do acknowledge that prophecy doth, 1 Cor. xiv. signify, expounding the Scriptures, for exhortation, edification, and comfort, but then it signifies the doing this by a Divine afflatus; and when this gift was exercised by singing, or by praising God, this was still done, as Holy Scripture doth inform us, ὠδαῖς πνευματικαῖς, in psalms, and hymns, and odes, composed by the immediate impulse and assistance of the Holy Ghost; for upon that account alone could this be styled praying and singing in the Holy Ghost, and mentioned as an instance of their spiritual gifts: and such a manifestation of the Spirit did attend them in this exercise, as made it easy for others to discern that they were prophets: for either with the gift of prophecy they had the gift of tongues, as in the first effusion of the Holy Ghost, when they spake with other tongues the wonderful things of God, (Acts ii. 11.) and thereby shewed the spirit of prophecy, which God had promised by his servant Joel, was fulfilled upon them, and on Cornelius and his kinsmen, the first gentile converts; for by this were the Jews convinced, that God had shed on them also the gift of the Holy Ghost, that they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God: (Acts x. 44, 45.) or, secondly, they foretold things future and contingent, according to our Saviour's promise, that the Spirit he would send should shew them things to come. (John xvi. 13.) Thus we find mention in the sacred story of the prophet Agabus, who foretold the year before that dearth which happened in the reign of Claudius, (Acts xi. 27.) that other Christians might be moved by this prediction, to send their charity to their brethren where the famine pinched them most, as it did in Judea, saith Josephus; and of Timothy, chosen to be an evangelist according to the foregoing prophecies concerning him; whence by the ancients this gift was styled, ὁ τῆς προγνώσεως, the gift of foreknowledge.

Moreover, in the Epistles of St. Paul we find not only mention of prophets settled in the church, and of prophecy reckoned among the gifts of the good Spirit, but we find him comparing it with other gifts; particularly (1.) with that of tongues, and preferring it before that gift, as being such a gift as tended more to the edification of the church: For greater is he that prophesieth, than he that speaketh with tongues (saith the apostle); for he that speaketh with tongues edifieth himself only, but he that prophesieth edifies the church. (1 Cor. xiv. 2. 5.) Hence he declareth his desire, that they should rather prophesy than speak with tongues. (2.) He compares it with that of charity, declaring, in that case, that charity excels it, because, though we have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge, yet if we have no charity we are nothing; (1 Cor. xiii. 2.) and because prophecies shall cease, but charity never ceaseth, (ver. 8.) Moreover, he gives directions to prophets, to prophesy according to the proportion of faith, (Rom. xii. 19.) to prophesy successively, or one by one, and let the other prophets judge, (1 Cor. xiv. 22.) and to hold their peace when any thing is revealed to another prophet, (ver. 10.) He also blames them for prophesying all together in a confused manner, and without observation of due order, and for suffering their women to prophesy in the church, (ver. 39.) And yet after all these directions, he exhorts them to covet prophecy, and saith, Quench not the Holy Spirit, despise not prophecies. (1 Thess. v. 19, 20.) Now these things give us an unquestionable evidence, that this gift was then plentifully conferred upon the church of Christ; for could the apostle talk with so great confidence in his Epistles directed to Christian churches, of prophets, and of a gift of prophecy vouchsafed to them, and settled in the church of God: could he speak so much of the edification, which the church received by those who had the gift of prophecy, and of the revelations which they made by virtue of it, and of the effect it had on unbelievers, to force them to acknowledge, that God was present with the church: could he compare it with other gifts then extant in the church, and give it the pre-eminence above them; and with the grace of charity, exalting that even above tongues and prophecy: could he give directions to the prophets then among them, how to exercise this gift, and chide them for abusing it: could he say to them, Covet and despise not prophecies; and could he close those sayings with these words, If any man be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge, that the things I write to you are the commandments of God: (1 Cor. xiv. 37.) I say, could he have written all these things, in such Epistles as were embraced as the word of God, had it not been beyond exception, that there was such a gift of prophecy vouchsafed to, and exercised in, the church of God?

Lastly, Of the continuance of this gift of prophecy, not only in the age of the apostles, but also in the age succeeding, we have sufficient evidence from the best writers of the Christian church. For,

First, Hermas, contemporary with St. Paul, speaks of this gift as still remaining, and usually practised in the church of Christ: for he professedly gives rules, by which all Christians might distinguish betwixt true and false prophets, those who were acted by an evil spirit, and those who were acted by the Holy Ghost; saying, That he who had the earthly spirit, came not into the congregation of just men; or if he came thither, (lib. ii. cap. 11.) "obmutescit, nec quidquam potest loqui," he was presently struck dumb, and had no power to speak before them. But when a man comes (saith he *) who hath the Spirit of God, into the congregation of the just, and prays to God, he is then filled with a Divine afflatus, and speaketh as God will. Whence two things are evident,

First, That he supposeth there were then men in the church inspired with the spirit of prophecy: secondly, that this prophetical afflatus came upon them, and was exerted by them, in the assemblies of the church.

Of the continuance of this gift in the second century, we have a signal testimony of the church of Smyrna, declaring, that Polycarp, their bishop, was διδάσκαλος ἀποστολικὸς, καὶ προφητικὸς, an apostolical and prophetical teacher; for, say they,† every word he spake hath been already fulfilled, and will be fulfilled.

Eusebius makes mention of Quadratus ‡ as an apostolical man, and one of the first order of their successors, who was (saith he) προφητικῷ χαρίσματι διαπρέψας, celebrated for his prophetical gift.

* "Cum ergo venerit homo, qui habet Spiritum Dei, in ecclesiam justorum habentium fidem Dei, et oratio fit ad Deum, tunc nuncios sanctos Divinitatis implet hominem illum Spiritu Sancto, et loquitur in turba sicut Deus vult."

† Πᾶν γὰρ ῥῆμα ὃ ἐξεφθέγξατο ἐκ τοῦ στόματος αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐτελειώθη, καὶ τελειωθήσεται. Martyr. Polyc. sect. 16.

‡ Hist. Eccles. lib. iii. cap. 37.

Justin Martyr speaks of himself as a disciple of the apostles; and Methodius saith, He was not far from the apostles: now he expressly saith to Trypho,* Παρ' ἡμῖν καὶ μέχρι νῦν προφητικὰ χαρίσματά ἐστιν, we have still prophetical gifts among us.

Irenæus was also near to the apostles' times, saith Basil and St. Austin; and he not only declares, that some Christians had then† Πρόγνωσιν τῶν μελλόντων καὶ ὀπτασίας, καὶ ῥήσεις προφητικὰς, the knowledge of things future, and visions, and prophetical predictions; but confirms this from what he and others had then heard; for (saith he) St. Paul calls them perfect, who had received the Spirit, and by him spake with all tongues; Καθὼς καὶ ἀκούομεν πολλῶν ἀδελφῶν ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ προφητικὰ χαρίσματα ἐχόντων,‡ as also we have heard many brethren in the church, who had prophetical gifts, and by the Spirit spake with all tongues, and discovered the secrets of men, and expounded the mysteries of God. Moreover, three things are in this matter very remarkable.

First, That by this very argument, the Christians of the second and third century endeavoured to convince the Jews, that their religion was to give place to Christianity; that God had left their synagogues, and was now efficaciously present with those churches, who had embraced the Christian faith; because that gift of prophecy, which formerly had been peculiar to the Jewish church, had now entirely left them, and was translated to the assemblies of Christians, among whom it remained, μέχρι νῦν, to that present time, as hath been proved already by the testimony of Justin Martyr, in his dialogue with Trypho.§ Thus to Celsus, pleading in the person of a Jew for that religion against Christianity, Origen declares, That the Divinity of Christ had transferred his providence from the Jews to the converted gentiles, for (saith he) we may see them after the coming of our Lord entirely deserted, and having nothing venerable that remains among them, they having now no prophets and no miracles,‖ ὧν κἂν ἴχνη ἐπὶ πόσον παρὰ Χριστιανοῖς εὑρίσκεται, καί τινα γε μείζονα, of which some considerable footsteps have so long remained among Christians.

Secondly, The case of Montanus, and his followers, pretending to this gift of prophecy, hath in it many circumstances, which plainly shew this gift did still continue in some measure in the church. For,

First, Eusebius informs us, that when Montanus, Alcibiades, and Theodotus in Phrygia, pretended to the gift of prophecy,¶ many believed they might be prophets, because many extraordinary operations of the Divine gifts were still performed in divers churches.

Secondly, They confute the Montanists' pretence to this gift, by the falsehoods which they uttered; Maximilla, one of his prophetesses, having declared, that after her there should be no prophets, but the consummation of all things; and because they left no prophets to succeed them; whereas (say they) the prophetic gift is to continue in all churches; which shews, it did continue then, for otherwise this objection must have been as strong against the church of Christ, as against the sect of the Montanists. And, lastly, they confute them from their way of prophesying, they speaking still in ecstasies and strange emotions of their minds; whereas (say they*) the prophets under the old testament, and ours under the new, Agabus, Judas, Silas, Quadratus, and many others, were never subject to such ecstasies; whence they concluded, μὴ δεῖν προφήτην ἐν ἐκστάσει λαλεῖν, that prophets must not speak in ecstasies.

Lastly, It farther is observable, that some heretics denied the Gospel of St. John, because he had so fully spoken of the promise, which our Lord had made to his disciples, that he would send the Comforter to teach them all things, and shew them things to come. They rejected also the Epistles of St. Paul; because in his Epistle to the Corinthians he had so fully spoken, "de propheticis charismatibus," of the prophetical gifts. Now, these (saith Irenæus†) are unhappy men, who choose themselves to be false prophets, i. e. to speak in God's name, when they confess they are not taught of God, and who endeavour to repel the grace of prophecy from the church; which words suppose it was extant in the church of God.

§. XIII. There is one other Divine gift which beareth some affinity to that of prophecy, which therefore I shall briefly handle, viz. that of discerning spirits. Now this imports, not only the skill of discerning betwixt true and false prophets, which he that had seems, by St. Clemens,‡ to be styled, ὁ σοφὸς ἐν διακρίσει τῶν λόγων, a wise man in discerning words, or in distinguishing betwixt the lying wonders and magical operations of evil spirits, and the powers of the Holy Ghost, which must be in some measure common to all Christians, they being all enjoined to try the spirits whether they be of God: (1 Thess. v. 20. John iv. 1.) but chiefly it signifies the power of discerning the inward operations of the soul, and of discovering the secrets of men's hearts. Thus of the prophets of the church of Corinth; Every one (saith St. Paul) hath his revelation. And again, If ye all prophesy, and there come into your assembly one who is an unbeliever, or unlearned, he is convinced of all, ἀνακρίνεται ὑπὸ πάντων, his actions are discerned by all the prophets; and thus are the secrets of his heart laid open, and so falling down upon his face, he will worship God, and declare that God is in you of a truth. (1 Cor. xiv. 14. 26. 30.) So Peter discerned the heart of Ananias and Sapphira, saying to Ananias, Why hath Satan filled thy heart to lie to the Holy Ghost? And to Sapphira, Why have you agreed to tempt the Holy Ghost? (Acts iii. 5. 9.) i. e. having joined yourselves to the assembly of the Christians, where you have had so great experience of the assistance of the Holy Spirit, to declare the secrets of men, why, after such experience, have you dared to lie in the assemblies of those men in which the Holy Spirit thus resides, and thereby shew you doubt his power to reveal what you have fraudulently concealed? He also knew the heart of Simon Magus, for to him he speaks thus, (Acts viii. 22, 23.)

I perceive thy heart is not right before God, but thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity. It was by this gift that St. Paul at Lystra, looking upon a blind man, saw that he had faith to be healed. (Acts xiv. 9.) Ignatius* also speaks of the Spirit in him that did τὰ κρυπτὰ ἐλέγχειν, reprove things secret; and Irenæus,† that the brethren, which had the spiritual gift, did τὰ κρύφια τῶν ἀνθρώπων εἰς φανερὰν ἄγειν, discover the hidden things of men.

It was discovered in discerning men's fitness or qualifications for any office in the church; and accordingly in setting them apart for that office. Thus the Holy Ghost, in the prophets, said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work to which I have called them. Thus is the Holy Ghost said to have made the bishops and presbyters in Asia the overseers of the churches there, Acts xx. 28. because, as Clemens Romanus‡ saith, the apostles constituted bishops and deacons, δοκιμάζοντες τῷ πνεύματι, approving of them by the Spirit. And Clemens of Alexandria,§ that St. John ordained to be of the clergy, τοὺς ἀπὸ τοῦ πνεύματος ἁγίου σημαινομένους, them who were signified to him by the Spirit. And Ignatius‖ saith of the bishops of his time, that they were constituted not by men, but Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ γνώμῃ, by the counsel of Christ Jesus.

§. XIV. I proceed, lastly, to shew the reason we have to believe that these extraordinary gifts were equally conferred upon the other churches, as upon those which the apostles mention in their Epistles. This we may gather,

First, From these expressions of St. Paul to the church of Corinth, in which they were so plentifully exercised; for his inquiry to them runs thus; What is it wherein you were inferior to other churches? 2 Cor. xii. 13. and his assertion thus, In every thing you are enriched by him in all utterance, and in all knowledge, so that ye came behind the other churches in no gift, 1 Cor. i. 5. 7. which words plainly insinuate, that all the other churches were plentifully endowed with these gifts.

Secondly, This also may be gathered from the reason of the thing: for the operations of the Holy Ghost are said to be designed for these ends; 1. The confirmation of the testimony, and the faith of Christ, 1 Cor. i. 6. and their establishment in Christ, 2 Cor. i. 12. 22. 2. The edification of the body of Christ, 1 Cor. xii. 7. Eph. iv. 11, 12. 3. To be a pledge and earnest of their adoption, and their future happiness, Rom. viii. 23. 2 Cor. i. 22. Gal. iv. 6, 7. Eph. i. 13. 4. To be their comfort under persecutions, Rom. v. 3. 5. 2 Cor. i. 7. 1 Pet. iv. 14. Now these are ends as necessary for all, as for any Christian churches, who must all equally need the confirmation of their faith, of the ministry, the perfecting the saints, and the edification of the body of Christ, the support and comfort of the Spirit under persecutions, the pledge and earnest of their future hopes.

Thirdly, This also may be gathered from that account which the apostle giveth of spiritual gifts and spiritual persons in the church. The gifts given for the edification of the church in general are these, the word of wisdom, and of knowledge, the gifts of healing, the working of miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, kinds of tongues, and the interpretation of them. (1 Cor. xii. 8—10.) The persons exercising them are mentioned thus; God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondly prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then the gifts of healing, &c. (ver. 28.) And in the Epistle to the Ephesians thus, He gave some apostles, some prophets, some evangelists, some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying the body of Christ. (Eph. iv. 11, 12.) Which places evidently shew, that these were gifts designed for the benefit of all the churches of Christ in general, and exercised by these persons as they went about to plant or to confirm the churches; the power of miracles, and the gift of healing, being also exercised by them in confirmation of that faith they preached, according to our Saviour's promise. So that some gifts seem for some time constantly exercised by the members of each church in their assemblies, and others by those persons who preached the gospel first among them, or travelled to confirm the churches, and so all had experience, more or less, of these spiritual operations done among them.

Lastly, From the consideration of that baptism which they all generally received; for as the promise ran to the Jews in general, that they should be baptized with the Holy Ghost, (Matt. iii. 11.) to every one that would believe, and be baptized, that they should receive the Holy Ghost, (Acts ii. 38.) and that because the promise was to them, and to their children, καὶ πᾶσι τοῖς εἰς μακρὰν, and to all that were afar off, even as many as the Lord should call; so was this promise signally fulfilled to the believers of the Jewish nation, who being enlightened, φωτισθέντες, that is, baptized, they also tasted of the spiritual gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and of the powers of the world to come, (Heb. vi. 4, 5. see the note there,) and great grace was upon them all: (Acts iv. 33.) to the believers in Samaria, for when the apostles, Peter and John, laid their hands upon them, they received the Holy Ghost: (Acts viii. 17.) to the converts of the gentiles; for by one Spirit they were all baptized into one body, (1 Cor. xii. 13.) and after they believed, they were all sealed with the Spirit of promise, (Eph. i. 13.) they being saved by the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost, which was shed on them abundantly through Jesus Christ. (Tit. ii. 5, 6.) All Christians therefore being made members of Christ's body by baptism, all Christian churches and bodies must have these powerful gifts conferred upon, and exercised by, some of the members of those churches, to the edification of the rest.

Accordingly it is declared by Justin Martyr of them who were converted to the Christian faith, that being baptized in the name of Christ, they received, some the spirit of knowledge, some of counsel, some of fortitude, some of healing, some of foreknowledge, some of doctrine.*

§. XV. To conclude, The primitive professors and martyrs for the Christian faith afford us a full testimony of the continuance of these gifts and operations of the Holy Ghost in the next ages of the church. Clemens Romanus,† in his epistle to the church of Corinth, saith, There was πλήρης πνεύματος ἁγίου ἔγχυσις ἐπὶ πάντας, a full effusion of the Holy Spirit upon them all. Ignatius * saith of the church of Smyrna, that she was ἐλεημένη ἐν παντὶ χαρίσματι, favoured with all gifts, and was deficient in none. Justin † saith, that even their men and women had the gifts of the Holy Ghost. Eusebius having mentioned the first order of the successors of the apostles, he saith, that ‡ even then they performed many wondrous works by the Holy Ghost. It is needless, saith Irenæus, § to insist upon particulars, for the miraculous gifts, which the church throughout the world enjoys, and the beneficial miracles she worketh for the good of heatheus, are innumerable. This he saith, after he had enumerated among the gifts then given to believers, the casting out of devils, prophecy, the knowledge of things future, the healing the sick, and the raising the dead. And when Montanus appeared, there was not only in the church the gift of prophecy, but in divers churches ‖ many other strange works performed by the Divine gifts.

Here then we find, by all these early testimonies, that in the two first centuries many gifts of the Holy Ghost were still continued in all churches, that every one at their baptism received some or other of them. These also are relations not of things past, or of things done in a corner, but of things commonly performed in the face of the assemblies, and so confirmed by the joint testimonies of all Christian churches; they were miracles which their own eyes had seen; tongues and prophetic gifts which their own ears had heard; gifts which they used against the Jews and heretics for their conviction; and beneficial miracles so truly wrought upon the heathen, that they were efficacious to engage them to espouse and persevere to the end in the profession of the Christian faith. Thistherefore is, saith Origen, ¶ οἰκεῖα ἀπόδειξις τοῦ λόγου, the proper demonstration of our Jesus, no other pretender to the power of doing signs or wonders having ever derived that power from himself to others, engaged that believers should so generally receive it; none ever pretending to enable their followers to speak with tongues, discover the secrets of men's hearts, or confer all or any of these gifts upon their proselytes. It also must be owned, as a most convincing demonstration of the truth and the Divine original of that faith which ministered these gifts so plentifully to its professors.

§. XVI. And, oh! that all who, by this demonstration of the Spirit, are convinced of the truth of the Christian faith, would seriously consider how much it does concern them, in point of interest and wisdom, to yield obedience to all the precepts of that faith! for if the gentiles were given up to vile affections and a reprobate mind, (Rom. i. 24. 26.) only for sins committed against the dim and imperfect light of nature; if the Jews received a just recompence for every transgression of the law delivered by Moses to them, how shall we escape if we neglect this great salvation, which at the first was spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed by them that heard; God bearing witness to it by divers signs and wonders, and distributions of the Holy Ghost? (Heb. ii. 3, 4.) And to this end consider,

First, That by our disobedience to the Christian precepts we contradict the great design of all these demonstrations of the Holy Spirit, they being all intended, saith St. Paul, to make the gentiles obedient in word and deed. (Rom. xv. 18.)

Secondly, That all our certainty of the Christian faith doth highly aggravate the guilt of our transgression of the Christian precepts: for the stronger the motive is to believe, the greater is the guilt of disobedience; because such motives may be easily discerned, and so our ignorance of them must be less excusable; and we cannot resist their evidence, but we must offer violence to the convictions of our consciences; and so we have no cloak for our sin.

Thirdly, That though we own the Christian faith and our Lord Jesus, yet whilst we live in disobedience to his precepts, God looks upon us as mere infidels, such as in words profess to know him, but in works deny him, being disobedient. (Titus i. 16.) Our faith at least must be irrational and absurd, for why call ye me Lord, Lord (saith Christ), and do not the things that I say? (Luke vi. 46.) And it will be as unprofitable as it is irrational; for though we know these things, we only can be happy if we do them. (John xiii. 17.)

To conclude all, Our convictions of the truth of the Christian faith add strength to those engagements and encouragements which that religion offers towards a virtuous and holy life; for if all that is delivered in these sacred records be the revealed will of God, then all the promises and comfortable passages contained in them will be assuredly made good to all obedient Christians, and the assurance of such inestimable blessings as the gospel promiseth, must lay upon us strong engagements to be steadfast and unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, as knowing that our labour shall not be in vain in the Lord. (1 Cor. xv. 58.)

THE

EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS.

WITH ANNOTATIONS.

PREFACE.

IT is the general note of the ancient commentators, that though this Epistle be in place the first of all St. Paul's Epistles, yet was it not first written by him,* but was the last of all he wrote from Asia, Macedonia, and Achaia, before he went to Rome: the Epistles to the Thessalonians, to the Corinthians, and the Epistle to the Galatians, being writ before it. They therefore think that it was placed first, either as being written† to the imperial city, as some thought; or for the excellency of the doctrine contained in it, as others do conjecture. So saith Theodoret in his preface.

It was written from Corinth, as the same ancients note, for he calleth Erastus the chamberlain of the city, from whence he writ it, xvi. 23. and he had his abode at Corinth, 2 Tim. ii. 4. He called Gaius his host, i. e. the man with whom he lodged, xvi. 23. now he was a Corinthian, 1 Cor. i. 14. He commendeth to them Phebe, a servant of the church at Cenchrea, xvi. 1. now Cenchrea was a port of Corinth. Moreover, it was written thence, not when St. Paul travelled through Greece, Acts xx. 2. for that then he came to Corinth, is not said; nay, it is gainsaid by St. Paul himself, who, in his Second Epistle to the Corinthians, writ the same year with this, excuses himself for not coming to them, chap. i. and declares, that the third time he was ready to come to them, xiii. 1. Add to this, that when he writ this Epistle to the Romans, he knew the contributions of the church of Corinth were actually made, and even deposited in his hands, he being then going up with them to Jerusalem, Rom. xv. 25. 28. whereas when he travelled Greece, and came to Macedonia, Acts xx. 1. 3. they either indeed were not so, or at the least he knew not that they were so, and therefore sent first Titus, and then his Second Epistle to them, that they might be so, viii. 9.

It was written to the Romans when he had not seen them, i. 11. and before he was gone up to Jerusalem, for he was but then going thither, xv. 25. and purposed from thence to go by Rome to Spain, ver. 28. And so it must be written, A. D. 57. for we find him at Jerusalem, Acts xxi. 6. and a prisoner under Felix, in the fourth year of Nero. (See Dr. Pearson, Annal. Paulin. p. 15, 16.)

That the church of Rome consisted partly of the Jews then dwelling there, we learn both from the fourteenth chapter, where the gentiles are exhorted to bear with their weakness; and from the fifteenth chapter, where he speaks thus, I have written unto you more boldly, ἀπὸ μέρους, as to the gentile part; (see the note there, ver. 15, 16.) and from the salutations sent to them at Rome, they being chiefly sent to them of the Jewish nation.

The two great doctrines laid down in this Epistle are, (1.) that of justification by faith alone, without the works of the law; of which see the preface to the Epistle to the Galatians: and, (2.) the mystery of the calling of the gentiles, the rejection at present of the Jews, and the recalling of them when the fulness of the gentiles was to come in.

Lastly, It is observable, that among all his salutations to those of Rome, he hath not one directed to St. Peter, nor doth he give us any hint that St. Peter then had ever been at Rome, or planted any church there; which, as it makes it highly probable he had not then been there at all, so doth it make it certain that St. Paul knew not of his being there when this Epistle was indited.

1. PAUL, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, [1] separated to the gospel of God,

2. Which (gospel) he had promised afore by his prophets in the Holy Scriptures, (speaking in them)

3. Concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, who was made the seed of David according to the flesh; (Acts ii. 30. 2 Tim. ii. 8. and)

4. [2] Declared to be the Son of God (invested) with power, according to the Spirit of holiness (residing in him without measure, John iii. 34. and) by the resurrection from the dead:

5. By whom (thus raised and invested with all power, and acting now not as a prophet, but as Lord of all, by the whole fulness of the Godhead,) we have received [3] grace and apostleship (i. e. the office of an apostle, and the grace belonging to it), for obedience to the faith among (Gr. in) all nations:

6. Among whom are ye also the called of Jesus Christ:

7. (I Paul write) to all that be in Rome, beloved of God, called to be saints: (Gr. saints called: see note on 1 Cor. i. 1. wishing) grace (may) be (given) to you from God our Father, and (from) the Lord Jesus Christ.

8. (And) first, I thank my God through Jesus Christ (the fountain of all our blessings, Eph. i. 3.) for (the conversion wrought in) you all (so visibly), that your faith is spoken of throughout the world.

9. (This happy success of the gospel being very grateful to me,) for God is my witness, whom I serve with my spirit in the gospel of his Son, that without ceasing (Gr. how incessantly) I make mention of you;

10. Making request (Gr. requesting) always in my prayers to come to you, if by any means now at length I might have a prosperous journey to you by the will of God.

11. For I long to see you, [4] that I may impart to you some spiritual gift, to the end that you may be established;

12. That is, that I may be [5] comforted together with you by the mutual faith both of you (through faith receiving) and me (by faith imparting these gifts).

13. Now I would not have you ignorant, brethren, that oftentimes I purposed to come to you, that I might have some fruit among you also, even as among other gentiles, (though through many hinderances I have not been able to accomplish my purpose, xv. 22.)

14. For (as) [6] I am a debtor both to the Greeks, and the barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise, (as having by God the dispensation of the gospel committed to me for their sakes, 1 Cor. ix. 6.)

15. So, as much as is in me, I am ready to [7] preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also.

16. For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is (attended with) the power of God to salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, (to whom it was by God's appointment to be first preached, Acts iii. 26. xiii. 46.) and also to the gentile.

17. For therein is [8] the righteousness of God revealed [9] from faith to faith (Gr. the righteousness of God by faith is revealed to beget in men faith): as it is written, [10] The just shall live by faith.

18. (And this way of justification, or obtaining remission of sins, is necessary to exempt all men, whether Jew or gentile, from the wrath of God;) for (to begin first with the gentiles,) [11] the wrath of God is revealed from heaven [12] against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of (those) men, who hold the truth (which they know by the light of nature) in unrighteousness;

19. Because that which may be known of God (by the light of nature) is manifest in (or, to) them; for God hath shewed it to them.

20. For the invisible things of him [13] from the creation of the world are clearly seen (or, are clearly seen (even) from the creation of the world), being understood by the things that are made (i. e. by his works), even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse (viz. who do not worship him alone as God, who is the Creator of all things, but rather give the worship due unto him to the works of their hands):

21. Because when they knew God, they glorified him not as God (by giving him the honour due to the Deity), neither were thankful (to him who giveth to all men life, breath, and all things, Acts xvii. 28. xiv. 17.) but became vain in their imaginations (of him), and their foolish heart was darkened.

22. Professing themselves to be wise, (and usurping that name, ver. 14. 1 Cor. i. 20, 21.) they became (in their actions) fools,

23. And changed [14] the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible men, and to birds, and fourfooted beasts, and creeping things.

24. Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts, to dishonour their bodies among themselves (as did the Sodomites and Canaanites of old, ἀπελθοῦσαι ὀπίσω σαρκὸς ἑτέρας, Jude 7.)

25. (As being also men) who changed the truth of God into a lie, (worshipping as gods them who by nature were no gods, Gal. iv. 8. or only demons, 1 Cor. x. 20.) and served the [15] creature more than the Creator, who is blessed for ever. Amen.

26. For this cause God gave them (farther) up to vile affections: for even their women did change the natural use (of their bodies) into that which is against nature: (see Lucian. διάλ. ἑταιρ. Κλωνάριον καὶ Λεαίνια.)

27. And also the men, leaving the natural use of the woman, burned in their lusts one towards another; men with men working that which was unseemly (Gr. filthiness), and receiving in themselves that recompence of their error which was meet (i. e. being given up thus to dishonour their own bodies, see Lucian's Ἔρωτες, for the dishonour they did to God by their idolatry).

28. And as they liked not to retain God in their knowledge, (so) [16] God gave them up [17] to a reprobate mind, to do those things which were not convenient; (they)

29. Being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness, full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity, whisperers,

30. Backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents,

31. Without understanding, covenant-breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful:

32. Who knowing the judgment of God, (viz.) that they who do such things are [18] worthy of death, not only do the same, but [19] have pleasure in them that do them.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. I.

[1] Ver. 1. ΄ΑΦΩΡΙΣΜΕ΄ΝΟΣ, Separated.] He in this word seems to allude to his former separation when he lived a pharisee, i. e. one separated from all ceremonial defilement, and from the people of the earth, i. e. the common people, who observed not the exact rules of legal purity; saying, that he was separated now, not to a nicer observation of the Jewish rites and customs, but to the preaching of the gospel of God: and the affinity betwixt this and the Epistle to the Galatians, both as to matter and style, inclines me not to interpret the apostle of the separation mentioned Acts xiii. 2. where the Holy Ghost saith, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work of the ministry to which I have appointed them; but of God's separating him from his mother's womb, and calling him to that work, Gal. i. 15.

[2] Ver. 4. Ὁρισθέντος, Declared to be the Son of God.] Christ, while he was on earth, declared that he was the Son of God, whom the Father had sanctified and set apart to his prophetic office: accordingly the Spirit of God descended on him at his baptism, and a voice from heaven said, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. This he proved from the powerful works wrought by him, that he was the Son of God, sanctified and consecrated to his office by the Spirit of God abiding in him, and so was in the Father, and the Father in him, declaring that he did his miracles by the power of the Holy Ghost, and by the Spirit of God did cast out devils. (Matt. xii. 28.) And thus St. Peter represents this prophet to Cornelius, saying, God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost, and with power; who (therefore) went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil, for God was with him. (Acts x. 38.) And thus it seemeth necessary he should act in his prophetical office; a prophet being a person sent from God, and speaking in his name, and acted by his Spirit in the delivery and confirmation of his message. That our great prophet Jesus was, as in a more sublime, so in this sense, the Son of God, endowed with power of working miracles by the Holy Ghost for confirmation of his doctrine, God hath demonstrated, saith the apostle here, by raising him from the dead.

[3] Ver. 5. Χάριν καὶ ἀποστολήν, Grace and apostleship.] That is, saith Œcumenius, χάριν εἰς ἀποστολήν, grace for the office of apostles; the favour to be apostles, say some, because the apostle calls this office grace, Rom. xv. 15. Gal. ii. 9. Eph. iii. 2. 7. but where he doth so there is always something added of the gifts and powers by which they were enabled to exercise it: v. g. To me is this grace given, that I may be the minister of Christ to the gentiles, Rom. xv. 15, 16. In the power of signs, and miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, ver. 19. James, Cephas, and John, knew the grace given to me, Gal. ii. 9. because God had wrought mightily with me towards the gentiles, ver. 8. and Eph. iii. 2. there is mention of the grace of God given to St. Paul; but then it is added, that he is made a minister according to the gift of the grace of God given to him by the effectual working of his power, ver. 7. I therefore think fit to join both together, and give the sense of the words thus: By whom we have received the office of apostles, and grace through his name to call all nations to the obedience of faith in him; or to yield obedience to the faith preached in his name.

[4] Ver. 11. Ἵνα τι μεταδῶ χάρισμα ὑμῖν πνευματικὸν, That I might impart to you some spiritual gift.] This is by most interpreted of the spirit of wisdom and knowledge, by which St. Paul would instruct them: I rather choose to refer it to some spiritual gift he at his coming would bestow upon them, by the imposition of his hands upon some of them, as the apostles used to do. (Acts viii. 17. xix. 6. 2 Tim. i. 6.) For (1.) that is most agreeable to the phrase, μεταδοῦναι χάρισμα πνευματικὸν, to give the Spirit, or a spiritual gift: and, (2.) to his words in the close of this Epistle, that he shall come to them in the fulness τῆς εὐλογίας, of the blessing of the gospel of Christ, that phrase being applied to the giving of the Spirit, and his gifts, Gal. iii. 14. Eph. i. 3. and, (3.) to the end here assigned of the imparting this gift, viz. the establishment of the Romans in the faith: for the vouchsafement of the Spirit, and his gifts unto the churches, is still called βεβαίωσις, the confirmation of them in the faith, 1 Cor. i. 5, 6. 2 Cor. i. 21, 22. v. 5. Gal. v. 5. 1 Thess. i. 5.

[5] Ver. 12. Συμπαρακληθῆναι, To be comforted together with you.] It being both a comfort and establishment of faith in them to receive these gifts of the Spirit, and in him to be able to impart them to them, and to find God so effectually working by him.

[6] Ver. 14, 15. I am a debtor, &c. οὕτω.] Here it is observable, that some translators begin the fourteenth verse with for, though there is nothing that answers to it in the Greek: yet it should be rendered thus, I am a debtor to the Greek and the barbarian, to the wise and the unwise; viz. οὕτω, or οὕτω καὶ, and therefore as much as in me lies, I am ready to preach the gospel to you also that are in Rome. For though οὕτω and οὕτως, when joined with ὡς, signify generally so; yet when they are put absolutely, and especially when they begin a sentence, they signify idcirco, itaque, and answer to al chen in the Hebrew: so Rev. iii. 16. οὕτως ὅτι χλιαρὸς εἶ, Wherefore because thou art lukewarm; upon which place the critics note, that οὕτως, hîc non est similitudinis, sed ratiocinativum, valetque al chen, igitur: so Rom. vi. 11. Knowing that Jesus Christ, being raised from the dead, dieth no more; οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς λογίζεσθε, therefore also reckon ye yourselves dead unto sin, 1 Cor. xv. 44, 45. οὕτω καὶ γέγραπται, and therefore it is written; so Luke xxiv. 26. So it is written, καὶ οὕτως, and therefore Christ ought to suffer; and John iv. 6. Jesus then being weary with his journey, ἐκαθίζετο οὕτως, sat therefore upon the well.

[7] Ver. 15. Ὑμῖν τοῖς ἐν Ῥώμῃ εὐαγγελίσασθαι, To preach the gospel to you at Rome.] St. Paul here seems plainly to challenge Rome as part of his province, as being the apostle of the gentiles: so again, xi. 13. I speak to you, gentiles, inasmuch as I am the apostle of the gentiles, I magnify my office: and xv. 15. I have written the more boldly to you in part, i. e. as to the gentile part among you, as putting you in remembrance of the grace given to me of God, ver. 16. that I should be the minister of Jesus Christ to the gentiles; and so on to ver. 30. and here, I purposed to come to you gentiles, for I am a debtor, &c. When therefore the ancients tell us that St. Peter was bishop of Rome as well as St. Paul, this can be only true of Peter as to the Jewish converts there, whilst St. Paul was the apostle and bishop of the gentiles at Rome, according to the agreement made between them, that Paul and Barnabas should go unto the gentiles, St. Peter and John to the circumcision: (Gal. ii. 9.) and so the bishop of Rome, if he will be St. Peter's successor, must only preach to the Jews, or be the bishop of the circumcision. Moreover, it seems highly probable that St. Peter was not yet come to Rome, much less had settled his see there: for if so, why should St. Paul be so desirous, so often purposing to come to them, that he might impart some spiritual gift to them, to the end they might be established, unless St. Peter were either insufficient for, or very negligent in, that work? (See the preface to this Epistle.)

[8] Ver. 17. Δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ, The righteousness of God.] This phrase, in St. Paul's style, doth always signify the righteousness of faith in Christ Jesus dying, or shedding his blood for us: so iii. 20, 21. The righteousness of God, without the law, is manifest, to wit, the righteousness of God through faith in Jesus Christ. The same apostle having declared, that the gentiles, who followed not after righteousness, had attained to righteousness, even the righteousness of faith; but Israel not believing had not attained to the law of righteousness, Rom. ix. 30, 31. He proves the second assertion thus: For they being ignorant of the righteousness of God, and seeking to establish their own righteousness (which is of the law), have not submitted τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ τοῦ Θεοῦ, to the righteousness of God, i. e. to the righteousness of faith in Christ, to which the gentiles had submitted, x. 3. For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness; i. e. for justification through faith in Christ, ver. 10. (See the note on 2 Cor. v. 21.) The righteousness of God is therefore manifestly taken for gospel-righteousness, as Mr. Clerc notes on Rom. iii. p. 263. But when he adds, that is, for sanctity of life consequent upon repentance, he is miserably out; for this righteousness consists not in our sanctification, but in our justification, or absolution from our sins past, through faith in the blood of Christ, shed for the remission of sins.

[9] Ἐκ πίστεως εἰς πίστιν, From, i. e. by faith to faith.] Ἐκ being here put for διὰ, as in this very verse, the just shall live, ἐκ πίστεως, by his faith: so iii. 20. It is one God who will justify the circumcision, ἐκ πίστεως, through faith, and the uncircumcision, διὰ πίστεως, by the same faith: so ἡ ἐκ πίστεως δικαιοσύνη, is the righteousness that is by faith, ix. 30. and x. 6. δικαιοσύνη ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει, and διὰ πίστεως τοῦ Χριστοῦ, the righteousness by faith in Christ. Vain therefore is the descant of Mr. Le Clerc upon these words, That from the faith whereby the Jews believed the prophets, and the gentiles their ancestors, they might proceed to another faith: for if he means they should proceed from the one faith to the other, this is true of the Jews, who were to add to their faith in God, and in his prophets, faith in our Lord Jesus Christ: (John xiv. 4.) but it is false as to the gentiles, who were to renounce and turn from the faith of their ancestors, that they might believe in Christ. If he means by proceeding from faith to faith, renouncing the one to embrace the other, this is true of the gentiles, but false when applied to the Jews, who were not to renounce their faith in the prophets, but by virtue of it to embrace this righteousness of God, testified by the law and the prophets. The sense of these words seems plainly to be this: The righteousness of God, which is by faith, is revealed in the gospel to beget faith in men.

[10] Ὁ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται, The just shall live by his faith,] In God's promises; whence it appears, that faith doth not include obedience, but only a firm belief of God's promises obliging to obedience. Hence the apostle argues from this very place, Gal. iii. 10, 11. that the law is not of faith, because it saith, The man that doeth these things shall live in them, making obedience the condition of justification by the law.

[11] Ver. 18. Ὀργὴ Θεοῦ, The wrath of God.] This was before more expressly revealed against the unrighteousness of the Jews, God in the meantime so far winking at the unrighteousness of the gentiles, as to make no express denunciation of his wrath against them; but now he calls all men every where to repent of their unrighteousness, because he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness, Acts xvii. 30, 31.

[12] Ἐπὶ πᾶσαν ἀσέβειαν καὶ ἀδικίαν ἀνθρώπων, Against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men.] The ungodliness of men signifies their impiety in robbing God of his honour, and giving it to graven images, or to them which by nature were no gods, and so being ungrateful to him, who was the author of all their blessings, ver. 11—26. their unrighteousness is their injustice to one another, from ver. 26. to the 30th. And they are said to retain the truth in unrighteousness, by acting contrary to the notions of it they had, or might have learned, from the law of nature, and by suppressing or corrupting the dictates of their natural conscience. So of the builders of the tower of Babel, Philo saith,* that it sufficed them not τὰ πρὸς τοὺς ὁμοφύλους συγχεῖν δίκαια, to confound the laws of justice among men, but also they invaded heaven, ἀδικίαν μὲν σπείροντες, ἀσέβειαν δὲ θερίζοντες, sowing unrighteousness, and reaping ungodliness.

[13] Ver. 20. Ἀπὸ κτίσεως κόσμου, From the creation of the world.] This phrase seems not to signify the means by which they came to the knowledge of God, for that is afterward expressed in these words, ποιήμασι νοούμενα, being made known by his works: but rather to import, that from the beginning of the world, the heathens had this means of knowing the true God from the works of the creation; so ἀπ' ἀρχῆς κόσμου is from the beginning of the world, Matt. xxiv. 21. ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου, from the foundation of the world, Matt. xiii. 35. Luke xi. 50. Heb. iv. 3. ix. 26. Strange is the conceit of a learned person, who interprets these and all the following words of this chapter of the gnostics; for who ever heard that the gnostics changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to birds, and fourfooted beasts, and creeping things? Who of the ancients ever said, Their women changed the natural use of the body for that which is against nature? Or, how is it possible that the apostle should here accuse them of all this idolatry and image-worship, and yet in the next chapter say of the same gnostics, according to the interpretation of the same person, Thou that abhorrest idols, dost thou commit sacrilege? ver. 22. Doubtless the apostle speaks here of that knowledge of God, which by the light of nature was in the heart of the gentiles, and so was manifest in, and to them, even from the time of the creation of the world, by his works, because the heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handy-work, Psal. xix. 1. and therefore doth not here say, that his mercy, and grace, and love to mankind, but that his eternal power and Godhead was shewed by these works, which yet in reason he should have mentioned here, as he doth elsewhere, had he spoken of the discoveries God made of himself by the gospel-revelation.

[14] Ver. 23. Τὴν δόξαν τοῦ ἀφθάρτου Θεοῦ, The glory of the incorruptible God.] The description of God in the New Testament is this, that he dwelleth in light inaccessible, 1 Tim. i. 16. that he is light, 1 John i. 5, 6. And thus he always exhibited himself to men in a mighty splendour of flame and light, as a visible token of his special and majestic presence. Thus he appeared to the antediluvians, to Adam, saith the learned Bishop of Ely on Gen. ii. 15. iii. 8. and to Cain and Abel, when they brought their offerings to the Lord, i. e. to the place where the Schechinah or glorious presence used to appear; for God had respect to Abel and his offering, i. e. saith Theodotius's translation, ἐνεπύρησεν, he set it on fire by a stream of light, or flame from the Schechinah, which then usually appeared at the place of worship: why else doth Cain complain thus, From thy face shall I be hid? Or why he is said to go out from the presence of the Lord? Gen. iv. 4. 14. So after the flood, we may presume he appeared to Noah offering burnt-offerings to him; for God accepting his oblation, as he did that of Abel's, it is reasonable to conceive that he gave the like token of that acceptance. So he appeared to Abraham, when he said unto him, Get thee out of thine own country, in a lamp of fire consuming his sacrifices, Gen. xv. 17. Whence St. Stephen saith, ὁ Θεὸς δόξης, the God of glory appeared to our father Abraham, Acts vii. 2. In this visible majesty God appeared to him again, xvii. 1. For in the conclusion of that chapter it is said, God went up from Abraham, i. e. the glory of the Lord ascended, saith the Chaldee paraphrase, and B. Uziel. So he appeared to Moses in the bush, Exod. iii. 2. so to the people on Mount Sinai, Exod. xxiv. 16, 17. where τὸ εἶδος τῆς δόξης τοῦ Κυρίου ὡσεὶ πῦρ, the sight of the glory of the Lord was like fire. This visible appearance of God in the light is above thirty times in the Old Testament styled the glory of the Lord. (See note on Phil. ii. 8. and on Heb. i. 3.) And this Schechinah was not only given to the Jews after the law, but to the gentiles before the law, as a preservative from idolatry, or to instruct them to make no other resemblance of him, or symbol of his presence, besides that which he from the beginning had chosen to appear in; but this, saith the apostle, they changed into the similitude of men and birds, &c. And of the Jews making the golden calf, God says, they changed δόξαν αὐτῶν, their glory into the similitude of a calf, Psal. cvi. 20. and of the same Jews departing from God to idols, it is said, My people ἠλλάξατο τὴν δόξαν αὐτοῦ, hath changed its glory for that which cannot profit them, Jer. ii. 11.

[15] Ver. 25. Ἐλάτρευσαν τῇ κτίσει, They served the creature.] In the twenty-third verse they are charged only with false representations of God; in this also with a false object of their worship, by giving the Divine honour to a creature.

[16] Ver. 28. Εἰς ἀδόκιμον νοῦν, To a reprobate mind.] To a mind that could not be approved of by God or men, to do τὰ μὴ καθήκοντα, things not agreeable to nature, or to reason.

[17] Παρέδωκεν αὐτοὺς ὁ Θεὸς, God gave them up to a reprobate mind. Ver. 24. God gave them up in the lustings of their hearts to uncleanness. Ver. 26. God gave them up to dishonourable affections.] Here the fathers carefully inform us, that these phrases cannot be so understood as to lay upon them, of whom St. Paul speaks, a necessity of being thus unclean and unnatural in their affections, or thus perverse in their minds. For then (say they*) this would not be their fault, nor would it be blameworthy in them to do all these things.

Secondly, They positively tell us, that the apostle here puts the phrase,† He gave them up, for he permitted them to be given up.

Thirdly, That this was done, (1.) by leaving them naked and destitute of his former providence and care of them;‡ not giving them any warning of his displeasure against them for these things by his prophets, as he did to the old world, and Nineveh, or by his judgments, in order to their reformation. (2.) By giving them up to Satan,* that unclean spirit, who will not fail, when he hath permission, to provoke them to such uncleanness, and who is that god of the world, who blinds men's eyes, that they should not see the truth, 2 Cor. iv. 4. So the Lord moved David to say, Go, number Israel and Judah, 2 Sam. xxiv. 1. i. e. Satan provoked him to do it, 1 Chron. xxi. 1. And thus, say they, a physician gives up his patient to do what he will, when he finds he will not follow his prescriptions. Lastly, They observe, that they were thus deserted and given up by God, as the just punishment of their iniquities committed against the law of nature, which they had received, because they held the truth revealed in unrighteousness; (ver. 18.) because when they knew God, they did not glorify him as God, nor were they thankful; (ver. 21.) and because, knowing that they who did these things were worthy of death, they not only did the same, but had pleasure in them that did them; and so indeed† they were delivered up to do these things by their own wickedness, (ver. 24. 26.) Whence the same apostle saith, ἑαυτοὺς παρέδωκαν, they gave themselves up to all lasciviousness, Eph. iv. 19.

Thus on the contrary we say, Such a man's money destroyed him, when it was not the money, but his intemperate and evil use of it that did so. And such a man's flatterers corrupted him, when it was his hearkening to them, and being persuaded by them which did it; whereas he had it in his power not to hearken to them. And in this permissive sense the word παρέδωκεν, he gave them up, is used almost a hundred times in the Old Testament; when God is said to give men up into the hands of their enemies, to give them up to the sword. Thus the three children παρέδωκαν, gave up their bodies to be burned, Dan. iii. 20. thus David prays he may not be given up into the hand of his oppressors, i. e. that God would not leave him to their power, Psal. cxix. 121. and the son of Sirach, that God would not give him up to a proud look, Ecclus. xxiii. 4. and so God gave his people up to their own hearts' lusts; i. e. he let them follow their own inventions, Psal. lxxxi. 12. And this is farther evident from ver. 32. where they are said to have done all these things against their knowledge of the judgment of God upon such evil-doers.

He that would see a larger comment upon ver. 29—31. let him consult the learned Grotius; I only shall observe from the Greek commentators, 1. That from these words, being filled with all unrighteousness, it seemeth reasonable to interpret almost all that follows as some species of unrighteousness or injustice. 2. That πονηρία signifies that wickedness which causes men to do mischief against their neighbour by treachery; κακία, to do it out of malice; κακοήθεια, to accustom themselves to do so. 3. That ψιθυρισταὶ, are they that whisper things to the damage of others when they are present; καταλαλοι, they that openly defame them being absent. 4. Ὑπερηφανία, is that pride which [18] Ver. 32. Ἄξιοι θανάτου, Worthy of death.] That murder, adultery, and unnatural lusts, deserved death, they knew not only by the light of nature and of conscience, but by their own laws, condemning them who did them to death. That all these sins being species of injustice, condemned by the law of nature, rendered them obnoxious to the displeasure of that God who is the governor of the world, and the avenger of all unrighteousness; and so obnoxious to death for violating the laws he had given them to govern themselves by, they might know by the light of nature.

Hence of their Tartarus, which they held to be *carcer pœnarum infernarum, Tertullian speaks thus; Illuc abstrudi solent impii quoque in parentes, et in sorores incesti, et maritarum adulteri, et virginum raptores, et puerorum contaminatores, et qui sæviunt, et qui furantur, et qui occidunt, et qui decipiunt; and to this agrees the description of their punishments in Virgil:†

" Hic, quibus invisi fratres, dum vita manebat,
Pulsatusve parens, et fraus innexa clienti;
Aut qui divitiis soli incubuere repertis,
Nec partem posuere suis: quæ maxima turba est;
Quique ob adulterium cæsi; quique arma secuti
Impia, nec veriti dominorum fallere dextras;
Inclusi pœnam expectant, &c.
Vendidit hic auro patriam, dominumque potentem
Imposuit: fixit leges pretio, atque refixit.
Hic thalamum invasit natæ, vetitosque Hymenæos,
Ausi omnes immane nefas."

Mr. L. here reads οὐκ ἐνόησαν ὅτι, and renders the words thus, who knowing the judgment of God, knew not, that they who did these things were worthy of death; but this reading cannot stand: for what righteous judgment of God could they know to be due to them who did these things, who knew not that they were worthy of death, and to whom sin (saith he) could not be imputed without a positive law, which we know the gentiles had not? See the reading of the text largely confirmed, Examen Millii in locum.

[19] Συνευδοκοῦσι τοῖς πράσσουσι, Have pleasure in them that do them.] This, say the Greek commentators, is much worse than the bare doing of them; for a man may do them through the power of temptation, and by consideration may after become sensible of his folly, and repent of it; but when he is arrived at the height of wickedness, that he not only approves, but delights in seeing the like things done by others, he demonstrates such a strong affection to them as is incurable.

CHAP. II.

1. THEREFORE (since God hath shewed his displeasure thus against the gentiles for sinning against the law of nature), thou art inexcusable, O [1] (Jewish) man, whoever thou art that judgest (so severely of them): for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for [2] thou that judgest doest the same things (offending as much against the law of Moses, as they have done against the law of nature).

2. But whatsoever thou mayest think, [3] we are sure that the judgment of God is according to truth, against them which commit such things (it being equitable that he should, and certain that he will, deal with men according to his word).

3. And (then) thinkest thou this, O man, who judgest them who do such things (against the law of nature), and doest the same (against the law of Moses), that thou shalt escape the judgment of God (which they have so severely felt)?

4. Or despisest thou the riches of his goodness (to thee above them, in giving the law, covenant, and promises, to thee, ix. 4.) and (his) forbearance and long-suffering (exercised hitherto to thee, who hast long deserved his wrath, ix. 22.) not knowing (or discerning) that the goodness of God (naturally) leadeth thee to repentance, (and is a powerful motive to engage thee to it? 2 Pet. iii. 9. 15.)

5. But, after the hardness and impenitency of thy heart (which will not suffer thee to repent and believe the gospel), treasurest (yet) up (more) wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God; (Rom. ix. 22. 1 Thess. ii. 16. v. 9.)

6. Who will render to every man (Jew and gentile) according to his deeds:

7. To them who, [4] by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, and honour, and immortality, eternal life;

8. But to them who are contentious (against), and [5] obey not the truth (of the gospel, as generally you Jews do not), [6] but obey unrighteousness (or falsehood), indignation and wrath,

9. Tribulation and anguish (I say shall be) upon every soul that worketh evil, upon the Jew first, (as being under greater light, and as having the gospel first preached to them, Acts xiii. 46. and to whom Christ was first, and in person sent, Acts iii. 26.) and also upon the gentile: (for though God winked at the times of their former ignorance, Acts xvii. 30. yet now he hath revealed his wrath from heaven against all unrighteousness, i. 17. they must expect his just displeasure who turn not from it to the way of truth, as the gospel is called, 2 Pet. ii. 2.)

10. But glory, honour, and peace, shall be to every man that worketh good, to the Jew first, (as being the church of God, to whom the promises of the Messiah chiefly did belong, Rom. ix. 4.) and also to the (believing) gentile; (they being by faith Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise, Gal. iii. 29.

11. I say to the gentile also,) for there is [7] no respect of persons with God.

12. (Tribulation, and anguish, I say, shall be on every soul that worketh evil, whether Jew or gentile,) for [8] as many as have sinned without the (written) law (which is the case of the gentiles) shall perish without (that) law (being condemned by the law written in their hearts): and as many as have sinned in (or under) the law (which is the case of the Jews), shall be judged (and condemned for their evil deeds) by the law:

13. For (know this, oh, thou Jew, that) [9] not the hearers (only) of the law are (upon that account) just before God, but the doers of it (only) shall be justified, (i. e. accepted of God, as acting suitably to their profession.

14. And say not, That the gentiles therefore cannot be justified or accepted with God, because they having not the law cannot be doers of it;) for [10] when the gentiles, who have not the law (of Moses), do by nature the things contained in the (moral) law, they, having not the (written) law, are a law (a rule of living) to themselves:

15. (Doing those things) which shew the work of the law written in their hearts, their consciences also bearing witness (to it), and their thoughts meanwhile (or their reasonings within themselves) accusing or else excusing one another; (and so the uncircumcision keeping the righteousness of the law, and fulfilling the law, shall be by God accounted for circumcision, and be as acceptable to him as the circumcision, ver. 26, 27.

16. And these rewards and punishments will be distributed to Jew and gentile) in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men's (hearts) by Jesus Christ according to my gospel; (or, as my gospel testifies he will: for the heathens are not to be judged according to the tenor of the gospel, but according to the light of nature, ver. 12.)

17. Behold, (thou who gloriest in this, that) [11] thou art called a Jew, (one of that nation which God hath known above all the families of the earth, Amos iii. 2. to whom pertaineth the adoption and covenants, ix. 4.) and resteth in (the outward performances of) the law, and makest thy boast of God (as the author and patron of thy religion, and thy God in covenant),

18. And (that thou) knowest his will, and approvest the things that are most excellent, being instructed out of the law (concerning them);

19. And art confident that thou thyself art (able to be) a guide [12] to the blind (gentile), a light of them (that sit) in darkness,

20. An instructor of [13] the foolish, a teacher of babes, which hast the form of knowledge and of truth in the law (i. e. a scheme or draught of the affirmative precepts of the law which instruct thee what to do, and of the negative precepts which teach thee what to leave undone).

21. Thou therefore [14] which teachest another (i. e. who undertakest to be a guide unto and teacher of the gentile), teachest thou not thyself (to practise thine own lessons)? thou that preachest (or proclaimest) a man should not steal, dost thou steal (and so condemnest thyself out of thine own mouth)?

22. Thou that sayest a man [15] should not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? [16] Thou that abhorrest idols, dost thou commit sacrilege (robbing God of his honour another way)?

23. Thou that makest thy boast of (thy skill in) the law, through breaking the law (in those instances which the conscience of the very heathen doth condemn) dishonourest thou (the name of) God (among the gentiles)?

24. For [17] the name of God is blasphemed among the gentiles through you (Jews, pretending to be so dear to God, and so great favourites of heaven, and yet living so licentiously as you do, and so it hath happened to you, according) as it is written (of you, Isa. lii. 5. Ezek. xxxvi. 23.

25. This violation of the law cuts off the benefit of your circumcision;) for circumcision verily profiteth, if thou keepest the law, (as circumcision obligeth thee to do, Gal. v. 2.) but if thou art (still) a breaker of the law, thy circumcision is made (of no more advantage to free thee from God's condemnation, than) uncircumcision. [18]

26. Therefore (on the other side) if the uncircumcision (i. e. the gentile, though uncircumcised) [19] keep the righteousness of the law, shall not his uncircumcision be accounted for circumcision? (i. e. shall he not be as acceptable to God, as if he had been circumcised?)

27. And shall not (the) [20] uncircumcision which is by nature (i. e. the gentile, who continues uncircumcised as he was by nature), if it fulfil the law, judge (and condemn) thee, who by the letter (i. e. having the letter of the law) dost transgress the law?

28. For he is not (in God's account) a Jew (i. e. one beloved of him) who is one (only) outwardly (by profession); neither is that (valued by him as true) circumcision, which is outward in the flesh (only).

29. But he is a Jew (in God's esteem) who is one inwardly (by the purification of his heart from inward filth, and evil dispositions and affections); and (the) circumcision (valued by him) is that of the heart, in the spirit (wrought in us by the Spirit), and not in (or by) the letter; whose praise is not of men (who are not able to discern it), but of God (who is the searcher of the heart).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. II.

[1] THE apostle had in the former chapter laid down this as the foundation of his discourse, that the gospel of Christ was the power of God to the salvation both of Jew and gentile, ver. 16. and that there only was revealed that righteousness of God through faith, by which alone life and salvation was to be obtained. He had also shewed the necessity of this faith, because the wrath of God was revealed from heaven against all unrighteousness of men, who held the truth in unrighteousness; and that this the gentiles had done, by acting against the light of nature; and that God had been angry with, and punished them for it, he had shewn from ver. 19. to the end of that chapter.

These gentiles were by the Jews reputed as unclean, great sinners, and so incapable of salvation; and their great quarrel against the gospel was this, that it admitted such men to the favour of God without circumcision, and obedience to the law of Moses. To those Jews the apostle in this chapter directeth his discourse, proving here, that they who lived under the law wanted this justification as much as others, being also great sinners: and in the following chapters, that neither they nor the gentiles could obtain this justification by the law. (See ver. 13. 17.)

[2] Ver. 1. Τὰ γὰρ αὐτὰ πράσσεις, For thou doest the same things.] If to any one it seem strange that the apostle should pronounce the Jews guilty of the same sins of which he had accused the gentiles, chap. i. let him consider what their own Josephus * hath recorded to them, and he will cease to wonder. For, first, he assures us, there was not a nation under heaven more wicked than they were. What (saith he) have you done of all the good things required by our lawgiver? What have ye not done of all those things which he pronounced accursed? So that † had the Romans delayed to come against these execrable persons, I believe

(saith he) either the earth would have swallowed up, or a deluge would have swept away, their city; or fire from heaven would have consumed it, as it did Sodom, for it brought forth a generation of men far more wicked than they who suffered such things. There is not a sin mentioned, chap. i. of which he doth not in that history accuse them, not excepting that of unnatural lusts: for of their zealots, he saith,* It was sport to them to force women; they freely gave up themselves to the passions of women, exercising and requiring unnatural lusts, and filling the whole city with impurities. And again, They committed all kinds of wickedness, omitting none which ever came to the memory of man, esteeming the worst of evils to be good, and finding that reward of their iniquity which was meet, and a judgment worthy of God.

[3] Ver. 2. But we are sure, οἴδαμεν δὲ, or, and we know.

[4] Ver. 7. Καθ' ὑπομονὴν ἔργου ἀγαθοῦ, By patient continuance in well-doing.] This good work being put in the singular number, seems to intimate some work eminently so. Now when the Jews asked our Saviour, What shall we do that we may work the works of God? his answer was, This is the work of God, that ye believe in him whom he hath sent, John vi. 28, 29. The preaching of this faith is styled emphatically, the works, Acts v. 31. xiii. 2. xiv. 26. xv. 58. and sometimes the work of Christ, Phil. ii. 30. the work of the Lord, 1 Cor. xvi. 10. The faith wrought by it is ἔργον πίστεως, the work of faith, 2 Thess. i. 2. and he that begets it in us, is said to begin in us ἔργον ἀγαθὸν, the good work, Phil. i. 6. And in this sense it accords well with the scope of the apostle, whether it be joined with the word patience, or with the following words; for the apostle had said in the former chapter, that the gospel of Christ was the power of God through faith to salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the gentile, Rom. i. 16. This he here prosecutes, saying, that to them who by patience in the faith of Christ, seek the glory, honour, and immortality, promised in the gospel, God will give eternal life.

Ἀφθαρσίαν, Incorruption.] This, saith Theophylact, refers to the body, and by using this word τὰς περὶ ἀναστάσεως ἀνοίγει θύρας, he openeth the gates of the resurrection.

[5] Ver. 8. Καὶ ἀπειθοῦσι μὲν τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, And obey not the truth.] The gospel being styled the truth of God, Rom. iii. 7. xv. 8. the word of truth, Eph. i. 3. Colos. i. 5. 2 Tim. ii. 15. James i. 18. the knowledge of it being ἐπίγνωσις ἀληθείας, the knowledge of the truth, 1 Tim. ii. 4. iv. 3. 2 Tim. ii. 25. Tit. i. 1. Heb. x. 26. the belief of it being πίστις ἀληθείας, the belief of the truth, 2 Thess. ii. 13. obedience to it being obedience to the truth, Gal. i. 3. v. 7. walking according to it, being walking according to the truth, 1 John ii. 4. John iii. 3. the gospel itself being emphatically styled the truth, Eph. iv. 21. 2 John 3, 4. 3 John 12. to know it, being to know the truth, 1 John ii. 21. to profess it, to be of the truth, 1 John iii. 19. to reject it, not to believe the truth, 2 Thess. ii. 12. to err from it, to err from the truth, Titus i. 14. James v. 19. I say, this being so, οἱ ἐξ ἐριθείας, they that are contentious here, and obey not the truth, may be, first, the unbelieving Jews, or false apostles, coming from them, who preached Christ, ἐξ ἐριθείας, out of contention against Paul, Phil. i. 16. and, secondly, the gentiles, which spake against the truth, and rejected it; and both these obeyed, and gave up themselves to falsehood: the gentiles, by changing the truth of God into a lie, i. 25. the Jews, by adhering to their vain traditions, which made void the commands of God, and owning them as derived from Moses, when they were only the doctrines of men.

[6] Πειθομένοις δὲ τῇ ἀδικίᾳ, But obey unrighteousness.] Here Chrysostom notes, that the apostle doth not say, Βιαζομένοις, τυραννουμένοις, who are forced to, but who obey unrighteousness, ἵνα μάθῃς ὅτι προαιρέσεως τὸ πτῶμα, οὐκ ἀνάγκης τὸ ἔγκλημα, ὅθεν καὶ ἀσύγνωστοι, that thou mayest learn, that they offend of choice, and not of necessity, and therefore are unworthy of pardon.

[7] Ver. 11. Οὐ προσωπολημψία, No respect of persons.] i. e. He is not one who will connive at men doing wickedly, because they are Jews, whilst he punisheth the like wickedness in the gentiles; or afford justification and salvation to the Jew believing, and working that which is good, and not to the believing and obedient gentile. (Rom. iii. 29, 30.)

[8] Ver. 12. Ἀνόμως ἀπολοῦνται ἐν νόμῳ κριθήσονται, As many as have sinned without law, shall also perish without law, and as many as have sinned in the law, shall be judged by the law.] Here Mr. Dodwell* says, "That some advantage may be taken from the words ἀπολοῦνται, and κριθήσονται, that which is called perishing in the case of the gentiles, and so may be understood as well of ceasing to be, as of any positive inflictions, being opposed to be judged in the latter clause relating to the Jews." But (1.) the word ἀπολλύειν, to perish, is often used in the New Testament, and especially in the Epistles, of those Christians, who by his own hypothesis are to perish by being subject to eternal punishments, as in those words, μὴ ἀπόλλυε, destroy not with thy meat thy brother, for whom Christ died, Rom. xiv. 15. and in 1 Cor. viii. 11. καὶ ἀπολεῖται, and so shall thy brother perish for whom Christ died: so also 2 Cor. xv. 4, 5. 2 Thess. ii. 10. 2 Pet. iii. 9. yea, this criticism would exempt not only Judas the traitor, that υἱὸς ἀπολείας, son of perdition, John xvii. 12. but even the very devils from this future punishment; for their question is, ἦλθες ἀπολέσαι ἡμᾶς; Art thou come to destroy us before the time? Luke iv. 34. It is used in the Gospels of Christ's little ones in those words, It is not the will of my Father, ἵνα ἀπόληται, that one of these little ones should perish, Matt. v. 29. xviii. 14. of losing the soul by denying Christ, Matt. x. 39. xvi. 25. And, lastly, it is used of the destruction of soul and body in hell, Matt. x. 28. (2.) Κριθήσονται, here applied to the Jews, signifies κατακριθήσονται, they shall be condemned, as appears from the opposition it bears to δικαιωθήσονται, they shall be justified, ver. 13. And this it still doth, and must do, when it relates to the judgment passed upon the wicked at that day: so John iii. 18. xii. 48. xvi. 11. 2 Thess. ii. 12. Heb. xiii. 4. And this being introduced as a proof, that in that day there should be tribulation and anguish upon every soul that worketh evil, whether he be Jew or gentile, and that because God is no respecter of persons, shews that both Jew and gentile working evil must fall under that tribulation and anguish. And the reason of the variation of the words may be probably this, that the gentile being condemned by the law written in his own heart, and so being as it were a confessed criminal, there needs nothing more than to sentence him to the perdition which his sin deserves; whereas the Jew being to be sentenced by a written law, which he may think he has not violated, so as to deserve condemnation, he must be judged and condemned by the sentence which the law hath pronounced against him.

[9] Ver. 13. Οὐ οἱ ἀκροαταὶ τοῦ νόμου, Not the hearers of the law.] The Jewish religion was very much corrupted at our Saviour's coming, so that they thought it sufficient to obtain God's favour, and to secure them from his judgments, (1.) that they were of the seed of Abraham. And hence the Baptist speaks thus to them, Bring forth fruits meet for repentance, and (think it not sufficient to) say within yourselves, We have Abraham for our father, Matt. iii. 8, 9. The Chaldee paraphrasts do often mention their expectation of being preserved for the merits or good works of their forefathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and their writers add, that * hell-fire hath no power over the sinners of Israel, because Abraham and Isaac descend thither to fetch them thence. (2.) They held that circumcision was of sufficient virtue to render them accepted of God, and to preserve them from eternal ruin; for they teach,† that no circumcised person goes to hell, God having promised to deliver them from it, for the merit of circumcision; and having told Abraham, that when his children fell into transgression, and did wicked works, he would remember the odour of their foreskins, and would be satisfied with their piety. And (3.) they taught, that‡ all Israelites had a portion in the world to come; and that notwithstanding their sins, yea, though they were condemned here for their wickedness: this is the first sentence in the Capitula Patrum. whereas of all the gentiles, without exception, they pronounce that§ they are fuel for hell-fire. (4.) They teach, that to be employed in hearing and studying the law, was a thing sufficient to make them acceptable with God. To this St. James seems to refer in these words, And be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own souls, James i. 22. Now most of these vain opinions the apostle in this chapter, and throughout this Epistle, labours to confute: the first here, ver. 9. the second, ver. 25. the third, from ver. 2. to the 9th, and the fourth, in this verse.

[10] Ver. 14. Ὅταν γὰρ ἔθνη, For when the gentiles.] Most interpreters understand this of the believing gentiles, the righteousness of the law being fulfilled in them only, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit, Rom. viii. 4. and he being only the inward Jew, who hath the circumcision of the heart in the spirit, ver. 29. But all the ancient commentators interpret these last six verses, not indeed of the idolatrous gentiles, but of such gentiles as lived before the law, as Melchisedec and Job; or were worshippers of the true God, as Cornelius; or repented, as the Ninevites. These examples, saith Chrysostom, he sets before the Jews, as being such as they could not contradict. And in his comment on the fifteenth verse, he makes this inference from the words,* By these things he shews that God made man sufficient of himself to choose virtue and avoid vice; adding, that this was necessary to be said, to stop the mouths of them who inquired, ποῦ τὸν ἔμπροσθεν χρόνον τὰ τῆς τοσαύτης προνοίας ἦν; where were the footsteps of such a providence in former times? This the apostle seems plainly to insinuate, by arguing that God did and will accept the gentile, living according to the law written in his heart, and therefore owning him as the true God, and honouring or glorifying him as that God, who made the heaven and the earth, because he is no respecter of persons. This seems the obvious meaning of those words of St. Peter, in the case of Cornelius and all his friends, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, (i. e. he affects them not barely because they are circumcised, or of such a nation), but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is acceptable to him, Acts xx. 34, 35. supposing that there might be such in every nation. And the argument of Origen seems here considerable; that† if God condemned the gentiles because they held the truth in unrighteousness, and when they knew God did not glorify him as God, neither were thankful; it seems reasonable to conceive, that had they done what they culpably neglected, and might have done, i. e. had they glorified him as God, and been thankful, they would have done what had been acceptable to God, and fit to be rewarded by his goodness; i. e. had they held the truth in righteousness, and abstained from those actions for which their conscience did accuse them, and for which they knew they were worthy of death, as they who were inexcusable for not doing of them, might have done, they would have escaped the wrath of God revealed from heaven against all unrighteousness. But then these things may here be offered to consideration;

First, That this acceptance may not reach so far as to put them under the same privileges and favours with his church and people; but if they live in such times and places where an exacter knowledge of his will might be obtained, it may induce his providence to find out means of imparting that also to them, as in the case of Cornelius and his friends, who have told things by which he and his house should be saved, Acts xi. 14.

Secondly, That though God may and will reward such honest heathens, because otherwise they could have no encouragement to own or serve him as their God, since he that cometh to God (saith the apostle) must believe that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him, Heb. xi. 6. yet is he not obliged to give them the glorious reward which he hath promised to the Christian: for this not being due to their works, they could not from the light of nature be assured of it; and it being so peculiarly assigned to faith in Christ, both affirmatively and negatively, when the apostle saith, God hath given us eternal life, and that life is in his Son; he that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son hath not life; this is life eternal, that they know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent; this is the true God and eternal life; (1 John v. 11—13. 20. John xvii. 3. see John i. 4. xiii. 16. 36. v. 24. vi. 27.) it cannot well be said to belong to any other; and therefore Origen * freely grants this, and yet thinks such persons may not be utterly deprived of a reward; especially it seems not equitable that they should be deprived of all reward, purely for want of an impossible condition; i. e. because they believed not in him, of whom they had not, and very often could not, have heard. It may be added,

* Διὰ τούτων ἔδειξε πάλιν ὅτι αὐτάρκη τὸν ἄνθρωπον ἐποίησε ὁ Θεὸς πρὸς τὴν τῆς ἀρετῆς αἵρεσιν, καὶ τὴν τῆς κακίας φυγήν.

† "Si enim videtur apostolus condemnare gentiles, ex eo quod naturali intelligentiâ cum cognovissent Deum, non sicut Deum magnificaverunt, quando nun putamus quod etiam collaudare eos possit et debeat, si qui in his cognoscentes Deum, sicut Deum magnificent: dubitari igitur non puto, quin is qui pro malo opere condemnari meruisset, idem, si operatur bonum, remuneratione boni operis dignus haberetur."

Thirdly, That if any of them did arrive at such a state, as made them indeed to fear God, and work righteousness, they did this not merely by the strength of natural light; for though some of them seem to say, that † nature or philosophy was a sufficient guide to virtue; yet that they meant not this exclusively of the Divine assistance, which they saw necessary to preserve them against the infirmities of human nature, their own words ‡ do fully testify. And if God owned any of them as truly righteous, it was by virtue of their faith in God; i. e. that faith by which they believed he was a rewarder of them that diligently seek him; which being, as to kind, the same with that which the apostle so highly commends, Heb. xi. even the expectation of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen, when it produced in them a sincere endeavour to serve and please him, according to the light of nature, and cleave to their duty, though they might suffer for it in this world, might be imputed unto them for righteousness. I conclude these conjectures with Origen on the same place: Sed tamen in arbitrio legentis est probare quæ dicta sunt, vel non.

[11] Ver. 17. Σὺ Ἰουδαῖος ἐπονομάζῃ, Thou art called a Jew.] The apostle doth not here begin to speak to the Jew, but to prove farther and illustrate what he said before, as is evident from the words ἰδὲ σὺ, behold thou (to whom I speak) art called a Jew; he therefore may be supposed to speak this farther, to convince him that he, doing the same things, shall not escape the judgment of God; and that the hearing of the law he doth not practise, will be so far from justifying him before God, that it will add to his condemnation.

[12] Ver. 19. Τυφλῶν, Of the blind.] The blind, and them that sit in darkness, is a periphrasis of the gentiles. (See Isa. ix. 1. xlii. 6, 7. xlix. 9. Luke i. 79. Eph. v. 8.)

[13] Ver. 20. Ἀφρόνων, Of the foolish.] The foolish and the babes seem to be here the proselytes to the Jewish law, whom they accounted as infants new-born.

[14] Ver. 21. Ὁ οὖν διδάσκων ἕτερον, Thou that teachest another.] This verse may be illustrated out of the Jewish writings; for they say, that * he who teacheth others what he doth not himself, is like a blind man who hath a candle in his hand to give light to others, whilst he himself doth walk in darkness. So apposite is the first question to convince those Jews, who pretended to be guides and lights to the blind gentiles, that they themselves were blind. And again, How can a wise man say in the congregation, Thou shalt not steal, when he steals? Whence it appears, that in their account this was sufficient to cut off their pretence to wisdom.

[15] Ver. 22. Ὁ λέγων μὴ μοιχεύειν, Thou that sayest a man should not commit adultery, &c.] Of all these things the Jewish doctors were notoriously guilty, and of most of them they were accused by our Lord. As, v. g. first, that they said, and did not; that they laid heavy burdens upon others, which they would not touch with their own fingers; (Matt. xxiii. 3, 4.) that they made his Father's house a den of thieves; (Matt. xxi. 13. John ii. 16.) that they were guilty of adultery, by unjust divorces; (Matt. xix. 9.) and their polygamy was so shameful, that they would proclaim in any place where they came, "Quænam erit mihi uxor in diem," † Who will be my wife for this day, or while I stay in this place? And surely such a wife was little better than a whore. Hence Justin Martyr ‡ tells the Jews, that wherever they travelled, or came, they did, with the permission of their rabbins, ὀνόματι γάμου γυναῖκας ἄγεσθαι, take women, and use them as their wives, under pretence of marriage. And the theft and merchandise of which they are accused, Matt. xxi. John ii. being about holy things, may be well also styled sacrilege; though of this they being accused in the times of the prophet Malachi, doubtless they were more guilty of it in these worst times. Accordingly Josephus § doth pronounce them guilty, not only of theft, treachery, adultery, sacrilege, but of rapines and murders, and new ways of wickedness invented by them, of all which the temple was made the receptacle. Add to this, that the same Josephus informs us, that not long after the writing of this Epistle, the servants of the high-priests, τὰς τῶν ἱερέων δεκάτας ἐλάμβανον βιαζόμενοι, took away by violence the tithes of the priests, so that many of them perished for want of food. (Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 8. p. 698. E.)

Note also from these words, Thou that abhorrest idols, the mistake of those who think the gnostics are here referred to; they being so far from abhorring idols, that Irenæus ‖ informs us, they had their images, they worshipped idols without fear, and went first to the feasts celebrated in the idol-temple. Origen ¶ also assures us, that he, viz. Simon

Magus, taught his disciples to count idolatry as a thing indifferent.

[16] Thou that abhorrest idols, dost thou commit sacrilege?] Robbing that God of his honour this way, who hath required thee to honour him with thy substance and the first-fruits of thy increase, (Prov. iii. 9. Mal. iii. 8, 9. Ecclus. xxxv. 8.) as the idolater doth by giving his honour to an idol. And of this sin they being accused by God himself, declaring by his prophet Malachi, that they had robbed him in tithes and offerings, doubtless they were more guilty of it in these worst times of the Jewish nation.

[17] Ver. 24. Βλασφημεῖται ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσι, Is blasphemed among the gentiles.] Of this Josephus * doth frequently accuse them, saying, What wickedness do you conceal or hide which is not known to your enemies? You triumph in your wickedness, strive daily who shall be most vile, making a show of your wickedness as if it were virtue. And thinkest thou this, O man, that thou shalt escape the judgment of God, who punisheth the gentiles, when thou art as guilty as they, of acting against thy conscience, and doing that for which thine own mouth condemns thee, or which is as bad as that which thou condemnest in them, and which doth also cause them to blaspheme that holy name by which thou art called? surely, after these things so scandalously done, it will be of no advantage to thee that thou art called a Jew, or hast received the sign of circumcision.

[18] Ver. 25.] Having thus proved that the sins of the Jews must render them obnoxious to the Divine wrath, as well as those of the gentiles, he proceeds to prove what he said, ver. 7. 10. that the righteousness of the circumcised gentile must also render him acceptable to God, and rewardable by him, as well as the righteousness of the Jew.

[19] Ver. 26. Τὰ δικαιώματα τοῦ νόμου, The righteousnesses or ordinances of the law.] The word δικαιώματα is used sometimes for the Divine judgments, which being always done in equity, and according to the deserts of men, are fitly called δικαιώματα, or righteous judgments, Rom. i. 32. Rev. xv. 4. And sometimes it relates to the ceremonial institutions which God thought fit for a season to prescribe to the Jews, and then it seems best to be rendered ordinances, as Heb. ix. 1. 10. And sometimes to the moral precepts of the law, as when the apostle saith, τὸ δικαίωμα τοῦ νόμου, the righteousness of the law is fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit, which seems to be the sense of the phrase here.

[20] Ver. 27. Ἡ ἐκ φύσεως ἀκροβυστία, The uncircumcision which is by nature.] Most interpreters think that the apostle speaks in these two verses of the believing gentile, and only doth design to prove against the Jew, that his want of circumcision, if he be a doer of righteousness, will not hinder his acceptance with God, (1 Cor. vii. 19. Gal. v. 6. vi. 15.) and that because this righteousness of the law is said to be fulfilled by them who walk according to the Spirit, (viii. 4.) i. e. by them who are in Christ Jesus, (ver. 1.) But Grotius and Œcumenius seem to interpret this of the heathens, such as the centurions in the gospel were, because the condemnation of the Jew seems to arise from this, that he who had the letter of the law, did not that which they who were without it did.

CHAP. III.

1. (BUT you will say, If the uncircumcised person, keeping the righteousness of the law, is to be reckoned as circumcised, ii. 26. and if the inward circumcision be that alone which is acceptable to God, ver. 28, 29.) what advantage then hath the Jew (above the gentile)? or what profit is there of (the) circumcision (above uncircumcision?

2. I answer,) Much every way: (ix. 4. but) chiefly, because unto them were committed the oracles of God, (in which the covenants and promises made to them, and chiefly that of the Messiah, and of justification by faith in him, were contained;

3. Which oracles must be made good notwithstanding their infidelity:) for what if some of them (to whom these oracles and the promise of the Messiah, or a seed in whom the nations of the earth shall be blessed, were committed,) did not believe (in the promised seed), shall their unbelief make the faith (or fidelity) of God (in making this promise to Abraham) of none effect?

4. God forbid (that such a thought should enter into our hearts): yea (Gr. but, on the contrary), let God be (acknowledged) true (and faithful to his word), but every man a liar (i. e. though all men should prove liars); as it is written, (Psal. li. 4.) [1] That thou mayest be justified in thy sayings (or mayest appear just and faithful in performing them), and clear when [2] thou art judged (i. e. when thou judgest and contendest with men).

5. But if our unrighteousness commends (illustrates and establishes) [3] the righteousness of God (that way of justification by faith which he alone approves of), [4] what shall we say? Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance (on the Jew and gentile, for these sins which thus commend his righteousness, and shew the wisdom and grace of God in admitting this way of our justification)? [5] I speak as a man, (i. e. as a heathen or unbeliever would be apt to conclude from our doctrine of justification by faith:

6. For) God forbid (that I should have a thought that God can be unrighteous): for how then shall God judge the world (for their unrighteousness?

7. Speak, I say their sense,) for (say they) if the truth of God hath more abounded to his glory [6] through my lie (if the truth of his promise to justify the gentile through faith in Christ, hath appeared more illustriously to the glory of his grace, through my idolatry, and changing his truth into a lie), why am I also judged as a sinner (as well as the Jew)?

8. And (why will it) not rather (follow, ὅτι ποιήσωμεν*),* that we should do evil that good may come (or that God may be glorified)? as we be slanderously reported, and as some affirm, that (in effect) we say, (by asserting the doctrine of justification by faith, which yet we are so far from saying, that we declare them who do so men) [7] whose damnation is just.

9. What then (or wherefore) are we better than they? (Do we Jews excel the gentiles?) [8] No, in no wise (οὐ πάντως, not altogether, as to the benefit mentioned ver. 2. but not as to justification): for we have before proved (touching) both Jews (chap. ii.) and gentiles, (chap. i.) that they are all under sin (and so all stand in need of justification by faith;

* Τί δὲ σιγᾶται παρ' ὑμῖν ἢ τί κρύπτεται, τί δὲ οὐχὶ καὶ τοῖς ἐχθροῖς φανερὸν γέγονε; πομπεύετε γὰρ παρανομοῦντες, καὶ καθ' ἡμέραν ἐρίζετε, τίς χείρων γένηται, τῆς ἀδικίας ὥσπερ ἀρετῆς ἐπίδειξιν ποιούμενοι. De Bell. Jud. lib. vi. p. 931. B. C.

10. The Jews, I say, as well as the gentiles,) [9]as it is written (of them), There is none righteous, no, not one:

11. There is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God.

12. They are all gone out of the way, they are altogether become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

13. Their throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues have they used deceit; the poison of asps is under their lips: (they are men)

14. Whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness:

15. Their feet are swift to shed blood:

16. Destruction and misery are in their way:

17. And the way of peace have they not known:

18. There is no fear of God before their eyes.

19. (Which words of the Psalmist may justly be applied to them;) for we know that what things soever the law saith (not applying the words to any others), it saith to them that are under the law: that (not only the mouths of the gentiles, but) every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may (see they are) become guilty before God.

20. Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight: for by the law is the [10]knowledge of (that) sin (which rendereth us obnoxious to condemnation).

21. But now (in the dispensation of the gospel) the righteousness of God without (performing the works of) the law is manifested (to the world), being witnessed (i.e. attested to) by the law (giving us the knowledge of sin, ver. 20.) and by the prophets (declaring that the just man shall live by faith);

22. Even the righteousness of God which is by faith in Jesus Christ to all, and upon all that believe: for (as to the way of justification) there is no difference (betwixt Jew and gentile):

23. For all have sinned, and (so) come short of (attaining) [11]the glory of God (without a free act of justification by grace);

24. Being justified (i.e. absolved from the guilt and condemnation due to us for our past sins) freely by his grace, [12]through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ.

25. Whom God hath set forth (or proposed) to be [13]a propitiation (a propitiatory or mercy-seat) through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness (i.e. the way of justification by faith, which God alone admits of) [14]for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God, (not imputing their trespasses to them who believe in him, 2 Cor. v. 19.

26. I say, God hath now proposed him as our propitiatory,) [15]to declare at this time his righteousness (or the way of justification he allows of): that he (by justifying us only through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus), might (appear to) be [16]just (in requiring this satisfaction for our sins), and yet the justifier of them that believe in Jesus.

27. (And if this be the only way of justification, or being righteous before God,) where is (there any ground of) boasting then? it is excluded. By what law? (that) of works? Nay; (for he that is justified by works hath whereof to boast, ἔχει καύχημα, iv. 2.) but by the law of faith (only).

28. Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by [17]faith (alone) without (respect to) the deeds of the law (given to the Jews; for)

29. Is he the God of the Jews only? is he not also of the gentiles, (which have not the law? hath he vouchsafed to them no means of justification or acceptance with him?) Yes, (doubtless he is the God) of the gentiles also:

30. Seeing it is one God, who will justify [18]the circumcision by faith, and (the) uncircumcision through (the same) faith.

31. Do we then make void the law through (this) faith? (Do we contradict it, or say it is a useless thing, or against the promises? Gal. iii. 19. 21.) God forbid (that this should be affirmed by us): nay, we establish the law, (by declaring that it gives the knowledge of sin, ver. 20. gives witness to this way of justification, ver. 21. and so shews the necessity of faith, and so is our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, who is the end of the law, Rom. x. 4. Gal. iii. 24.)

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. III.

[1] Ver. 4. Ὅπως ἂν δικαιωθῇς, That thou mayest be justified.] These words are a confession of king David, that how severely soever God should deal with him for his sin, he could not accuse him of too much rigour, but must justify him in his proceedings, and clear him from all imputations of injustice; and so they cannot be here brought to prove, as Esthius imagines, that notwithstanding our sins, God will be faithful to his promises, but to shew, that though God should reject the Jews for their infidelity, they would have no reason to complain of his severity, or charge him with injustice or unfaithfulness on that account, they having forfeited their right to be the seed of Abraham, the father of the faithful, by their infidelity, and the gentiles, by imitating his faith, being now become his children. Note also, that the Hebrew זכך, which we render pure or clean, Psal. li. 4. is well rendered by the Septuagint νικήσῃς, might overcome; it bearing oft that sense in the Syriac, and among the rabbins, as Buxtorf proves in his Lexicon, p. 668.

[2] Εν τῷ κρίνεσθαί σε, Heb. בשפטך, When thou judgest,] Or contendest with any man, or enterest into judgment with him, or indictest or accusest him of sin; so the word is very often used in the Old and New Testament. So Job xiii. 19. τίς ἐστι ὁ κριθησόμενός μοι; Who is he that will contend with me? Eccles. vi. 10. οὐ δυνήσεται κριθῆναι, He cannot contend with one who is stronger than himself; Isa. xlii. 26. Put me in remembrance, καὶ κριθῶμεν, and let us plead together; Isa. lxvi. 16. ἐν τῷ πυρὶ κριθήσεται ὁ Κύριος, By fire will the Lord plead with all flesh; Matt. v. 40. Θέλοντί σοι κριθῆναι, To him that will contend with thee; 1 Cor. vi. 1. τολμᾷ τις κρίνεσθαι; Dares any one contend before the unjust? See note on 1 Pet. iv. 6.

[3] Ver. 5. Δικαιοσύνην Θεοῦ, The righteousness of God.] That this phrase in the Epistles doth signify always the righteousness of faith, or our justification through faith in Christ, hath been shewed, note on Rom. i. 17. and on 2 Cor. v. 21. and this seems to establish the exposition given in the paraphrase.

[4] Τί ἐροῦμεν; μὴ ἄδικος ὁ Θεὸς ἐπιφέρων τὴν ὀργήν, What shall we say? Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance?] The apostle had laid down the proposition which is the foundation of this discourse, and of the whole Epistle, in these words: The gospel is the power of God to the salvation of every one that believes, Jew or gentile; for therein is revealed the righteousness of God by faith, to beget faith in both. The necessity of this faith he shews, (1.) with respect to the gentiles, because they being unrighteous, could not otherwise be justified before God, or escape his wrath, revealed against all unrighteousness, by any other way than that of faith; and this proof he concludes chapter the first. In the second chapter he shews the same, touching the Jews, by reason of their unrighteousness, and therefore saith here, ver. 9. We have before proved both Jews and gentiles to be under sin. Now this most plainly serves to commend and establish this way of righteousness by faith in Christ, from the necessity of it to the justification both of Jew and gentile. This then must be the import of the objection; If the unrighteousness both of Jew and gentile tends so visibly to illustrate and recommend the wisdom of God, and the grace or favour of God, in appointing this way of justification by faith in Christ, is it righteous in God to punish both Jew and gentile, as you say he did, (i. 24. 26. 32.) and will do, (i. 18. ii. 2. 4—6. 8, 9.) for that unrighteousness that tends so highly to the glory of the gospel-grace?

[5] Κατ' ἄνθρωπον λέγω, I speak as a man.] i. e. As a mere natural man, not acquainted with the revealed will of God, or not acted by his Spirit: so Chrysostom and Œcumenius, I speak κατ' ἀνθρώπινον λογισμὸν, according to human reason; οὐ γὰρ ἐγὼ ταῦτα λέγω, ἀλλὰ τῶν ἄλλων τέθεικα λογισμοὺς, for it is not I that say these things, but I propose the reasonings of others. That this is the constant import of the phrase, see note on 1 Cor. ix. 8, 9. 15. 32.

[6] Ver. 7. Ἐν τῷ ἐμῷ ψεύσματι, By my lie.] The idols of the heathens are called lying vanities, Psal. xxxi. 7. Jonah ii. 8. numina falsa; the makers of them are said to frame שֶׁקֶר, a lie, Jer. x. 14. and to have and frame a lie with their right hand, Isa. xliv. 20. They who worship them are said, to turn aside to lies, Psal. xl. 5. and to hearken to a teacher of lies, Hab. ii. 18. and to turn the truth of God into a lie, Rom. i. 25. Hence are the heathens introduced making this confession, Surely our fathers did inherit lies, ὡς ψεύδη ἐκτήσαντο οἱ πατέρες ἡμῶν εἴδωλα, Jer. xvi. 19. Now this argument being that by which the apostle in the first chapter proves the gentiles to be sinners, worthy of condemnation, and so incapable of justification by any other way than that of faith, this may reasonably be supposed to be the thing referred to in this verse.

[7] Ver. 8. Ὧν τὸ κρίμα ἔνδικόν ἐστι, Whose damnation is just.] They by thus objecting against that dispensation of Divine grace and wisdom, which they should thankfully embrace and accept, and without which they cannot be justified, and so rejecting it as absurd in their imaginations, render it just that they should still lie under the guilt of sin, and under the wrath of God for it.

[8] Ver. 9. Οὐ πάντως, No, in no wise.] That these words may be rendered, not altogether, as well as οὐ πάντες is rendered not all, 2 Thess. iii. 2. Heb. iii. 16. we learn from Œcumenius, who paraphrases them thus, οὐκ ἐκ παντὸς τρόπου, *not in every kind; so οὐ πάντως signifies, 1 Cor. v. 10. viz. I do not altogether forbid you to accompany with fornicators, for then you must go out of the world; and then the context will plainly force this rendering, as being that which answers to the following reason, the words bearing this sense: We do indeed excel them, in having the promise of a Messiah, and the salvation tendered by him, first made to us; (ii. 10.) in having the knowledge of the law, (ver. 17.) and the oracles of God committed to us: (iii. 2.) but we do not wholly or in all things excel them, because not in the matter of justification by faith, which Jew and gentile equally stand in need of.

[9] Ver. 10. Καθὼς γέγραπται, As it is written.] These words are cited from the fourteenth Psalm, according to the edition of the Septuagint; but I do not conceive it necessary to make good the apostle's words, or argument, that they should be spoken of the Jews of that age in general, especially seeing, they are there said to have devoured God's people, and to have shamed the counsel of the poor. It is enough, (1.) that they should generally agree to the Jews of the age in which the apostle writ, as both the Scriptures of the New Testament and the writings of Josephus fully prove they do. And (2.) that the law condemning any for these crimes doth more especially condemn those under the law, who at any time are guilty of crimes thus noted, and condemned by the law. And with this conclusion of the apostle the Jews themselves accord, saying, There is not a man who is not obnoxious to God (or might not justly be condemned by him), were it not for his mercy and clemency. Moreover, it is farther to be noted, that in the close of this Psalm there seems to be a prayer for the redemption of the Jews by the Messiah, in those words, O that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion, ver. 7. the Deliverer that was to come out of Zion, being the Messiah, as we learn from Isaiah, lix. 20. and from this apostle, xi. 26. Note, secondly, that, according to the doctrine of the Jews, their Messiah was to come in those times when the Jewish nation was most corrupt, and so most resembled the description here alleged. (See the note on Phil. iii. 1.)

[10] Ver. 20. Ἐπίγνωσις ἁμαρτίας, The knowledge of sin.] This knowledge of sin being chiefly by the moral law, (vii. 7.) shews, that the apostle excludes as well that as the ceremonial from justification; and evident it is, that the antithesis runs all along, not between moral and ceremonial works, but between works in general and faith, ver. 20. 22. the law of works and faith, ver. 27. iv. 2. 6. ix. 32. x. 5, 6.

[11] Ver. 23. Τῆς δόξης τοῦ Θεοῦ, The glory of God.] i. e. The fruition of God in glory; for being justified by faith, we have peace with God; and rejoice in hope of the glory of God. (Rom. v. 1, 2.)

[12] Ver. 24. Διὰ τῆς ἀπολυτρώσεως, Through the redemption.] Purchased by the death and blood of Christ shed for us; we having redemption through his blood, the remission of sins. (Eph. i. 7. Colos. i. 14.)

[13] Ver. 25. Τῶν προγεγονότων ἁμαρτημάτων, Of sins that are past.] For in this only consists our first justification, which is by faith alone: the remission of our future sins committed against the new covenant, established in the blood of Jesus, being to be obtained (if they be wilful sins, which only violate the covenant of grace) by a sincere and particular repentance for them; which brings us again under that covenant, and so under the promise of forgiveness through the blood of Jesus: the ἱλαστήριον, or mercy-

seat, was so called, because God there shewed himself propitious, by reason of the blood of the sacrifice sprinkled before it. The apostle therefore, in allusion to it, saith, that God hath set forth Christ to be his mercy-seat, i. e. the person through whom he will be propitious to us through faith in his blood, styled the blood of sprinkling, Heb. xii. 24. and presented before him in the heavens.

[14] Ἱλαστήριον, To be a propitiation.] In the Old Testament we find the mercy-seat still styled ἱλαστήριον, because it was the place where God promised to be propitious to them, and where the high-priest made an atonement for himself, and all the congregation, by sprinkling the blood of the sin-offering before the mercy-seat: when therefore the apostle saith, that God hath set forth Jesus Christ to be a mercy-seat to us through faith in his blood, we have reason to believe the blood of Christ, as our sin-offering, doth make atonement for, and render God propitious to us. And as under the Old Testament, they who desired to have God propitious to them, were to come with the blood of their sin-offering to the mercy-seat; so under the gospel-dispensation they must expect to find God propitious to them, through the blood of Christ their mercy-seat, by whom they coming to God, as the Jews did by appearing before his mercy-seat, should find him gracious in pardoning their iniquities through the redemption that is in Jesus. Whence I argue against the Socinians, for our Lord's satisfaction, thus: What is it we do obtain by this redemption? It is, saith the apostle, remission of sins. What is it that procures this remission? It is the blood of Christ, for we have redemption through his blood, even the remission of sins; (Eph. i. 7. Colos. i. 14.) it is the death of Christ. (Heb. ix. 15.) Since then, by the confession of Schlictingius upon the place, our Lord is mentioned here as a piacular victim, and seeing it is certain those victims still suffered in the sinner's stead, and that whensoever in the Old Testament mention is made of the remission of sins, the blood of these sacrifices was the thing that made atonement for them, remission of sins was the thing purchased by that blood; have we not reason from what is here said of Christ, our piacular victim, to conceive he suffered in our stead, and that his blood, shed for us, procured the remission of our sins, as it atoned an offended God for our transgressions?

[15] Ver. 26. Τῆς δικαιοσύνης, To declare his righteousness.] This phrase, the righteousness of God, as I have before observed, doth always in the Epistles signify our justification by faith in Christ, as being the only righteousness that God approves of, and is here styled, ver. 22. The righteousness of God through faith: and therefore this righteousness cannot be demonstrated, as some conceive, by winking at the sins committed in former ages, (Acts xvii. 30.) but by proposing, by the gospel, the way of remitting men's past sins through faith in Christ, or his own non-imputation of them.

[16] Εἰς τὸ εἶναι αὐτὸν δίκαιον, That he might be just.] The reverend Dr. Hammond saith, the word δίκαιος is here to be rendered, clement and merciful, and that it is commonly taken in that notion, and seldom in that of vindictive justice: but, in opposition to this I assert, that the word δίκαιος is used about eighty times in the New Testament, and not once in that sense of clemency and mercy, in which he saith it is commonly taken; he himself produces but one place, viz. Matt. i. 19. Joseph being a just man, and not willing to make Mary a public example, was minded to put her away privily: Where (saith Dr. Lightfoot) men torment the word δίκαιος, to make it signify clement and merciful, when it bears clearly the ordinary sense; thus, Joseph, being a just man, would not cohabit with an adulteress, and yet being not willing to make her a public example, and no necessity, as he there shews, lying upon him so to do, he was minded to put her away privily. (2.) It is in the New Testament distinguished from the good and merciful man; as when Joseph of Arimathea is styled ἀγαθὸς καὶ δίκαιος, a good man and just, Luke xxiii. 50. when the law is called δίκαια καὶ ἀγαθὴ, just and good, Rom. vii. 12. and when it is said, v. 7. that scarcely ὑπὲρ δικαίου, for a righteous man will one die, though ὑπὲρ ἀγαθοῦ, for a good man one would even dare to die. And (3.) when it relates to God, as here, it always signifies, either the equity and congruity of his dealings, as 2 Thess. i. 5, 6. or his faithfulness to his word, 1 John i. 9. Rev. xv. 3. or his vindictive justice, as Rev. xvi. 5—7. xix. 2. 2 Tim. iv. 8.

[17] Ver. 28. Πίστει, By faith.] Justification from our past sins is by faith alone, without respect to any of our works; we being justified freely by his grace, ver. 23. Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but through his mercy he saved us, Titus iii. 5. i. e. he justified us by his grace, and so put us in the way of salvation.

[18] Ver. 30.] Note, that so the Jews say, If a man believe not as he ought, circumcision will not make him a Jew; but if he believe as he ought, he is a Jew, though he be not circumcised. Nitzachon, sect. vii. sub. 21.

CHAP. IV.

1. WHAT shall we say then (Gr. what therefore do we say, as some of our nation) that Abraham, our father [1] as pertaining to the flesh, hath found? (Gr. hath found justification and acceptance with God, by virtue of his circumcision in the flesh?

2. Surely, no;) for if Abraham were justified by (his own) works (i. e. his obedience to God's command to circumcise himself, and his whole family), he hath whereof to glory (Gr. ground of boasting in those works by which he was thus justified); but (manifest it is he had) not (whereof to boast, or glory) before God.

3. For what saith the Scripture? (even this,) [2] Abraham believed God, and it (viz. that faith) was counted to him for righteousness.

4. Now (or whereas) to him that worketh (and by that obtaineth righteousness) is the reward reckoned not of grace, but of debt (he having performed all that was required, in order to his being righteous before God).

5. But to him that worketh not (i. e. who hath not any thing on account of which he can be deemed righteous by virtue of his works), but believeth [3] on him that justifieth the ungodly (on the account of his faith), his faith is accounted for righteousness.

6. (And this account of justification is) [4] even (such) as David also (the other great person to whom God had promised a blessing to all nations through his seed, Isa. xi. 10. Acts ii. 30. xiii. 23.) describeth (speaking of) the blessedness of the man, to whom God imputeth righteousness without works,

7. Saying, Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered.

8. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute (the) sin (he hath committed).

9. Cometh this blessedness then (of righteousness, by not imputing sin) upon the circumcision only, or upon the uncircumcision also? (This question may be decided by the example of our father Abraham,) for we say that [5] faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness.

10. How was it then reckoned (to him for righteousness? was it) when he was in circumcision, or in uncircumcision? not (when he was) in circumcision, but in uncircumcision; (he believing unto righteousness before he was circumcised, Gen. xv. 6.)

11. And he received (afterward) the sign of circumcision, (as) a [6] seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised: (and so of his acceptance with that God, who thus entered into covenant with him, and owned himself his God, Gen. xvii. 1.) that he might be the [7] father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; that righteousness might be imputed to them also (which it could not be, were circumcision the condition of justification and acceptance with God):

12. And (that he might be) the father of (the) circumcision also, (i. e. a father) to them who are not of the circumcision only, but also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had being yet uncircumcised.

13. (I say, that he might be the father of the uncircumcised through faith, and of the circumcision through the like faith, iii. 30.) for the promise (made to Abraham, Gen. xii. 3. or to his seed, Gen. xxii. 18.) that [8] he should be the heir of the world (i. e. of those blessings which should be derived from him to all the families and nations of the earth), was not (made) to Abraham, or to his seed, through (or by virtue of their obedience to) the law, but through (and by virtue of) the righteousness of faith.

14. For if they which are of the law be heirs (according to the promise made upon that account), [9] faith is made void (as being insufficient to justify without the law), and the promise is made of none effect (for then the nations which are not under the law, cannot be blessed in the seed of Abraham):

15. Because [10] the law worketh wrath (by condemning the transgressor to that death to which without the law he would not be subject): for where no law is, there is no transgression, (and so no condemnation for it.

16. And) therefore is (the inheritance, Gal. iii. 18.) of faith, that it might be by grace; (which both Jew and gentile wanted as to justification, iii. 23, 24.) to the end the promise (of it) might be sure to all the seed (of Abraham); not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham; who is the father of us all; (i. e. that it might be made good to the gentile also, believing as their father Abraham did.

17. I say the father of us all,) as it is written, (Gen. xvii. 5.) I have made thee a [11] father of many nations, (which words, though spoken then when Abraham had no seed, yet were they certain,) before (or in respect of) him whom he believed, even (that) God, [12] who quickeneth the dead (and so was able to quicken his body, now dead, and the deadness of Sarah's womb), and [13] calleth those things which be not (i. e. the gentiles, which were not then a people) as if they were.

18. Who, I say, [14] against (all natural grounds of) hope, believed in hope, that he might (Gr. should) become the father of many nations, according to that which was spoken (to him, Gen. xv. 5. As the stars of heaven) so shall thy seed be.

19. And being not weak in faith, he considered not his own body [15] now dead (or grown already dead, he being about one hundred years old), neither yet the deadness of Sarah's womb: (with whom it had ceased to be after the manner of women, Gen. xviii. 11.)

20. He [16] staggered not at (Gr. he doubted not of) the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God (by acknowledging his power to make it good);

21. And being fully persuaded that what he had promised, he was able also to perform.

22. And therefore it (viz. this strong faith) was imputed to him for righteousness.

23. [17] Now it was not written (thus of him) for his sake alone, that it (viz. his faith) was imputed to him (for righteousness);

24. But for (the benefit of) us also, to whom it (viz. the like faith) shall be imputed (for righteousness), if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead (that he can and will raise us also by Jesus from the dead, and crown us with him);

25. Who was delivered (to the death) for our offences (to offer up himself a piacular victim for them), and was raised again for our justification (i. e. to appear before God with the blood of this victim, to make atonement before God for us, and thereby to procure our justification, or our absolution from the guilt of sin).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IV.

[1] Ver. 1. ΚΑΤΑ᾽ σάρκα, According to the flesh.] i. e. By virtue of his obedience to God's command, in circumcising the flesh of his foreskin. So Israel κατὰ σάρκα, according to the flesh, 1 Cor. x. 18. is, Israel according to the circumcision of the flesh. To know Christ according to the flesh, 2 Cor. v. 16. is to know him according to his circumcision, or being of the stock of Abraham. To glory κατὰ τὴν σάρκα, according to the flesh, is to glory in being circumcised, 2 Cor. xi. 18. In this the Jews had the greatest confidence of being acceptable to God, and therefore are represented by St. Paul as πεποιθότες ἐν σαρκὶ, having confidence in the flesh, Phil. iii. 3, 4. declaring, that no circumcised Jews go to hell, God having promised to deliver them for the merit of circumcision. (See the note on ii. 13.) Moreover, that vain opinion had obtained among the Jews, that Abraham was not pure, or accepted with God, till after his circumcision. This is hinted in the Targum of B. Uziel, who renders Gen. xvii. 1. thus; Walk before me, Bebeskercha, i. e. and be thou perfect in thy flesh: but is in express words asserted, Pirk. Eliezer, cap. 29. p. 64. This opinion the apostle here confutes, and then ver. 11. shews what his circumcision signified. Mr. Clerc interprets this phrase thus, According to the flesh; i. e. in the judgment of man, or according to carnal judgment. But there can be nothing more alien from the mind of St. Paul than this interpretation: for the apostle had been before asserting, that circumcision, acceptable to God, was not that made in the flesh, (ii. 28.) In the beginning of the next chapter he answers the inquiry of the Jews; If it doth not render us more acceptable to God, what then is the benefit of circumcision? It hath many other advantages, saith he, but not that of justification before God, that being the result of faith; for it is one (and the same) God who will justify the circumcision through faith, and the uncircumcision by faith. What then, saith he, do we say in this affair? Do we say, as the Jews, that Abraham, the father of the faithful, found justification (the thing I now discourse of) κατὰ σάρκα, by that laborious work of circumcision, performed upon himself, when he was ninety-nine years old, and upon all his family? On which account, say the Jews,* God smelt the sweet odour of their foreskins, and said, when they transgressed, he would remember this odour, and they should be replenished with his mercies. Here is a rational account of the connexion and pertinence of the apostle's argument. But how comes in the judgment of men with a τί οὖν; what then do we say? when nothing at all had been said of their judgment, nor was the apostle discoursing of justification according to man's carnal judgment. He goes on and says, If Abraham was accounted just for his works in the judgment of men, he hath whereof to glory; he hath καύχημα, boasting (saith he) before men: but is that the καύχημα, or boasting, which the apostle said was excluded, not by the law of works, but by the law of faith? (iii. 27.) no sure; but boasting before God: this therefore must be here repeated: If Abraham were justified by works, i. e. the works of circumcision performed upon himself and his whole family, he hath whereof to boast before God; but he cannot have whereof to boast before God of any justification of this kind, for what saith the Scripture, &c. In fine, κατὰ σάρκα never signifies in Scripture, the judgment of man, but the fleshly lustings, desires, and motions of men; John xviii. 5. to judge according to the flesh, is to judge "ex carnali affectu," from carnal affection; and 2 Cor. i. 17. to purpose according to the flesh, is to do it according to carnal principles and advantages; as to walk after the flesh, is, to be governed and acted by carnal principles, Rom. viii. 1. 4, 5. 12, 13. 2 Cor. x. 2.

[2] Ver. 3. Ἐπίστευσε δὲ Ἀβραὰμ τῷ Θεῷ, Abraham believed God.] We learn from the author to the Hebrews, that Abraham had faith before this was said unto him, for by faith Abraham being called, obeyed and went forth, &c. and that by a yet stronger faith, he offered up his son Isaac, believing that God was able to raise him up from the dead. (Heb. xi. 8. 17.) But neither of these instances is pitched upon by the apostle, as fit for his purpose, because, in both, obedience was joined with faith; whereas here was a pure act of faith without works, and of this act of faith is said, what is not said of either of the other, it was imputed to him for righteousness. (See ver. 22.) 2. God for this act of faith, and not upon the former, dealt with him as a righteous person, by entering into covenant with him, which was a sign that he accepted him, and pardoned all his sins past; for it is said, In that very day God entered into covenant with Abraham, (Gen. xv. 18.) which he had not done before. Moreover, this was spoken to Abraham before his circumcision, and so is very proper to convince the Jews of the no necessity of circumcison to justification: but Abraham offered Isaac after his circumcision, and so the apostle could not allege that instance of his faith here; (ver. 10, 11.) he therefore was accounted righteous by virtue of that faith which excludes boasting, (ii. 27.) and only justifies by grace.

[3] Ver. 5. Ἐπὶ τὸν δικαιοῦντα τὸν ἀσεβῆ, On him that justifies the ungodly.] Justification being only the nonimputation or the pardon of their past sins on the account of that faith, which laid the highest obligations upon all believers to die unto sin for the future, there is no absurdity in saying, that God thus justifies the ungodly, repenting of, and engaging to cease from, their ungodliness, (ver. 6.)

[4] Ver. 6. Even as David λέγει τὸν μακαρισμὸν] Speaks of the blessedness of those, to whom God imputeth δικαιοσύνην, justification, i. e. exemption from the guilt and punishment of sin, without such works as can justly plead for that exemption and freedom from punishment, by saying, Blessed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth no sin. In which citation there is not one word of any work to make him righteous in the sight of God, and therefore blessed, but only of an act of free grace in the forgiveness or the nonimputation of his sin, in which the evangelical justification formally consists. (See the preface to the Epistle to the Galatians, section the 4th.)

[5] Ver. 9. Ἐλογίσθη τῷ Ἀβραὰμ ἡ πίστις, Faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness.] The gloss of R. Salmon on Gen. xv. 6. is this: The blessed God reputed this to Abraham for righteousness and merit, for the faith by which he believed in him. And the book Ikkarim * saith thus: Our father Abraham was praised for his faith, as saith the Scripture, Abraham believed God, and it was counted to him for righteousness.

[6] Ver. 11. Σφραγῖδα τῆς δικαιοσύνης τῆς πίστεως τῆς ἐν τῇ ἀκροβυστίᾳ, The seal of the righteousness of faith, &c.] The apostle in this Epistle insists much upon the justification of the uncircumcised gentiles, called therefore by the Jews ἡ ἀκροβυστία, the uncircumcision, (Eph. ii. 11. Rom. ii. 25—27.) declaring, that God is not the God of the Jews only, but also of the gentiles, seeing he will justify both the circumcision, and the uncircumcision through faith; (iii. 29, 30.) that the blessing of justification came not only on the circumcision, but on the uncircumcision also, (ver. 9.) faith being accounted to Abraham for righteousness, when he was in uncircumcision, (ver. 10.) So that these words may be rendered thus, And he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of that faith, which is in the uncircumcision; i. e. of God's acceptance of the uncircumcised gentiles through faith in Christ.

[7] Πατέρα, The father.] i. e. That he might be the father of all nations, whether Jew or gentile, and they might all be blessed in him, according to the promise, In thee shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, Gen. xii. 3. or as it is Gen. xxii. 18. In thy seed.

[8] Ver. 13. Τὸν κληρονόμον αὐτὸν εἶναι τοῦ κόσμου, That he should be the heir of the world.] The whole difficulty of this verse rests upon the true interpretation of this phrase, That he should be the heir of the world. Some think that to be the heir of the world here, is to be heir of the land of

* Pag. fid. p. 674.

* Lib. i. cap. 21.

Canaan, and the parts adjacent to it, Idumea, &c. But this is not only impertinent to the purpose of the apostle, who is here proving, not that temporal possessions, but that justification is not by the law, but by faith; but seemeth flatly contrary to the apostle; for the promise of the land of Canaan was made to Abraham upon his circumcision, and to his seed, (Gen. xvii. 7, 8.) and the possession of, and their continuance in it, was still promised to the Jews, upon condition of their obedience to the law of Moses. Others think, that to be heir of the world, is to be heir of the spiritual and heavenly Canaan: but then, as it is hard to find where any such promise was made to Abraham, and his seed; so it is as difficult to shew how this accords with the main scope of the apostle, which is to establish our justification by faith. The ancient Greek scholiasts interpret the words thus: That he should be heir of the world; τοῦτεστιν, ἐν αὐτῷ εὐλογεῖσθαι πάντα τὰ τοῦ κόσμου ἔθνη, i. e. that all the nations of the world should be blessed in him. So Chrysostom, Theodoret, Theophylact, Quod enim dicit, benedicentur in te omnes tribus terræ, hoc est, hæredem factum esse totius mundi: so Origen. And this is confirmed from the parallel place, Gal. iii. 8. for the promise mentioned here, must be the same with the promise mentioned there, because the argument is the same. Now, (1.) the promise there is, In thy seed, that is Christ, shall all the families of the earth be blessed, (ver. 12.) And (2.) he there speaks of a promise made four hundred and thirty years before the law, which term only agrees to the promise made, Gen. xii. 3. (3.) This is the blessing of Abraham that was to come upon the gentiles, Gal. iii. 14. for, saith the apostle, The Scriptures foreseeing that God would justify the gentiles through faith (in the promised seed), preached the gospel before to Abraham, saying, In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed: so then they that are of faith, are blessed with faithful Abraham. He first, as being the father of the faithful, and so the heir of the believing world; and they after him, as being his sons, and seed, by walking in the steps of his faith, and so becoming heirs with him of the same promise; for if you be Christ's, if by faith you be interested in him, saith the apostle, then are you Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise, Gal. iii. 29. so Heb. xi. 7. Noah is said by his faith to condemn the unbelieving world, and to be τῆς κατὰ πίστιν δικαιοσύνης κληρονόμος, the heir of righteousness which is by faith, i. e. the father of all that believed unto justification, or righteousness, after him.

[9] Ver. 14. If they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void.] It is made void to them who are not of the law, because then they cannot by it be made heirs; and it is also made void to them that are of the law, because they were heirs before, and may still be without it, ver. 15.

[10] Ver. 15. For the law worketh wrath.] To wit; to the transgressors of it: For where there is no law, there is no transgression. It is a very great mistake to think, as some do, that the apostle lays down this as a general rule, that where there is no positive law to which threats and punishments are annexed, there is no transgression; for the plain consequence of this would be, that the heathens, having no positive law, could be guilty of no transgression, whereas the Scripture represents them as dead in trespasses and sins, (Eph. ii. 1. Colos. ii. 13.) as persons who shall be judged hereafter according to their works, (Rom. ii. 6.) and shall receive tribulation and wrath for working evil, (ver. 9.) who sin without (a positive) law, and shall therefore perish without law, (ver. 12.) and as men, who are condemned in their own consciences by the law written in their hearts, (ver. 15.) The apostle therefore must be only conceived to prove from this general rule, that where there is no law at all, there is no transgression; and that if the law of Moses worketh wrath, there must be a transgression of it rendering men obnoxious to the death it threateneth, (ver. 19, 20. vide Examen Millii.)

[11] Ver. 17. A father of many nations.] The Jews hence prove that a proselyte, converted to the Jewish faith, might be legatus synagogæ, quia scriptum extat, constitui te patrem universitatis gentium, because it is written, Gen. xvii. 5. I have made thee a father of all nations: before this time, say they, he was only a father of the Syrians; but from this time, he was the father of all nations. (See Campegius Vitringa de Synag. Vet. lib. iii. par. ii. cap. 6. p. 943.)

[12] Τοῦ ζωοποιοῦντος τοὺς νεκρὺς, Who quickeneth the dead.] This being an instance of the faith of Abraham, it seems most reasonable to refer to the object of this faith, viz. that he should have a numerous seed; yea, that he should have the promised seed from Sarah, though her womb was dead; and it ceased to be with her after the manner of women; and so Hilary the deacon doth interpret this phrase.

[13] Καλοῦντος τὰ μὴ ὄντα, ὡς ὄντα, And calleth things that be not as if they were.] He that is far from God (saith Origen), as we gentiles were before we came to the knowledge of the truth, is said not to be; and therefore God, designing to render them the seed of Abraham by faith, is said to call those things that be not, as if they were: for τὰ μὴ ὄντα, things which are not, both in the language of the Old Testament, and of the Jews, and of the primitive Christians, signifies the gentiles, by converting whom, saith Clemens R.* ἐκάλεσεν ἡμᾶς οὐκ ὄντας, καὶ ἠθέλησεν ἐκ τοῦ μὴ ὄντος εἶναι ἡμᾶς, God called us that were not, and would that of nothing we should have a being; as I have shewed, note on 1 Cor. i. 8.

[14] Ver. 18.] Note, that this verse confirms the exposition of the former verse, shewing that the faith there mentioned hath reference to this promise.

[15] Ver. 19. Νενεκρωμένον, Now dead.] It is here objected, that Abraham's body could not be thus dead, since after the death of Sarah, even forty years after, he had six sons by Keturah. (Gen. xxv. 1.) But they who here tell us, that Abraham's body was not simply dead, but only as to Sarah's womb, and that by a young woman he was able to have seed then, speaks expressly against the text, which saith, his body was grown dead, and against the opinion of Abraham himself, Gen. xvii. 17. and of Sarah concerning him, Gen. xviii. 12. They who add that this need not seem strange, that Abraham should have children by Keturah, considering the age to which he had lived, since in our time men have had children after they have been seventy or eighty years old; they will not suffer that to be strange to us which seems strange to Abraham himself; witness his answer to the promise of Almighty God, Shall a child be born to him that is a hundred years old? Gen. xvii. 17. O that Ishmael might live before thee! and to Sarah, Gen.

xviii. 12. They deny the miracle effected by the great power of God, which therefore the angel doth encourage Sarah to believe, because nothing can be too hard for God. (Gen. xviii. 13.) They lessen the faith of Abraham which is so highly magnified here, as being hope against hope, (ver. 18.) believing in him that quickeneth the dead, (ver. 17.) not staggering at the promise, but being strong in faith, (ver. 20.) That therefore must be here acknowledged, which the Jewish doctors and all the Christian fathers say, that God gave a new blessing to their bodies, and by that rendered them capable of getting and bearing children, when by nature they were not so. This of Sarah, the Targum of B. Uziel hints, by paraphrasing the words thus, Gen. xvii. 16. As for Sarah, I will bless her, בגופה, in her body. And the apostle more plainly in these words, Through faith also Sarah herself receiveth strength to conceive seed. (Heb. xi. 11.)

[16] Ver. 20. Οὐ διεκρίθη τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ, He doubted not through unbelief.] It seems, his faith was not without some doubting, from that answer he returns to God, Shall a child be born to Abraham, that is a hundred years old? And shall Sarah, that is ninety years old, bear? In which words he seems to consider both his own dead body, and Sarah's dead womb, which the apostle here denies, ver. 18. and ver. 19. he says to God, O that Ishmael might live before thee! as if he expected no other offspring: To the first objection it is answered, that those words, Shall a child be born to Abraham! are to be considered as words of admiration, not of doubting; for he rejoiced at it, saith the Chaldee, and the Hebrew word, which we render laughed, hath this import, xxi. 6. Nor is Abraham reprehended for it, as Sarah is, xviii. 13. John viii. 56. To the second it is answered, That he only desires God to bless him also, as well as the seed promised, which appears probable from God's answer, Gen. xvii. 20. As for Ishmael, I have heard thee: behold, I have blessed him, and will make him fruitful.

[17] Ver. 23—25.] Note, That from these three last verses many things may be observed, which tend to the illustration of the doctrine of faith, and of justification by faith. And,

First, From ver. 3. 22, 23, 24. it is extremely evident, that it is the very act of faith, and not the object of it, viz. Christ's righteousness, which was imputed to Abraham, and is imputed to us for righteousness. As then the faith of Abraham, which is here said to be imputed to him for righteousness, was not the obeying God in his commands of walking before him, and being perfect, but, as is here expressly said, his believing God's power, and his reliance on it without any doubting, was the thing that was imputed to him for righteousness, as well as that other act of faith, that in his seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed: so the faith that shall be imputed to us for justification, is not, saith the apostle, that which includeth the performance of sincere obedience, not only faith in the blood of Christ shed for the remission of our sins; but faith in him that raised up Jesus from the dead, that he will raise us also from the dead, and glorify us with him. (See the note on Rom. x. 9.) So also is the faith of Abraham and Sarah represented, Heb. xi. 11.

Secondly, Hence also we learn that our justification depends not only on the death of Christ, but on his resurrection: so the apostle doth again teach us, saying, Who is he that condemneth us? it is Christ that died (as a piacular victim for our sins), yea, rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God (presenting the blood of this victim in his presence for us), who (by it) also maketh intercession for us. For the clearing up of this matter, let it be noted,

First, That as the victim offered under the Old Testament was brought to the altar, and there slain; so Christ offering himself for us, was also brought to the altar of the cross on which he suffered, as a piacular victim for us, bearing our sins in his own body on the tree.

Secondly, As the blood of the beast thus slain was to be brought before the mercy-seat, or into the holy of holies, and there presented before God to make atonement with; so was the blood of Christ, thus slain also, to be carried into the heavenly sanctuary, and there presented before God to make atonement for our sins.

Thirdly, As the beast, when dead, could not offer up its own blood; so Christ, being dead, could not, before his resurrection, make an offering of his own blood, in the heavens for this end; whence the apostle tells us, that such a high-priest became us, who is higher than the heavens. (Heb. vii. 26.) And were the opinion of some true, that Christ appeared not with his blood in the heavens, he must be only a metaphorical high-priest, the offering or presenting of the blood before God being only the proper office of the priesthood, and the parallel the apostle makes betwixt him and the Aaronical priests must be wholly overthrown: for with what congruity could the apostle insist so much on the comparison betwixt the blood of Christ brought into the heavenly tabernacle, and the blood of the legal sacrifices brought into the earthly tabernacle, if indeed the blood of Christ was not carried into the true tabernacle, and there presented to God? When the apostle saith so oft, the Jewish high-priest entered into the holy place with the blood of bulls and goats, doth he not mean, that he carried their blood in thither? When then the same apostle saith, Christ, not by the blood of bulls and goats, but διὰ τοῦ ἰδίου αἵματος, by his own proper blood, entered into the holy place, must he not also mean, that Christ carried his own blood into the heavenly sanctuary?

CHAP. V.

1. THEREFORE being justified by faith (and so absolved from those sins which rendered us obnoxious to the displeasure of God), we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ:

2. By whom also we have access by faith into this (state of) grace (or favour of God), wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of (the fruition of) the glory of God.

3. And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience;

4. And patience (gives) experience (of God's power with us, enabling us to bear these tribulations, and of our sincere affection to him, for whose sake we suffer them); and experience (of these things worketh in us) hope (of a reward):

5. And hope maketh (us) not ashamed (of our faith in Christ, Rom. i. 16.) because (a sense of) [1] the love of God is [2] shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given to us (believers, as the earnest of our future inheritance, Eph. i. 14. iv. 30. and the fruit of our faith, Eph. i. 13. Gal. iii. 14.

6. Of which love to us, even before we believed, the gospel gives us the highest demonstrations;) for when we [3] were yet without strength, in due time (Gr. we being fallen at the appointed time) Christ died for the ungodly, (for us, who since our fall had no righteousness of our own.

7. Which surely is a high degree of love, beyond all human example;) for scarcely for a righteous man will one die (I say, for a righteous man only): yet peradventure for a [4] good (i. e. a highly kind and charitable) man some would even dare to die.

8. But [5] God commendeth his love towards us, in that, whilst we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

9. (And if God through Christ Jesus shewed such kindness to us, being sinners,) much more then being justified by his blood (and so made righteous in his sight, and having peace with God, ver. 1.) we shall be saved from (the) wrath (of God) through him.

10. For if, when we were enemies (to him), we were [6] reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved [7] by his life.

11. And not only so (i. e. we are not only reconciled to), but we also joy (Gr. we are rejoicing) in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom [8] we have received the atonement (or reconciliation).

12. Wherefore, (διὰ τοῦτο, by reason of this reconciliation, life is procured to us by the second Adam, as death came by the first, for) as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin (or for sin); and so death passed upon all men (through him), [9] in whom all had (so far) sinned (as to become equally obnoxious to death with him: so the second Adam came to deliver all men from the death procured by him:

13. Through him, I say,) for (it must be indeed confessed, that) until the law sin was in the world: but (it must also be acknowledged, that) sin is not [10] (generally then) [11] imputed (to death) where there is no law (condemning men to death for it).

14. Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses (the giver of a new law, threatening death to the transgressors of it), even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression (i. e. men were all the while subject to death, though they sinned not as Adam did against an express law, threatening death to them for it, and therefore death must reign over them for the sin of Adam), who (in this) is the figure (or resemblance) of him that was to (i. e. of the second Adam, Christ) come.

15. But (in this resemblance there are two advantageous dissimilitudes; for) not as the offence, so also is the free gift: for if through the offence of one man [12] many be dead (Gr. died), much more the grace of God, and the gift (of justification procured) by (or through) the grace of one man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded to many.

16. And (again) not as it was by one that sinned, so is the gift: for the judgment (Gr. the sentence) was by one (sin) to condemnation (we being all sentenced to death on the account of Adam's sin), but the free gift is of [13] many offences unto (that) justification (of which cometh life).

17. For if by one man's offence death reigned by (that) one (man over all his posterity); much more they which receive (or are made partakers of) abundance of grace, and (by it) of the [14] gift of righteousness (or justification), shall reign in life by (the reconciliation purchased for them by the death of) one, Jesus Christ.

18. Therefore as by the offence of one (Gr. by one offence), the judgment (Gr. sentence) came upon all men to (the) condemnation (of death); even so by the righteousness of one (by one righteous act, the obedience of Christ to the death for us) the free gift came upon all men (believing in him) to justification of life.

19. For as by one man's disobedience many were [15] made sinners (being made subject to the death, which was inflicted upon Adam for sin, as much as if they themselves had violated the law which rendered him obnoxious to it), so by the obedience of one (suffering death, the punishment of sin, for them) shall many be made righteous (i. e. be as truly justified, and exempted from that death, which is the punishment of sin, as if they had personally suffered; and also accepted and treated by God, as if indeed they had been righteous persons.

20. I say, before the law we became obnoxious to death by one man's disobedience,) [16] but the law entered that the offence might abound (unto death, and men might be found obnoxious to it also, on the account of their transgressions against the law): but where sin (thus) abounded (unto death), grace did much more abound (unto life):

21. That as sin hath reigned unto death (seizing on all men for it), even so grace might reign through righteousness (Gr. justification) to eternal life, by Jesus Christ our Lord.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. V.

[1] Ver. 5. Ἡ ἈΓΑΠΗ τοῦ Θεοῦ, The love of God.] To us thus believing. So viii. 35. 39. 2 Cor. v. 14. xiii. 13. 1 John iii. 9, 10.

[2] Ἐκκέχυται, Is shed abroad.] This is the word still used in the New Testament, when speaking of the effusion of the Holy Ghost, Acts ii. 17. x. 45. Titus iii. 6. and it is taken from Joel ii. 28, 29. and so this may refer to the χαρίσματα of the Holy Ghost, so liberally imparted to them.

[3] Ver. 6. Ὄντων ἡμῶν ἀσθενῶν, When we were weak.] It may here be noted, that the words ἀσθενὴς, ἀσθενέω, ἀσθένεια, in the LXX. answer to the Hebrew נכשל, and signify to fall, and stumble to our ruin. So Psal. ix. 3. They shall fall and perish, ἀσθενήσουσι, καὶ ἀπολοῦνται, at thy presence; Psal. xxvi. 4. They stumbled and fell, ἠσθένησαν καὶ ἔπεσον· Psal. cvi. 12. ἠσθένησαν, They fell down, and there was none to help them; Prov. xxiv. 16. The wicked shall fall into mischief, ἀσθενήσουσι ἐν κακοῖς, Jer. vi. 21. I will lay stumbling-blocks before this people, and the fathers and sons shall fall together, ἀσθενήσουσι ἐν αὐτῇ, xviii. 15. xlvi. 6. 12. and ver. 16. he made many to fall, τὸ πλῆθός σου ἠσθένησε, l. 32. Lam. v. 15. Dan. xi. 14. Many shall stand up against the king of the south, but they shall fall, ἀσθενήσουσι. So ver. 19. 33—35. so Hosea iv. 5. v. 5. xiv. 2. 10. And this import of the word suits well with the text, and so is proper to represent our fall by sin; and the words following, ver. 8. ἁμαρτωλῶν ὄντων ἡμῶν, even whilst we were sinners Christ died for us, do render it so probable, that I thought fit to mention it in the paraphrase.

[4] Ver. 7.] Ἀγαθοῦ is not only a virtuous, but an obliging, charitable man, Matt. xx. 15. Is thy eye evil, because I am good? overcome evil ἐν τῷ ἀγαθῷ, with kindness, Rom. xii. 21. Τὸ ἀγαθόν σου, is thy kindness, Philem. 14. So ἀγαθὸς ὀφθαλμὸς is the liberal eye, Ecclus. xxxv. 8. See Buxtorf. in voce יפ, p. 1601.

[5] Ver. 8. Συνίστησι δὲ ὁ Θεὸς, But God commends his love to us.] The death of Christ is usually in Scripture represented as an instance of the great love of God the Father to us, because his wisdom did contrive this way of redemption for us; (Eph. i 4, 5.) He sent his Son into the world to be the propitiation for our sins, that we might live through him; (1 John iv. 9, 10.) he graciously accepted of his suffering in our stead, and justifies us freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus; (Rom. iii. 24.) He spared not his own Son, but gave him up freely for us all: (Rom. viii. 32.) though it be also true, that Christ loved us, and gave himself for us; (Gal. ii. 20. Eph. v. 2.) and that this love of Christ ought to constrain us to obedience. (2 Cor. v. 14.)

[6] Ver. 10. Ἐν τῇ ζωῇ αὐτοῦ, By his life.] He being able to save us to the uttermost, because he ever lives to make intercession for us; (Heb. vii. 25.) and having all power committed to him, that he might give eternal life to them whom God hath given him. (John xvii. 2.)

[7] Κατηλλάγημεν τῷ Θεῷ, We were reconciled to God.] Here are many arguments to establish the doctrine of our Lord's satisfaction by suffering in our stead, to reconcile an offended God to us. For,

First, When it is here said, that Christ died for the ungodly, 1 Pet. iii. 18. that when we were yet sinners Christ died for us, 1 Cor. v. 15. and elsewhere, that he suffered for our sins, the just for the unjust, Heb. i. 9. 1 Pet. iv. 1. in these, and such-like places, one of these two things is intimated, that our Lord suffered in our stead, or that he bore the punishment of our sin: this being the plain import of the like expressions when they are used in the Old or New Testament. For when we read in the Old Testament, The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, nor the children for the fathers; every man shall be put to death for his own sin, Deut. xxiv. 17. of Amaziah, that he slew those servants that had murdered the king his father, but the children of those murderers he slew not, according to those words of Moses, The fathers shall not be put to death, οὐκ ἀποθανοῦνται, they shall not die for the children, &c. 2 Kings xiv. 6. 2 Chron. xxv. 4. and in the prophet Ezekiel, The soul that sinneth, it shall die; the son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, nor shall the father bear the iniquity of the son, Ezek. xviii. in all these places it is plain no substitution is intended, because no exemption of the father, because the son; or of the son, because the father suffers: but then it is plainly intimated, that the one in this case would bear the punishment of the other's sin. But when David saith concerning Absalom, Would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, τίς δῷ τὸν θάνατόν μου ἀντί σου; 2 Sam. xviii. 33. O that my death might have gone instead of thine! when here the apostle saith, that scarcely for a righteous person one would die, but for a good man some would even dare to die; there evidently a substitution is intended of the one to free the other from death by the death he suffers. When therefore the apostle before and after these words saith, Christ died for the ungodly, and the sinner, must he not also signify that our Lord died in their stead, to deliver them from death? It is evident beyond exception, that in all piacular sacrifices, both Jew and gentile always took this for granted, that the victim suffered in their stead, and for their sins. Since then the Socinians own that our Lord suffered as "victima piacularis," or an expiatory sacrifice, surely both Jew and gentile must conceive that all these phrases did import, that our Lord suffered in our stead, and for our sins.

Secondly, A second argument is taken from the reconciliation, mentioned as the effect of our Lord's suffering for us; for seeing it is alone the guilt of sin, or sin unpardoned, that maketh God displeased with us, the death which is here said to procure our peace and reconciliation to God, must make atonement for the guilt of our iniquities.

Crellius replies, that by reconciliation here the apostle intends not God's reconciliation to us, but ours to God, by that conversion to him, which maketh us at friendship with him. But this may be refuted,

First, From the import of the words καταλλάττειν and καταλλαγὴ, for they do naturally import the reconciliation of one that is angry or displeased with us, both in profane and Jewish writers; thus, ἔν τινι διαλλαγήσεται; in what shall David reconcile himself to his Lord? 1 Sam. xxix. 4. When Apame, the famous concubine, was angry with king Darius, he flattered her ὅπως διαλλαγῇ αὐτῷ, that she might be reconciled to him, 1 Esd. iv. 21. After the reviling or falling out of friends, ἐστὶ διαλλαγὴ, there is, or may be, reconciliation, saith the son of Sirach, Ecclus. xxii. 22. The Jews in Egypt pray for those in Judea, that the Lord would hear their prayer, καὶ καταλλαγείη, and be reconciled to them, 2 Macc. i. 5. adding, that as Jerusalem was forsaken through the wrath of the Almighty, so ἐν τῇ τοῦ μεγάλου Δεσπότου καταλλαγῇ, when the great God was reconciled, it was set up with glory, v. 20. And again, though the Lord, say they, be angry with us a little while for our chastisement and correction, πάλιν καταλλαγήσεται, he will again be reconciled to his servants, vii. 33. And they beseech the Lord εἰς τέλος καταλλαγῆναι, to be reconciled to his servants for ever, viii. 29. Whence we learn, that reconciliation always respecteth some preceding anger or displeasure; and that the reconciling of God, was the appeasing of his anger: when therefore we here read in the same words, of enemies reconciled to God, and so saved from his wrath, what can we imagine, but that a God once angry and offended with them, is now appeased? And when we farther read, that this reconciliation was effected by the death and blood of Christ, is it not obvious to conceive his wrath and anger was averted by the shedding this blood for us?

Secondly, It is evident, that when we were sinners Christ died for us, ver. 8. and when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, ver. 10. are words of the same import; for seeing these words, Christ died for us, and Christ shed his blood for us, signify the same thing, and by his blood shed we are reconciled; it is evident that Christ dying for us, and Christ reconciling us by his death, or blood shed for us, must be the same; now we are justified by his blood, as it procures our peace with God, ver. 1. as it saves us from his wrath, ver. 9. Therefore we are reconciled to God by it on the same account.

Thirdly, We being here considered as sinners, ungodly, enemies to God, as persons who have, upon that account fallen short of the glory, that is, saith Crellius, of the ap- probation of God, (Rom. iii. 23.) is there no need of reconciling God unto such persons? And when under these circumstances we are said to be justified through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, (Rom. iii. 25, 26.) and being justified, to have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, can we conceive that nothing was done by this Jesus to procure God's reconciliation to the sinner, or to purchase his peace with an offended God? Especially if we consider that the death of Christ here mentioned, as that by which we are reconciled to God, is the death of him who suffered as a sin-offering for us; the blood, by which we are justified, is the blood of atonement, or propitiation, or the blood shed to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. (Heb. ii. 17.)

[8] Ver. 11. Τὴν καταλλαγὴν ἐλάβομεν, We have received the atonement.] Crellius excepts against this interpretation, alleging, that to receive or obtain reconciliation, is a phrase unknown to Jew and gentile; and would have the words rendered thus, By whom we have obtained this conversion to God: but to obtain reconciliation, when it is the effect of blood shed for the remission of sins, is very proper; for it was the constant practice under the law to procure reconciliation by shedding the blood of the sin-offering; and all nations by this means endeavoured to reconcile God to them, and what reconciliation the priest, by offering this blood, procured, the sinner received and obtained; and therefore to receive atonement or obtain reconciliation, by an expiatory sacrifice, must be a thing very well known to Jew and gentile: but to receive conversion by it, is indeed a phrase unknown to them, and the whole church of Christ. Moreover, this note of Crellius shews his little skill in the Greek, for as θάρσος λαμβάνειν is to be courageous, Acts xxviii. 15. ἀρχὴν λαμβάνειν is to begin, λήθην λαμβάνειν is to forget, Heb. ii. 3. ὑπόμνησιν λαμβάνειν to remember, 2 Tim. i. 5. πεῖραν λαμβάνειν to experiment, Heb. ix. 36. οἰκοδομὴν λαμβάνειν to be edified, 1 Cor. xiv. 15. so καταλλαγὴν λαμβάνειν is to be reconciled, as noxam capere is to be hurt.

[9] Ver. 12. Ἐφ' ᾧ, In whom.] The critics have been very industrious to find some other sense of these words, than that which our translation gives, some rendering this last clause, for that, some, because all have sinned. But our exposition is confirmed beyond all contradiction from the following words, which declare, that by the sin of one man, many die; and that by the sin of one, death reigned by one; and that by one offence the sentence of death came upon all, ver. 15—18. All which are parallel to the expression here, that death came upon all men through Adam, in whom (saith the same apostle) all men die. (1 Cor. xv. 22.) And the words following, that by the disobedience of one many were made sinners, are plainly parallel to these, in whom all have sinned.

2. None of the other senses are true, or suitable to the scope and argument of the apostle; v. g. It is not true that death came upon all men, for that, or because all have sinned. For the apostle directly here asserts the contrary; viz. that the death, and condemnation to it, which befel all men, was for the sin of Adam only: for here it is expressly said, that by the sin of one man many died; that the sentence was from one, and by one man sinning to condemnation; and that by the sin of one, death reigned by one: therefore the apostle doth expressly teach us, that this death, this condemnation to it, came not upon us for the sin of all, but only for the sin of one, i. e. of that one Adam, in whom all men die. (1 Cor. xv. 22.)

He also farther teacheth, that this death and condemnation came upon all for one sin of that one man, for it came, δι' ἑνὸς παραπτώματος, by one offence upon all men; it came not therefore upon all men for the sin of all: and this the comparison plainly requires, which saith, the opposite justification and free gift came upon all men by one man, Jesus Christ; by the obedience of one, and δι' ἑνὸς δικαιώματος, by one righteousness, ver. 16—19. i. e. by the obedience to the death of that one man. Yea, the apostle doth,

3. Not only thus plainly and frequently assert, that death came upon all men for the sin of Adam, but he proves it by this argument; that death reigned from Adam to Moses, over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression; i. e. against a law threatening death to them for sin; they therefore, saith he, could not die for their own sins: for though indeed they were then sinners, yet being under no such law as Adam was, their sin was not imputed to death, and so they could not die on that account; death therefore came upon them, as I asserted, through the sin of Adam.

[10] Ver. 13.] I add, generally: because though all men died after Adam, all were not punished with death for their own personal sin, but only the antediluvians and the Sodomites.

Here also note, that the apostle cannot be rationally conceived to assert, as Mr. L. suggests, that no man can incur a penalty without the sanction of a positive law declaring and establishing that penalty. For this assertion entirely destroys the obligation of the heathens to perform any duty, since no man can be obliged to do that, which he may omit without fear of punishment, and renders the heathens, who had no positive law given them, incapable of incurring any penalty by any sins they had committed. The meaning therefore of the apostle seems to be only this, that the law threatening death to Adam, being not made to all mankind, but to him alone, all men, good and bad, could not then generally die for their own sins; but this mortality fell on them all without distinction in that interval on the account of that one sin of Adam, which rendered all his posterity subject to that mortality he had incurred by his sin; wherefore to say, that all men were not subject to mortality by reason of the sin of Adam, would be to contradict St. Paul: but to say, that they, who were swept away by the flood with an untimely death, did not die for their own, but for Adam's sin, is to contradict God himself, saying, I will destroy man from the earth, for the iniquity of man is very great, &c. (Gen. v.)

[11] Ἁμαρτία δὲ οὐκ ἐλλογεῖται, Sin was not imputed.] The apostle doth not mean that God did not account them sinners who transgressed against the law of nature, or that he was not displeased with them for their offences, but only that he did not so impute them, as to condemn them to death for them. To make this out, and to give you the true import of the word imputation, let it be observed,

First, That wherever this phrase occurs affirmatively, that such a thing was imputed to any one, it is some personal thing or action of our own, and not any thing of another's, which is thus said to be imputed. As when it is said, Rom. ii. 26. that if the uncircumcision keep the righteousness of the law, his uncircumcision on that account εἰς περιτομὴν λογισθήσεται, shall be accounted for circumcision, i. e. he shall be accepted as well as if he were circumcised. So Rom. iv. 3. Abraham believed God, and it (that is, his faith) was imputed to him for righteousness: for so it is explained, ver. 5. To him that worketh not, but believeth, his faith is imputed to him for righteousness: and, ver. 9. We say, that faith was imputed to Abraham for righteousness. (See Gal. iii. 6. James ii. 23.) And of our faith in him that raised Christ from the dead, it is said, Rom. iv. 24. that it shall be imputed to us for righteousness.

Secondly, When the phrase is used with a negative, or when sin is said to be imputed, or not to be imputed, it is not only a man's own personal sin that is intended; but the nonimputation of it, is the not inflicting some condign punishment upon him for it. So Rom. iv. 8. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth no sin; which being spoken on the account of God's heavy hand on David for his sin, Psal. xxxii. 2—4. shews that the import of it must be this; Blessed is the man whom God doth not punish for his iniquity. So 2 Tim. iv. 16. In my first answer no man stood by me, μὴ αὐτοῖς λογισθείη, may it not be imputed to them, i. e. let them not suffer for it. So 2 Sam. xvi. 19. Shimei speaks to David thus, μὴ λογισάσθω ὁ κύριός μου ἀνομίαν, Let not the Lord impute to me mine iniquity; i. e. let him not remember it to punish it. When therefore it is said, 2 Cor. v. 19. that God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself, μὴ λογιζόμενος, not imputing to them their iniquities; the meaning is, that for Christ's sake he was pleased to exempt them from the punishment of their transgressions: so in like manner here, sin is said not to be imputed, whilst there is no law; not that God did not look upon men then as sinners, but that he did not punish them with death for it, but that they died a mere death, as being the offspring of Adam made mortal.

Hence note, that in the Scripture there is no mention of the imputation, either of one man's sin, or of his righteousness, unto another, but only of the imputation of his good deeds for righteousness, or of his evil deeds for punishment. Secondly, That the punishment of Adam's sin devolved upon his whole posterity, is fully proved from this chapter: but it is not here said, that they were truly and formally made sinners by his sin. So likewise, that for the obedience of one unto the death many were made righteous, and were delivered from that death to which they were obnoxious, we are assured from this, and other Scriptures; but that they were made formally righteous by our Saviour's righteousness imputed to them, the Scripture doth no where assert.

[12] Ver. 15. Οἱ πολλοὶ ἀπέθανον, Many were dead.] When God said to Adam, In the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt die, he did not mean that he should then give up the ghost, but that he should be subject to mortality, and at the last return to the dust from whence he came; as experience shewed, and as the fathers interpret it. Now in this sense, that of the apostle is most true, that in Adam all die, i. e. became obnoxious to mortality: but it is not true that all men die only on the account of Adam's sin. The old world was drowned on the account of their own sins, and the Jews suffered both by the hand of God and man, for sins committed against the law; and this perhaps might be the reason why the apostle saith, not by the offence of one all, but many, died. The advantage therefore here mentioned, may consist in this, that all that die, die not purely for the sin of Adam, but many times bring death upon themselves for their own sin; but all that are justified, and so freed from death, are thus exempted from it only by virtue of the death of Christ. This is the doctrine both of the Jews and of the church of Christ: not that all formally sinned in Adam, but that all men became obnoxious to death for Adam's sin. God (saith the author of the book of Wisdom) created man to be immortal; but through the envy of the devil, death entered into the world, Wisd. ii. 23, 24. By the woman was the beginning of sin, and by her we all die, saith the son of Sirach, Ecclus. xxv. 24. By the counsel which the serpent gave to Eve, all the inhabitants of the earth became obnoxious to death, saith the Targum on Ruth iv. ver. ult. And the same Chaldee paraphrase upon Eccles. vii. the last verse, saith, God made man pure and upright, but the serpent and Eve seduced him to eat of the fruit of the tree, and so they made death to rush upon him, and upon all the inhabitants of the earth.

[13] Ver. 16. Ἐκ πολλῶν παραπτωμάτων, From many offences.] This is the second advantageous difference, viz. that whereas we became obnoxious to death for one sin of Adam, we by faith in Christ are justified, and thereby freed not only from the condemnation which came upon us for that sin, but also from the condemnation due unto us for all our offences against God.

Note also, that the word κρίμα, especially when it is joined with death, doth usually signify a sentence condemning any person; κρίμα θανάτου is the sentence of death, Deut. xxi. 22. So Luke xxiv. 20. The high-priests and rulers delivered up Jesus εἰς κρίμα θανάτου, to the sentence of death. See xxiii. 40. Ecclus. xli. 2. O death, how acceptable is τὸ κρίμά σου thy sentence to the needy? And, ver. 3. Fear not κρίμα θανάτου the sentence of death. Remember them that have been before thee, and that come after thee, τοῦτο τὸ κρίμα παρὰ κυρίου πάσῃ σαρκὶ, for this is the sentence of the Lord over all flesh.

[14] Ver. 15. Ἡ δωρεὰ ἐν χάριτι. Ver. 17. Ἡ δωρεὰ δικαιοσύνης, The gift of righteousness.] I have interpreted these phrases of the gift of justification, as others do; but it is very probable that they may import the Holy Spirit given in baptism, and upon faith, to the believers of those times, who being made sons by faith in Christ, received the Spirit of adoption, Rom. viii. 14—16. Gal. iv. 6. and believing, were sealed with the Spirit of promise, Eph. i. 13. for he is styled emphatically ἡ δωρεὰ ἐπουράνιος, the heavenly gift, Heb. vi. 4. ἡ δωρεὰ, the gift, Acts xi. 17. ἡ δωρεὰ Θεοῦ, the gift of God, Acts viii. 20. the gift of the grace of God, Eph. iii. 7. ἡ δωρεὰ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, the gift of Christ, Eph. iv. 7. the gift of the Holy Ghost, Acts ii. 38. x. 45. So the Holy Ghost, given to the prophets and holy men of old, is by the primitive Christians usually styled ἡ ἄνωθεν ἐπὶ τοὺς ἁγίους ἄνδρας ἐπελθοῦσα δωρεὰ, the gift coming from above upon holy men, Just. Mart. adm. Gr. p. 9. B. p. 11. D. p. 30. D. p. 31. C.

[15] Ver. 19. Ἁμαρτωλοὶ κατεστάθησαν οἱ πολλοὶ, Many were made sinners.] In the exposition of this, and of the phrase in the twelfth verse, in whom all have sinned, I follow the Greek expositors, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Œcumenius, and Theophylact, upon the place: and to make good the interpretation, I shall shew first the inconsistency of any other sense, ascribed to them, with the text, with Scripture, and with reason. And,

First, It cannot be truly affirmed that we all actually and formally sinned in Adam, and upon that account were made sinners; for then it was not by the disobedience of one, but of many, that many were made sinners: (2.) then death, the punishment of sin, came upon all, not for the sin of one, or for one sin of that one man, but for the sin of all; both which things I have plainly proved to be contrary to the express words of the apostle. Then (3.) all men must have sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression; for if we all sinned in or with him, we must sin by the same act, the same will, and in the same person, against the same law; and surely they that thus sin, must sin after the similitude of Adam's transgression: for what dissimilitude can there be in sins committed by the same act, and the same will, of one and the same person, against the same law? But of the posterity of Adam, the apostle here expressly saith, they sinned not after the similitude of Adam's transgression, therefore they were not sinners by the same act and will, of the same person, against the same law. Moreover, if all the posterity of Adam sinned in Adam, they sinned against some law given to them, for sin is the transgression of a law, and where there is no law there is no transgression: now they could sin in Adam, so as to deserve death for their sin, only by sinning against the law requiring Adam not to eat of the forbidden fruit: for Adam himself became guilty of death only by transgressing that law, but all the posterity of Adam cannot be said to have sinned against that law, for when did they sin against it? If when Adam did so, then all his posterity must be actually sinners from the beginning of the world, i. e. some thousands of years before the greatest part of them had a being: now seeing action must be the action of some being, does it not seem absurd at first sight to say, that so many myriads were actually sinners, when they were not in being? and when they came into the world, they could not sin in Adam, or in his action, for he did not then eat of the forbidden fruit in the midst of Paradise. Again, we cannot sin against a law which is not in being; since therefore there is now no Paradise, and no forbidden fruit in being, we cannot be obliged by any law of God now not to eat of the fruit in the midst of Paradise, and so cannot be sinners by transgressing against such a law.

Secondly, It cannot truly be affirmed that we all sinned in Adam, and by his disobedience were made sinners, because his sin and disobedience was imputed to us: for I have shewed already, that the Scripture no where maketh the least mention of any thing of another's imputed to a man for reward or guilt, but only of some personal thing or action of our own: see note on ver. 14. Moreover, this imputation either makes the sin of Adam truly ours, or it doth not: if it doth not, how can we be made sinners by it? if it doth, then death came upon us for our sin; and so not for the sin of one, but for the sin of all, which is the thing disproved already, note on ver. 12. (3.) I ask, whether this imputation made the posterity of Adam sinners, or whether it found them so before? If it found them so before, it was plainly needless, for they might have been condemned to death without it: if it made them so, then, since this imputation is the act of God, and not of man, it plainly follows that God must be the author of that sin, because the imputation flows immediately from him, without the intervention of any action on the part of any of those men to whom it is imputed. Moreover, then the imputation must be false, as charging them with sin whom he did not find sinners, but only by his arbitrary imputation made them so. Now far be it from any Christian to affirm, that God should falsely impute sin to any man. In a word, λογίζεσθαι and imputare, is to reckon, to account a thing to any man, to charge him with it, to lay the charge of it to him. This action therefore on God's part must suppose, in the very nature of it, some action done by the posterity of Adam which is blameworthy, and may be justly charged upon them, before there can be any ground for imputation of it; and this shews that it is impossible, that the imputation should be the very thing that renders them blameworthy, or persons worthy to be charged with guilt. And yet if the sin of Adam becomes ours only by imputation, it must be ours only, because it is by God imputed to us, and not imputed because it is ours; that is, God by this imputation must make us sinners, and not find us such; for this imputation is the action of the Judge, not of the supposed criminal; remove or take away this action, and no crime can be charged upon him. In fine, if the sin of Adam becomes ours only by imputation, it deserves condemnation only by the same imputation, i. e. by the action of God; that therefore we deserve condemnation for it, is to be ascribed directly to the action of God, and only by accident to that of Adam. Whence therefore is our destruction, according to this opinion, but of God, who makes us worthy of condemnation, by imputing to us that sin, which by his imputation only we stand guilty of?

These interpretations being so inconsistent with the apostle's words, and with the plainest evidence of reason, I am forced to prefer before them that of the Greek fathers, viz. that we all sinned in Adam, i. e. by becoming obnoxious to that death which was the punishment of his sin, and that by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, by being subject to the death, and temporal calamities and miseries, which came upon all mankind for Adam's sin; so that we become sinners in him, or by his disobedience, by a metonymy of the effect, by suffering the punishment which God had threatened to him for it, as the experience of all men and women shew we do in all the parts of the threat; and this is a common sense of the word chattah, which signifies both sin and the punishment of it. So Gen. iv. 7. If thou doest evil, chattaath, sin lieth at the door; that is, the punishment of sin, ver. 13. So Gen. xix. 15. Make haste, saith the angel to Lot, and escape lest thou be consumed בעון, in the sin of the city, i. e. in the punishment of the city; In plaga descendente propter culpam incolarum urbis, Arab. And Gen. xxxi. 39. Jacob speaks to Laban thus, That which was torn of beasts, אנכי אחטנה ἐγω ἀπετίννυον, "pœnas dabam," I suffered for it; the sin was upon me, saith Aben Ezra. Gen. xliii. 9. Judah speaks thus to Jacob concerning Benjamin, If I bring him not again, וחטאתי לך ἡμαρτηκὼς ἔσομαι εἰς σε, i. e. I will suffer punishment; see xlii. 37. i. e. let me bear the blame; so also xliv. 32. So Bath-sheba said to David, I and thy son Solomon shall be חטאים ἁμαρτωλοὶ, sinners, 1 Kings i. 21. that is, we shall be punished as sinners, and be in danger of our life. So לא ירשיענו "impium non faciet," he will not condemn him, Psal. xxxvii. 33. ודם נקי ירשיעו, "et sanguinem innocentem condemnabunt," Psal. xciv. 21. so also Job ix. 20. So the lepers say one to another, We do not well if we tarry till the morning-light, then we shall be found sinners, 2 Kings vii. 9. i. e. we shall be punished by the king. And Zech. xiv. 19. This shall be חטאת מצרים, Ἁμαρτία Αἰγύπτου, the punishment of Egypt, and the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles. This phrase of bearing sin is constantly used in this sense; as when it is said, חטאם ישאו, they shall bear their iniquity, they shall die, Lev. xx. 20. and ἁμαρτιάν κομιοῦνται, ἀποίσονται, Lev. xx. 17. 19. Numb. xiv. 34. λήψέσθε ἁμαρτίας ὑμῶν, Lam. v. 7. ὑπέσχομεν τὰ ἀνομήματα αὐτῶν, we have borne their iniquity. If therefore ἁμαρτία in the Old Testament so often signifies the punishment of sin, which in this case was death, what exception can be made against these words of Chrysostom,* What is the meaning of these words, In whom all have sinned? It is this, he falling, even they who did not eat of the tree were by him made mortal;—even as if they themselves had fallen (saith Theophylact†) when he did. For, saith Theodoret, He being obnoxious to the decree of death, in that state he begat Cain, and Abel, and others, ἅπαντες οὖν ὡς ἐκ τοιούτου φύντες θνητὴν εἶχον τὴν φύσιν, all therefore became mortal, as being begotten of one that was mortal. And seeing it is said ἁμαρτωλοὶ, or ἡμαρτηκότες ἔσονται, they shall be sinners, who are to suffer punishment; why may not these words, by the disobedience of one many were made sinners, admit the sense which Chrysostom, Œcumenius, and Theophylact, give them? Τουτέστιν ὑπεύθυνοι κολάσει, καὶ κατάδικοι θανάτου, They shall for his disobedience be subject unto death and punishment, the effects of sin: For (saith St. Chrysostom) it is no absurdity to say, that he sinning, and so being mortal, they who proceed from him should be mortal also; but how can it justly follow, that by his disobedience another should be made a sinner, for such a one will be found to deserve no punishment, as not being personally a sinner? Τὸ δὲ ἐκ τῆς παρακοῆς ἐκείνου ἕτερον ἁμαρτωλὸν γενέσθαι ποίαν ἀκολουθίαν σχοίη; εὑρεθήσεται γὰρ οὗτω μηδὲ δίκην ὀφείλων ὁ τοιοῦτος, εἴγε μὴ οἰκοθεν γέγονεν ἁμαρτωλός. It is true, we meet not with the words ἥμαρτον and ἁμαρτωλοὶ κατεστάθησαν, in this sense elsewhere in the New Testament; but then this may be, because the comparison is not elsewhere made, betwixt the first Adam, and the effects of his disobedience, and the second Adam, and the effects of his obedience to the death; and because the opposite phrase, δίκαιοι κατεστάθησαν, required that the words opposed should be used in the metonymical sense: for when the apostle saith, by the obedience of one man many were made righteous, it is evident he spoke not of Christ's active obedience, but of his passive obedience, or suffering death for us. For (1.) the whole chapter is employed in setting forth the benefits accruing to us by his death, ver. 6. 8—11. (2.) The effect of this obedience is our justification; now that, through the whole Scripture, and in this very chapter, is constantly ascribed to the death of Christ, and his blood shed for us, ver. 9, 10. 16—18. (3.) The disobedience by which many were made sinners, is plainly declared by the apostle, to be one single act of disobedience in Adam, and therefore the obedience opposed to it cannot in reason be the active obedience of Christ's whole life, but that obedience to the death which the apostle mentions, Phil. ii. 6. 8. Now by this passive obedience we cannot be made formally righteous, but only metonymically, by being made partakers of that freedom from the condemnation and guilt of sin, and that reconciliation which Christ purchased by his meritorious death and passion. Dissolvens enim eam, quæ ab initio in ligno facta fuerat, inobedientiam, obediens factus est usque ad mortem, mortem autem crucis, eam quæ in ligno fuerat inobedientiam, per eam quæ in ligno fuerat obedientiam sanans. Iren. lib. v. cap. 56.

Moreover, we in the New Testament find frequently expressions equivalent to these; as (1.) when Christ is said to bear our sins, only because he bore the punishment due to them. (2.) When he is said to be made sin for us, 2 Cor. v. 21. he being made so not by contracting the guilt of our sins, but only by suffering punishment for our iniquities: and when he is said to appear a second time, χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας, without sin, Heb. ix. 28. i. e. without another sacrifice, in which he was to suffer for our sin: and when it is said that by sin, Rom. viii. 2. i. e. by his sacrifice for it, he condemned sin for the flesh. And (3.) when he is said to be made a curse for us, Gal. iii. 13. he being only so by suffering the death which the law styled accursed, and not as being so in the sight of God.

[16] Ver. 20. Ἵνα πλεονάσῃ τὸ παράπτωμα, The law entered that sin might abound unto death.] Hence it is styled, the letter that killeth, the ministry of death and of condemnation, 2 Cor. iii. 6—9. and is said to subject all that are under it to a curse, Gal. iii. 10.

CHAP. VI.

1. WHAT shall we say then? [1] shall we continue in sin (Gr. what do we say then? do we say this? Let us who have received this grace, continue still in sin), that grace may abound (towards us? that is do we by declaring that we are justified freely by grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, iii. 24. and that as sin abounded, grace did more abound, v. 20. give occasion to this inference?)

2. God forbid (we should make any such inference from, or any use of, this doctrine, so contrary to that very baptism by which we enter into the Christian covenant and put on Christ, for) how shall we who are dead (Gr. have died) to sin (by our baptism, or entrance into the Christian covenant), live any longer therein?

3. (For) know ye not, that as many (of us) as were baptized into (and by that baptism professed ourselves disciples of) Jesus Christ, were baptized into (the likeness of) his death? (and so engaged to die unto sin, as he did for sin, 1 Pet. iv. 1, 2. and to live to him that died for us, and rose again? 2 Cor. v. 15.

4. For) therefore we are [2] buried with him by baptism (plunging us under the water) into (a conformity to his) death (which put his body under the earth): that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory-(ous power) of the Father, even so we also (thus dead in baptism) should (rise with him, and) walk in newness of life.

5. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death (by dying unto sin), we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection, (by being so risen from our death unto sin, as never to let sin have any more dominion over us, but dying unto sin once for all, and henceforth living unto God, ver. 9, 10. or we shall rise to a life immortal, ver. 8. as he hath done.

* Τί δέ ἐστι, ἐφ' ᾧ πάντες ἥμαρτον; ἐκείνου πεσόντος, καὶ οἱ μὴ φάγοντες ἀπὸ τοῦ ξύλου γεγόνασιν ἐξ ἐκείνου πάντες θνητοί. Chrysost. in locum.

† Ὡς ἂν καὶ αὐτοὶ πταίσαντες διότι ἐκεῖνος ἔπταισεν. Theophyl. in locum.

6. And thus we stand engaged to die to sin,) knowing this, that our old man is (was) crucified with him, that the body of sin (i. e. the appetites of the body which subject us to sin) might be destroyed, that henceforth we might not serve sin, (for he bore our sins in his own body on the cross, that we being dead to sin, might live unto righteousness, 1 Pet. ii. 24.

7. Which we shall not do if we be truly dead unto it;) for he that is dead is free from sin, (1 Pet. iv. 4. he sins no more.)

8. Now if we be (thus) dead with Christ, we believe that [3] we shall also live with him (not a spiritual only, but a happy and immortal life:

9. And thus conformed to his death we should be, and therefore) knowing that Christ being raised from the dead (now) dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him.

10. For in that he died, de died [4] once to sin (or for sin, i. e. that he died to the putting away of sin, Heb. ix. 26.28. he died thus once for all): but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God; (i. e. the life he liveth is an eternal life, wholly dedicated to the glory of God, Phil. ii. 9—11.)

11. [5] Likewise reckon ye all yourselves to be indeed dead unto sin, but living to God, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

12. Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, [6] that you should obey it in the lust thereof.

13. Neither yield ye your members (any longer) as instruments of unrighteousness to sin: but yield (up) yourselves (entirely) to (the service of) God, as those that are (with Christ) alive from the dead, and (yield) your members as instruments of righteousness to God.

14. (And say not this is beyond your strength, seeing the law in your members lead you captive to sin;) [7] for sin shall not have dominion over you: for you are not under the (pedagogy of) the law (which gives the knowledge of sin, but not sufficient strength to mortify it), but under (that economy of) grace (which affords that spirit of life in Christ Jesus, which frees us from the law of sin and death).

15. What then? Shall we (go on in) sin, because we are not under the law (which condemns us for every transgression), but under (that covenant of) grace (which allows the pardon, and promises the forgiveness of it? Heb. viii. 12.) God forbid (that we should continue in the sins forbidden by the law, because we are not under the law).

16. Know ye not (this), that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey (and from him you must expect your wages); whether (you be the servants) of sin to (receive the wages of sin, which is) death, or (the servants of God) by obedience to (the obtaining the fruits of) righteousness?

17. But [8] God be thanked, that (and, God be thanked that though formerly, ver. 19.) ye were the servants of sin, but (yet since your conversion) you have obeyed from the heart that form of (Christian) doctrine which was delivered to you.

18. Being then (for being) made free from (the law of) sin, (by the grace and assistance of that Spirit of life, the gospel ministers, Rom. viii. 2.) ye became servants unto righteousness.

19. I speak [9] after the manner of men, because of the infirmity of your flesh: for as you have yielded your members servants to uncleanness, and to iniquity to (commit) iniquity; even so now yield your members servants to righteousness, unto holiness.

20. (Now, I say, for before you could not do it,) for when you were the servants of sin, ye were free from righteousness, (doing then no service at all to it.

21. And that you may not be still enamoured with your former service unto sin, I ask,) what fruit had you then in (from) those things of which you are now ashamed? (surely none worthy to be compared with the fruits of righteousness,) for the end of those things is death.

22. But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, you have (at present) your fruit unto holiness, and the end thereof (will be) everlasting life.

23. For [10] the wages of sin (to its servants) is death; but the gift of God (to his servants) is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VI.

[1] Ver. 1.] NOTE here, that if the faith, to which St. Paul in this Epistle doth ascribe justification, did not only oblige us to, but even comprehend, evangelical and constant obedience, there could be no colour for this objection; that therefore must be a mistake.

[2] Ver. 4. Συνετάφημεν οὖν αὐτῷ διὰ τοῦ βαπτίσματος, We are buried with him in baptism.] It being so expressly declared here, and Colos. ii. 12. that we are buried with Christ in baptism, by being buried under water; and the argument to oblige us to a conformity to his death, by dying to sin, being taken hence, and this immersion being religiously observed by all Christians, for thirteen centuries, and approved by our church, and the change of it unto sprinkling, even without any allowance from the Author of this institution, or any licence from any council of the church, being that which the Romanist still urgeth to justify his refusal of the cup to the laity; it were to be wished that this custom might be again of general use, and aspersion only permitted, as of old, in case of the clinici, or in present danger of death.

[3] Ver. 8. Συζήσομεν αὐτῷ, We shall live with him.] As being delivered, by his death, from that death which is the punishment of sin, and having that Spirit which is the giver of life, and the pledge and earnest of it, imparted to us: it is this life which is the object of our faith, and of this the apostle speaks, 2 Tim. ii. 11. saying, If we have been dead with him, we shall also live with him; if we suffer, we shall also reign together with him.

[4] Ver. 10. Ἀπέθανεν ἐφάπαξ, He died once for all.] That is, Christ so died for our sins once, as never to undergo death again, and therefore his living to God seems to import his resurrection to eternal life; and so the phrase is used by St. Luke, where, of the children of the resurrection, which can die no more, he saith, they live unto God, Luke xx. 26. 28. and in Josephus,* who saith, that they who die for God, ζῶσι τῷ Θεῷ, *live to God, as Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the patriarchs do; they love that piety which brings them to eternal life.

[5] Ver. 11. Οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς, So also reckon ye yourselves dead unto sin.] Once for all, so as never to have any need of dying to it again, but as still engaged to live to God's glory: for, say the ancients, we can have but one baptism, and this supposes we should so die to sin once, as never to have occasion to perform that work again. Hence therefore it appears, how far they are from conformity to the death of Christ, who still suffer sin to revive in them, after that, by pious resolutions and repentance, they have begun to mortify it, and so are still beginning again to die to it. And oh! that Christians would more carefully attend to this conformity to the death of Christ!

[6] Ver. 12. Εἰς τὸ ὑπακούειν, To obey it.] For this obedience to it in the lustings of it, is a certain sign of the dominion of sin in us, and of our being none of Christ's servants; for they that are Christ's, have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts. (Gal. v. 24. see Examen Millii.)

[7] Ver. 14. Ἁμαρτία γὰρ οὐ κυριεύσει, For sin shall not have dominion.] This is a pious sense, but seems to some to give no place for the following objection. Others therefore paraphrase the words thus: For then sin shall not have dominion over you, so as to condemn you for each transgression; for you are not under the law (which pronounceth a curse on them that do not obey it), but under (that covenant of) grace which affords pardon and forgiveness of it, 1 John i. 7. (See Examen Millii.)

[8] Ver. 17. Χάρις δὲ τῷ Θεῷ, But God be thanked.] He doth not here thank God that they had been the servants of sin, but that they, who had been servants to it, were become obedient to the precepts of Christianity; as our Lord thanks his heavenly Father, that he had hid these things from the wise and prudent, and revealed them to babes, Matt. xi. 25. i. e. that having hid from the one, he notwithstanding had revealed them to the other.

The particle δὲ is sometimes rendered and, as Luke ix. 6. xi. 18. Acts iii. 5. iv. 36. viii. 30. ix. 17. xi. 12. xiii. 15. xv. 6. xxi. 14. xxiii. 9. 13.

Sometimes, then, Acts vi. 2. 7. ix. 13. 16. xii. 3. Matt. i. 19. Luke viii. 29. 35.

Sometimes, so, Acts vii. 15. Rom. viii. 8.

Sometimes, yea, 1 Cor. ix. 16. xiii. 21. Rom. xi. 30. xvi. 19. 1 Cor. ii. 9.

Sometimes, but, in the sense of yet, Acts xxviii. 22. 1 Cor. xiv. 1.

And, yet, Matt. vi. 9.

Sometimes, for, Luke xii. 2. 48. xxiii. 14. Acts vii. 25. 1 Thess. ii. 16.

Also, Luke xii. 8. xiii. 6.

Moreover, 2 Pet. i. 15.

Howbeit, 1 Cor. ii. 9.

And so accordingly the words may be here rendered, And God be thanked, or God be thanked then, that though ye were the servants of sin, yet, and in the verse following, ἐλευθερωθέντες δὲ, for being delivered.

[9] Ver. 19. Ἀνθρώπινον λέγω, I speak after the manner of men.] The apostle doth not here speak, as some unhappily imagine, by way of excuse, for not using the best argument he could use in this affair, but such as was best fitted to the capacities and notions of those he writes to; for what inducements to yield their members instruments of righteousness to that holiness which will conclude in life eternal, could he use more rational and proper than this, that they had formerly yielded them servants to commit that sin, whose wages is death? But he speaks this by way of illustration of his argument, or exhortation. The sense which the ancients put upon these words is this, τῇ φύσει μετρῶ τὴν παραίνεσιν, I frame my exhortation with a due consideration of the infirmity of our flesh, requiring that only which even to human reason seems highly equitable, viz. that you should do that service now to God, which you have formerly done to sin. I rather think the apostle discourseth to this effect: In this discourse of your being servants formerly to sin, and your obligation now to be servants of righteousness, I speak that which all natural men must have had experience of, by reason of the infirmity of the flesh, and of which they may thence take a just idea; requiring only, that as they have yielded their members instruments of sin, so they would yield them instruments of righteousness.

And that this is the genuine import of the words ἀνθρώπινον λέγω, I speak after the manner of men, may appear from the like use of it, 1 Cor. x. 10. No temptation hath happened to you, but that which is ἀνθρώπινος, common to human nature, and supportable by men of reason; and from the constant use of the phrase κατ' ἄνθρωπον λέγω, I speak after the manner of men, of which see note on 1 Cor. ix. 8.

[10] Ver. 23. Τὰ γὰρ ὀψώνια τῆς ἁμαρτίας θάνατος, For the wages of sin is death.] Hence divines usually conclude, that even infants must have sinned, because they are subject to death. Now though this be so far true, that death came upon all men, and so upon infants, by that sin of Adam, which rendered him, and by him all his offspring, subject to mortality; yet this will no more follow from these words, than it will follow, that because the wages of rebellion is death, all that die must be guilty of rebellion. Moreover, the intention of the apostle is not here to teach us that death is the punishment due to every sin, but that that death, which is in Scripture styled the second death, and stands opposed to eternal life, will be the certain issue of a life spent in the service of sin. For the apostle throughout this chapter speaks of that sin in which we continue, ver. 1. and which we serve, ver. 6. 20. and which so reigneth in our mortal bodies, that we obey it in the lusts thereof, ver. 12. by which we yield our members instruments of unrighteousness to sin, ver. 13. 19. in which we so serve sin as to obey its commands, ver. 16, 17. and live free from righteousness, or in neglect of it, ver. 20. The wages, saith he, of sin thus reigning in, and served by, us, is eternal death. It is therefore manifest the apostle speaks not here of sin imputed, but only of personal sin, nor of each single act, but of an habitual practice of a course of sin. (See Examen Millii.)

CHAP. VII.

1. (AND of the truth of what I told you, vi. 14. that sin οὐ κυριεύσει, shall not have dominion over you, because you are not under the law, but under grace, ye cannot well be ignorant, for) know ye not, brethren, for I speak to them that know the law (i. e. to the Jews or proselytes), that the law (to which you were espoused by Moses) hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth (only?

2. The case of a man thus under the law, i. e. in his legal state, being like that of a woman married to a husband;) for the woman that hath a husband is bound by the law to (be subject to) her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is (then) free from the law of (subjection to) her husband.

3. So then (Gr. therefore) if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another, [1] she shall be (truly) called an adulteress: but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law (which bound her to be in subjection to, and yield conjugal affection to, her husband only); so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man.

4. Wherefore, my brethren, (as the woman is become free from the law of her husband by his death, even so) [2] ye also are become dead (Gr. ἐθανατώθητε, ye have been dead) to the law (and so free from it) by (the crucifixion of) the body of Christ (which hath dissolved your obligation to the law, as the death of the husband doth the obligation of the wife to him), that ye should (or may) be married to another (husband), even to him who is raised from the dead, that (being made free from sin, ver. 21, 22. by virtue of your union to him) ye may bring forth fruit unto God.

5. (We are, I say, become thus dead to the law, this being necessary, that we might bring forth fruit unto God:) [3] for when we were in the flesh (i. e. when we lived under the carnal ordinances of the law, without the assistance of the Spirit), [4] the lustings of sin, which were (forbidden and restrained) by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death (rendering us obnoxious to death, the punishment threatened by the law to the transgressors of it).

6. But now we are delivered from the law (and from the motions of sin caused by it), [5] that being dead wherein we were held (in subjection, as the wife was to her living husband); [6] that we should serve God in newness of (that) Spirit (of life in Christ Jesus, which makes us free from the law of sin and death), and not (as before) in the oldness of the letter, (which killeth, or subjecteth us to death, 2 Cor. iii. 6. 9.)

7. What shall we say then? Is the law (from which we must be delivered, that we may not obey the lusts of the flesh) sin? (Is it the cause of that sin which worketh in our members whilst we are under the law?) God forbid (that we should say so). Nay (so far otherwise is it, that) I had not known sin to be so but by the law (instructing me what is to be avoided as sin, and under what penalty): for I had not known lust (i. e. the lustings, or covetous desires of the heart to be things worthy of death), except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet; (and so made him that coveteth obnoxious to death, as being a transgressor of the law.)

8. But (nevertheless) sin, taking occasion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiscence, or vehement desires after that which was forbidden by the law (which became mortal to me by virtue of the prohibition of the law). For (whilst I was) without the law sin was dead, (i. e. unable to have this effect upon me; for where there is no law there is no transgression imputed to death, v. 13.)

9. For [7] I (the seed of Abraham) was alive (or indeed lived) without the law once (before the law was given, I being not obnoxious to death for that to which the law had not threatened death): but when the commandment came (forbidding it under that penalty), sin revived, and I died (i. e. it got strength to draw me to sin, and so condemned me to death).

10. And the commandment, which was [8] ordained to (or given for) life, (as teaching those things, which if a man do he shall live in them, Lev. xviii. 5.) was found to me (transgressing it, to be) unto death.

11. For [9] sin, taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me (or enticed me to the commission of it), and by it (condemning me to death for that transgression) slew me.

12. Wherefore the law (forbidding sin) is holy, and the commandment (to abstain from it) holy, just, and good (as requiring only what is equitable in itself, and good for me to do).

13. Was then that which is good made death to me (Gr. hath that therefore which is good become death to me? i. e. is that the sole and proper cause of bringing death to me)? God forbid (we should so say). But (this charge is to be laid upon) sin, (which) that it might appear sin (i. e. pernicious and destructive), working death in (or to) me by that which is good (i. e. the law made me obnoxious to death); that sin by the commandment (forbidding it) [10] might become exceeding sinful, (i. e. abounding to death, by making me abound in new transgressions of the law, v. 21.

14. And that sin should thus prevail over us in this state of lapsed nature to transgress the law, and to become obnoxious to death by it, will not seem strange, if every natural man considers the contrariety there is betwixt him and the law;) for we know that the law is spiritual (and requires spiritual things): but (every natural man hath cause to say of himself,) I am carnal, [11] sold under sin, (i. e. enslaved by my corrupt affections:

15. As may be easily discerned from the workings of our conscience against the evil that we do:) for that which I do [12] I allow not (in my own mind): for that I would do (in compliance with the law), that (through the prevalence of my corrupt nature) do I not; but what (through the conviction of my conscience) [13] I hate (to do), that do I.

16. If then (it be so with me, that) I do that which I would not, (by this unwillingness to act in contradiction to it) I consent unto the law that it is good (and commands what is good for me to do).

17. Now then (this being done by those corrupt affections, which overpower me against the approbation of my mind) it is no more I (according to the better part from which I am denominated) that do it, but [14] sin that dwelleth in me (i. e. in my flesh, ver. 23. and captivates me to the obedience of it.

18. And upon this I have just ground to charge it:) for I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing: for to will (that which is good) is present with me (or to me); but to perform that which is good I find not (strength by nature).

19. For (in event, I find that) the good that I would (do) I do not: but the evil which (the law prohibits, and) I would not (do), that (being overpowered by the flesh) I do.

20. Now if I (thus) do that I would not, it is no more

I (choosing and approving the action in my mind) that do this, but sin that dwelleth in me, (i. e. in my flesh, that hurries me to the commission of it against the law, and conviction of my mind.

21. For so it is, that) I find then (Gr. ἄρα, indeed,) a law (in my members so thwarting the convictions of my mind), that, when I would do (the) good (to which the law directs me), evil is present with me (to oppose and hinder me from doing it:

22. I say, when I would do good:) for I delight in the law of God [15]after the inward man (my mind approving for some time, and being pleased with its good and holy precepts):

23. But I see (or perceive) another law (of the flesh) in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members, (for of what a man is overcome, of that he is brought into bondage, 2 Pet. ii. 19. John viii. 34. Rom. vi. 16.

24. And being thus enslaved to that sin which renders me obnoxious to death, the wages of it, I am even forced to cry out,) O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of (sin which worketh) this death?

25. (And so) I (have great reason to) [16]thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord (whom he hath sent to redeem me from this death to which I am obnoxious by sin). So then (to shut up this discourse, thus is it with me, whilst under the law only and carnally minded), with the mind [17]I myself (or I the same man) serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VII.

[1] Ver. 3. ΜΟΙΧΑΛΙΣ χρηματίσει, She shall be called an adulteress.] The apostle, saith Theodoret, considers not here the permission given to the woman divorced by the law of Moses, to be married to another, as being taught by Christ not to approve of such divorces; but the apostle seems only to intimate that she hath no power to dissolve this bond by putting away her husband, or that this divorce rendered her husband dead in law to her, she being not to return to him again. (Deut. xxiv. 4.) Now this, saith the apostle, is the case of those who are under the law; their entering into that legal covenant was the day of their espousals, (Jer. ii. 2.) and they were married to it, or to him that put them in subjection under it, and were his spouse, (Jer. iii. 14.) and so obliged to serve God in the oldness of the letter; but now this law being dead, and you being espoused to another husband, even Christ, (2 Cor. xi. 2.) are henceforth bound to serve God according to that new spiritual law which he hath given you, and not according to the letter of the old law.

[2] Ver. 4. Ἐθανατώθητε τῷ νόμῳ.] This phrase, Ye are dead to the law, or ye have been made dead to the law, is, say interpreters, The law is put to death to you; for to that, say they, the drift of the discourse directs: but (1.) this interpretation puts a plain force upon the words, without any instance that they are elsewhere used in this sense. (2.) The parallel words, Gal. ii. 19, 20. run thus; I through the law am dead to the law, that I might live to God: I am crucified together with Christ. Now those words seem to fix the proper sense of these, shewing it to be also this; Ye are dead to the law, that is, you are free from subjection to the precepts of the law, which as a husband had dominion over you, and from the motions of sin which are by the law, as if you were dead. To strengthen this interpretation, let the Hebrew phrase be noted; * When a man dies he is made free from the commands, the law οὐ κυριεύει, hath no dominion over him, no power to subject him to the motions of sin which are by the law, for he that is dead is free from sin, (vi. 6, 7.) so that he doth no longer δουλεύειν, serve the motions of it: and hence the apostle makes this inference; that if we be dead with Christ, and buried with him, or crucified together with him, sin οὐ κυριεύει, shall not have dominion over us, as it had whilst we were under the Jewish dispensation; for we are not under the law, but under grace. And again, Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh, Gal. v. 16. and ver. 18. for if ye be led by the Spirit, ye are not under the law. Wherefore the sense of these four last verses seems to be this; The law hath dominion over a man as long as he lives (under it), for the case of a man's subjection to the law in this, like to the woman's subjection to her husband, it continues whilst he lives, but when he is once dead she is free from any farther subjection to him, seeing he being dead can have no farther power over her, and so she must be free to be married to another: in like manner you being made dead to the law, to which you were espoused, by the death of Christ, as being buried and crucified together with him, the law can have no farther power over you, to retain you in subjection to it, and so you must be free to be married, or put into subjection to another husband, even Christ, to whom I have espoused you; (2 Cor. xi. 2.) and the law itself being also dead to you, through the death of Christ abolishing it, and freeing Christians from the power and obligation of it, you are free to marry another husband, even Christ, (ver. 5.)

[3] Ver. 5. Ὅτε γὰρ ἦμεν ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ, For when we were in the flesh.] When I consider that οἱ ὄντες ἐν σαρκὶ, and οἱ κατὰ σάρκα ὄντες, viii. 5. 8. signifies those that are acted and governed by the fleshly principle, in opposition to the guidance and motions of the Holy Spirit, and that εἶναι ἐν σαρκὶ, ver. 9. ζῆν, περιπατεῖν κατὰ σάρκα, ver. 12, 13. bear the same sense; I judge, that when we were in the flesh, here, doth not only signify to be under the carnal ordinances of the law, for so were all the pious Jews who lived from Moses to the gospel-times; but more especially relates to them, who, living under these ordinances, were themselves carnal, and without any assistance of the Holy Spirit: and so had the law of the flesh still warring against the law of their minds, and bringing them into captivity to the law of sin, which could not be the state of Zacharias and Elisabeth, or any other of those persons who were righteous before God, and walked in all the commandments of the Lord blameless. And if of such only we understand the apostle's following discourse in this chapter, the sense will be clear.

[4] Τὰ διὰ τοῦ νόμου, The motions of sin which were by the law.] Here Mr. L. saith, interpreters cast a strange imputation on the law of God, by saying it excited men to sin by forbidding it, whereas they only say that the carnal minds of men excited them to transgress the law when they were under it, as the apostle saith, ver. 8. and Mr. L. in his gloss on the eighth verse says, Sin took the opportunity of my being under the law to stir up concupiscence in me; for without the law, which annexes death to the transgression of it, sin is not able to have its will upon me: now is this any more an imputation upon the law of God, than it is an imputation on his providence, that it provides that corn and wine which carnal men abuse to drunkenness and excess?

[5] Ver. 6. Ἀποθανόντος.] The Syriac and Arabic versions, Origen, Theodoret, Œcumenius, and Theophylact, read, ἀποθανόντες, we being dead to that in which we were held, which, saith Origen, is undoubtedly the best reading: and this reading confirms the sense of the fourth verse, as to these words, ye are dead to the law, which I have offered in the paraphrase; i. e. we being freed from the obligation and commands of it, and so from the lustings and motions it wrought in us.

[6] Ὥστε δουλεύειν ἡμᾶς ἐν καινότητι πνεύματος, That we might serve God in the newness of the spirit.] The law and the gospel are, by the apostle, in this distinguished; that the first is only the ministration of the letter, the other of the spirit. (2 Cor. iii. 6—9.) The ministration of the spirit is also declared to be the fruit, not of the law, but of the hearing of faith, Gal. iii. 3. Hence the apostle here infers, that we must be dead unto, or free from subjection to the law, that we may be enabled to serve God in newness of spirit. Whence it is evident, that to serve God in the spirit, is not to enjoy the spiritual sense of the law, as Mr. Le Clerc thinks; but, first, as the opposition shews, to serve him with a freedom from the prevalency of the flesh, by virtue of the Spirit, which enables us to mortify the deeds of the flesh, (viii. 13.) Secondly, To serve God, not chiefly with bodily service and carnal ordinances, but in the spirit of our minds, (xii. 2. Phil. iii. 2.) having our minds renewed and transformed after the image of God in holiness, and righteousness, and truth, which are the fruits of the Spirit. (Eph. iv. 23, 24.) Thirdly, To serve him by the assistance of the Spirit, so as to live and walk in the Spirit, (Rom. viii. 5. Gal. v. 25.) so that we are strengthened with might by the Spirit in the inward man. (Eph. iii. 16.)

[7] Ver. 9. Ἐγὼ δὲ ἔζων χωρὶς νόμου, I was alive without the law.] Πρὸ τοῦ Μωϋσέος, Before the law of Moses came. So Chrysostom, Œcumenius, Theophylact.

[8] Ver. 10. Ordained.] This word is not in the original; you may therefore paraphrase the words thus, The commandment which was given for life, i. e. with this promise, Do this, and live, was found to me unto death.

[9] Ver. 8—11.] For the explication of these four last verses, let it be noted;

First, That it is the opinion of judicious commentators, that when the apostle saith, Sin taking occasion by the commandment wrought in him all manner of concupiscence, ver. 8. and deceived him, ver. 11. he means that it did by this saying only, Thou shalt not covet, but assigning no punishment to him that coveted. But this interpretation cannot stand, for these two reasons: for, first, it plainly contradicts the words of the law, which pronounce a curse upon every one, who continues not in all things written in the law to do them; and much more doth it contradict the drift of the apostle's discourse in this, and the Epistle to the Galatians, viz. that the law required perfect obedience to its precepts; condemning him to death, or rendering him obnoxious to condemnation, who in any thing transgressed it, and so could be no means of justification; as many as were under the law being under the curse, because transgressors of it.

Secondly, This agrees not with the following reason, or the nature of the thing: for if the law given encouraged them to covet, because it had no present penalty annexed to it, they must be more free to covet, or follow their natural or carnal inclinations, when there was no law at all forbidding them to covet; and therefore sin could take no more occasion by a law without penalty, than by none at all, to work in us all manner of concupiscence, nor could concupiscence be dead without the law, more than with it.

The old and common interpretation is this, That the prohibition of what we desire makes us to think the enjoyment of it more sweet and valuable; or at least provokes the carnal mind, which is not subject to the law of God, to a more fervent lusting after it, Dum prohibita non tam refugit quam ardentiùs expetit; and this agrees very well with this expression. Or,

Thirdly, Sin is in Scripture represented as an enemy, that seeks our ruin and destruction, and takes all occasions to effect it: it is here said to war against the mind, ver. 23. elsewhere, to war against the soul, 1 Pet. ii. 11. to surround and beset us, Heb. xii. 1. to bring us into bondage and subjection, and get the dominion of us, Rom. vi. 12. to entice us, and so to work our death, James i. 15, 16. and to do all that Satan, the grand enemy of mankind, doth by tempting and soliciting us to the commission of it: whence Chrysostom, upon those words, Heb. xii. 4. You have not yet resisted unto blood, πρὸς τὴν ἁμαρτίαν ἀνταγωνιζόμενοι, striving against sin, represents sin as an armed and flagrant adversary: when therefore it finds a law, which threatneth death to the violation of it, it takes occasion thence more earnestly to attempt and allure us to the violation of it, that so it may more effectually subject us to death and condemnation upon that account; for the sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law, condemning us to death upon the violation of it; thus when God had forbidden, under the pain of death, the eating of the forbidden fruit, Satan thence took occasion to tempt our first parents to the breach of it, and so slew them, or made them subject to death: ἠπάτησε, he deceived them, Gen. iii. 13. 1 Tim. ii. 14. which is the word here used, ver. 11.

Secondly, Observe the import of the phrase, without the law sin was (or is) dead; which seems not to be this, that the inclinations of men to sin were in their nature less, when they were unrestrained by a law; but rather this, that sin was then comparatively dead, as to its power of condemning us to death: and this, first, the antithesis doth plainly hint; for thus it runs, Without the law, ἁμαρτία νεκρὰ, ἐγὼ δὲ ἔζων, sin was dead, but I was living; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died. How were men living before the law, but because then no law condemned them? Sin therefore must be then dead as to its power of condemning. How did they die when the law came, but by the law condemning them to death? Sin therefore then revived as to its condemning power, which it received first from the sin of Adam, which brought death into the world; and next from the law of Moses, which entered that the offence might abound, and reign more unto death. (Rom. v. 20, 21.) For though sin was in the world from Adam unto Moses, or until the law given, yet was it not imputed unto death, when there was no law given, that did threaten death unto it: so that death reigned, in that interval, by virtue of Adam's sin alone, even over them, who had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, i. e. against a positive law forbidding it under the penalty of death; which law being delivered by Moses, sin revived, i. e. it had again its force to condemn men as before to death, by virtue of a law, which threatened death to them. And in this sense doth the apostle seem to say, that the law was added because of transgressions, (Gal. iii. 19.) to convince us of the wrath and punishment due to them; and that the law therefore worketh wrath, because where no law is, there is no transgression, (Rom. iv. 15.) subjecting us to wrath, or no such sense of the Divine wrath, as where a plain Divine law threatening death and condemnation is violated. Upon the sense thus given of these two phrases, doth our exposition stand.

[10] Ver. 13. Καθ' ὑπερβολὴν ἁμάρτωλος, Exceeding sinful.] That it might appear εἰς θάνατον ὑπερβάλλουσα, (v. 20, 21.) abounding unto death, and so exceeding vile and hateful to us, the end and wages of it being death, and condemnation, (vi. 21. 23.)

[11] Ver. 14. Πεπραμένος ὑπὸ τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, Sold under sin,] i. e. In peccati potestatem libidinis, et concupiscentiæ pretio redactus, Origen. So enslaved to it, saith Theophylact, ὥστε μὴ ἀναβλέψαι δυνάσθαι, that he could not look up; A willing slave, who had sold himself to it, saith Theodoret. And this is continually the import of the phrase in the Old Testament; as when it is said of Ahab, 1 Kings xxi. 20. πέπρασαι ποιῆσαι τὸ πονηρὸν, thou hast sold thyself to do wickedly; and, ver. 25. ἐπράθη ποιῆσαι τὸ πονηρὸν, he sold himself to do wickedly. Of the Jews, Isa. l. 1. ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις ὑμῶν ἐπράθητε, you have sold yourselves to your iniquities. And of the Jews who, under Antiochus Epiphanes, revolted from their religion to heathenism, it is said, that ἐπράθησαν τὸ πονηρὸν, they sold themselves to do evil, 1 Macc. i. 15.

[12] Ver. 15. Οὐ γινώσκω, I allow not.] This interpretation, saith Mr. L. makes the following words a tautology, whereas I judge it very reasonable to say, I allow not, because I would not; yea, I hate to do, what I do.

[13] Ὃ μισῶ, That which I hate.] Ὑπὸ τῆς ἡδονῆς καταθελγόμενοι ποιοῦμεν ἅπερ ὡς παράνομα βδελυπτόμεθα, Being allured with pleasure, we (say Theodoret and Œcumenius) oft do those things which are abominable, as being opposite to the law; for whilst the law represents sin as pernicious, and destructive both to soul and body, it is as natural for all men to hate it, as to love themselves: but then, as Photius saith, when τὸ ἡδὺ τοῦ πράγματος προβάλλεται, the sweetness or pleasure of the action is proposed to the mind, the hatred goes off, and the soul is wrought up to an affection to it; and thus it is with every enlightened man, that sins against his conscience, and doth the evil which he would not do. These words (saith Origen) shew that the carnal man, of whom he speaks, "resistere aliquantulùm vitiis conatur," endeavours a little to resist his vices, "legis sc. naturalis instinctu," by the instinct of the law of nature, but that at last he is overcome by them, and oppressed with them.

[14] Ver. 17. Ἡ οἰκοῦσα ἐν ἐμοὶ ἁμαρτία, Sin that dwelleth in me.] This he speaks, saith Theodoret, calling τοῦ νοῦ τὴν δουλείαν, καὶ τῶν παθῶν τὴν δεσποτείαν, the slavery of the mind, and the dominion, or, as Theophylact, the tyranny of the passions, sin.—It is, saith Origen, "lex et voluntas carnis, quæ captivos nos ducit in lege peccati," the law and the will of the flesh, which leads us captive to the law of sin. Hence this sin dwelling in us is so often styled, the law of sin in our members, ver. 20—22. 25. viii. 2. Here the apostle seems to speak according to the philosophy of the heathens, with which the Jews began to be acquainted, that man was not to be denominated from his body, or his sensual and carnal part, but from his mind, his νοῦς or λογικὴ διάνοια, which, in Philo's* phrase is, ὁ ἐν ἑκαστῷ ἡμῶν ἄνθρωπος, the man within us; ὁ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἄνθρωπος, the true man,† the man properly so called; who saith moreover, λέγει δὲ ταῦτα ὁ ἀληθινὸς ἄνθρωπος ὁ ἐπὶ ψυχῆς ἔλεγχος, this saith the true man, the reprover in the soul. And of himself he speaks thus; Men have power over my body, but that is nothing to me, ἐγὼ γὰρ ἀπὸ τοῦ κρείττονος τῆς ἐν ἐμαυτῷ διανοίας χρηματίζω, for I am denominated from my mind, the better part, according to which I design to live.

[15] Ver. 22. Κατὰ τὸν ἔσω ἄνθρωπον, According to the inward man.] It is plain the inward man here cannot signify the new man, (which is created after God in righteousness and holiness, Eph. iv. 24. and which is not put on, till all old things are passed away, 2 Cor. v. 17. and all things are become new, and till we have put off the old man with his deeds, Colos. iii. 9, 10.) for sure this cannot be said of him, who is still carnal, sold under sin, and captivated to the law of sin which is in his members; but only the mind of man, the νοῦς, as the apostle doth interpret himself, ver. 25. So Origen informs us, that the soul, using the body as its instrument, is called ὁ ἔσω ἄνθρωπος, the inward man, contra Cels. lib. vii. p. 357. Ἔσω ἄνθρωπον τὸν νοῦν λέγει. So Theodoret, Œcumenius, Theophylact. So the very next verse shews, the words running thus; I delight in the law of God in the inward man, but I see another law in my members warring against the law of my mind, i. e. of my inward man. And so the apostle useth the phrase when he saith, 2 Cor. iv. 16. that though ὁ ἔξω ἄνθρωπος, the outward man (i. e. the body) was corrupted, yet ὁ ἔσωθεν, the inward man was renewed day by day. And that this delight is no evidence of a regenerate man, is evident from the example of the stony ground, which heard the word μετὰ χαρᾶς, with joy, Matt. xiii. 20. of Herod, who heard John the Baptist ἡδέως, with delight, Mark vi. 20. of the Jews, who rejoiced in his light, John v. 35. and heard our Saviour gladly, Mark xii. 37.

[16] Ver. 25. Εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ, I thank God.] The Latin version and one Greek copy read, χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ, the grace of God; but the Syriac, Arabic, and all the Greek commentators agree with our translation, which therefore is to be preferred before that lection. (See Examen Millii in locum.)

[17] Αὐτὸς ἐγὼ, The same man,] Of whom he had before spoken, not I Paul now writing this Epistle. It hath been a controversy since St. Austin's time, whether St. Paul here speaketh in his own person, or in the person of a regenerate man, or only in the person of a Jew conflicting with the motions of his lusts, only by the assistance of the letter of the law, without the aids and powerful assistance of the Holy Spirit; which is as great an instance of the force of prejudice, and the heat of opposition, to pervert the plainest truths, as can be happily produced: for, I think, nothing can be more evident, and unquestionably true, than this, that the apostle doth not here speak of himself in his own person, or in the state he was then in; but, as the ancient commentators do interpret him, δι' ἑαυτοῦ ὁ ἀπόστολος τὸν κοινὸν ἄνθρωπον δηλοῖ, by himself he represents man in common, and saith not, as he might have done, You that are under the law are carnal, but τὰ ἐκείνων ἐφ' ἑαυτοῦ σχηματίζων, καὶ τὸ τραχὺ σφοδρὸν ἐκλύων, καὶ λεαίνων τῇ περὶ ἑαυτὸν σχηματολογίᾳ, representing what belonged to them in his own person, and so taking off the harshness, and mollifying the invidiousness of the sentence, by speaking of it in his own person, he saith, I am carnal, sold under sin. So Photius and Œcumenius. Theodoret also doth inform us, that the apostle here introduceth, ver. 14. τὸν πρὸ τῆς χάριτος ἄνθρωπον πολιορκούμενον ὑπὸ τῶν παθῶν, a man before grace overcome by his passions; for he calls him carnal who had not yet obtained the assistance of the Holy Spirit. And again, ver. 23. he adds, that the apostle having discoursed all these things, ὥστε δεῖξαί τινες μὲν πρὸ τῆς χάριτος ἦμεν, "To shew what we were before grace, and what we were made after grace, and as it were taking upon himself the person of those who before grace were vanquished by sin, he groans and laments, as a man set in the midst of his enemies, enslaved and constrained to serve, and seeing no help; and thus he shews the law unable to help us." And so Origen also frequently in his commentary on the place; and St. Austin saith expressly and frequently, Describitur homo sub lege positus ante gratiam, Liber expos. quat. propos. ex Epist. ad Rom. Quo loco videtur mihi apostolus, transfigurâsse in se hominem sub lege positum, ad Simplic. Mediol. lib. i. Et in hæc verba,' non ego operor illud,' &c. loquitur adhuc ex persona hominis sub lege constituti, nondum sub gratia: though he was pleased afterward to change his opinion, and so gave occasion to the perverting the plain sense of the apostle. For confutation of this dangerous opinion, I need not say much after the labours of Arminius, the reverend Dr. Hammond, Mr. Bull, and Mr. Kettlewell, who have made it manifest,

First, That it is usual with the apostle to make this metaschematism, or to speak especially of things that might be otherwise offensive or ungrateful, in his own name, when indeed they belong not to him, but to other men; as in these words, Rom. iii. 7. If the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie, why am I also judged as a sinner? i. e. not I Paul, but I who make this objection. So Gal. ii. 16, 17. 1 Cor. iv. 6. These things μετεσχημάτισα, I have in a figure transferred to myself and Apollos for your sakes. (1 Cor. vi. 12. xiii. 2. x. 22. 30. Eph. ii. 3. 1 Thess. iv. 17.)

Secondly, That such things are in this chapter said of the person spoken of, as can by no means agree to St. Paul, or to any regenerate person: to which may be added,

First, That had St. Paul spoken here of himself, considered in the state in which he was at the inditing of this Epistle, he must have contradicted what he had said of himself in the Epistle to the Thessalonians, and to the Corinthians, which were writ before this Epistle. For (1.) in his Epistle to the Thessalonians he saith, You are witnesses, and God also, how holily, and righteously, and unblamably we have behaved ourselves among you that believed, 1 Thess. ii. 10. In his Second Epistle to the Corinthians he speaks thus: This is our rejoicing, even the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity, and godly sincerity, not in fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have conversed in this world, 2 Cor. i. 12. that he knew nothing by himself, for which to condemn himself, 1 Cor. iv. 4. that he kept under his body, and brought it into subjection, 1 Cor. ix. 27. Now, can the man who is carnal, and sold under sin, who hath no power in him to do any good, who finds a law in his members warring against the law of his mind, and bringing him into captivity to the law of sin, which is in his members, call God and the church to witness to his holy and unblamable life? Can he boast of keeping under his fleshly body, and bringing that into subjection, which by his own confession bringeth him into captivity? Can he, who does not what he would in his mind and conscience do, but what he hates; not the good which he would, but the evil which he would not, do; can he, I say, rejoice in the testimony of his conscience? Can he honestly declare he knows nothing by himself, for which his conscience can condemn him?

Secondly, How oft doth the apostle propose himself for a pattern to the churches unto whom he writes, requiring them to be followers of him as he was also of Christ? 1 Cor. xi. 1. And again, What things you have learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, these do, and the God of love and peace shall be with you, Phil. iv. 8. i. e. be you carnal, sold under sin, living in the commission of the things you hate, and your mind condemns, and doing what you judge to be evil, and yielding yourselves captive to the law of sin, which is in your members, and then the God of love and peace shall be with you. This sure is an absurd, if not blasphemous, exhortation, and yet, according to this exposition, it must be suitable to the mind of the apostle.

Thirdly, With what indignation doth he reject the accusations of them, who looked upon him as walking after the flesh, and how severely doth he threaten them, how peremptorily doth he reject their scandalous imputation? declaring, that though he walked in the flesh, yet did he not walk according to the flesh, 2 Cor. x. 2, 3. and yet, if he were carnal, sold under sin; if with the flesh he served the law of sin; if the law of the fleshly members warred against the law of his mind, and brought him into captivity to the law of sin; he doth here in effect confess what there he peremptorily denies, and with such indignation doth reject.

Fourthly, This exposition of the seventh chapter makes it entirely to confute the chapter which immediately goes before, and that which follows after; and it gives an invincible strength to the objections he endeavours to answer in the sixth chapter. The first objection there begins by way of inquiry, What do we say then, shall we still continue in sin, that grace may abound? his second by way of like inquiry, Shall we sin because we are not under the law, but under grace? ver. 15. God forbid, saith he, that it should be thus with any Christian: and yet, according to this exposition, it was thus with himself, one of the best of Christians: for sure he must continue in sin, who was still sold under sin, still serving the law of sin with his flesh; still doing that evil he allowed not, the evil which he hated, and he would not do; and who was still brought into captivity to the law of sin which was in his members.

Again, in his answer to these inquiries, he shews the Christian could not continue in, or live any longer in it, because he was dead to sin, his old man was crucified with Christ, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth he might not serve sin; (ver. 2. 6.) and because being dead to, he was freed from sin, (ver. 7.) he was made free from sin, and become the servant of righteousness. But can he that is sold under sin, and is brought into captivity to the law of sin which is in his members, be at the same time dead to sin, and free from sin? Can he who with his flesh serves the law of sin, be said to cease from sin, and not henceforth to serve sin? not to obey it in the lusts thereof, (ver. 12.) not to yield his members instruments of sin unto unrighteousness? ver. 13. Surely there is as clear an opposition betwixt the Christian represented in the sixth chapter, as free from sin, and in the seventh, as miserably enslaved to the law of sin and death which was in his members, as betwixt light and darkness!

Again, he saith expressly, viii. 2. The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. Whereas the person mentioned in the seventh is sold under sin, is brought into captivity to the law of sin, and crieth out under his bondage, O miserable man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death? He therefore cannot be the person freed by the Spirit from the law of sin and death.

In fine, this exposition of the close of this chapter contradicts the beginning of it; for there the apostle saith of himself, and all his Christian brethren, that this was only their state under the law, from which they are delivered, that they might bring forth fruit unto God, and serve him in newness of spirit. For what else can be the meaning of these words, ver. 5, 6. For when we were in the flesh, the motions of sin, which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death. But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve God in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter. So that they who make the apostle say of himself, that he was brought into captivity to the law of sin, which was in his members, and to cry out, O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death? i. e. this body of sin which worketh death; make him also to confess, that the motions of sin did still work in his members, to bring forth fruit unto death, and therefore that he was still in the flesh. I therefore conclude this discourse in the words of Grotius on ver. 19. Deo laus sit, quod optimi, i. e. trium priorum seculorum Christiani hunc locum, sicut oportet, intellexerint, dictante illo spiritu per quem vita illorum regebatur.

CHAP. VIII.

1. (BEING then married to this other husband, Christ, and so freed from the motions of sin, which are by the law, that we may serve God in newness of spirit, vii. 4—6.) There is therefore (ἄρα, verily) now no condemnation to them which are in [1] Christ Jesus (by faith, they being such) who walk not after the flesh (as whilst they were under the law they did) but after the Spirit (conferred upon them by faith in Christ).

2. For [2] the law of the Spirit of life (given to them who are) in Christ Jesus hath made me (believing in him) free from the law of sin, and (so from that) death (which is the wages of it).

3. [3] For what the law could not do (i. e. that life and that deliverance from death it could not give), in that it was (made) weak through the flesh (rendering us subject to the transgression of it, and so to death), God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh (did), and [4] for sin (Gr. καὶ περὶ ἁμαρτίας, and [5] by a sacrifice for sin) condemned sin in the flesh (i. e. took away its power to condemn us, the condemnation due unto us for it being inflicted on him):

4. That the [6] righteousness of the law (i. e. the inward purity and righteousness the law required) might be (performed and) fulfilled in (and by) us, who walk not after (the lusts of) the flesh, but after the (motions of the) Spirit. Or,

"That the justification which the law promised, by saying, Do this, and thou shalt live, Luke x. 28. Deut. iv. 1. xxx. 15. 19. Ezek. xx. 11. and that this shall be thy righteousness, Deut. vi. 25. might be completed in us, who walk according to the Spirit, and so are absolved not only from condemnation for our past sins, by faith, but from condemnation by the new covenant, by walking according to the Spirit: for to be spiritually minded is life, ver. 6."

5. Not after the flesh, I say,) for they that are of the flesh do mind the things of the flesh (i. e. affect, and desire, and pursue carnal things); but they that are after the Spirit (affect, desire, and pursue,) the things of the Spirit (and so the one pursues the things which tend to death, and the other those things which tend to life).

6. For [7] to be carnally minded is (the way which tends to) death; but to be spiritually minded is (the way that leads to) life and peace (ver. 7. which life and peace cannot be obtained by them that are carnally minded).

7. Because the carnal mind is (that which sets us at) enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be (subject to it, whilst it continues such).

8. So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God.

9. But (it is not so with you Christians, for) ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now [8] if any man have not the Spirit of Christ (dwelling in him), he is none of his.

10. But if Christ be in you (by his Spirit), [9] the body is dead (it is indeed mortal) because of sin (which will never cease to be in us till we die); but the Spirit is life (i. e. will give life to it again) because of righteousness, (or of that justification which is unto life, Rom. v. 17, 18.)

11. But (for) if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead (by the Spirit dwelling in him) [10] shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his (same) [11] Spirit that dwelleth in you.

12. Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh (any longer, but rather to live after the Spirit).

13. For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die (i. e. be subject to death, as the punishment of sin, or to the second death): but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the flesh, ye shall live (and your bodies shall be raised to eternal life).

14. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the [12] sons of God.

15. For ye have not received [13] the spirit of bondage again to (the) fear (of death, as they who were under the law did, that threatening death to every one that continued not in all things written in the law to do them, Deut. xxvii. 16.) but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, (given to us because we are sons, Gal. iv. 6.) whereby we cry, Abba, Father, (i. e. we are assured that God is our Father, and so that we are heirs of God, and sons of the resurrection.

16. For) the Spirit itself (Gr. the same Spirit) beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God (and this gives us a full assurance of that blessed life, enabling us to conclude thus):

17. And if (therefore we be) children, then (are we also) heirs; [14] heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ (the Son of God, now reigning gloriously in heaven); if so be we suffer with him, (and so be conformed to his image, ver. 29.) that we may be also glorified together.

18. (Which sufferings we have reason to endure for the securing this glorious estate;) for I reckon that the sufferings of this present time (we live in the world) are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed [15] in us (or to the glory afterward to be revealed to us).

19. For (so desirable is it, that) [16] the earnest expectation of the creature (subject now to vanity) waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God (i. e. the whole race of mankind earnestly expects it).

20. For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same, (i. e. the ἡ κτίσις, whole race of men, ἡ κτίσις ἀνθρωπίνη, 1 Pet. ii. 13. were made subject to corruption, not of their own accord, but by reason of Adam, who by his sin subjected his posterity to death and corruption, and the earth to a curse, Gen. iii. 17. and this creature waiteth)

21. [17] In hope; because (Gr. ὅτι, that) the creature itself also shall be (then) delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God.

22. For we know that the [18] whole creation (all mankind) groaneth and travaileth in pain together (under this bondage to corruption) until now.

23 And not only they, but ourselves also, who have the first-fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the [19] adoption, (viz. the glorious resurrection, and thereby) the redemption of our body.

24. (Waiting, I say, for it, though we do not see it;) for (as yet) [20] we are saved (only) by hope: but hope (of a thing) that is seen is not hope (truly so called): for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?

25. But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it.

26. (And as patience, so) likewise [21] the Spirit also helpeth (to relieve us in) our infirmities: for (when we are burdened with them) we know not what to pray for as we ought (whether for increase of patience under, or deliverance from, them; or if so, whether by absence from the body, or being clothed upon): but the Spirit itself (or, the same Spirit, which testifies that we are the sons of God, ver. 16.) intercedeth for us with groanings that cannot be uttered, (Gr. with silent groanings after this redemption, ver. 23. 2 Cor. v. 2. 4, 5.)

27. And he that searcheth the hearts (of the saints) knoweth what is the mind (or the desire) of the Spirit, for he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will (or purpose) of God (to give them this redemption of the body).

28. And (though we know not in our distresses what to pray for in particular, or when we shall obtain this redemption of the body, οἴδαμεν δὲ, yet we know) that [22] all things shall work together for good (for securing this happiness) to them that love God, to them that are [23] called (to the adoption of sons) according to his purpose (of bringing many sons to glory by him, Heb. ii. 10. he having predestinated us to the adoption of sons through Jesus Christ, according to the good pleasure of his will, Eph. i. 5. according to his purpose in Christ Jesus, 2 Tim. i. 9.)

29. For whom he did (thus) [24] foreknow he also did [25] predestinate (or appoint) to be conformed to the image of his Son, (by having their vile bodies changed into the likeness of his glorious body, Phil. iii. 21.) that he might be the first-born (or chief) among many brethren, (who are to be coheirs and glorified together with him, ver. 17.)

30. And (the method he used to bring those whom he had designed to be thus conformed to the image of his Son, was this, viz.) whom he thus predestinated, them he also called (first to the profession of the Christian faith): and whom he called (upon their cordial embracing of that faith), them he also justified (and so freed from condemnation to death): and whom he justified, them he also [26] glorified.

31. What shall we say then (Gr. what say we then) to these things? (i. e. what farther ground of assurance, and so of patient waiting for these things can we want?) For if God be for us, who can (successfully) be against us (so as to frustrate, or deprive us of this glorious state)?

32. He that (in pursuance of this design) spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for (the redemption of) us all, how shall he not also with him freely give us all things (belonging to that glory and happiness he hath purchased for us)?

33. [27] Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? (i. e. to them who are called by him to Christianity, to hinder their redemption, by charging them with that guilt which rendereth them obnoxious to death.) It is God that justifieth (and who will therefore glorify them).

34. Who is he that condemneth (them to abide still under the power of death)? It is Christ that died (to redeem them from it), yea, rather that is risen again, (for their justification, Rom. iv. 24. And if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled we shall be saved by his life, Rom. v. 10.) who is even at the right hand of God, (invested with all manner of power, that he should give eternal life unto them, John xvii. 2.) who also maketh intercession for us, (and so is able to save us to the uttermost, εἰς παντελὲς, Heb. vii. 25.)

35. [28] Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? (that love which he hath shewed in procuring this redemption for us, ver. 37.) shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?

36. (Befalling us) as it is written, (Psal. xliv. 22.) For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep (appointed) for the slaughter.

37. Nay, (as there it is said, All this is come upon us, yet have we not forgotten thee, neither have we dealt falsely in thy covenant, ver. 17, 18. so may all this happen to us, ἀλλ' but) in all these things we are (already) [29] more than conquerors through (the grace and Spirit of) him that loved us.

38. (And I trust after this happy experience it will be so still,) for I am persuaded, that neither (fear of) death, nor (hope of) life, nor (evil) angels, nor principalities, nor powers (persecuting us for Christ's sake), nor (the) things (we endure at) present, nor things to come (or which we may hereafter suffer),

39. Nor height (of honour), nor depth (of ignominy), nor any other creature (or thing), shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is (vouchsafed to us) in Christ Jesus our Lord.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VIII.

[1] Ver. 1. 'EN Χριστῷ, In Christ.] The phrase εἶναι ἐν Χριστῷ, to be in Christ, saith Mr. Le Clerc, is often used by St. Paul, for being a Christian, which note he borrowed from Castalio, who renders it Christiani facti; but if either of them mean only Christians by profession, or by being only members of the Christian church, this will by no means agree with this place, nor any other of like nature: since freedom from condemnation, and other benefits conferred upon us through Jesus Christ, will not follow our being Christians in this sense; but upon a lively faith in Christ, our union to him by the Spirit, and our being so in him, as to become new creatures, according to those words, ver. 9. If any man have not the Spirit of Christ dwelling in him, he is none of his; 2 Cor. v. 17. They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh, with its affections and lusts. (See 1 Cor. i. 30. 2 Cor. x. 7. xiii. 5. Gal. iii. 28, 29. v. 6. 1 Thess. iv. 16. 1 John v. 20.)

Τοῖς κατὰ σάρκα περιπατοῦσι, ἀλλὰ κατὰ πνεῦμα.] These words, saith Dr. Mills, are an addition to the text; see the proof of the contrary, Examen Millii in locum.

[2] Ver. 2. Ὁ γὰρ νόμος τοῦ πνεύματος, For the law of the Spirit of life.] i. e. The Spirit of Christ giving me a new life, is now another law or rule of my actions, freeing me from the motions and power of sin, to which I was subject whilst under the law, and from the death to which that subjected me; or the gospel, attended with the Spirit, hath wrought this freedom in me, as Methodius interprets the words, ὁ γὰρ νόμος τοῦ πνεύματος, ὁ δέ ἐστι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, Method. apud Phot. p. 918. ver. 3.

[3] Ver. 3. Τὸ γὰρ ἀδύνατον τοῦ νόμου, For what could not be done by the law,] i. e. That freedom from the guilt of sin and death it could not minister, ὁ Θεὸς τὸν ἑαυτοῦ υἱὸν πέμψας ἐν ὁμοιώματι σαρκὸς ἁμαρτίας, God sending his Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, sub. δυνατὸν ἐποίησε, hath made feasible: examples of the like ellipsis are numerous: so Luke xi. 17. Every kingdom, διαμερισθεῖσα, divided against itself is brought to desolation, καὶ οἶκος ἐπὶ οἶκον, sub. διαμερισθεὶς, and a house (divided) against a house falleth. That this is the sense is evident from Matt. xii. 25. Mark iii. 25. where it is οἰκία μερισθεῖσα καθ' ἑαυτὴν· so κελευόντων, commanding, is to be understood after κωλυόντων, forbidding, 1 Tim. iv. 3. and καυχάσθω, let him rejoice, is to be supplied from the ninth verse, James i. 9.

[4] Καὶ περὶ ἁμαρτίας, And for sin.] This phrase in the Old Testament is the usual phrase for a sin-offering: so a bullock for a sin-offering is μόσχος περὶ ἁμαρτίας, Lev. iv. 3. 18. viii. 2. 14. ix. 2. 8. xvi. 3. 6. 27. ver. 9. 11. The lamb for a sin-offering is πρόβατον περὶ τῆς ἁμαρτίας, Lev. iv. 32. or ἀμνὸς περὶ ἁμαρτίας, Lev. v. 6, 7. Numb. vi. 16. And in like manner, the goat for a sin-offering is χίμαιρα περὶ ἁμαρτίας, Lev. v. 6. or χίμαιρος, Lev. ix. 3. 15. x. 6. xvi. 5. 15. 27. xxiii. 19, &c. The dove for a sin-offering is ὁ τρύγων περὶ ἁμαρτίας, Lev. v. 7. xii. 6. 8. xiv. 22. 31. xv. 15, &c. The sin-offering is τὸ περὶ ἁμαρτίας, Lev. v. 8, 9. 11. vi. 30. vii. 7. 37, &c. and so in many other places. This therefore is sufficient to establish the sense of these words given in the paraphrase. Now the constant effect of this sin-offering was this, to make an atonement for the sin committed, that it might be forgiven, and the guilt of it might be done away. It therefore seems most reasonable to interpret the effect of this sacrifice delivered in these words, And for sin condemned sin in the flesh, agreeably to the constant design of all sacrifices for sin; and then these words must signify, not that he gave us power to kill sin, or, by this example of his wrath against it, engaged us to forsake our sinful courses; but that he took away its condemning power; he condemned that which before condemned us, enabling us to say, τίς ὁ κατακρίνων; who is he that condemns us? it is Christ that died, Rom. viii. 34. He killed sin, or made it dead by that death, which caused it not to be imputed to us to death. (2 Cor. xv. 19.) And this is the thing which the law could not do; it could not give life to a person condemned to death; (Gal. iii. 21.) it could not justify, or free us from condemnation.

[5] Καὶ περὶ ἁμαρτίας, And by a sacrifice for sin condemned sin in the flesh.] The plain meaning of these words, saith Mr. L. is this, that sin itself was condemned, or put to death in Christ's flesh, i. e. was suffered to have no life or being in the flesh of our Saviour, he being in all things tempted as we are, yet without sin, Heb. iv. 15. But this certainly is a false interpretation; for as sin could not be put to death in him, in whom it never lived, or could have any being; so much less could this be done by his offering a sacrifice for sin, that being only done at the close of his life; whereas Christ was free from sin from his conception; and being done then by a sin-offering to make atonement for the guilt of sin. The true meaning of the words is therefore this, that justification, or freedom from the guilt of sin, which the law could not procure, because of the weakness of the flesh rendering us obnoxious to sin, and so to death for it; God by sending his Son in our human nature did procure, and by giving up his Son to be a sacrifice to make atonement for the sin committed by the flesh, ἔκρινε καθ' ἁμαρτίαν, he judged against sin in the flesh; that is, either he shewed that it deserved condemnation, as requiring an atonement to free us from the guilt of it; or else he, by this sacrifice, condemned that, which before condemned us, and took away its power of condemning believers, enabling them to say, Who is he that condemns us? It is Christ that died, ver. 34.

[6] Ver. 4. Τὸ δικαίωμα τοῦ νόμου, The righteousness of the law,] Is a phrase which occurs only here, and Rom. ii. 26. where it plainly signifies the righteousness contained in the moral law, or those internal principles of holiness, justice, and goodness, which are comprised in it, these being the weightier matters of the law, Matt. xxiii. 23. and the only things in which the uncircumcision, or the gentiles, could keep τὰ δικαιώματα τοῦ νόμου, the righteousness of the law: here therefore, I conceive, the phrase bears the same sense, and confutes the vain imaginations of the Antinomians.

That which hath made most commentators interpret the third verse otherwise than I have done, seems to be this, that they seem not sufficiently to have considered the double effect of our Lord's death and passion, and the order in which they are placed in Scripture, viz. (1.) freedom from condemnation, justification, and reconciliation to God; and (2.) the vouchsafement of his Spirit, as the consequent of that faith which rendered us the sons of God; God being first reconciled to us by faith in his Son's blood, and then giving us this token of his love, viz. his Spirit not to dwell in our hearts; by the first of which we are justified, and by the second we are sanctified; by the first freed from the law of death, by the second from the law of sin, 1 Cor. vi. 11. the first is the grace of God, we being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, Rom. iii. 24. the second is the gift through grace: the first justification, the second ἡ δωρεὰ δικαιοσύνης, the gift following upon our justification, being justified freely by his grace, we have peace with God, Rom. v. 1. And then, the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts, by the Spirit that he hath given us, ver. 5. Ye are all sons of God by faith in Christ Jesus, and because ye are sons, God hath sent the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, Gal. iv. 6. Whence he is here styled the Spirit of adoption, ver. 16. Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, that the blessing of Abraham (i. e. justification by faith) might come upon the gentiles, that they might receive the promise of the Spirit, Gal. iii. 14. For believing in him, we are sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, Eph. i. 14. Now these two being always connexed, the apostle goes frequently from the one to the other; first mentioning our freedom from condemnation, then our walking in the Spirit, ver. 1, 2. Our freedom from the guilt of sin by the death of Christ, ver. 3. and then our fulfilling the righteousness of the law by the Spirit of Christ, ver. 4. And because the law could not justify, or free us from the condemning power of sin, therefore concluding that it could not give the Spirit of Christ to sanctify us, and that we therefore must be freed from the law, that we might serve God in the newness of the Spirit, Rom. vi. 7. Gal. iii. 3. ver. 6, 7. 9.

[7] Ver. 6, 7. To be carnally minded, (Gr. Φρόνημα τῆς σαρκὸς, the wisdom of the flesh) is death, because the carnal mind (Gr. the wisdom of the flesh) is enmity to God, for it is not subject to the law of God, neither can be; so they who are in the flesh cannot please God.] Hence it is by some inferred, that the unregenerate can do nothing that is truly good, nothing but what is evil, and displeasing to God.

To this I answer, That this is one of the texts abused by ancient heretics, to prove that the flesh was by nature evil, we learn from Epiphanius,* and from St. Chrysostom upon the place, who therefore well observes, that by flesh here, we are not to understand the body, or the substance of the body, ἀλλὰ τὸν σαρκικὸν βίον καὶ κοσμικὸν, καὶ τρυφῆς, καὶ ἀσωτίας γέμοντα, τὸν ὅλον σάρκα ποιοῦντα τὸν ἄνθρωπον, but a worldly carnal life, full of luxury and riotous living, and turning the whole man into flesh, as is evident from the phrase, the wisdom of the flesh, engaging us only to mind the things of the flesh, and to be of the flesh, as the true Christian is of the Spirit, being led by, and walking in, the Spirit. And, saith Methodius,* were this said of them, who are in this body of flesh, that they cannot please God; they who commit theft, whoredom, or any other like sin, could not, on this account, be subject to reprehension, by a just judge; it being then impossible for the flesh to be subject to the law of God; nor could then the intemperate person be reduced to chastity and virtue, the body lying under a natural necessity, not to be subject to the law of God.

Secondly, The apostle doth indeed say, that they, who thus mind carnal things, while they continue so to do, cannot please God; this being only in effect to say, in the words of Chrysostom, ἀδύνατον πονηρὸν μένοντα, that whilst men go on in their sinful courses, they cannot please God, or live in subjection to his laws: but then, saith he, as Christ only says, an evil tree, whilst it continues such, cannot bring forth good fruit; but doth not say an evil tree cannot be made good, but on the contrary saith, make the tree good, that the fruit may be good, Matt. xii. 33. so is it here; for the apostle, by his frequent exhortations to these carnal men, to crucify the flesh, and mortify the flesh, with its lusts, or the deeds of it, and to put off the old man with his deeds; by his threats, that if they live after the flesh they shall die; and by his promises, that if through the Spirit they do mortify the deeds of the flesh, they shall live, doth shew, that men may cease to live according to the flesh, and may so mortify the deeds of the flesh, that they may live. God, saith Chrysostom, hath put this ἐν ἐλευθερίᾳ προαιρέσεως, in our free choice, so that, ἐν σοὶ λοιπόν ἐστι καὶ τοῦτο γενέσθαι, κἀκεῖνο, since the vouchsafement of the gospel, it is in thine own power to be carnally minded, or spiritually, there being now greater strength and inducement so to be than ever.

[8] Ver. 9. If any man be in Christ he is a new creature; and he that hath not the Spirit of Christ dwelling in him, is none of his.] Hence it is plain, that none are truly said to be in Christ, by a profession of faith, provided they live not answerable to that profession, or be not renewed in mind, will, affections, and conversation; and from the following words, If the Spirit of Christ dwell in you, he that raised the Lord Jesus from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit dwelling in you, it is evident, first, that it is not the soul, but the mortal body, which the Spirit is said here, ζωοποιεῖν, to give life to. Secondly, That the promise of being raised by the Spirit of Christ belongs only to them, whose bodies shall be raised to the resurrection of life eternal. As for others, they being only, Χριστιανοὶ ὀνομαζόμενοι, Christians in name, and not in truth and sincerity, (1 Cor. v. 11.) and persons to whom Christ will then say, I never knew you, they shall be raised by the power of Christ, but not by virtue of any union with the Spirit of Christ.

[9] Ver. 10. Τὸ μὲν σῶμα νεκρὸν δι' ἁμαρτίαν, The body is dead because of sin.] That the apostle speaks not here of a moral, but of a natural death of the body, appears from this consideration, that in the verse following he speaks of this mortal body, and of the raising it from the dead; and that by the Spirit he doth not understand the spirit of a man, but the Holy Ghost, is also evident, because this Spirit, in the foregoing verse, is the Spirit of Christ; in the following verse, the Spirit that raised Christ from the dead, and will raise us, in whom he doth inhabit, from it.

* Hær. lxiv. n. 49. 51.

* Apud Epiph. ibid. n. 51.

Now the reason why, after our freedom from condemnation by the death of Christ, our bodies are still subject to death, is thus assigned by the fathers;* Because should we have lived for ever in this imperfect state, we should have sinned for ever, and therefore God permits good men still to die, that sin might not live for ever in them, doing this not out of his displeasure to punish them for sin, but out of mercy to free them from it.

[10] Ver. 11. Ζωοποιήσει τὰ θνητὰ σώματα ὑμῶν, Shall quicken your mortal bodies.] The late commentator and paraphrast, here exposed by Mr. Locke, is D. W. and yet he is so unhappy, as neither to approve of Mr. L.'s interpretation, nor dislike his own. He cannot approve of Mr. L.'s interpretation, that σῶμα νεκρὸν, and θνητὸν, signify a body morally dead, because sin reigns not in it; (1.) because σῶμα νεκρὸν, absolutely put, bears no such sense in Scripture, but only signifies a body without life, or breath, James ii. 26. (2.) Because this interpretation makes the apostle say, ver. 10. the body is dead already, i. e. as to all activity of sin, which reigns no longer in it, its sinful carnal lusts being mortified, and yet makes him promise, ver. 11. that if the Spirit of God dwell in us, God shall quicken our mortal bodies, i. e. saith Mr. L. he shall deliver them from the dominion of their carnal lusts; that is, it makes him promise God shall do hereafter what he told us, ver. 10. was already done. (3.) In those words, he that raiseth Christ from the dead, the apostle must be supposed to speak of a real death of the body; and therefore in the latter clause of the same sentence, he shall quicken their mortal bodies, it is reasonable to conceive, he speaks of quickening those bodies in the same sense, viz. by raising them from the dead. Nor hath Mr. L. said any thing of weight against this sense. For,

First, Whereas he saith, It cannot be proved that θνητὰ, mortal bodies, here signifies the same as νεκρὰ: (1.) he hath not proved the contrary. (2.) His own interpretation plainly makes them both to signify the same. And, (3.) what is more likely than that σῶμα νεκρὸν, ver. 10. and σώματα θνητὰ, ver. 11. should be of the same import?

Secondly, When he addeth, that θνητὸν, mortal, always signifies the thing joined with it to be living; he considered not that the same apostle saith, that at the resurrection from the dead, τὸ θνητὸν τοῦτο, this mortal body shall put on immortality; and that when, τὸ θνητὸν τοῦτο, this mortal body shall have put on immortality, death shall be swallowed up in victory. Secondly, I add, that θνητὸν, when it relates, as here, to a body, to be quickened, never bears any other sense, but that of a dead body.

Thirdly, If by quickening here (saith he) be meant the raising them to life from the dead, how can this be mentioned as a peculiar favour to those who have the Spirit of God? for God will also raise the bodies of the wicked. Ans. True, but he will raise them by his power, not by his Spirit dwelling in them: not as the sons of God, to be made joint-heirs with Christ, ver. 16, 17. but as the children of Satan, to be cast into the fire prepared for the devil and his angels: not, lastly, to live a happy life, ver. 13. but to die the second death.

Lastly, Whereas he objects the want of connexion in this interpretation, with the subject the apostle is here discoursing of, that is very plain; for the apostle is here discoursing of the benefits and advantages which Christians shall receive by living, not after the flesh, but after the Spirit; that this will cause them to mind spiritual things, ver. 5. that it will give them life and peace, ver. 6. So that though their bodies die because of sin, they shall obtain a happy resurrection through the Spirit dwelling in them; ἄρα οὖν, therefore, saith he, ver. 12. we are debtors not to live after the flesh, for they that do so, ἀποθνήσκονται, shall die (not in the moral, but the penal sense), but they who through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the flesh shall live; for, ver. 14. as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God, and so shall obtain the adoption, i. e. the redemption of the body from corruption, ver. 23.

[11] Διὰ τοῦ ἐνοικοῦντος αὐτοῦ πνεύματος ἐν ὑμῖν, By the Spirit that dwelleth in you.] This is spoken according to the opinion of the Jews, that the resurrection shall be effected by virtue of the Holy Spirit, which they conclude from those words of the prophet Ezekiel, xxxvii. 9, 10. Come, O Spirit, from the four winds, and blow upon these dead, that they may live. Thus was our Lord raised from the dead; (1 Pet. iii. 18.) thus shall we be raised, who are the temple of the Holy Ghost, saith this verse. And with this agrees the doctrine of the ancient fathers: Our bodies rising by the Spirit (saith Irenæus*), shall be made spiritual, and by the Spirit shall have life.—They who are dead and buried with Christ, may know that by the Spirit, which raised him up, they shall be raised.† So Origen.

[12] Ver. 14. Υἱοὶ Θεοῦ, Sons of God.] The strength of this argument will be exceeding clear from these considerations; that the adopted sons of God are heirs of God, joint-heirs with Christ, and so must reign with him, ver. 17. which till they live again, and be raised from the dead, they cannot do; and that their adoption is the redemption of their bodies from corruption, ver. 23. (2.) That we are then completely the sons of God, when we are sons of the resurrection, Luke xx. 37. when we have overcome, according to those words, Rev. xxi. 7. He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be to him a God, and he shall be to me a son. And something like this is that of the Jews on these words, Psal. lxxii. 17. ינון שמו, filiabitur Nomen ejus; for, say they,‡ his name is called Jinnon, quia ipse filiaturus est omnes dormientes in pulvere, because he will raise, and so make sons, all that sleep in the dust.

[13] Ver. 15. Πνεῦμα δουλείας, The spirit of bondage.] That the law was to the Jews a yoke of bondage, the apostle doth inform us, Gal. v. 1. And that they who were under it, were in bondage to the elements of the world, Gal. iv. 3. 8. that it gendered to bondage, and subjected its children to bondage, ver. 24, 25. 31. that they were all their lifetime subject to bondage, through the fear of death, he informs us, Heb. ii. 15. And they had reason so to be, since, as the apostle teacheth, the law given by Moses did not exempt them from the death which Adam's sin had brought upon them, but rather made that death abound, and them obnoxious to it on many fresh accounts; for the law entered that the offence might abound (unto death), Rom. v. 1. and the law coming, sin revived, and I died; and the commandment was found to be unto death, the motions of sin which were by the law working in their members to bring forth fruit unto death, vii. 4. 10. This therefore gives a clear account of the paraphrase of the first part of the verse: But we, saith he, shall live a life immortal, and enjoy a happy resurrection, as being the sons of God, and in token of this we have received the Spirit of adoption, enabling us to call God Father, and assuring us we are his children, and so he being our God, must have prepared for us a city, Heb. xi. 16.

[14] Ver. 17. Κληρονόμοι μὲν Θεοῦ, The heirs of God, joint-heirs with Christ.] All having our share in this glorious inheritance, though he, as the eldest brother, hath a double portion.

[15] Ver. 18.] Εἰς ἡμᾶς often signifies, to, or towards us: and is so rendered in this Epistle, v. 8. Or, for us, as xvi. 6. See for the first sense, 1 Cor. xiv. 36. 2 Cor. i. 11. ix. 5. 8. x. 1. xiii. 3. Eph. i. 8, 9. Colos. i. 6. 1 Thess. iv. 8. Heb. ii. 3. and for the second, 1 Cor. xv. 10. 2 Cor. ii. 4. Eph. iii. 2. Colos. i. 25. 1 Thess. v. 18.

[16] Ver. 19. Ἀποκαραδοκία τῆς κτίσεως, The earnest expectation of the creature.] Here it is to be noted, that, in the sacred dialect, desire and expectation is ascribed to creatures in reference to things they want, and which tend to their advantage, though they explicitly know nothing of them. Thus the Messiah is called προσδοκία τῶν ἐθνῶν, the Expectation of the gentiles, Gen. xlix. 10. חמדה, the Desire of all nations, Hag. ii. 4.

[17] Ver. 21. Ἐπ' ἐλπίδι, In hope.] So the Syriac and many Greek commentators do begin this verse.

Ἀπὸ τῆς δουλείας τῆς φθορᾶς, From the bondage of corruption.] That is, from the mortality which all their lives long made them subject to bondage. (Heb. ii. 15.)

[18] Ver. 22. Πᾶσα ἡ κτίσις, The whole creation.] All the world under that sense of mortality which still subjects them to bondage; for, as Cicero confesses, * Death must be terrible to those, who with their life lose the enjoyment of all good things, and if it be an evil, must be an eternal evil, because it doth for ever deprive them of all good. That † "Mortis metu omnis quietæ vitæ status perturbatur," the fear of it disturbs all the tranquillity of life. And that this renders our whole life miserable, ‡ "Quæ enim potest in vita esse jucunditas, cum dies et noctes cogitandum sit jam jamque esse moriendum?" i. e. For what pleasure can there be in that life which is perpetually perplexed with the thoughts of death?

[19] Ver. 23. Υἱοθεσίαν, The adoption.] I know there is another exposition of these words, to this effect: That by the creature, we are to understand the gentile world, in opposition to the Christian, the word בריאה among the rabbins signifying the gentiles, in opposition to the Jews, the people of God; that their waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God, is their waiting to see what the Jews will do, who of them will be true sons of God, who not; who of them will embrace the faith of Christ, who not; their happiness depending punctually upon the issue of this: their being made subject to vanity, is their being subject to the vanity of their minds, ignorance, and idolatry, Rom. i. 21. Eph. iii. 20. Eph. i. 17. That to this idolatry they were made subject, not willingly, but by the devil's imposing it upon them, as an act of religion, saith the reverend Dr. Hammond: "in pœnam incepti Babylonici," In punishment of their attempt to build the tower of Babel, saith Dr. Lightfoot. That their hopes of being delivered from this bondage of corruption, is their hopes of being rescued from this idolatry, those filthy courses they were engaged in, and the bondage they were in to Satan; and to be made Christ's freemen, to have a right to God's favour, and the future blessings consequent upon it, the word φθορὰ having that sense, (Deut. iv. 16. Wisd. xiv. 12. 2 Pet. i. 4. ii. 12. 1 Cor. xv. 33. 2 Cor. xi. 3. But against every part of this interpretation there lies this objection, that it is not only wholly new, but wholly contrary to all antiquity, and also to the text; and it is liable to many just exceptions, as, v. g. first, κτίσις, saith this interpretation, is the gentile world, whereas πᾶσα κτίσις hath no such sense in Scripture. The phrase πᾶσα κτίσις is used but three or four times more in the New Testament; twice in the Epistle to the Colossians, where Christ is styled the first-born πάσης κτίσεως, of the whole creation, not only of the gentile world: and the gospel is said to be preached ἐν πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει, Colos. i. 23. i. e. to Jew and gentile, to the whole world, or to all mankind, ver. 6.; once in St. Peter, where subjection is required πάσῃ ἀνθρωπίνῃ κτίσει, to magistrates among men, 1 Pet. ii. 13. not only heathen sure, but also Christian, when the government should be put into their hands; and once in St. Mark, where the apostles are commanded to preach the gospel πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει, to every creature, Mark xvi. 15. Now because the same disciples are commanded to preach εἰς πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, to all nations, Matt. xxviii. 19. hence it is argued, that πάσα κτίσις signifies the heathen world, in opposition to the Jews; whereas it plainly signifies all nations, both Jew and gentile, as is evident from these words of Christ to them, that they should preach in his name repentance and remission of sins εἰς πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, to all nations, beginning at Jerusalem, Luke xxiv. 47. And so the whole foundation of this interpretation is destroyed, for in these places πᾶσα κτίσις is equivalent to all mankind.

To wait for the manifestation of the sons of God, is not to wait to see what the Jews would do, who had not received the adoption, and were not the sons of God, as wanting that faith by which men become sons, Gal. iii. 26. but to expect τὴν ἡμέτεραν τελείωσιν, our perfection, τὴν ἀφθαρσίαν, our advancement to a state of incorruption; τὴν μέλλουσαν ἡμῶν δόξαν, our future glory; so Chrysostom,

* "Sit mors terribilis iis quorum cum vita omnia extinguuntur." Parad. 23. "Si mors malum est sempiternum malum." Tusc. Quæst. lib. i. p. 1190.

† De fine bonorum, lib. i. p. 38. ‡ Tuscul. Quæst. l. 11. 15.

Theodoret, Œcumenius, Theophylact: for it must (by reason of the connective particle γὰρ) be the same with the glory that is to be revealed, ver. 18. and with the glorious liberty of the sons of God, ver. 12. They expect (saith Origen) that time when these things shall be revealed, which are prepared for them that are the sons of God.

To be made the subject to vanity, is not to be made subject to idolatry, but to be made subject to corruption, τῇ φθορᾷ; so Chrysostom, Œcumenius, Theophylact; for τὴν ματαιότητα καλεῖ τὴν φθοράν, he calls that mutability and vanity, to which all things in the world are subject, corruption, saith Theodoret. When the apostle saith the creature was made subject to vanity, and in bondage to corruption,* Mihi videtur quod de hac materiali, et corruptibilis corporis substantiâ ista dicuntur, neque enim corruptio alicui cuiquam dominatur nisi corpori; this, saith Origen, seems to be spoken of the body, for that only is subject to corruption. As is apparent also from the thing they groan for, viz. the redemption of the body from corruption, that this mortal might put on immortality, or be clothed with its house from heaven, that mortality might be swallowed up of life, 2 Cor. v. 1—5. Secondly, it cannot truly be said that the heathen were not willingly subject to idolatry; for the apostle saith, they subjected themselves to it against the light of nature, and so became without excuse, and that when they knew God, they did not glorify him as God, Rom. i. 20—23. And this sense of the word vanity is very frequent in the Psalms, and in Ecclesiastes. Thus David contemplating the frailty of man, and how soon he vanisheth away, cries out, Every man therefore is but vanity, τὰ σύμπαντα ματαιότης πᾶς ἄνθρωπος ζῶν, Psal. xxxix. 5. 11. And again, ἄνθρωπος ματαιότητι ὡμοιώθη, Man is like to vanity, his days pass away like a shadow, Psal. cxliv. 4. And because all things here below are so frail, so subject to change and to vanish, and man hath so short a time to possess them; therefore, saith the Preacher, Vanity of vanities, are they, all is vanity, Eccles. i. 2. And when Adam became mortal, he called his son Abel, vanity, Gen. iv. 2.

The vanity to which the whole creation is subject, doth not therefore signify the vain employments and distractions of this present life, but that state of mortality, from which the Psalmist infers, every man therefore is but vanity; for it is thus subject to vanity in hope of deliverance from that bondage of corruption, which Mr. Le Clerc owns to be the corruption to which our body is naturally liable, and from which we Christians wait to be delivered by the redemption of the body from corruption: (see note on ver. 23.) and therefore he who subjected us to this state, is not God, who brought not death into the world, but Adam, by whom sin entered into the world, and death by sin. To be delivered from this bondage of corruption, is not to be delivered from idolatry, nor doth δουλεία τῆς φθορᾶς ever bear this sense; but the sense is οὐκ ἔτι ἔσται φθαρτὴ, the creature shall not then be corruptible, ἔσται γὰρ ἡ κτίσις ἄφθαρτος, ὥσπερ καὶ δι' ἡμᾶς γέγονε φθαρτὴ, for as the creature was made corruptible by us, so shall it be made incorruptible with us: so Œcumenius, Theodoret, Theophylact. For that which it groans for is its redemption from corruption, (ver. 23.) Having thus offered my reasons against this interpretation, it will be very easy to confirm the ancient and true explication of the words from the scope and argument of the apostle here. For I have shewed from ver. 11. that the apostle is here treating of the resurrection of the body to eternal life; that, ver. 13. he declares that life belongs to them alone, who through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the flesh; that, ver. 14. he proves they shall enjoy this life and resurrection, because they are the sons of God; and, ver. 17. that being sons, they must be heirs of God, joint-heirs with Christ; first suffering, and then reigning in glory with him; that, ver. 18. to encourage Christians thus to suffer, he shews the greatness of that glory they shall then enjoy, styling it δόξαν μέλλουσαν ἀποκαλυφθῆναι, the glory to be revealed hereafter, i. e. after the sufferings of this present life, to which it is opposed, are ended: for, as Chrysostom and Theophylact well note, he saith not πρὸς τὴν μέλλουσαν ἄνεσιν, these sufferings are not worthy to be compared to our future ease from them in this life; but πρὸς τὴν μέλλουσαν δόξαν, to our future glory in the next; when they that have communicated with Christ in his sufferings, shall rejoice in τῇ ἀποκαλύψει τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ, the revelation of his glory, saith St. Peter, 1 Pet. iv. 13. συνδοξάσανται, shall be glorified with him; here, ver. 17. this glory he styles ἀποκάλυψις τῶν υἱῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ, the revelation of the sons of God, i. e. say the fathers, the time when they shall τὴν ἀφθαρσίαν ἀπολαμβάνεσθαι, become incorruptible, this corruptible putting on incorruption; when they shall appear to be the sons of God, τῆς ἀναστάσεως υἱοὶ ὄντες, being sons of the resurrection, ver. 14. comforting them in the expectation of it, and their groaning after it, with this consideration, that it is the expectation of all the world; and they groan together with them for it, desiring with them to be delivered from this bondage to corruption, into the glorious liberty of the sons of God, and adding, that not only they, but even Christians also, who had the first-fruits of that Spirit, who is the earnest of our inheritance, εἰς ἀπολύτρωσιν τῆς περιποιήσεως, till the redemption of the purchased possession, Eph. i. 14. and by whom we are sealed up εἰς ἡμέραν ἀπολυτρώσεως, to the day of redemption, Eph. iv. 30. did groan, waiting for the adoption, viz. τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν τοῦ σώματος ἡμῶν, the redemption of our bodies from corruption, ver. 23. For that this was the thing for which they groaned, the same apostle informs us in these words; We that are in this tabernacle groan being burdened, that we might be clothed upon with our house from heaven, that mortality might be swallowed up of life, 2 Cor. v. 2. 4. And as here they, who have the first-fruits of the Spirit, do thus groan; so there it is said, ver. 5. He who hath wrought this expectation in us is God, who hath also given to us the earnest of his Spirit. That this was the ancient and almost primitive exposition of these words, we learn from Irenæus,† in these words, Oportet ergo et ipsam conditionem redintegratam ad pristinum, sine prohibitione servire justis, et hoc apostolus fecit manifestum in ea quæ est ad Romanos, sic dicens, nam expectatio creaturæ revelationem filiorum Dei expectat: and from these of Tertullian,‡ Tunc erit mali finis, cum præses ejus diabolus abierit in ignem, cum revelatio filiorum Dei redemerit conditionem à malo, utique vanitati subjectam. I differ only from the fathers in this interpretation, as to this single circumstance, that I do not extend this desire of the redemption of the body from corruption to brute beasts, and insensate creatures, but only to mankind in general, subject by Adam's fall to mortality.

[20] Ver. 24. Τῇ γὰρ ἐλπίδι ἐσώθημεν, We are saved by hope.] Of this resurrection and redemption of the body, being begotten to a lively hope, through the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ, of an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that faileth not away, reserved in the heavens for us; (1 Pet. i. 5.) and rejoicing in hope of the glory of God; (Rom. v. 2.) and through the Spirit waiting for the hope of righteousness through faith. (Gal. v. 5.)

[21] Ver. 26. Τὸ πνεῦμα, The Spirit,] Here, cannot signify the spirit of a man, for that cannot be said to help with us; being a constituent part of us; or to intercede for us, when we know not ourselves what to pray for as we ought; for, saith Theophylact, Moses thus prayed to see the land of Canaan, and Jeremy for the Jews, and St. Paul to be delivered from the thorn in the flesh: but that Spirit of God who is said to intercede for us, not as an advocate or mediator betwixt God and us, that being the office of our great High-priest; but as an exciter or director of us in our addresses to God, to render them for matter according to the will of God, and for manner, fervent and effectual; προσευχῇ ἐνεργουμένη, in wrought prayer, and to make our very sighs and groanings prevalent; for he is here said only to intercede for us with sighs and groanings, excited by him, after that redemption to which he sealeth us, and of which he being the earnest and pledge, we are hence moved with greater faith and fervency to long for the enjoyment of it: and this is the reason why I think not fit to interpret this passage with some of the fathers of a public charisma, or gift of prayer, since that must spend itself in words for the edification of the church, and not in silent groanings. (See Exod. ii. 24. vi. 5. Judg. ii. 18. Psal. xxxviii. 9. cii. 20. Acts vii. 34.) Thus when our Lord had twice groaned in the Spirit, (John xi. 33. 38.) he saith, I thank thee, O Father, that thou hast heard me, (ver. 41.)

[22] Ver. 28. Πάντα, All things.] That under all things should be comprehended the sins of good men, is the unreasonable suggestion of St. Austin; and some of the schoolmen after him confuted the declaration of God by Ezekiel, That if the righteous man forsake his righteousness and commit iniquity, in the sin that he hath done shall he die; (Ezek. xviii.) and by this apostle declaring to the Hebrews, The just shall live by his faith, but if he draws back, my soul (saith God) shall have no pleasure in him. (Heb. x. 37, 38.) Secondly, The test of love to God being keeping his commandments, this interpretation makes the sense of these words run thus: To them that keep his commandments, even all their disobedience to them, shall work together for good. Thirdly, If the word all things comprehend all the sins that are or can be committed by them that love God, they may as well rejoice in all their wickedness, as in all their sufferings for the sake of Christ, seeing they may rejoice in that which by God's designation tendeth to their good; and so all the motives urged chap. vi. to engage them to die to sin, and live no longer in it, must not only be enervated, but even esteemed motives designed to hinder them from that which is for their good, or, according to the descants of St. Austin and St. Bernard, to hinder their proficience in caution and humility.

[23] Called according to his purpose.] From these words some argue thus: If all that love God are called according to his purpose, then had he no purpose of calling them that do not love him. If they who are foreknown are predestinated to be conformed to the image of his Son, they who are not conformed to it were not foreknown. Now, in answer to these arguments let it be observed, that this text expressly speaks of those, who actually love God, not of those whom God hath loved with this supposed discriminating affection; and that to love God, and to be called according to his purpose, are words put by way of apposition, to shew that they are both of the same import; that which God purposed in calling us by Christ being this, that we might be holy and unblamable before him in love; (Eph. i. 4. 9.) so that the whole of this argument may be granted: they who are called by God according to his purpose, or are effectually called, so that God's calling hath its designed effect upon them, being only such as love God, and are conformed according to the image of his Son. And let it be farther observed, that when the apostle saith in the following verse, ὅτι οὓς προέγνω, for whom he foreknew, &c. the particle ὅτι is connective, and this verse giving the reason or confirmation of what was spoken in the former, it seems necessary to interpret these words thus, whom he foreknew to be persons called according to his purpose, and therefore qualified for the adoption mentioned ver. 23. them he predestinated to be conformed to the image of his Son. (See the note on ver. 29.) And it deserves to be considered, that all antiquity to the time of St. Austin, do with one consent concur in the interpretation of Pseud-Ambrosius on this place, viz. "Quos præscivit sibi devotos, ipsos elegit ad promissa præmia capessenda;" Those whom he foresaw would be devoted to his service, he elected to the reward promised such persons; those whom he foreknew to be τοὺς ἀξίους τῆς κλήσεως, worthy to be called: so Theodoret and Theophylact. Some of them in their descants upon these words, called according to purpose, expound them of the purpose or free-will of man, declaring that a man is called κατὰ προαίρεσιν, according to his choice; and that *οὐ κλήσις μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡ πρόθεσις τῶν καλουμένων σωτηρίαν εἰργάσατο, it is not the calling only, but the purpose of those that are called, which works salvation. For who, saith Origen,† should be called to justification, but those God loves? The apostle, saith he, τὴν τοῦ ἐφ' ἡμῖν αἰτίαν περίστησι τῆς προθέσεως, καὶ τῆς προγνώσεως, makes the will of man the cause of God's purpose and foreknowledge, by saying, We know that all things work together for good to them that love God; Ὅτι ἄξιοί εἰσι συνεργέσεως, they being worthy of his co-operation. And in his Latin commentary on these words he saith, he uses the word foreknew, to shew that they were foreknown by God; "In quibus sciens quales essent, amorem suum Deus affectumque posuisset," On whom God placed his affection, as knowing what they would be.

Secondly, If, saith he, you will refer this purpose to God, men are then called according to the purpose of him, "Qui sciens in eis religiosam mentem, et salutis inesse desiderium," Who knowing they had a religious mind and a desire of salvation, called them; and in this sense neither the cause of our perdition, or salvation, will be placed in God's foreknowledge, nor our justification, only in our calling; "neque gloriari de nostra penitùs potestate sublatum est;" nor will our glorification be wholly exempt from our own power. Moreover he adds, that by embracing this absurd opinion, which saith, man therefore is not justified, and so not glorified, because he is not predestinated, — and that he is not predestinated, because not foreknown; "Ingentem fenestram aperiemus eis, qui negant in hominis potestate esse ut salvus fiat;" We shall give great advantage to them who deny that it is in the power of man to be saved; whence they infer, that they are guilty of no fault who are not justified, because they are not called, are not predestinated, are not foreknown. And Œcumenius saith, the apostle mentions being called according to the purpose, that he might not fall into an absurdity, which would follow, εἰ ὁ Θεὸς τίνας εὖ ἐποίησε, τινὰς δὲ οὔ, καὶ προσωπολημψίας ἀπαλλάττει τὸν Θεὸν, if God should do good to some persons, and not to others; and that he might free him from being an accepter of persons. Wherefore, according to the received interpretation of the ancient fathers, the import of these words is this: Those whom God foresaw would be true lovers of him, fit for the kingdom of God, and ἄξιοι, worthy of the peace and blessings of the gospel, he foreappointed to be conformable to the image of his Son, that is, to be like him in glory; (ver. 17.) them also he called in due time to the salvation promised and offered in the gospel; (2 Tim. i. 8, 9. Tit. i. 2, 3.) and they believing in Christ upon his call, he justified them from and remitted all their past sins; (Acts xiii. 38, 39. Eph. i. 7.) and them he also glorified, by giving them that Spirit, who is the earnest of that glory; (Eph. i. 13.) and by participation of which Spirit, Christians are said not only to behold the glory of the Lord, but also to be changed into the same image, from glory to glory. So Origen on this place. And this exposition agrees well with the context; for the apostle had said before, that Christians having the first-fruits of the Spirit, groaned after this redemption of the body, ver. 23. 26. that the Spirit helpeth their infirmities, interceding for them, with silent groanings after it; and that he intercedeth for the saints according to the mind of God, to give them this redemption; and then it follows, οἴδαμεν δὲ, therefore we know that all things shall work together for good to them that love God.

[24] Ver. 29. Ὅτι οὓς πρόεγνω, For whom he did foreknow.] This particle ὅτι is connective; and this verse giving the reason or confirmation of what was spoken in the former, it seems necessary to interpret it thus; Whom he foreknew to be persons called according to his purpose, and therefore qualified for this adoption. It therefore is to be observed, that the words know and foreknow, in the Scripture language, import an affectionate knowledge, joined with approbation and affection. So Matt. vii. 23. John x. 14. 1 Cor. viii. 3. If any man love God, οὗτος ἔγνωσται, he is known of God; Gal. iv. 8. But now that ye know God, or rather are known of God; 2 Tim. ii. 19. ἔγνω κύριος, the Lord knoweth who are his. So is the word προέγνω used in this Epistle, xi. 2. when the apostle saith, The Lord hath not cast off his people, ὃν προέγνω, whom he foreknew to be faithful,* as were those seven thousand persons who had not bowed the knee to Baal; whom he thus foreknew. See note [1] on chap. xi.

* "Quos præscivit futuros sibi devotos, ipsos elegit ad promissa præmia capessenda."

[25] Προώρισε, He before appointed.] To be conformed to the image of his Son, that as they had borne the image of the earthly Adam, they might also bear the image of the heavenly, 1 Cor. xv. 49. Having glorious bodies like to his, saith Theodoret; and this agrees well with the scope and subject-matter of this chapter, and with the following words, That he might be the first-born, or chief, among many brethren; for as here these brethren are said to be coheirs with him, the elder brother, (ver. 17.) so elsewhere he is styled, The first-born from the dead, that in all things he might have the pre-eminence, or that they might be changed into his image by the participation of the same Spirit. (See note on 2 Cor. iii. 18.)

[26] Ver. 30. Τούτους καὶ ἐδόξασε, Them he also glorified.] At present in their head Christ Jesus; (They being blessed with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, Eph. i. 3. They being quickened together with Christ, and raised up together, and made to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, Eph. ii. 5, 6.) and them he will hereafter glorify by making their vile bodies like unto his glorious body. Or,

Τούτους καὶ ἐδόξασε, Them he hath also glorified,] By giving them that Spirit who is the earnest of their glory, Ἐδόξασε διὰ τῶν χαρισμάτων, διὰ τῆς υἱοθεσίας· Διὰ τῶν χαρισμάτων τῆς υἱοθεσίας. So Chrysostom and Œcumenius. Ἐδόξασεν υἱοὺς ὀνομαζόμενος, καὶ πνεύματος ἁγίου δωρησάμενος χάριν, Theodoret and Theophylact. Magnificavit illos ut similes fiant filio Dei, Pseud-Ambrosius. And by reason of which Spirit given, with the preaching of the gospel, the ministration of justification is said to be ἐν δόξῃ, in glory, as being the ministration of the Spirit, 2 Cor. iii. 8—11. and we by participation of this Spirit of the Lord, are said, not only to behold the glory of the Lord, but also to be changed into the same image with him from glory to glory, ver. 18. see the note there, and John xvii. 22. So Origen on the place; De glorificatione possumus in præsenti seculo intelligere quod dicit apostolus, nos autem omnes revelatâ facie gloriam Domini speculantes, eadem imagine transformamur à gloria in gloriam, tanquam a Domini Spiritu. In favour of this interpretation let it be noted, that when the apostle speaks of our final glorification in this chapter, he still speaks of it, as of a thing future, saying, We shall be glorified with him, (ver. 17, 18. 21.) whereas he here speaks of it as a thing past, saying, whom he hath justified, them he hath also glorified. So when a miracle was wrought in Christ's name, ἐδόξασε, God glorified him, Acts iii. 13. (See Luke iv. 15. John viii. 45. xi. 4. xiii. 31, 32. xvi. 14. 1 Cor. xii. 26.) And when God wrought signs by Moses, ἐδόξασεν αὐτὸν, he glorified him, Ecclus. xlv. 3. (See the preface to the Epistle to the Galatians.)

[27] Ver. 33, 34.] Here it is well observed by Mr. L. that these words being read by way of interrogation, as is ver. 35. carry a full and clear sense thus: Who shall plead against God's elect? Shall the God who justifies them do it? Who is he that condemns them? Can it be that Christ who died for them?

[28] Ver. 35. Nothing shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus.] To answer the argument hence urged, to shew that men cannot fall from grace, because if once they truly loved God, they cannot cease to do so, let it be noted:

First, That this inquiry is not, who shall separate us from the love with which we love God and Christ; but who shall separate us, who truly love God, and testify that love by our obedience to his commands, (John xv. 10.) and our patient sufferings for his sake, (ver. 36, 37.) from his affections towards us.

The apostle therefore only intimates, that such persons continuing in the love of God, shall be preserved by him from, or enabled to overcome, the temptations here mentioned, and so supported by his grace and Holy Spirit, as to be able to triumph over them. But he doth not say, that the love of no Christian shall wax old, Matt. xxiv. 12. that none of them shall lose his first love, Rev. ii. 6. were there no fear of this, why doth Christ exhort his disciples to continue in his love? John xv. 9. and his apostles exhort others to keep themselves in the love of God, Jude 21. to continue in the grace of God, 13. 43. to look diligently to it, that they fall not from the grace and favour of God? Heb. xii. 15. Note.

Secondly, That the apostle doth not say that nothing shall separate true believers from the love of God, or Christ; but only saith, at ver. 38. πέπεισμαι, I am persuaded nothing will do it: nor have I any cause to fear, that any of these temporal sufferings or enjoyments should shake their steadfastness, in expectation of those eternal and inestimable blessings which God hath promised, and Christ hath purchased for his church; these light afflictions being not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed, (ver. 18.) and all co-operating for the good of them that love God, (ver. 28.) that as for the weakness of the flesh, which rendered these temptations so dreadful, and gave strength unto them, they lived in hopes of a glorious redemption of the body from them; (ver. 23.) and whilst they groan under them, they have the assistance of the Spirit of God to strengthen them, and help them to bear their infirmities; a powerful and loving Father to be with them, a Saviour exalted to the right hand of God to intercede for them, (ver. 33, 34.) Upon all which accounts, he might well say, I am persuaded, that none of these things shall separate you from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus. The apostle doth not by these words intend to teach believers, that they could not be shaken by these things; for this would have contradicted the drift of his Epistles, in which he doth so often express his fears, lest they should be shaken with them; and so far tempted by them, as to be moved away from the hope of the gospel, (Colos. i. 23.) and render all his labours vain; (1 Thess. iii. 3, 4.) and offers so many arguments and motives to prevent the effect of those temptations; but only doth intend to say, that upon these considerations, they had so great inducements to persevere and continue in the love of God, as made him strongly persuaded that they would do so.

[ζθ] Ver. 37. Ὑπερνικῶμεν, We are more than conquerors.] For we not only bear, but glory in tribulations: (Rom. v. 3.) we are in deaths often, but still delivered from death; (2 Cor. i. 10.) and as the sufferings of Christ abound towards us, so also doth our consolation under them abound through Christ.

CHAP. IX.

1. (As for the unbelieving Jews, my brethren in the flesh, that what I am to speak concerning them may not seem to proceed from any disaffection to them,] I say the truth in Christ, I lie not, [1] my conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost, (i. e. I call Christ and the Holy Ghost to bear witness with my own conscience, that I only speak the truth, when I say,)

2. That I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart (on the account of their infidelity, that obduration and spirit of slumber, and that rejection of them, which are the dismal consequences of their unbelief).

3. For (so great is my concern for them, that were it proper, and could it avail to the procuring their salvation,) [2] I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for (these) my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh:

4. (And surely, I have very great reason to be highly concerned for them) who are Israelites; (i. e. persons descended from one whose faith and virtue were so eminent, that as a prince he prevailed with God, and so had his name changed from Jacob to Israel, as a mark of God's affection to him, Gen. xxxii. 28.) to whom pertaineth the adoption, (God having owned them as his sons and his first-born, Exod. iv. 22, 23. Hosea xi. 1.) and the glory, (the Schechinah, or glorious presence dwelling among them between the two cherubims, and from thence shining forth upon them, Psal. l. 2. lxxx. 2.) and the covenants, (made with Abraham, Gal. iii. 17. and with Moses, Exod. xxiv. 8. the two covenants, Gal. iv. 24. the old and new covenant, Jer. xxxi. 31. xxxii. 40.) and the giving of the law (that writ with his own finger in tables of stone, Deut. x. 1. 4. and many other excellent judicial laws), and the (acceptable) service of God, and the promises (not only of signal blessings in the land of Canaan, to those who should observe his laws, but the promise of a Messiah, and of a new covenant established upon better promises);

5. Whose are the fathers, (they being the offspring of those patriarchs to whom the promises were first made, Heb. xi. 9. 13. 17.) and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ (the promised Messiah) came, (he being born of one of their nation, and so according to the flesh their offspring, even he) who (according to his Divine nature) is [3] over all, God blessed for ever. Amen.

6. (But we must) not (exaggerate this blindness and rejection of the Jews, whose were the covenants and the promises, in prejudice of the veracity of God,) as though the word of God had taken none effect; (i. e. the promises of God concerning the seed of Israel, and the blessings to be conferred upon them ἐκπέπτωκεν, had failed; this doth by no means follow.) For they [4] are not all Israel, who are of Israel: (i. e. all that are descended from the loins of Israel by carnal generation, are not the children of the promise made to Jacob, Gen. xxviii. 14. which yet are only to be accounted for the seed, ver. 8.)

7. Neither, because they are the seed of Abraham (according to the flesh), are they all children (of the promise made to Abraham): but (only they who are the seed of Isaac, for thus the promise runs,) In Isaac shall thy seed be called.

8. That is, they which are the children of the flesh (of Abraham, and have the sign of the covenant in their flesh), these are not (on that account alone) the children of God: (of whom it is said, I will be a God unto thee, and thy seed after thee, Gen. xvii. 7.) but (they only who are) the children of the promise (as Isaac was) are (to be) [5] counted for the seed.

9. For this is the word of promise, (Gen. xviii. 10.) At this time will I come, and Sarah shall have a son (which words confine the children of the promise to the seed of Sarah, excluding that of Hagar from it).

10. And not only this (instance is proper to demonstrate the distinction of the seed of Abraham according to the promise); but (that) also (of) Rebecca who conceived by one, even by our father Isaac (two children born of the same father, and of the same mother, and lying in the same womb);

11. For the [6] children (of her womb) being not yet born, neither having done any good nor evil, (which might move God to dislike the one more than the other, as may be alleged in the case of Ishmael), that [7] the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of (Gr. from) works, but of him that calleth; (i. e. that the purpose of God in preferring one of these seeds and nations before the other, to be the promised seed, and so his church and people, might appear to be, not on consideration of their works, but his free choice;)

12. It was (then) said unto her, The elder (in his posterity) shall serve the younger, (i. e. shall be inferior to him, who had the right of primogeniture according to the flesh.

13. According to which preference it happened to their posterity,) as it is written, (Mal. i. 2, 3.) Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated.

14. What shall we say then (after these instances)? Is there (any cause to say there is) unrighteousness with God? (in taking then, for the seed of Abraham, or for his sons and people, the posterity of Isaac, rather than of Ishmael; the posterity of Jacob, rather than the Edomites? or in calling now the gentiles, and upon their faith owning them for his people, the spiritual seed of Abraham; and rejecting the Jews from these advantages and privileges, because of their unbelief?) God forbid (that we should accuse God of unrighteous dealing upon this account).

15. For (to begin with the freedom which God reserveth to himself, in shewing acts of grace and favour to an offending people, in this he only doth what) he saith to Moses, (he would do, making this declaration to him, Exod. xxxiii. 19.) [8] I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion.

16. So then (these instances shew, that) [9] it is not of him that willeth, (for Abraham willed that Ishmael might live to be partaker of the blessings promised to his seed, when he said, O that Ishmael might live before thee! Gen. xvii. 18. and when he was grieved at the saying of Sarah, the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with my son Isaac, Gen. xxi. 11.) nor of him that runneth (for when Esau ran to fetch venison for his father, that he might receive the blessing, Gen. xxvii. 5. God's wisdom saw it fit to have it otherwise), but of God that sheweth mercy (that any one is chosen to be the seed to which the promise made to Abraham belongs, and so to be his church and people.

To proceed now to the other part of the objection, the seeming injustice or severity of rejecting and reserving them to wrath, and of giving them up to an obdurate heart, who will not accept of the way God hath appointed for their justification, viz. that of faith in Christ, but rather will continue in their infidelity; this will be cleared by another instance, that of Pharaoh, who had so often hardened his heart, refusing to let Israel go.)

17. For the Scripture saith (upon that account) to Pharaoh, Even for this cause [10] have I raised thee up (i. e. have made thee stand in the plague of biles, and prolonged thy life for some farther time), that I might (the more illustriously) shew my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth, (by that conspicuous judgment I will execute upon thee, in the sight of all nations of the earth, Josh. ii. 10. 1 Sam. iv. 8.)

18. Therefore (from these instances and scriptures we may learn that) [11] he (God) hath mercy on whom he will have mercy, and (that) whom he will he hardeneth (or reserves for punishment).

19. Thou wilt say then to me (against this account of the Divine dispensations towards the unbelieving Jews, If God hardeneth us because he will), why doth he yet find fault (with us for our impenitence)? For who hath (at any time) resisted his will? (How therefore is it in our power to avoid being hardened, if it be his will we should be so?)

20. Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest (thus) against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus?

21. Hath not the [12] potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honour, and another unto dishonour?

22. What (therefore) if God, (being) [13] willing to shew his wrath, and to make his power (more illustriously) known, endured with much long-suffering (you refractory Jews, which were so long ago) the vessels of wrath fitted for destruction, (or for breaking, Psal. xxxi. 13.) what reason have you to complain against him on this account?

23. And (what if God) that he might make known the riches of his glory (shewed mercy) on the vessels of his mercy, [14] whom he had before (by working faith in them) prepared unto glory (or to be a glorious church)?

24. Even us, whom he hath called, (us, I say,) not of the Jews only (the natural seed of Abraham), but also of the gentiles? (What is there in this that should offend you?

25. For, first, as for the called gentiles, is not this the very thing foretold by their own prophet Hosea, when he introduceth God thus speaking,) As he saith also in Osee, I will call them my people, which were not my people; and her beloved, which (then) was not beloved.

26. And it shall come to pass, that in the place (and nation) where (formerly) it was said unto them, Ye are not my people; [15] there shall they be called (i. e. there shall arise a people which shall be called) the children of the living God.

27. (And whereas but a small remnant of Israel have believed, and so but a few of them are fitted to be vessels of his mercy; is not this also the very thing foretold by their own prophet) Esaias also, (when he) crieth concerning Israel, (x. 22, 23.) Though the number of the children of Israel be as the sand of the sea, (yet) a remnant (only of them) shall be saved (i. e. shall be converted to good, say the Jews, and so continue to enjoy the name and title of his people):

28. For (saith he) he will finish the work, and cut it short in righteousness: because [16] a short work will the Lord make upon the earth (i. e. the land of Judea).

29. And (this hath happened according) as Esaias said before, (i. 9. That there was a time when the sins of that people were so highly provoking, that) except the Lord of sabaoth had left us a seed, (except his exceeding goodness had redeemed us in mercy, there were sins in us, saith the Chaldee paraphrast, for which) we had been as Sodom, and been made like unto Gomorrha.

30. [17] What shall we say then? (τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; what do we say then? i. e. what is therefore the substance of what I have intended in this discourse? It is even this,) That the gentiles which followed not after righteousness (i. e. who before the coming of Christ were not solicitous touching justification before God, as having no idea and no notice of it, or call to it, and so as little thought of being preferred before Israel, as Isaac, being not born, of being preferred before Ishmael; and Jacob in the womb, of being chosen to be the promised seed before Esau), have (yet, through God's grace and favour through faith,) attained to righteousness, even the righteousness which is of faith (and so are made God's, and his peculiar people).

31. But Israel, (to whom the promises were first made, and) which followed after the law of righteousness (i. e. earnestly pursued after righteousness, and acceptance by the works of the law), hath not attained to the law of righteousness, (or to the righteousness which God accepteth.

32. And) wherefore (is it so)? Because (they sought not this justification) by (that) faith (which alone God prescribed for that end), but [18] as (if) it were (to be obtained) by the works of the law, (by which no flesh can be justified, iii. 20. and the reason why they sought not by faith in Christ is this), for they [19] stumbled at that stumbling-stone; (and so it happened to them,)

33. As it is written, Behold, I lay in Zion a [20] stumbling-stone and a rock of offence: and whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed, (but they that believe not shall stumble, and fall, and be broken by the stone of stumbling, and rock of offence, Isa. viii. 14, 15.)

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IX.

[1] Ver. 1. ΣΥΜΜΑΡΤΥΡΟΥΣΗΣ μοι τῆς συνειδήσεως ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, My conscience bearing witness in (or with) the Holy Ghost.] This verse not only shews, that in cases of great moment, which cannot otherwise be sufficiently confirmed, a Christian may establish his saying by an oath; but also that he may swear by Christ, and by the Holy Ghost, and call them to be witnesses of the sincerity of his own conscience in what he doth assert. So Philo, Θεὸν μάρτυρα καλῶ τοῦ συνειδότος, I call God to witness with my conscience. Now an oath being an act of religious worship, in which God is called upon as a witness to the truth, or an avenger of the falsehood of what we testify or promise, by swearing by our Lord Christ, and the Holy Ghost, the apostle must perform an act of religious worship to them, and by that agnise their Divinity, according to those words of Moses, Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, and serve him, and shalt swear by his name, Deut. vi. 13. And by calling upon them to bear witness to the secrets of his heart and conscience, he must ascribe to them the knowledge of the secrets of the hearts of men, which is the property of God alone. (1 Sam. xvi. 7. 1 Kings i. 39. 1 Chron. xxviii. 9. Psal. vii. 9. Jer. xi. 20. xvii. 10. xx. 12.)

[2] Ver. 3. Ηὐχόμην γὰρ ἀνάθεμα εἶναι, For I could wish myself accursed.] The word anathema being still used in St. Paul's Epistles in the severest sense, 1 Cor. xvi. 22. Gal. i. 8, 9. and the words ἀνάθεμα εἶναι ἀπὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, to be anathema from Christ, importing, in their literal sense, a separation from Christ himself, and not only from the external communion of his church, and being in the descants of the Greek* fathers the same as χωρισθῆναι τῆς ἀγάπης, ἐκπεσεῖν τῆς δόξης, ἀλλότριον εἶναι τοῦ Χριστοῦ, "à salute separari," to be separated from the love of Christ, to be alienated from him, to fall from the glory and the salvation purchased by him; I think it reasonable to interpret the apostle's words in this sense. Nor is it a sufficient objection against this interpretation, that this can be no truly Christian wish, for the apostle doth not say, I wish, but as the ancients do well interpret him, εἰ ἐνεχώρει, εἰ ἐνεδέχετο, if it were proper to make such a wish; if it would avail to make so great a multitude happy, ηὐχόμην "optarim equidem," I could even wish so great a blessing to my brethren, though with the loss of my own happiness.

[3] Ver. 5. Ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ πάντων Θεὸς εὐλογητὸς εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, Who is God over all blessed for ever.] This place galls the Arians: the note of Le Clerc upon it is this, that Dr. Hammond "should rather have examined the animadversions of Grotius upon it, than copied out of the Jewish fables, which make little to the purpose; Erasmus having written enough to overthrow all that can be inferred from them: for if what Grotius and Erasmus have observed, stand good, Dr. Hammond's reasoning cannot be thought of any force." Now here I might refer him to the solid confutation of what Erasmus had said, by Josue Placæus, par. iii. disp. 25. or to himself, Art. Critic. par. iii. p. 102. 106. But to give him all possible satisfaction in this matter,

First, I assert that the reading we follow, is certainly the true reading;

1. Because it is the reading with which all the versions agree, the Latin, the Arabic, the Ethiopic, and the Syriac: for it is a mistake in Grotius, when he insinuates the contrary of the Syriac version, which in Tremellius runs thus; "Quis est Deus, qui est super omnia."

2. Because it hath the general consent, "omnium fermè Patrum," of almost all the fathers, who have thus cited it from the second to the sixth century; viz. the testimony of Irenæus, lib. iii. 18. of Origen in locum, of Tertullian, contra Praxeam, cap. 13. 15. Novatian, de Trin. cap. 13. 20. Cyprian, lib. ii. de Testim. contra Jud. sect. 6. "Quod Deus Christus, ubi editio Oxoniensis hæc habet; Interea agnoscere oportebit, vocem 'Deus,' in Spirensi veteri innominatâ Remboldi, et Erasmi editionibus abesse, sed in sequentibus habetur, atque etiam in omnibus editionibus quas consului, quamobrem defectus iste jure merito ab Erasmo librariis imputatur.". Hilarius in Psal. cxxii. "Unus Deus ex quo omnia—Et, rursum, ex quibus Christus qui est super omnia Deus. Notat hîc Erasmus; Nescio ex quibus MSS. adduxisse Hilarium hunc locum, omissâ Dei mentione, quod tamen, inquit, incuriâ librariorum omissum videri potest: de quo ne quispiam ulterius dubitet, Erasmi aut Grotii versutiis deceptus, en locum parallelum de Trin. Sed non ignorat Paulus Christum Verba hæc etiam in Chrysostomi textu occurrunt, qui insuper verba sequentia ὅς ἐστιν εὐλογητὸς εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, ab apostolo dicta pronunciat, pro omnibus gratiarum actionem unigenito Dei referente; agnoscente autem Erasmo, non potest hæc particula ad Christum pertinere, nisi ad eundem et illa referantur, 'qui est super omnia Deus.'" His adde testimonia Athanasii, Orat. 2. et quint. contra Arian. Greg. Nysseni, lib. x. Contra Eunom. Ambrosii "(Apostolus de Christo dixit 'qui est super omnia Deus benedictus in secula',)" de Sp. Secondly, I assert, that the words will not admit of that interpunction and interpretation of Erasmus, which will do any service to the Arians or Socinians, viz. that a colon must be put after the words κατὰ σάρκα, after the flesh; and the words following must be an ecphonema, and grateful exclamation for the blessings conferred upon the Jews, thus, God who is over all be blessed for ever. For this exposition is so harsh, and without any like example in the whole New Testament, that as none of the orthodox ever thought upon it, so I find not that it ever came into the head of any Arian: Socinus himself rejects it for this very good reason, that Θεὸς εὐλογητὸς, God be blessed, is an unusual and unnatural construction; for wherever else these words signify blessed be God, εὐλογητὸς is put before God, as Luke i. 68. 2 Cor. i. 3. Eph. i. 3. 1 Pet. i. 3. and Θεὸς hath an article prefixed to it, nor are they ever immediately joined together otherwise. The phrase occurs twenty times in the Old Testament, but in every place εὐλογητὸς goes before, and the article is annexed to the word God, which is a demonstration that this is a perversion of the sense of the apostle's words. (2.) The apostle having said in the immediate preceding words, that Christ came from the fathers κατὰ σάρκα, according to the flesh, or as to his human nature, is it not reasonable to conceive he would proceed to say what he was according to his Divine nature, especially when he was discoursing of and to those Jews, who, as Trypho saith,* and Origen,† and Jerome‡ testify, held their Messiah was only to be a man, and denied his Divinity? Is it not unreasonable to think he should then say nothing of the τὸ κατὰ πνεῦμα, or the superior nature of Christ? Especially if we consider that the limitation τὸ κατὰ σάρκα, according to the flesh, plainly insinuated there was another nature in him, according to which he came not from the fathers. In a word, all the ancient versions render the words as we do, taking no notice of this interpunction. All the Greek scholiasts, and the ancient commentators among the Latins, excepting St. Chrysostom, here triumph over Arius, one of them indeed hinting, *That there might be men, who would be inclined to say these things were not spoken of Christ, but none ever saying that any did then actually ascribe them to any other person. Hence from the beginning, these words have been used by the fathers as an argument of Christ's Divinity. For, saith Irenæus,† because he is Emanuel, lest we should think him a man only, the apostle saith, of whom, as concerning the flesh, Christ came; "qui est Deus super omnes benedictus in secula." And in a like expression to this of the apostle, he saith, "Secundum id quod verbum Dei homo erat ex radice Jessæ, filius Abrahami;" According to that nature in which the Word of God was man, of the root of Jesse, and the son of Abraham, the Spirit of God rested upon him;‡ "secundùm autem quòd Deus erat," but as to that nature by which he was God, he judged not after the sight of his eyes, for he knew what was in man. And if these words are spoken by the Spirit of God concerning Christ, the arguments hence to prove him truly and properly God, are invincible: for, first, ὁ Θεὸς ἐπὶ πάντων, God over all, is the periphrasis by which all the heathen philosophers did usually represent the supreme God: and so is God the Father described both in the Old and the New Testament, as ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων, he that is over all, Eph. iv. 6. Secondly, This is the constant epithet and periphrasis of the great God in the Old Testament, that he is εὐλογητὸς εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, God blessed for evermore, 1 Chron. xvi. 36. Psal. xli. 13. lxxxix. 52. and also in the New, where he is styled the God ὅς ἐστιν εὐλογητὸς εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, who is blessed for ever. This was so evident to Enjedinus the Socinian, that he saith, this epithet is so peculiar to God the Father, that it is never attributed in the New Testament to any other, but wheresoever we find this phrase, GOD blessed for ever, it is always ascribed to the Father. Of the custom of adding to the name of God, blessed for evermore, used by the Jews, the reverend doctor hath said sufficient; and why all that he here saith, should pass with Mr. Clerc for Jewish fables, what reason can be given, if not his averseness to the doctrine the doctor here endeavours to establish? especially when we find this very phrase, εὐλογητὸς Κύριος, ὁ Θεὸς ἀπὸ τοῦ αἰῶνος, καὶ εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, or εὐλογητὸς Κύριος εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, Blessed be the Lord God from everlasting, Psal. xl. 13. lxxxviii. 51. cv. 48. and find St. Paul following his example, and Clemens Romanus in his epistle so often using the same epithet when he makes mention of the God of heaven: Edit. Jun. p. 29. 42. 50. 57. 59. 66. ver. 6.

[4] Ver. 6. Are not all Israel?] The apostle having declared, that both Jew and gentile had sinned, and fallen short of the glory of God, and so were to be justified only by faith in Christ, Rom. iii. 23, 24. the Jews objected against this, (1.) that they being the seed of Abraham, to whom the promises were made, it was not consistent with the Divine veracity to exclude them from the blessings promised, and to confer them on the believing gentiles. To the first part of this objection the apostle answers, by distinguishing betwixt the seed of Abraham, according to the flesh, and according to promise, or the spiritual seed, from ver. 6. to the 14th, at those words, What shall we say then? is there injustice in God? He begins to answer the second part of the objection, that the adoption, and the promises, belonging to the Jews, ver. 4. and the gentiles being strangers from the covenant of promise, it seemed unreasonable to confer those blessings on them, and not upon the Jews. To this the apostle answers, that this justly befel them, because they continued in their infidelity, after all the miracles wrought to convince them, that Christ was the true Messiah; and so, as by this obstinacy, like to that of Pharaoh, they had made themselves obnoxious to the severest of his judgments; so had they rendered themselves incapable of the blessings promised to Abraham and his seed, they who are of faith, being only the children of Abraham, and heirs according to the promise, Gal. iii. 7. 9. 29. whereas the gentiles believing in Christ, are through this faith entitled to the blessings promised to Abraham and his seed, ver. 14. for they being Christ's by faith, are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise, ver. 29.

[5] Ver. 8. Λογίζεται εἰς σπέρμα, Are accounted for the seed.] That is, of this distinction of seeds, to which the promise belongs, you have a manifest instance in the seed of Abraham; for before Abraham had any seed at all the promise of inheriting the land of Canaan was made unto him thus, Unto thy seed will I give this land, Gen. xii. 7. All the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed after thee for ever, Gen. xiii. 13. Unto thy seed have I given this land, Gen. xv. 18. But though Ishmael was his first-born, and had that circumcision which was the seal of the covenant made with Abraham; yet he, and his posterity, those twelve princes and great nations which issued from him, were all excluded from the covenant; and Isaac, not yet circumcised, or born, and his posterity, are declared to be the seed of Abraham, to whom the promise should be made good, and with whom the covenant should be established. For when Abraham said to God, O that Ishmael might live before thee! God returns him this answer: As for Ishmael, I have heard thee; behold, I have blessed him, and will make him fruitful, and will multiply him exceedingly; twelve princes shall he beget, and I will make him a great nation; but my covenant will I establish with Isaac, whom Sarah shall bear unto thee, Gen. xvii. 18. 20, 21. Again, when Sarah had said of Ishmael, Cast out this bondwoman and her son; for the son of this bondwoman shall not inherit with my son, even with Isaac, Gen. xxi. 10. and Abraham thereupon was grieved because of his son, ver. 11. God speaks thus to him, Let it not be grievous in thine eyes, because of the lad: in all that Sarah hath said, hearken to her, for in Isaac shall thy seed be called, ver. 12. Which instance shews, it was not being of the seed of Abraham according to the flesh, or having the sign of the covenant in the flesh, that rendered men the sons of God, or children of the promise then: for Ishmael was Abraham's first-born, and circumcised, and yet by God excluded from the promise; Isaac not circumcised, not yet born, not having the right of primogeniture, and yet to him, and his seed alone, belong the adoption, and the promises. Two things may here be added for illustration of this instance.

First, That the Jews can make no just exceptions against this argument of the apostle, it being suitable to their own theology; for it is a rule among them, that * whoso vows concerning Abraham's seed, is free from Ishmael and Esau's sons, and is not bound but touching Israelites, for in Isaac shall seed be called to thee; and so Isaac said of Jacob, And God give thee the blessing of Abraham.

Secondly, That there is a great emphasis in these words, The children of the promise; for upon this account it was said of Isaac, that he was not born according to the flesh, but according to the promise, Gal. iv. 23. Thus Ishmael was Abraham's son according to the flesh, but Isaac according to the Spirit; to be therefore children of the promise, seems to be Abraham's spiritual seed; whence the apostle saith of those who believe in this seed, that they are the sons of God by faith in Christ Jesus, and so are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise, Gal. iii. 29. That they, according to Isaac, are children of the promise, Gal. iv. 28. That they are children, not of the bondwoman, but of the free, ver. 31. Accordingly the Jews say,† a proselyte is the son of Abraham, who is the father of the whole world, as it is said, a father of many nations have I made thee. And because the Jews might quarrel against the pertinence of this instance, alleging this might be because Ishmael was the only son of Abraham's bondmaid, whereas Isaac was the seed of his own wife; or that Ishmael had forfeited his right by idolatry, or denying the world to come, of which they accuse him: here follows the instance of choosing Jacob and his seed, excluding Esau and his seed, against which no such cavil could take place.

[6] Ver. 11. Μήπω γὰρ γεννηθέντων, For the children being not yet born.] The argument of the apostle is to this effect, that though both Jacob and Esau had the same father and the same mother, yet of these two, when they were yet unborn, and so were neither circumcised, nor had done any thing at all to oblige or disoblige God, or to give any ground for any difference to be made betwixt them, and their offspring, God speaks thus of them to Rebecca, Two manner of people shall be separated from thy bowels, and the one people shall be stronger than the other people, and the elder shall serve the younger; (Gen. xxv. 23.) i. e. not he to whom by birthright it belonged, but he whom God was freely pleased to choose, should inherit the land of Canaan, promised to the seed of Abraham, and the other privileges of his seed. Which instance seems plainly to inform us, that the choice which God makes of men to the enjoyment of the favour of being his people, and beloved by him above others, as to such things, is not according to their external privileges or works, but according to his free choice. And this prediction was fully verified in after-ages; for Jacob and his posterity were planted in the land of Canaan, which flowed with milk and honey, and was the glory of all lands, whereas the Edomites were planted in a barren desert land; and this gave ground for those words of the prophet Malachi, I have loved you, saith the Lord to Israel, yet ye say, Wherein hast thou loved us? Was not Esau

Jacob's brother? saith the Lord: yet I loved Jacob, and hated Esau, and laid his mountains and his heritage waste for the dragons of the wilderness. Now for farther explication of these words, let it be observed,

First, That this instance of Esau's being rejected, and not owned by God as belonging to the promised seed, is suitable to the sentiments of the Jews, not only because he being an idolater, and a denier of the resurrection, and of the blessings of the world to come, was not, according to their forementioned canon, to be accounted for seed; and their received rule,* That he who swears concerning the seed of Abraham, is free from Ishmael, and Esau's son, and is not bound but touching Israelites; but also from their observation on these words of Jacob,† The God of my father Abraham, of my father Isaac; viz. that he saith not so of Esau, that Abraham and Isaac were his father, because he chose not to walk in their ways, and do their works.

Secondly, Hence it is evident that the apostle speaks not here of the persons, but of the nations and posterity of Jacob and Esau, or not of them personally, but nationally considered, according to the note of Irenæus, "Partum Rebeccæ prophetiam fuisse duorum populorum," (lib. iv. cap. 38.) This is plain,

(1.) From the words of God to Rebecca, Two nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people shall be separated from thy bowels, and the one people shall be stronger than the other. (2.) From this observation, That as to the persons of Esau and Jacob, it was never true that the elder did serve the younger, but only as to their posterity, when the Edomites became tributaries to David. (2 Sam. viii. 14.) And, (3.) because what is here offered as a proof or confirmation of this, is cited from the prophet Malachi, who prophesied long after Jacob and Esau were personally dead, and so could only speak of their posterity the Israelites and Edomites, as he expressly doth. And,

Thirdly, Hence it clearly follows, that the apostle cannot here discourse of any personal election of them to eternal life, or any absolute love or hatred of them, with respect to their eternal interest; for if so, seeing he manifestly speaks of the whole nation of Israel, they must, according to that opinion, be all elected to salvation; whereas the apostle informs us, that God had no pleasure in many of them, 1 Cor. x. 5. and the whole Jewish history shews the contrary. Again, then must the whole posterity of Esau be the object of God's hatred, and his reprobation, which is so far from being true, that Job and all his friends appear to have been of the posterity of Esau. And (2.) then it must follow, as Esthius contends, that not only election, but even reprobation also, must be without any respect to works, and so God must adjudge men to eternal perdition, without respect to any evil done, or to be done by them; for the children having done neither good nor evil, saith the apostle, it happened to them as it is written, Jacob have I loved, and Esau have I hated. It is certain then, that the apostle speaks here only of the election of one seed and nation before another, to be accounted and treated by him as the seed of Abraham; this only doth his argument require, and his instances prove, and this is sufficient to justify God's dealing with the unbelieving Jews, so as to reject them from being accounted for, and treated as, the seed of Abraham; and his raising up children to Abraham out of those believing gentiles, who, imitating the faith of Abraham, became the spiritual seed; and heirs according to the promise, that he would be a God to his seed, and that he should be the father of many nations, and in him should all the families of the earth be blessed, and his calling them to the faith, though sinners of the gentiles; that depending not on works, but his free pleasure.

Note also, that those words, The children being not yet born, nor having done good nor evil, being used as an argument to prove the election or preference of the one above the other could not be of works, is a strong argument against the pre-existence of souls, and their being sent into bodies by way of punishment for their former sins: for upon that supposition it could not be true, that the children had done neither good nor evil, before they were born; nor could the argument be firm, that one could not be preferred before the other on the account of any works done by them, seeing the one might have sinned more than the other in their state of pre-existence.

[7] Ἡ κατ' ἐκλογὴν πρόθεσις Θεοῦ, The purpose of God according to election.] Here I shall briefly consider the import of the words πρόθεσις, the purpose; πρόγνωσις, the foreknowledge; προώρισμος, the foreappointment of God; of all which, let it be noted,

First, That none of them relate to particular and individual persons (save only when they are used of our blessed Lord, and his sufferings for us), but only to whole churches and nations; and, in general, to the whole body of believing Jews and gentiles, whom God had chosen, προωρίσας, foreappointing them to the adoption, by Jesus Christ, Eph. i. 5. in whom also (saith he) ἐκληρώθημεν, we are made his portion, or peculiar people, προωρισθέντες κατὰ πρόθεσιν, being foreappointed so to be according to his purpose, ver. 11. God having purposed and foreappointed that this should be the portion of believers, and the consequence of faith in Christ, by which we become the sons of God. To all the converted Jews throughout their dispersions, they being chosen κατὰ πρόθεσιν, according to the purpose of God the Father: (1 Pet. i. 2.) and, lastly, to the posterity of Jacob, of whom, that ἡ κατὰ Θεὸν πρόθεσις, the purpose of God, according to the election, might stand, it was said, when Rebecca bore twins, the elder shall serve the younger.

Secondly, That this foreknowledge, purpose, or appointment, is only that of calling men to the knowledge of salvation, by Christ Jesus. Thus the apostle teacheth, that he was appointed to preach to the gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ, according to the ancient purpose which God hath made in Christ Jesus our Lord; (Eph. iii. 11.) and that according to his purpose before ages, he called us with a holy calling. (2 Tim. i. 9.)

Thirdly, This calling is designed by God ἐπὶ τοῦτο, for this end, that they who are called might obtain salvation through sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth; (2 Thess. ii. 13.) through sanctification of the spirit of obedience, and through the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus: (1 Pet. i. 2.) all Christians being chosen to this end, that they might be holy, and unblamable before God in love. (Eph. i. 4.) But hence it cannot reasonably be concluded, that this election is no larger than the holiness designed to be produced by it; for the riches of God's goodness, patience, and long-suffering, are designed to lead all those to whom it is vouchsafed to repentance. But hence it cannot be concluded that this riches, goodness, patience, and long-suffering, is exercised to none but those who truly do repent, seeing the apostle mentions many who despised these means, and after the vouchsafement of them, still continued to treasure up wrath against the day of wrath. (Rom. ii. 4.) The Baptist was sent to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and of the disobedient unto the wisdom of the just, but his preaching was far from having its effects on all that heard him. The end of the Messiah's advent to the Jews was, that he might save his people from their sins, and might engage them to serve him in holiness and righteousness all the days of their life: (Luke i. 75.) but yet it sadly failed of this effect upon the stubborn people; The saving grace of God appeared to all men, to teach them, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, to live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; but yet it is too sadly evident, it hath not had this good effect on all.

Fourthly, As men were appointed from the beginning to be called, so the gospel, which is the wisdom of God through faith unto salvation, was that ἣν προώρισεν, which God had foreappointed to be preached to men for that end, 1 Cor. ii. 7. this word of God giving the hope of that salvation, which he had promised before all ages. And hence, by virtue of this promise and foreappointment, men were in time called by the gospel to the faith in Christ, whence they who were thus called, are said to be called according to the purpose of God, (Rom. viii. 28.) and according to his purpose and grace given us through Jesus Christ: (1 Pet. i. 10.) the knowledge and purpose, from the foundation of the world, of sending Christ to die for the remission of sins, being the ground of this calling, on which account he is said, to be given up to the death according to the foreknowledge of God, and his foreappointed counsel; (Acts ii. 23.) and they who slew him, are said to have done only what his counsel had foreappointed to be done. (Acts iv. 28.) These observations will direct us to answer what is argued from these and such-like places of Scripture in favour of an absolute election.

[8] Ver. 15. Ἐλεήσω ὃν ἂν ἐλεῶ, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy.] It is here to be noted, that God made this declaration after Israel had committed idolatry, in making the golden calf, and so had made themselves naked, i. e. divested of the Divine presence and protection, or of a covenant-relation to him, insomuch that God sent this dreadful message to them, I will come up into the midst of thee in a moment, and consume thee, (Exod. xxxiii. 5.) and said to Moses, Let me alone, that I may destroy them in a moment. And though God suffered himself to be prevailed upon by Moses, to adopt them again for his people; yet he lets him know this was part of his glory, to be gracious to whom he will be gracious, and also to shew mercy to whom he will shew mercy. (Exod. xxxiii. 19.) If therefore upon the infidelity of the Jews, he will call the idolatrous gentiles, and receive them to be his people, as he did the Jews again after their idolatry, who can accuse him of injustice upon that account? (See the note on ver. 18.)

[9] Ver. 16. Οὐ τοῦ θέλοντος, οὐδὲ τοῦ τρέχοντος, It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth.] i. e. You see this is not to be obtained by the most passionate wishes of a faithful Abraham, nor by the fervent desires of an Esau, (Heb. xii. 17.) nor by the greatest zeal we can employ in such courses as seem best to our own wisdom; but we must own it to be a blessing, which depends merely upon the Divine goodness; and therefore must seek it according to his pleasure, in such ways as he appoints, and not in those which seem to us most proper to obtain it: though then you have a zeal for God, and follow after the law, that you may obtain righteousness, it is not to be wondered you obtain not the blessing of justification promised to the seed of Abraham, because you seek it not by faith in the Messiah, which is the only way in which God hath declared he will confer it.

Some of the fathers * interpret these words thus; It is not of him that wills, or runs only, but of God that sheweth mercy, and crowns the work by his assistance; for otherwise (say they) it cannot be our duty, either to will or run, provided we can, neither by willing nor running, do any thing to incline God to shew mercy; and why then doth God blame us for not willing? (Matt. xxiii. 17. John v. 40.) and require us so to run that we may obtain? (1 Cor. ix. 24. Heb. xii. 1.) And whereas St. Austin objects, That according to this interpretation it might be said, It is not of God that sheweth mercy only, but of man that wills and runs: Origen,† Chrysostom,‡ and Theophylact,§ answer; That this follows not, because man's willing and running would not avail without the Divine aid, to enable him to run, and his grace and mercy to accept his running; and therefore according to the custom of the Scripture, the effect is to be ascribed to the Chief Agent only; as except the Lord build the house, their labour is but vain that build it, &c. Psal. cxxvii. 1. so, Paul that plants, and Apollos that waters, is nothing, but God that giveth the increase, 1 Cor. iii. 6, 7. I laboured, yet not I, but the grace of God, 1 Cor. xv. 10.

[10] Ver. 17. Ἐξήγειρά σε, I have raised thee up.] Heb. העמרתיך, I have made thee to stand, Exod. ix. 16. or, have preserved thee, ἕνεκεν τούτου διετηρήθης, for this cause hast thou been kept, so the LXX.; i. e. from falling by the plague of biles, so Junius and Tremellius; "feci ut superstes maneres," I have kept thee alive, saith the Targum of B. Uziel. See the Chaldee, the Syriac, and the Arabic versions to the same sense: and the connexion of this with the former verse rightly rendered makes this sense necessary; for the fifteenth verse cannot be rendered in the future tense, as our translation doth, Now I will stretch out my hand, that I may smite thee and thy people with the pestilence, and thou shalt be cut off from the earth; for Pharaoh and his people did not die by the pestilence. It is therefore to be rendered, as the Jews, Fagius, Amama, Cartwright, and Ainsworth, translate it; For now I had sent out my hand, and I had smitten thee and thy people with the pestilence, and thou hadst been cut off from the earth; but in very deed, for this cause I have made thee stand up. ‖ So the Targum of B. Uziel, Quum jam miserim plagam fortitudinis meæ, æquum erit ut percuterem te et populum tuum morte, ut perderem te à terra; verùm pro- fectò non ut benefaciam tibi, in vita conservavi te, sed ut videre faciam te robur meum, &c. Whence we may learn how alien from the truth, and from the import of the words, is that exposition which saith, For this cause have I created thee, or raised thee to be the king of Egypt.

Observe farther, that God hardened Pharaoh's heart, not by any positive influx upon it, which made it necessary for him to continue obstinate. This Origen observes from those words, If thou refuse to let my people go, I will do so and so; that Pharaoh's heart was not so hardened, as to take away τὸ αὐτεξούσιον, all power from him to let the people go, for this he doth at last when God's hand was strong upon him, according to these words, iii. 19. I am sure that the king of Egypt will not let you go; ולא ביד חזקה nisi per manum fortem, Vulg. ἐὰν μὴ μετὰ χειρὸς χραταιᾶς, if not by a strong hand, Septuagint; nisi cum manu valida, Samarit. but by a strong hand, so the Bishop of Bath and Wells. This sense the words will bear, saith Ainsworth, vau being rendered si, Exod. iv. 23. Numb. xii. 14. And this sense is plain and certain from the words following; And I will stretch out my hand, and smite Egypt with all my wonders, which I will do in the midst thereof, and after that he will let you go, Exod. iii. 20. And again, vi. 1. Then said the Lord to Moses, Now shalt thou see what I will do to Pharaoh, for with a strong hand shall he let them go. Hence God is always said to have brought them out of Egypt ביד חוקה with a strong hand, Exod. xxxii. 11. Deut. v. 15. vi. 21. vii. 8. ix. 26. Dan. ix. 15. Nor can they who think otherwise, shew any way how or in what sense Pharaoh can be so often said to have hardened his own heart, if God himself had hardened his heart before; or why God doth so often command him to let his people go, (vii. 16. viii. 1. 20. ix. 1. 13.) i. e. to do what he had rendered him unable to do; or why Moses should say, Let not Pharaoh deal deceitfully any more, in not letting the people go; (viii. 29.) or why God did reprove him, because he had hitherto refused to let the people go; (vii. 16. viii. 29. ix. 17. x. 3.) or why he threatens judgments to him, if he refuse to let them go, (viii. 2. 21. ix. 2, 3. 14, 15.) and executes them on him upon that refusal, since "nemo tenetur ad impossibilia," no man is obliged to do what he cannot; much less what he cannot do by virtue of a disability that God hath laid upon him; and no man justly can be blamed, and much less punished, for not doing what he is not obliged to do. Nor can God command any man to do what he himself by his own influx restrains him from doing, even when he doth command it; for what he thus restrains him from, he is not willing he should do; whereas what he commands, he is willing should be done; and when he punisheth any one for not obeying his command, he punisheth them for not doing his will. Now it is impossible that God at the same time, and in reference to the same action, should be both willing and not willing it should be done. This will be farther evident from a consideration of all the places where the heart of Pharaoh is said to be hardened. As,

Chap. vii. 13. And he hardened Pharaoh's heart; Heb. ויחזק and the heart of Pharaoh was hardened. So the same words are rendered by us, ver. 22. and so hereby Ainsworth, the Bishop of Bath and Wells, the Bishop of Ely, and all the versions on this verse; nor is there any person mentioned in the verse, besides Pharaoh, to whom this action can be ascribed; his heart was therefore hardened at this time, not by God, but by the arts of his sorcerers, for the magicians did so with their enchantments, and Pharaoh's heart was hardened, (ver. 22.)

Chap. viii. 15. we read thus, When Pharaoh saw there was respite, he hardened his heart. When the fathers truly observe that Θεοῦ μακροθυμία σκληροκαρδίας αἰτία, i. e. the heart of Pharaoh was hardened by God's mercy, in taking off his hand from him: thus upon removal of the flies, Pharaoh hardened his heart; (ver. 31, 32.) and when he saw that the rain, and the hail, and the thunders, were ceased, he sinned yet more, and hardened his heart, he and his servants: and then immediately follow these words; And the Lord said to Moses, Go in unto Pharaoh, for (or, although) I have hardened his heart, and the heart of his servants, x. 1. so ver. 20. The Lord then hardened Pharaoh's heart only by taking away the locusts; and, ver. 27. The Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart only by taking away the darkness, the three days assigned to it being ended, as Aben Ezra observes on ver. 24. None rose from his place during those three days, but post triduum, they being ended, Pharaoh called unto Moses; and hence we read, not as at other times, that Pharaoh asked for the removal of this plague; and therefore when it is said, ix. 12. that the Lord hardened the heart of Pharaoh, and he hearkened not unto them, i. e. not to Moses and Aaron; we have reason to conclude he did that also by removing the plague of the biles; for had the biles continued upon the Egyptians, there was no reason for calling for the succeeding plague of hail, nor could the servants of Pharaoh, with their biles upon them, have gone into the field to house their cattle, ver. 20. We read also, xiv. 8. 17. that the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart to follow the Israelites; and of this we may give the same account, that he did this by causing the Israelites to encamp so as to give occasion to Pharaoh to say, They are entangled in the land, the wilderness hath shut them in, (ver. 3.) and by causing him to see the Israelites walking safely through the midst of the sea. But I am not concerned for these places, the hardening of Pharaoh then being not for sin (God having not commanded Pharaoh not to pursue after them, or follow them into the Red Sea), but for punishment: when therefore God saith, iv. 21. I will harden the heart of Pharaoh, that he shall not let the people go; his meaning may be only this, I will so order matters by removing the plagues inflicted on him and his people, to mollify him, and engage him to permit them to go, that he shall be hardened, till I come with my strong hand and slay his son, even his first-born, (ver. 23.) after which he did let them go, (xii. 31. 33.) From these two observations it is easy to discern how apposite this example is to the case of the Jewish nation. For,

First, Did God harden Pharaoh by his lenity, in removing his plagues and judgments from him? the same God saith of the Jews in this Epistle, when he speaks thus unto them, ii. 4, 5. Despisest thou the riches of his goodness, and forbearance, and long-suffering, not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance; but after thy hardness and impenitent heart treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of God's righteous judgment?

Secondly, If they object, that if God would have cast them off from being his people, and have cut them off from any share in the promises made to the seed of Abraham, why did he not this before, when they had so oft deserved it for their idolatries, from which they were now free? the answer is, from the example of Pharaoh preserved alive when he had long deserved to be cut off, that he might fall at last, more to the illustration of God's power, justice, and glory; and this is the thing hinted ver. 22. as you will see in the exposition of it.

[11] Ver. 18. Ὃν θέλει ἐλεεῖ, ὃν δὲ θέλει σκληρύνει, He hath mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth.] That is, hence it appears that God shews mercy according to his own wise pleasure, and not as we think fit; and he gives men up to the hardness of their own hearts, and so reserveth them to be examples of his illustrious judgments, according to the same good pleasure, and not according to the time and measures that they would prescribe; shewing mercy to you Jews, when you deserved to be cut off for your idolatry, in making and worshipping the golden calf, and reassuming you to be his people, and reserving the execution of his wrath upon Pharaoh, who had before deserved it for the hardness of his heart, till his destruction would minister to the greater illustration of his power and justice upon stubborn sinners.

Execrable is the note of Esthius here, that God is here said to harden whom he will; "Quod induratio cujuspiam in prima sua origine; quæ est prima derelictio, seu peccati permissio, non aliam habet causam, quam Dei voluntatem;" Because the first rise of any man's induration, which is God's dereliction of him, hath no other cause than the will of God: for as this is contrary to the known saying even of St. Austin, "Deus non deserit nisi deserentem," God deserts no man, who leaves not him first; so it makes God alone the cause of all men's hardening, since causa causæ, est causa causati: for if this dereliction be the cause of induration, and that hath no other cause but the will of God, the will of God must be the cause of all men's hardening it. It also makes all God's exhortations to men not to harden their hearts, and his reproofs and punishments of them for so doing, exhortations to what his will is the true cause of their not doing, and reproofs and punishments of that which his will caused them to do.

[12] Ver. 21. Οὐκ ἔχει ἐξουσιάν ὁ κεραμεὺς τοῦ πηλοῦ, Hath not the potter power over the clay?] That is, there is no more cause from God's dispensation in this case, in taking away the means of grace from and rejecting such a hardened people, and shewing his favour unto others, who submit to his terms of mercy, to make this objection, than for the clay of Jeremy, when it was marred and broken, (Jer. xviii. 4. 6.) to complain against the potter, that he took one part of it and made it a vessel of dishonour, and another part of it and made it a vessel of honour.

That this example of the clay in the hands of the potter, relates to God's dealing with sinners according to his pleasure, is evident not only from the application of it here to the impenitent, ver. 7, 8. but also from the like passage in Ecclesiasticus, where we are taught from this very instance, that the ways of God are κατὰ τὴν εὐδοκίαν αὐτοῦ, according to his good pleasure; because as the clay is in the hands of the potter, so is man in the hands of him that made him, to render to them as liketh him best, κατὰ τὴν κρίσιν αὐτοῦ, according to his righteous judgment. (Ecclus. xxxiii. 13.)

[13] Ver. 22. Εἰ δὲ θέλων ὁ Θεὸς, What if God, &c.] i. e. What injustice therefore is it in God to deal with you as he dealt with a hardened Pharaoh, you having as oft refused to hearken to his voice as Pharaoh did? Or what if he long hath, and still at present bears with such vessels of his wrath fitted for destruction, till in a more illustrious manner, and with more signal marks of his displeasure, for thus rejecting the gospel, and the promised Messiah, he swallow up their nation, their people, their temple, and their holy city, in one general destruction? Is it not for the glory of the Divine power and wisdom to reserve the rejectors of the Messiah, sent to bless them, and the persecutors of the Christian faith, to be at last cut off with such a remarkable destruction, as shall render it visible to the world that God's indignation is incensed against them for this sin, and so shall give to Jew and gentile a farther motive to believe in Jesus?

And again, What if God is pleased upon their impenitence and obduration, to shew the riches of his glorious goodness and mercy upon those Jews and gentiles, whom he hath called to the faith of Christ, and so hath fitted and prepared to be the vessels of his mercy? Hath he not a just right to shew his mercy to such persons who have submitted to the terms upon which he hath promised favour and acceptance, and so to own them as the spiritual seed of Abraham, and so as his peculiar people?

[14] Ver. 23. Ἃ προητοίμασεν εἰς δόξαν, Whom he hath prepared for his glory.] Thus the apostle, discoursing of the day of the Lord, which was coming to execute his dreadful judgments on the Jews, saith thus, God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ. (1 Thess. v. 9.)

[15] Ver. 26. Ἐκεῖ κληθήσονται, There shall they be called the children of the living God.] It must be acknowledged, that in these words the prophet primarily speaketh of the restoration of the Jews exiled, and cast off from being his people; but yet that these words may not only be accommodated, but even extended to the gentiles, who were emphatically not his people, and yet by faith became the seed of Abraham; and the true Israelites being the sons of God by faith in Jesus Christ, (ver. 6. 8.) may be argued from the phrase במקם, in the place or nation where it was said, Ye are not my people: and so the Jews themselves interpret these words in the gloss upon the Talmud, saying, They who were not of my people shall adhere to the Lord, and be to me for a people; (Glos. Talmud in Tract. de Paschate, ad cap. 8.) according to that of the prophet Zechariah, And many nations shall adhere to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people. (Zech. ii. 11.)

[16] Ver. 28. Λόγον συντετμημένον, A short work.] i. e. Such a consumption and decision is by God designed upon that multitude of evil-doers in the land of Israel, as shall cut them very short and lop them off, so that they shall be as a tree, of which only the stump remaineth; They shall be reduced (saith R. Solomon) to a small remnant, and a remnant of that remnant shall be converted. (See Examen Millii here.)

[17] Ver. 30. Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; What do we then say?] From this recapitulation of the whole dispute of the apostle in this chapter, and his declaration that this was the design of it, to justify God in this proceeding and dealing with them both, it is exceeding evident, that it was not at all designed to determine any thing touching God's absolute decrees of dealing with mankind in general, thus or thus, as to their final and eternal state, but only to justify his dealings, as in his providence he had actually done with the unbelieving Jews, rejecting them upon their stubborn infidelity and the hardness of their hearts; and with the believing gentiles, admitting them to be his church and people, and the spiritual seed of Abraham upon their faith, and submission to the terms he had proposed for their justification and acceptance with him.

[18] Ver. 32. Ὡς ἐξ ἔργων νόμου.] Ὡς, say Hesychius and Phavorinus, is used ἀντὶ τοῦ ὄντως ἀληθοῦς, as ב in the Hebrew is, or as an expletive: so Matt. xiv. 5. xxi. 6. John i. 14. 2 Cor. i. 17. Phil. ii. 7. 1 Pet. i. 19. so Nehem. vii. 2. αὐτὸς ὡς ἀνὴρ ἀληθὴς, He was a true man, and one that feared the Lord: see Noldius Concord. partic. p. 376, 377. and is, as the Greek commentators often note, οὐχ ὁμοιώσεως, ἀλλὰ βεβαιώσεως καὶ ἀναμφισβήτου διορισμοῦ, a particle not of similitude but of confirmation, and so may here be rendered, but verily, or, but indeed, by the works of the law.

[19] Προσέκοψαν γὰρ, For they stumbled, &c.] They sought not justification by faith in Christ, because whereas God had pointed out to them this way of salvation, by saying, Behold, I lay in Zion a corner-stone, elect and precious, and whosoever believeth in him shall not be ashamed, Isa. xxviii. 16. this corner-stone became to them of Israel, according to the words of the same prophet, viii. 14. A stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence; they being offended at him because of his poverty, humility, and outward meanness, and the spirituality of his kingdom; and so they stumbled and fell off from being God's people, and excluded themselves from the blessings procured for and offered to them, by the Messias, promised to their forefathers. (See 1 Pet. ii. 6—8.)

[20] Ver. 33. Πρόσκομματος λίθον, A stone of stumbling, &c.] The Jews say, The Son of David, i. e. the Messias, cometh not till the two houses of the fathers of Israel shall be taken away, to wit, the head of the captivity of Babylon, and the prince who is in Israel, as it is said, He shall be a stone of stumbling, and a rock of ruin, to the two houses of Israel, and many of them shall stumble and fall, and be broken. And the Chaldee paraphrast upon the place saith thus, &c. ואם לא קבלין, And if they will not obey, or receive (him), my word shall be to them for scandal and ruin to the princes of the two houses of Israel.

CHAP. X.

1. BRETHREN, my heart's desire and [1] prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved.

2. For I bear them record that they have [2] a zeal of God (being very desirous to do what they conceive well-pleasing to him, and acceptable in his sight), but (this zeal is) not according to knowledge (i. e. not joined with the knowledge of those things which would render them truly acceptable to him).

3. For they being ignorant (through unbelief, 1 Tim. i. 13.) of God's righteousness, (i. e. of that way of justification which alone renders us righteous, and acceptable in the sight of God, see note on Rom. i. 17. 2 Cor. v. 21.) and going about to establish their own righteousness (which is of the law, Phil. iii. 9. and so a righteousness peculiar to them who are Jews), have not submitted themselves to (that righteousness which is through faith in Christ, and is) the righteousness of God.

4. For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness (to be imputed) to every one that believeth (in him; the law being our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith, Gal. iii. 25.

5. Which righteousness by faith can never be obtained by the works of the law;) for Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the law (thus), That the man which doeth those things [3] shall live by them (so that this righteousness is plainly, not of faith, but works).

6. But the righteousness which is of faith speaketh (so as that we may accommodate the words of Moses to it) on this wise, Say not in thy heart, Who shall ascend into heaven? that is, to bring Christ down from above (to be a teacher of it to us):

7. Or, Who shall [4] descend into the deep? that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead (to give us the salvation purchased by his death).

8. But what saith it? (what therefore saith it?) The word is [5] nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith, which we preach;

9. That if thou shalt [6] confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved.

10. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness (Gr. to justification); and [7] with the mouth confession is made (of that faith) unto salvation.

11. For the Scripture saith, Whosoever believeth on him, shall not be ashamed (of his hope and salvation by him, Rom. iv. 5.

12. And it rightly saith, Whosoever,) for there is no difference (as to the way of justification and salvation) between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him (for salvation).

13. For (as the prophet Joel saith, ii. 32.) [8] whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved.

14. (Now this calling upon him supposes God's intention, that the gentiles, as well as Jews, should hear, in order to their believing; for did they not believe,) how then shall they call upon him in whom they have not believed? (Did they not hear,) and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And (this hearing supposeth some preacher was to be sent to the gentiles, for) how shall they hear without a preacher?

15. And (this preacher must have a commission from God, for) how shall they preach unless they be sent? (Now certainly we have been sent to you Jews, preaching peace to you by Jesus Christ, Acts x. 36.) as it is written, (Isa. lii. 7, 8.) How [9] beautiful (upon the mountains) are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things! (that say unto Zion, Thy God reigneth, or, as the Chaldee, The kingdom of thy God is revealed.)

16. But (if the apostles were sent to the Jews, how is it that) they have not all obeyed the gospel? (I answer, This incredulity of the Jews is only that which was foretold by their own prophets); for (so Isaiah saith of them, liii. 1.) Lord, who hath believed our report? (τὴν ἀκοὴν ἡμῶν).

17. So then (ἄρα, these testimonies shew that) faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by (the preaching of) the word of God.

18. But (Gr. moreover) I say (of the gentiles), have they not heard? Yes verily (that of the Psalmist being true of us the preachers of the gospel), their [10] sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world. (Rom. viii. Colos. i. 16. 23.)

19. [11] But (yea, or also,) I say, Did not Israel know (of the preaching of the gospel to the gentiles, and of their own infidelity in rejecting it? This surely they might know from their own scriptures; for) first Moses saith, I will provoke you (refusing to believe) to jealousy by them that are (yet) [12] no people (of God), and by a foolish nation I will anger you.

20. But Esaias is very bold (in his expression), and saith (of the gentiles), I was found of them that (formerly) sought me not; I was made manifest to them that asked not after me.

21. But to Israel (foretelling their infidelity) he saith, [13] All day long have I stretched forth my hands unto a disobedient and gainsaying people.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. X.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἡ ΔΕΗΣΙΣ, My prayer.] That the apostle speaks not in the preceding chapter of the absolute and peremptory rejection and reprobation of Israel, is evident from this prayer, and vehement desire; for on supposition of such a decree of reprobation, this must not only be a vain prayer, but also an opposing of his will, and εὐδοκιά, to the good pleasure of Almighty God revealed to him; for it is evident he prays here for all Israel, for them whose zeal to God was not according to knowledge, and who were ignorant of God's righteousness, ver. 2, 3. not for those only, as Esthius descants, whom God hath predestinated to be saved by the prayers of the saints.

[2] Ver. 2. Ζῆλον Θεοῦ, A zeal for God.] Hence were some of them called zealots, taking that name ἀπὸ τῶν ἐπ' ἀγαθῷ ζηλωμένων, from those who were zealous for that which was good, saith Josephus, de Bello Jud. lib. vii. cap. 30. p. 986.

[3] Ver. 5. Ζήσεται ἐν αὐτοῖς, Shall live by them,] A prosperous and happy life in the land of Canaan, as Origen * interprets the words, eternal life being not the promise of the law, but of the gospel; and if eternal life was obscurely hinted as the reward of their obedience to the law of Moses, it related not to their obedience to the ceremonial, but to the moral law; of which our Saviour saith, If thou wilt enter into life (eternal, ver. 16.) keep the commandments, Matt. xix. 18. and this do, and thou shalt live, Luke x. 28. Obedience to which includes faith in his word and promises: and so faith in Christ, when once that is revealed as the condition of our justification, and the obedience they yielded to it, availed to their salvation, only through the new covenant of grace, which pardoned the infirmities of that obedience. (See Examen Millii here.)

[4] Ver. 7. Τίς καταβήσεται εἰς τὴν ἄβυσσον, Who shall descend into the deep?] The words, Deut. xxx. 13. are these, Who shall go over the sea? that is, say the Targum of Jerusalem and B. Uziel, the great sea, or the deep sea; and the Jerusalem Targum renders the words thus, O that there were one like Jonas the prophet, who would descend לעי בקי יבא, into the depth of the great sea! Now we know Jonas descending into the deep was a type of Christ, Matt. xii. 20. Descending into the deep of the earth, Psal. lxxi. 20. and being brought again, say the LXX. ἐκ τῶν ἀβύσσων γῆς, from the abysses of the earth; and this might give occasion to the apostle to allude to their traditional interpretation, or paraphrase on the words of Moses; like to which are those of Baruch, iii. 16. Who hath gone up into heaven, and taken wisdom, and brought her down from the clouds? who hath gone over the sea, and found her? And to this effect is that of Philo, What need is there ἢ μάκρας ὁδοπορίας, ἢ τοῦ θαλαττεύειν, either to take long journeys, or go to sea in search of virtue, we having the root of it within us; or, as Moses saith, in our mouth, in our heart, and in our hand? lib. quod omnis probus liber, p. 677. E. Note also, that the apostle says not, to bring Christ ab inferis, as Esthius here doth, but only to bring him ἐκ νεκρῶν, from the dead; this place therefore concerns not Christ's descent into hell, in the sense of Esthius.

[5] Ver. 8. Ἐγγύς σου, Nigh thee.] It is neither far from any man's hearing, for we preach it every where; nor far from his understanding, for in preaching it we use great plainness of speech, 2 Cor. iii. 12. it is in thy mouth to profess, and in thy heart to believe it, and thus we preach.

[6] Ver. 9. Ἐὰν ὁμολογήσῃς, If thou shalt confess, &c.] Hence observe,

First, That justification is here expressly ascribed to faith, and that not as including works, but only as being that principle which, when it is cordial and sincere, will certainly produce them: I say, not as including all those works which by the gospel are required to salvation; for then the righteousness of faith must be described as is the righteousness of the law, viz. that the man who doth these things shall live in them, which is contrary to the words of the apostle, ver. 5, 6. See the preface to the Epistle to the Galatians.

Secondly, Observe, that the faith to which justification and salvation are ascribed, is not here, as it is elsewhere, said to be faith in his blood, but a belief that God had raised up Jesus from the dead. So St. Paul, having discoursed of the faith of Abraham, which was imputed to him for righteousness, saith, This was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him, but for us also to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe in him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead. (Rom. iv. 23, 24.) Thus are we said to be risen with Christ through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead. (Col. ii. 12.) And in St. Peter, the Christian is said to believe through Christ in God, who raised him from the dead, that our faith and hope might be in God. (1 Pet. i. 21.) Now this belief in God, as raising our Lord Jesus from the dead, is therefore represented as faith unto salvation, because it ministereth to us a full assurance of salvation by Christ, and of our resurrection also; for if we believe that Jesus Christ died and rose again, even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him; (1 Thess. iv. 14.) knowing that he that raised up the Lord Jesus, shall also raise us up by Jesus. (2 Cor. iv. 13, 14.) And this belief of a happy resurrection to eternal life is a sufficient motive to be steadfast, immoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. (1 Cor. xv. 58.) And where it hath not these effects upon us, we do not in the Scripture sense duly believe and attend to it. Note,

Thirdly, That when the apostle saith, If thou dost thus confess and believe thou shalt be saved, we need not understand this of actual and complete salvation, to be imparted at the day of judgment; but that this faith and this confession will put us in the way of salvation, and give us a right to it, whilst we continue to act suitably to this faith, which I have shewn to be the frequent import of the word salvation and saved, when salvation is ascribed to faith and grace. (See the notes on Eph. ii. 8. Titus iii. 5.)

[7] Ver. 10. Στόματι δὲ ὁμολογεῖται, With the mouth confession is made to salvation.] For in those times of persecution for the sake of Christ, he that continued, under those fiery trials, to hold fast his profession, could do it only through that lively faith in Christ, and that sincere affection to him above all worldly interests, which he hath promised to reward with life eternal.

[8] Ver. 13. Ἐπικαλέσηται τὸ ὄνομα Κυρίου, Shall call upon the name of the Lord.] The word in the original is Jehovah, whence it is certain that the prophet speaks these words of the true and only God; and yet it is as certain, that the apostle here ascribes them to our Lord Jesus Christ, both from the following words, How shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? (for the apostle in this whole chapter discourseth of faith in Christ;) and from the words foregoing, of which these are a proof, and to which they are connected with the particle γὰρ; for those words, whosoever believeth in him shall not be ashamed, are spoken by the prophet Isaiah of Jesus Christ the corner-stone, Isa. xxviii. 16. and so are they interpreted by St. Peter, 1 Pet. ii. 6. 7. And in the prophet Joel these words follow, εὐαγγελιζόμενοι, οὓς Κύριος προσκέκληται, and the evangelized, whom the Lord shall call, shall be saved. Here then we have two arguments for the Divinity of Christ: (1.) That what is spoken of Jehovah is ascribed to him. (2.) That he is made the object of our religious invocation. (See note on 1 Cor. i. 2.) But

Mr. L. indeed attempts to invalidate the force of both these arguments, first, by saying that this calling upon the name of the Lord, doth not import the invocation of Christ, but only an open profession of faith in him, because St. Paul argues closely, and yet in the three preceding verses requires an open profession of the gospel. Ans. There is not one word of professing either in the eleventh or twelfth verses; in the ninth or tenth he mentions confession with the mouth, and believing with the heart as necessary, because the Scripture saith, Whosoever believeth shall not be ashamed, the same Lord over all being rich to all that call upon him: for, Joel ii. 32. Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. If then St. Paul be a close reasoner, he must speak of invocation of the name of the Lord. Moreover, this being the character of the disciples of Christ, even before they were called Christians, (see note on Acts ix. 2.) and the continual practice of all Christians from the beginning, (see note on 1 Cor. i. 2.) the apostle might well argue from believers, to those that call upon Christ's name. The first argument he would invalidate by denying that the words cited by St. Paul from Joel are to be understood in the sense in which they are used by the prophet, which in effect is to deny that the apostle argued either closely or truly, for the whole of the apostle's inference is lost, if either the Lord, ver. 13. be not the same Lord with him in ver. 12. or if to call upon him doth not bear the same sense in both places.

[9] Ver. 15. Ὡς ὡραῖοι, How beautiful, &c.] The Midrash shir Hasschirim upon those words of Cant. ii. 12. The voice of the turtle is heard in our land, saith thus, This is the voice of the King Messiah, crying out, and saying, How beautiful, &c. Moreover, from those words, How shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? ver. 14. and from those ver. 17. Faith cometh by hearing, &c. it follows, that those gentiles who never had the gospel preached to them, or any opportunity of hearing it, cannot be condemned for want of faith in Christ or in his doctrine, that being to condemn them for the want of that which they never were in a capacity to have; if therefore they are capable of a reward, as they must be who are obliged to believe that God is the rewarder of all them that diligently seek him, (Heb. xi. 6.) Christ must be a Saviour to them who do thus seek him, though they know not of him.

[10] Ver. 18. Ὁ φθόγγος αὐτῶν, Their voice.] These words being spoken literally of the preaching of the Hebrews to the gentiles, touching the power, wisdom, and the goodness of God; and the Psalmist speaking immediately after of God's teaching his people by the law, as a more glorious discovery of his will to the Jews, the apostle very appositely accommodates these words to the revelation of his power, wisdom, goodness, and mercy, in the gospel to the heathens.

Moreover, that kav-ram, which we render their line, Psal. xix. 4. does signify their loud cry, and so is well rendered by the apostle here ὁ φθόγγος αὐτῶν, their sound, i. e. the sound of the apostles, is fully proved by Dr. Pocock, Miscel. cap. 4. p. 48.

[11] Ver. 19. Ἀλλὰ, But.] That ἀλλὰ signifies yea, see our translation rendering it so five times, 2 Cor. vii. 11. John xvi. 2. That it signifies, quin etiam, quin immo, see Noldius, and Luke xii. 7. 1 Cor. iii. 2. xii. 22.

[12] Ἐπ' οὐκ ἔθνει, By them that are no people.] That this is the description of the heathens, see note on 1 Cor. i. 28. who are also styled, not only by the Jews, but by the Scriptures, whilst idolaters, a foolish people, Jer. x. 8. Rom. i. 21, 22. Titus iii. 3.

[13] Ver. 21. Ὅλην τὴν ἡμέραν, All the day long.] These words are cited from Isa. lxv. 1, 2. and Aben Ezra informs us, that R. Moses Hacoben* said, The first verse is to be understood of the nations of the world, as if it had been said, I am found of the nations which are not called by my name, but to my people have I stretched out my hand: and so the apostle interprets and applies the words here.

CHAP. XI.

1. I SAY then, (that the generality of the Jews are hardened and cast off, but what then?) Hath God cast away his people (utterly and without exception)? God forbid (we should so think). For I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin (and yet chosen to be an apostle of Christ).

2. God (therefore) hath not (thus) cast away his people [1] whom he foreknew. (Psal. xcv. 3. And to represent this in a like case well known to you,) Wot you not what the Scripture saith of Elias (ἐν Ἠλίᾳ, in the history of Elias)? how he (in it) maketh intercession to God [2]against (the king and people of) Israel, saying,

3. Lord, they have killed thy prophets, and digged [3] down thine altars; and I am left alone (of all thy prophets), and they seek my life.

4. But what saith the answer of God to him (in that history? It speaks thus,) I have reserved to myself seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee [4]to the image of Baal.

5. Even so then (is it) at this present time also, (for even now) there is a remnant according to the [5] election of grace.

6. And if (they who are chosen in Christ, Eph. i. 4. to be God's church and people, are put into this state) by grace, (being justified freely by his grace, Rom. iii. 24.) then it is no more of (the) works (of the law that they are thus justified and accepted by him): otherwise grace is no more grace; (for what need is there of grace, where men have continued in all things written in the law to do them? Moses having said, The man that doeth these things shall live by them; Rom. x. 5.) But (on the other hand) if it be of works (that we are justified and accepted), then it is no more (of) grace: otherwise work is no more work (for grace comes in only to supply the defect of works, that is, to procure pardon for the non-performance of them, according to the tenor of the law).

7. What then (must be said in this case but this? viz. that the whole nation of) Israel hath not obtained that (righteousness or justification, Rom. ix. 30, 31.) which he seeketh for; but the election (the chosen generation of believers, 1 Pet. ii. 9.) hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded

8. (And this blindness hath happened to them,) (according as it is written, [6] God hath given them the spirit of slumber, eyes that they should not see, and ears that they should not hear,) unto this day.

9. And (as) David saith, Let their table be (or [7] their table shall be) made a snare, and a trap, and a stumbling-block, and a recompence unto them (of their evil deeds):

10. Let their eyes be (or their eyes shall be) darkened, that they may not see, and (thou shalt) [8] bow down their back alway.

11. I say then (or, moreover, of those of the Jewish nation which are thus blinded), Have they (so) stumbled that they should (irrecoverably) fall? God forbid (we should so think of them): but (so hath it happened through the wise counsel of God, that) through their fall salvation is come unto the gentiles (whom God hath now chose nto be his people), for to provoke them to jealousy (or to an emulation of their faith, that they also may be saved).

12. Now (εἰ δὲ, and) if the fall of them (from the prerogative of being God's peculiar people, happened thus to) be the riches of the (gentile) world, and the diminishing of them the riches (and increase) of the gentiles; how much more (shall) [9] their fulness (be the increase of them?

13. Of you gentiles, I say,) for I speak (this) to you gentiles, inasmuch as I am the apostle of the gentiles, (and by thus speaking) I magnify my office, (as declaring it to reach to the whole body of the gentiles, and to have been thus efficacious among them, Rom. xv. 18, 19.

14. And I speak of your being chosen thus to be God's people;) [10] if by any means I may provoke to (an) emulation (of your faith) them which are my flesh, and (so) might (be a means to) save some of them.

15. (And, indeed, their salvation is desirable, not only for their own, but for your sakes:) for if the casting away of them be (an occasion of) the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them (again into favour) be (to the gentiles), but (even as) life (or a resurrection) from the dead?

16. (Nor are you to imagine this is an improbable and even desperate supposition:) for if the (patriarchs, who were the) [11] first-fruits (of them) be (were) holy (called and separated to the service of God from all the people of the earth), the lump (of the whole nation) is also (in God's designation) holy: and if the root (of them, viz. Abraham) be (was) holy (and beloved of God), so are the branches (also beloved still of God for the fathers' sake, and so will be once more, in his good time, admitted to his favour).

17. And if (it hath so happened that) some of the branches (through infidelity) be broken off, and thou (gentile), being a wild olive-tree (or branch), were graffed in among them, and with them (who believe) partakest (of the privileges) of the root and the fatness of the olive-tree (into which thou art graffed);

18. Boast not against the branches (now cut off, as if they were utterly rejected from God's care and favour): but if thou boast, (consider) thou bearest not the root, but the root thee; (the promises being not made to thee, but to Abraham their root; and if thou becomest partaker of them only by being the spiritual seed of Abraham, by imitation of his faith, how much more shall they, who are by lineal descent the seed of Abraham, and so the primary and direct heirs of the promise, Acts iii. 25. xii. 26. in due time be graffed into their own root? ver. 24.)

19. Thou wilt say then, The (natural) branches were broken off (for their infidelity), that I might be graffed in (i. e. received as God's people in their stead).

20. Well; because of unbelief they were broken off, (i. e. rejected from being his church and people, ver. 15.) and thou standest (Gr. hast stood) by faith. Be not high-minded, (vaunt not thyself over them, ver. 18. 25.) but fear (lest this should also be the case):

21. For if God spared not the natural branches (thou hast cause to fear), [12] lest he also spare not thee.

22. Behold therefore (in this dispensation) the goodness and severity of God: on them which fell, severity; (in taking the kingdom of God away from them, Matt. xxi. 43.) but to thee, goodness (in admitting thee to be his church and people; which goodness will be still shewed to thee), if thou continue in (or worthy of) his goodness: otherwise thou also shalt be cut off (for thy infidelity and disobedience).

23. And (as thou standest by faith, so) they also, if they abide not still in unbelief, shall be graffed in: [13] for God is able to (work in them that faith which will) graff them in again.

24. (And that he will thus graff them in, we have just cause to think;) for if [14] thou wert cut out of (Gr. off from) the olive-tree which is wild by nature, and wert graffed contrary to nature, into a good olive-tree: how much more shall these, which be the natural branches (though now cut off), be graffed (again) into their own olive-tree?

25. (And this now I declare;) for I would not, brethren, that you should be ignorant of this [15] mystery (of the intended calling of the now-rejected Jews), lest you should be wise in your own conceits (boasting over them, ver. 18. as being yourselves men of greater wisdom, and more highly favoured of God); that blindness in part is happened to Israel, (i. e. as to the greatest part of them, a remnant only being now brought into the faith, ver. 5. 7. ix. 27.) till the (time of the) fulness (or more complete conversion) of the gentiles be come in.

26. And so [16] all (the nations of) Israel shall be saved: (i. e. called and put into a state of salvation, 1 Tim. i. 9.) as it is written, (Isa. lix. 20.) There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob.

27. And (again he by Isaiah saith) this is my covenant to them, (Isa. lix. 21.) when I shall take away their sins, (xxvii. 9.)

28. As concerning the gospel (preached to them first, and upon their rejection of it, to the gentiles, Acts xiii. 45. 47.) they are (now) enemies (to it, and by opposing it to God and Christ) for your sakes, (being prejudiced against it, because you are received to the blessings of it, and that without circumcision, or being joined to them, Acts xvii. 13. xxii. 21, 22. 1 Thess. ii. 16.) but [17] as touching the election (of that nation to be a holy people to himself), they are (thus) beloved for the fathers' sake.

29. For (though they have rendered themselves unworthy of his favour, yet) the [18] gifts and calling of God are without repentance.

30. (Nor will their present infidelity and disobedience be any obstacle to this conversion;) for as ye (gentiles) in times past have not believed God (Gr. were disobedient to God), yet have now obtained mercy through their unbelief (God having received you gentiles to be his people, because of their infidelity):

31. Even so have these also now not believed (Gr. not obeyed), that [19] through your mercy they also may obtain mercy.

32. For [20] God hath concluded all (both Jew and gentile) in unbelief, that (at last) he might have mercy upon all.

33. O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! (by which he is able to convert all things to the honour and glory of his name, and make his severest judgments to conclude at last in mercy!) How unsearchable are his judgments (to any human understanding), and his ways past finding out (by any wit of man)!

34. For who hath (through his own wisdom, without revelation,) known the mind of the Lord? Or who hath been his counsellor (in thus ordering matters relating to Jew or gentile)?

35. Or who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed to him again? (i. e. who hath laid any obligations on him to reward him? Surely no man.)

36. For of him (as the donor), and through him (as the director and providential orderer), and to him (as the end), are all things: to whom be glory for ever. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XI.

[1] Ver. 2. Ὃν προέγνω, Whom he foreknew.] Concerning the people of Israel, Moses speaks thus; Thou art a holy people to the Lord thy God; the Lord thy God προείλετο, hath chosen thee to be a special people to himself above (or, before) all people that are upon the face of the earth, Deut. vii. 6. x. 15. Now to be chosen, and to be known of God, are the same thing in Scripture, and therefore the phrase is elsewhere varied thus; You only have I known before all the families of the earth, Amos iii. 2. ὑμᾶς ἔγνων ἐκ πασῶν τῶν φυλῶν τῆς γῆς, Numb. xvi. 5. To-morrow, יידע, and the Lord will know who are his, and who is holy, even him whom he hath chosen, which by the LXX. is thus translated, καὶ ἔγνω ὁ Θεὸς τοὺς ὄντας αὐτοῦ, καὶ τοὺς ἁγίους ——οὓς ἐξελέξατο αὐτῷ, the Lord knoweth who are his, and the holy ones whom he hath chosen to himself; and, ver. 7. The man whom the Lord doth choose, he shall be holy. And those words of Hosea, Judah yet ruleth with the Lord, and is faithful with his saints, xi. 12. are by the Septuagint thus rendered, καὶ Ἰούδα νῦν ἔγνω αὐτοὺς ὁ Θεὸς, καὶ ὁ λάος ἅγιος κληθήσεται Θεοῦ, and as for Judah, now God hath known them, and he shall be called the holy people of God: so that the people whom he foreknew, may be here only a periphrasis of the Jewish nation, which God hath chosen before all other nations of the world, and therefore would not utterly cast off, because his gifts and callings are without repentance: (ver. 29.) or it may signify those of them who believed in Christ, and so were such as he had purposed to save, or, the election according to grace, (ver. 5. 7.) which sense this phrase bears, Rom. viii. 29. 1 Pet. i. 1, 2.

[2] Ἐντυγχάνει τῷ Θεῷ κατὰ τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ, He maketh intercession to God against Israel.] Ἐντυγχάνειν ὑπερ, is to intercede, or be an advocate for a person, and he that doth so is called συνήγορος, and this is the office of our blessed Lord, who ever lives to make intercession for us; but ἐντυγχάνειν κατὰ τίνος, is to accuse, or charge a person with a crime, and so to intercede against him. So 1 Macc. viii. 32. If the Jews complain against thee, ἐὰν ἐντύχωσι κατὰ σοῦ, we will do them justice. And when wicked men came to king Alexander to complain against Jonathan, the king commanded a proclamation to be made, τοῦ μήδενα ἐντυγχάνειν κατ' αὐτοῦ περὶ μηδενὸς πράγματος, that no man should complain against him about any matter, 1 Macc. x. 61. 63. And again, xi. 25. Some wicked men complained against him, ἐντύγχανον κατ' αὐτοῦ. So here, ἐντυγχάνειν κατὰ τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ, is to complain against Israel.

[3] Ver. 3. Τὰ θυσιαστήριά σου, Thy altars.] Not those which God approved of after the building of the temple, they being then obliged to offer all their sacrifices at the place which God had chosen to put his name there, Deut. xii. 5, 6. but those which had before been used by the patriarchs and prophets, for the service of God, as that of Samuel in Ramah and in Mizpeh, 1 Sam. vii. 9. ix. 13. in Gilgal, xi. 16. at Beth-lehem, xvi. 2. 4. and the altar of the Lord at Carmel, 1 Kings xviii. 30. on which the pious people of the ten tribes sacrificed when they were not permitted to go up to Jerusalem, that law, saith Kimchi, then ceasing as to them.

[4] Ver. 4. Τῇ Βάαλ, To Baal.] That is, to the image of Baal: so Hos. ii. 8. I gave her the gold and the silver which she prepared for Baal, Gr. αὐτὴ δὲ ἀργυρᾶ καὶ χρυσᾶ ἐποίησε τῇ Βάαλ, But she prepared this gold and silver for the image of Baal; she made idols of them, saith the Targum; so Tobit i. 5. ἔθυον τῇ Βάαλ τῇ δαμάλει, they sacrificed to the heifer Baal; Jer. ii. 28. according to the number of their streets in Jerusalem, ἔθυον τῇ Βάαλ, have they sacrificed to the image of Baal; for sure they had not as many Baalims as they had streets, and therefore, where the Septuagint reads τῇ Βάαλ, there the Chaldee adds, idols, or images: I will blot out the names of Baal, τὰ ὀνόματα τῆς Βάαλ; Reliquias idolorum Baal, Targum. (See Hosea xiii. 1.) This I prefer before that notion of the learned Selden, that Baal was ἀρρενοθήλυς, male and female.

[5] Ver. 5. The election of grace.] See note on ver. 28. That many who belonged to this election fell away, is evident from the Epistle to the Hebrews; (see the note on 2 Thess. ii. 3.) and whereas Dr. Mills contends that the words following, viz. εἰ δὲ ἐξ ἔργων, οὐκ ἔτι ἐστὶ χάρις, ἐπεὶ τὸ ἔργον οὐκ ἔτι ἐστὶν ἔργον, are suppositious, as being not found in the Vulgar, in Hilary the deacon, and in the Latin Origen: that they are genuine, is proved from the Syriac and Arabic versions, from Theodoret, Photius, Œcumenius, and Theophylact, who all retain them: and from these words of Chrysostom, who, tom. v. ed. Morell. p. 718. explains and confirms them thus: He that contends he is to be saved by the works of the law, hath no title to grace, ὅπερ οὖν καὶ Παῦλος αἰνιττόμενος ἔλεγεν εἰ χάριτι, &c. εἰ δὲ ἐξ ἔργων, οὐκ ἔτι ἐστὶ χάρις, ἐπεὶ τὸ ἔργον οὐκ ἔτι ἐστὶν ἔργον. See Examen Millii in locum.

[6] Ver. 8. Ἔδωκεν αὐτοῖς ὁ Θεὸς, God hath given them a spirit of slumber, &c.] The Hebrew נתן, and the Greek δίδωμι, is often used to signify a permission of that which we can hinder, as Gen. xxxi. 7. οὐκ ἔδωκεν αὐτῷ ὁ Θεὸς κακοποιῆσαί με, God (saith Jacob) permitted not Laban to hurt me; Deut. xviii. 14. καί σοι οὐκ οὕτως ἔδωκε Κύριος ὁ Θεός σου, The Lord thy God hath not suffered thee to do so. (See also Judg. xv. 1. Acts ii. 27. xiii. 35.) So again 1 Kings xxii. 22. 23. The Lord hath put, ἔδωκεν ὁ Θεὸς, a lying spirit in the mouth of all thy prophets; i. e. he hath permitted him freely to go forth, and to deceive them, ver. 22. Esth. ix. 13. If it please the king, δοθήτω Ἰουδαίοις, let it be granted to the Jews to do so to-morrow also. Of him that sat upon the red horse it is said, that ἐδόθη αὐτῷ, it was given him to take peace from the earth, Rev. vi. 4. ix. 3. 5. of the beast it is said, ἐδόθη αὐτῷ, there was given to him a mouth to speak great things, and blasphemies; and it was given him to make war with the saints, and overcome them. (See Hos. xiii. 11. Joel ii. 17. 19. Rev. vi. 8. ix. 14, 15. See the note on i. 24. 26.) And in this sense God is here said to have given the Jews a spirit of slumber, by permitting them to lie under those prejudices against the true Messiah, which their traditions concerning him, and the doctrine and authority of the scribes and pharisees had wrought within them; as also by delivering the things belonging to Christ's kingdom obscurely to them, and in parables, because they would not receive them when more plainly taught; (Matt. xiii. 13.) and by taking the kingdom of God from them, and giving it to a nation that would bring forth the fruits of it, because they contradicted and blasphemed the doctrine of that kingdom, and so caused the apostles to turn from them to the gentiles; (Matt. xxiii. 43. Acts xiii. 45, 46.) and by refusing to walk in the light whilst they enjoyed it, they made it just that darkness should thus come upon them, or that they should have eyes, and see not, ears, and hear not; which is a mode of speaking used frequently in the Old Testament, and in Philo the Jew, and others, to represent men who had contracted such prejudices against God's word, and such vicious habits, as made them not to discern or give ear to the voice of God, or reason, calling them to reformation and amendment. So God speaks by his prophet Isaiah, Hear, ye deaf; and look, ye blind, seeing many things: but thou observest not; opening the ears, but he heareth not, Isa. xlii. 18. 20. And by the prophet Jeremiah, Hear now this, O foolish people, and without understanding; which have eyes, and see not, which have ears, and hear not, Jer. v. 21. By the prophet Ezekiel, saying, They have eyes to see, and see not: ears to hear, and hear not; for they are a rebellious house, Ezek. xii. 2. So Christ speaks to his own disciples, having eyes, do ye not see? Mark viii. 18. So Philo often saith of men addicted to their sensual pleasures, and pursuing them against the dictates of their minds, that * ὁρῶντες οὐχ ὁρῶσι, καὶ ἀκούοντες οὐκ ἀκούουσι, seeing they see not, and hearing they hear not; this he saith, περὶ τῶν ἡδονῆς κεκορημένων, of persons satiated with pleasure, and drunk with the love of wine. This, saith he, happens, † ἐν τοῖς κόροις, ἐν ταῖς μέθαις, when we indulge to gluttony, or drunkenness; and ‡ ἐν ταῖς καθ' ὕπνον φαντασίαις, in the phantasms of our dreams. Thus of those heathens who worshipped the works of their own hands, Justin Martyr§ saith, that ὀφθαλμοὺς ἔχοντες οὐχ ἑώρων, οὐδὲ καρδίαν ἔχοντες συνίεσαν, having eyes, they saw not, and having hearts, they did not understand.

[7] Ver. 9. Γενηθήτω, &c. Their table shall be, and their eyes shall be.] They who are skilled in the Hebrew tongue, know that these words are as capable of the future, as the imperative mood and tense: they are rendered in the future by Arias Montanus: and the Seventy interpreters sometimes render them in the imperative, as Psal. cix. 6. 15. and sometimes in the future, as ver. 17. As he loved cursing, so let it come upon him, καὶ ἥξει αὐτῷ, as he delighted not in blessing, so let it be far from him, καὶ μακρυνθήσεται ἀπ' αὐτοῦ; and, ver. 8. Let them curse, but bless thou, καταράσονται αὐτοὶ, καὶ σὺ εὐλογήσεις, they shall curse, but thou shalt bless.

[8] Ver. 10. Τὸν νῶτον αὐτῶν, &c. Ever bow down their backs.] That is, let them be in slavery and bondage; the contrary, going upright, signifying their freedom from Egyptian thraldom, by taking that yoke of bondage from them, which made them stoop under it. So Lev. xxvi. 13. I have broken the bands of your yoke, and made you to go upright. So the Midrash Tillim upon these words of the Psalmist, Psal. cxlvi. 8. The Lord raiseth them that are bowed down, saith, These are the Israelites carried captive from their own land; for since they were banished from Jerusalem, they have not been able to stand upright, but have bowed down their backs before their enemies, who go over them: and therefore in their second benediction, before their reading of the morning schema, they pray thus, Bring us in peace from the four wings of the earth, "et duc nos staturâ erectâ in terram nostram," and lead us standing upright into our own land. Having thus answered the first question, he proceeds to inquire, whether they of them who thus stumbled, have fallen so as that they shall never be recovered.

such an event, Gal. iv. 4. Eph. i. 10. πλήρωμα τῆς γῆς, the whole contents of the earth, 1 Cor. x. 26. 28. and πλήρωμα τῆς θεότητος is the full perfection of the Deity, Colos. ii. 9. and πλήρωμα τοῦ Χριστοῦ, is the perfection, or the fulness of grace and wisdom, with which he fills his members, Eph. iv. 13. and that ἐκ τοῦ πληρώματος αὐτοῦ, from that fulness of the Spirit which is in him, John i. 16. and πλήρωμα Θεοῦ, is the same fulness derived from God, Eph. iii. 19.: so here, πλήρωμα τῶν αὐτῶν is the time when the gentiles should more fully come in, and God would shew mercy to them all, ver. 25. 32. and πλήρωμα τῶν Ἰουδαίων, the fulness of the Jews, is the coming-in of all Israel, ver. 26. And so St. Paul himself all along interprets it, styling it, ver. 15. πρόσληψις, the receiving them into grace and favour by God, the engraffing them who were broken off, as the unbelieving Jews were, into their own olive-tree, ver. 23. 24. the turning away iniquity from Jacob, ver. 26.

[10] Ver. 14. Εἴ πως παραζηλώσω, If by any means I may provoke them, &c.] This seems to be said in allusion to those words of God, Deut. xxxii. 21. They have moved me to jealousy with that which is not God, κἀγὼ παραζηλώσω, and I will move them to jealousy with those that are not a people, ver. 12. that seeing them who before were not the people of God, now chosen to be his people, and invested with all the privileges which formally belonged to them, viz. being of his church, among whom he dwells, and to whom he gives his Spirit, his new law, his prophets, apostles, and evangelists, they might be induced to believe, and so might still share in all those blessings. Hence also it appears that the apostle did not think they were so blinded or given up to a spirit of slumber, but that they might still be saved.

[11] Ver. 16. Εἰ δὲ ἡ ἀπαρχὴ, The first-fruits of them were holy.] It is generally known that the word holy, when applied to persons, families, churches, and nations, signifies their being called, consecrated, and separated from the world, unto God's service; in which sense, in the Old Testament, it is frequently applied to the priests, Numb. xvi. 5. Psal. cvi. 16. to the Levites, Numb. iii. 13. viii. 14—17. to the whole Jewish nation, Exod. xxii. 31. xix. 6. Deut. vii. 6. xiv. 2. 21. xxviii. 9. Isa. lxii. 12. Dan. viii. 24. xii. 7. Hence then the argument runs thus: If God so loved Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, as to engage his word that he would be their God, and the God of their seed for ever, Gen. xvii. 7. and by thus entering into covenant with them, hallowed to himself all their posterity, even as the first-fruits of their dough, made an offering, hallowed the whole lump, Numb. xv. 20. then will he, in his good time, be so mindful of them, as to bring them again into his covenant, so that they shall be his people, and he will be their God; for as touching the election, they are still beloved for the fathers' sake. If this argument runs only upon the supposition that they do believe, it saith that only which is as true of all gentiles; it therefore seems to be an argument that they will be received into favour, and therefore will believe, ver. 21.

[12] Ver. 21. Μή πως οὐδέ σου φείσηται, Lest he also spare not thee.] Φόβου, Fear, is to be repeated from the former verse. So 1 Thess. iii. 5. I sent to know your faith, μή πως ἐπείρασεν ὑμᾶς, subaud. φοβούμενος, fearing lest the tempter should have tempted you.

[13] Ver. 23. Δυνατὸς γάρ ἐστιν ὁ Θεὸς, For God is able, &c.] From which power we may reasonably conclude his will to do so, for so the apostle argues, xiv. 4. He shall be holden up, for God is able to make him stand; 2 Cor. vi. 8. He that soweth liberally, shall reap liberally; for God is able to make all grace abound towards you. (See note on xiv. 4.)

[14] Ver. 24.] Note, that there should be a fulness of the fallen Jews, and a receiving them again into favour, whom God had now cast off, the apostle plainly doth suppose, ver. 12. 15. and now he sets himself to the proof of it, by an argument, à minori ad majus, viz. If they, who had no such relation to Abraham, and the blessings promised to him, as the Jews had, were yet partakers of the blessings promised to Abraham, the root of that nation, how much more shall this favour, in God's due time, be granted to them who are children of the stock of Abraham?

[15] Ver. 25. Τὸ μυστήριον τοῦτο, This mystery, &c.] See the confirmation of this exposition in the appendix to this Epistle.

[16] Ver. 26.] Hence the second argument for a general conversion of the Jews runs thus: If that part of the Jews to which blindness hath happened, shall be delivered from that heavy judgment, if there shall come to them out of Zion a Deliverer to turn away their iniquity; if God will accomplish his covenant hereafter with them, by taking away their sins, then they who are thus blinded shall be converted to the Christian faith. Where note,

First, That this promise is made to that part of the Jews to which blindness had happened, ver. 15. and so the promise of salvation to this Israel, cannot be interpreted of all the true children of Abraham, Jews and gentiles both.

Secondly, It saith, that God will take away their sins, and turn away ungodliness from Jacob. Now if this signifies that God will send a Deliverer out of Zion, to procure the pardon of this people's sins, since pardon only can be given to them through faith in Christ, this Deliverer must be that Jesus, who saves his people from their sins; if it imports that God would take away the punishment of their iniquity, that being the blindness, and spiritual slumber which was then, and is still upon them; the removal of it must signify their conversion, this blindness being only then to be taken away, when they shall turn to the Lord, 2 Cor. iii. 14—16.

[17] Ver. 28. Κατὰ δὲ τὴν ἐκλογὴν, As touching the election.] Here is in this chapter mention of a double election, viz. ἐκλογὴ χάριτος, election of grace, ver. 5. the gospel-election of persons and nations to be his church and people, which being purely on the account of that faith, which is the gift of God, without consideration of any other worthiness that we had, or any works that we had done, is styled the election of grace; and thus a remnant only of the Jews were chosen, ver. 7. for many of them were called, by the preaching of the gospel to the faith, it being preached to them first, Acts xiii. 45. but few of them were chosen to be members of the church of Christ, because few of them believed. And, secondly, there is an election, διὰ τοὺς πατέρας, to be God's people for their fathers' sake, in which sense the whole nation of the Jews are styled the elect: as in these words, Because he loved thy fathers, viz. Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, Deut. iv. 37. καὶ ἐξελέξατο τὸ σπέρμα αὐτῶν μετ' αὐτοὺς ὑμᾶς, therefore he chose you their seed after them, and brought you out of Egypt by his mighty power; where it is evident that all that were brought out of Egypt, were the elect, or the chosen seed. So Deut. vii. 6—8. The Lord did not set his love upon you, nor choose you, οὐ προείλετο ὑμᾶς, he did not fore-elect you, because you were more in number than any people; but because the Lord loved you, and because that he would keep the oath which he had sworn to your fathers, hath he brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you out of the house of bondage. Where again it is evident, (1.) that their being chosen to be God's peculiar people before other nations, is their election: and (2.) that all who were brought out of Egypt were thus beloved, and thus chosen. And again, x. 14, 15. The Lord had a delight in thy fathers to love them, καὶ ἐξελέξατο τὸ σπέρμα αὐτῶν μετ' αὐτοὺς ὑμᾶς, therefore he elected you their seed after them above all people; circumcise therefore the foreskin of your hearts, and be no more stiffnecked. Where again evident it is, that the whole seed of Abraham by Isaac, even the stiffnecked of them, were the beloved, and the elect of God; it being therefore not upon account of their righteousness, Deut. ix. 5. but for the love he had, and the promises he made to their fathers, that he first loved and chose them for his people; and his love to these forefathers being still the same, and his promise to them being this, that he would be for ever a God to them, and their seed after them, Gen. xvii. 7. he must have that kind affection and regard to them, which will engage him to choose them again for his peculiar people, notwithstanding their present blindness; and all Israel being thus elected for the fathers' sake, this calling must belong to them all.

[18] Ver. 29. Τὰ χαρίσματα, For the gifts, &c.] The particle for shews that these words relate to what was said in the former verse, viz. they are beloved for their fathers' sake, to whom God gave this διαθήκη αἰώνιος, everlasting covenant to be the God of their seed after them, Gen. xvii. 7. Now this covenant made with the fathers being absolute, and the calling of their seed to be his peculiar people being the effect of it, God will not repent for ever of his kindness to them; hence he engageth to save them with an everlasting salvation, Isa. xlv. 17. with everlasting kindness to have mercy on them, liv. 8. lvi. 5. lx. 19, 20. lxi. 7. and saith, I have loved thee with an everlasting love, Jer. xxxi. 3. If then God will not repent for ever of his covenant made with their forefathers, to be the God of their seed after them for ever, or that he chose Jacob for himself, and Israel for his heritage, Psal. cxxxv. 4. then will he certainly restore them to that privilege and happy state; but God will not thus repent, for the gifts and callings of God are without repentance.

[19] Ver. 31. Τῷ ὑμετέρῳ ἐλέει, To your mercy.] i. e. Which unbelief hath happened not to your rejection, as it did to them, but to your mercy, that they also may obtain mercy together with you, and you with them, the fulness of the gentiles coming in with their conversion.

This argument for calling the Jews runs thus: If God hath called the gentiles to his grace after a long idolatry and infidelity, though they were not before ever admitted to those privileges the Jews enjoyed, nor had God promised to be their God for ever, much more will he recall his chosen people from their infidelity.

[20] Ver. 32.] Esthius's note upon these three verses is this, That the apostle doth without controversy in these words speak of Israel according to the flesh, and therefore in the preceding words must be supposed to speak of the same Israel; so that hence the tradition of the church concerning the calling of the Jews, towards the end of the world, is established.

(See the appendix to this chapter, concerning the calling of the Jews to the Christian faith, at the end of this Epistle).

CHAP. XII.

1. I BESEECH you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of (that) God, (of whom, and through whom are all things, and to whose glory they are all designed, xi. 36. or by the mercies of God, mentioned xi. 30—32.) that ye [1] present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service.

2. And [2] be not conformed to (the evil customs of) this (heathen) world: but be ye transformed (into other men) [3] by the renewing of your mind (and judgment of things), that ye may prove (Gr. discern and approve, see note on 1 Cor. xi. 28. Gal. vi. 4.) what is [4] that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God; (i. e. that will which under the gospel requires only what is substantially good, and therefore always acceptable to him, and perfectly instructs us in our whole Christian duty.

3. Which will of God you will the better discern by your humility and diligence in the exercise of your spiritual gifts;) for I say, through the grace (of apostleship, see note on i. 5.) given to me, to every man that is among you (thus gifted), not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think, (on the account of those ministerial gifts conferred upon him, not for his own sake, but for the benefit of others, 1 Cor. iv. 6, 7. xii. 7. as did the scribes and pharisees, and doctors of the law, on the account of their wisdom and knowledge of it, Rom. viii. 18. 23.) but to think soberly (of himself), according as God hath dealt to every man the [5] measure of faith.

4. For as we have many members in one body (natural); and (Gr. but) all (the) members (of it) have not the same office, (but some are more feeble, some more vigorous, some employed in more, some in less honourable services, 1 Cor. xii. from ver. 12. to 27.)

5. So we (Christians), being many, are one body in Christ (our head), and every one (of us are different) members one of another.

6. Having then gifts differing according to the grace (or favour of God) that is given to us, whether (it be) prophecy, let us prophesy according to [6] the proportion of faith;

7. Or (if it be) [7] ministry (that of an evangelist), let us wait on our ministry; or he that teacheth, on teaching;

8. Or he that exhorteth, (by a spiritual afflatus, 1 Cor. xiv. 3. 31.) on exhortation: he that [8] giveth (or distributes to the church's stock), let him do it with simplicity (or liberality, see the note on 2 Cor. viii. 2.) he that ruleth (or presides over that stock), with diligence; he that sheweth mercy (to the sick, impotent, strangers, orphans), with cheerfulness.

9. Let love be without dissimulation (not in word only, but in deed, and in truth, 1 John iii. 18.) Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good.

10. Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love (not bearing only such a kindness to one another as common humanity calls for, but such as the relation of Christian brethren and the bonds of consanguinity require); in honour preferring one another (through humility acting as if you conceived others more worthy of honour than yourselves, see note on Phil. ii. 3. and being well contented that they should be placed in a more honourable post);

11. Not slothful in business (in the concerns of God, and of one another); fervent in spirit, (ardently and zealously engaging in the service of God, and of one another, as knowing you are then) [9] serving the Lord.

12. Rejoicing in hope (of the glory of God, Rom. v. 2. or of eternal life, Tit. i. 3.) patient in tribulation (for the cause of Christ); continuing instant in prayer (that you may stand firm in the faith, and have a seasonable deliverance from your troubles);

13. [10] Distributing to the necessities of the (persecuted) saints; given to (or pursuing) hospitality (towards them when they come to you).

14. Bless (i. e. wish well to, and pray for) them which persecute you: bless, and curse not (whatever provocations you may have to do so).

15. Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep, (as the relation of members of the same body doth require, 1 Cor. xii. 26.)

16. Be of the same mind one towards another (being concerned for the same good to them which you desire for yourselves). Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate (to the meanest concerns of the meanest Christians). Be not wise in your own conceits, (so as to think you need not the assistance of Divine wisdom, or the advice and counsel of your Christian brethren, Prov. iii. 5. 7. Luke xii. 53. or so as to neglect the concerns of your Christian brethren, Prov. iii. 5. 7. Luke xii. 53.)

17. Recompense to no man evil for evil. Provide things [11] honest (Gr. honourable) in the sight of all men.

18. If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men.

19. Dearly beloved, [12] avenge not yourselves (upon your enemies, ver. 20.) but rather [13] give place unto (the) wrath (of God against them): for it is written, (Deut. xxxii. 35.) Vengeance is mine; I will repay it, saith the Lord.

20. Therefore, if thine enemy hunger, (rather) feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt [14] heap coals of fire (the Divine vengeance) on his head.

21. Be not [15] overcome of evil (let it not prevail upon thee to be impatient under or avenge it), but overcome evil with good.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XII.

[1] Ver. 1. ΠΑΡΑΣΤΗΣΑΙ τὰ σώματα ὑμῶν θυσίαν ζῶσαν, To present your bodies a living sacrifice.] By sin reigning in our mortal bodies, and by obeying the motions of it in our inward actions, we being said to present τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν, the members of our bodies instruments of unrighteousness to sin, (vi. 12, 13.) the apostle here doth properly exhort us παραστῆσαι, to present the same bodies now a living sacrifice, in opposition to the legal sacrifices, which were first slain, and then offered up to God upon the altar, viz. by being now dead unto sin, but alive unto God, through Jesus Christ our Lord: a holy sacrifice, as being consecrated to the service of God, and having our fruit unto holiness, as the servants of God still have: (Rom. vi. 22.) and as the sacrifices offered to God were to be free from any spot and blemish, and so holy; so are our bodies made a holy sacrifice, when they are kept in sanctification and honour, and free from all filthiness of the flesh, and so a sacrifice acceptable and well-pleasing to that God, who desired not the legal sacrifices, nor delighted in burnt-offerings: (Psal. li. 16. Heb. x. 8.) and this, saith he, is not as the sacrifices of the law, ἐκ τῶν ἀλόγων, of dead and unreasonable beasts, which was bodily service, or that in which the body chiefly was employed; but it is λογικὴ λατρεία, a sacrifice of our reason, devoting ourselves, who are rational creatures, to his services, and also is highly suitable to our reason.

[2] Ver. 2. Καὶ μὴ συσχηματίζεσθε τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ, And be not conformed to this world.] It is the observation of Grotius on the former verse, that the apostle having shewed before, that justification could not be obtained by the law, comes now to shew how the gospel perfected and spiritualized the law, as to the ritual and the judicial parts of it, and engaged us more exactly to fulfil the moral parts of it; beginning first with the sacrifices, which by the Jews were esteemed one great and chief part of their ritual worship. And then he may here proceed to their separations from men of other nations, or, as the pharisees had improved it, even from the vulgar sort, thinking it unlawful to eat, or converse with, or even touch the people of the earth, as they styled them, and making their holiness to consist chiefly in such niceties and separations; shewing that we do most effectually comply with all that God designed by any precepts of this nature, when we keep ourselves unspotted from the world, or free from any conformity unto the sinful customs of it, as Christianity especially requires, Christ giving up himself for our sins, that he might deliver us from this present evil world; (Gal. i. 4.) or, he instructs them how to change their former heathen into a Christian conversation, declaring that whereas formerly they walked κατὰ τὸν αἰῶνα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου, according to the course of this world, Eph. ii. 2. and according to the will of the gentiles, 1 Pet. iv. 3. they should no longer live the rest of their time to the lusts of men, but to the will of God, ver. 2.

[3] Τῇ ἀνακαινώσει τοῦ νοὸς ὑμῶν, By the renewal of your mind.] The whole new creature doth consist in the renewal of the mind, the will, the affections, and actions of men; (1 Thess. v. 23.) but because this renewal doth begin with the change of mind, discerning and approving what is acceptable to the Lord, and upon that follows the choice of what is so by the will, and the inclination of the affections to what the mind doth thus approve of, and the regulation of our outward actions is according to what we thus approve, choose, and affect; this renewal of the mind is put for the renovation of the whole man, and we are said to be renewed in the spirit of our mind, and to put on the new man, Eph. iv. 23, 24. which is renewed εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν, in knowledge according to the image of him that created him, Colos. iii. 10.

[4] Τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ τὸ ἀγαθὸν καὶ εὐάρεστον καὶ τέλειον, The good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God.] The ritual precepts of the law had no internal goodness in them antecedent to the command; and so God himself says of them, I gave them statutes which were not good, Ezek. xx.

25. and in opposition to their costly sacrifices, and burnt-offerings, saith, He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good, and what the Lord requireth of thee, even to do justice, and love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God, Micah vi. 8. They were not pleasing to him in themselves, Psal. li. 14. Heb. x. 8. but he declareth his delight in justice and mercy, Jer. xxii. 16. and the design of the apostle in the whole Epistle to the Hebrews, is to prove the imperfection of the sacrifices, and of the old covenant, and therefore the necessity of a better sacrifice, and a new and better covenant; and so in opposition to these ritual injunctions, he may here style the gospel-institution, the good, and acceptable, and the perfect will of God.

[5] Ver. 3. Μέτρον πίστεως, The measure of faith.] Here the Greek scholiasts agree in the exposition of these words, that by the measure of faith, we are to understand the measure of gifts proceeding from that miraculous faith which was required to the exercise of them, τοῦ γὰρ χαρίσματος αἴτιον ἡ πίστις, for faith is the cause of these gifts, saith Chrysostom; and when they found this faith raised in them, they exercised them; they being given, saith Theodoret, according to the measure of their faith. This faith enabled them to remove mountains, 1 Cor. xiii. 2. to heal the sick, James v. 15. to cast out devils, Matt. xvii. 20. and hence St. Peter exhorts them who had received these gifts, to minister them ὡς ἐκ ἰσχύος ἧς χορηγεῖ ὁ Θεὸς, as from the ability and strength of faith which God giveth, 1 Pet. iv. 11. and this is elsewhere styled the measure of the gift of Christ, Eph. iv. 7. This they did, saith Origen,* διὰ τὴν πίστιν ταύτην, by this faith, καθὼς εἷς ἕκαστος αὐτῶν τὴν δωρεὰν εἴληφε παρ' αὐτοῦ, as every one received the gift from Christ, saith Irenæus.† This phrase occurs twice in Maimonides,‡ where he saith, God declared that he would try the Jews with false prophets, to know "mensuram fidei vestræ in veritate legis," the measure of their faith in the law; "et ad mensuram fidei vestræ in lucem producendum, num firmiter, et constanter persistatis in ea:" whence we learn, that the strength and firmness of faith is the measure of it.

[6] Ver. 6. Κατὰ τὴν ἀναλογίαν τῆς πίστεως, According to the proportion of faith.] That is, say some, according to those principles of faith and good life, which are known among you; but surely they who prophesied by a spiritual gift, could not do otherwise; for no man can by the Holy Spirit be excited to contradict the doctrine or precepts of Christianity: others, let him do it according to the measure of the miraculous faith imparted to him, enabling him now to reveal mysteries, now to foretell things, now to disclose the secrets of men, according as God, upon his faith, shall grant ability to him to do it. And therefore Chrysostom,§ Œcumenius, and Theophylact, say, that though this was a gift, yet it flowed in upon a man according as by his faith he made himself a vessel fit to receive the gift of prophecy. And this seemeth to be the better exposition, not only because it hath the suffrage of the ancient expositors, but because it answers to the measure of faith mentioned ver. 3. for ἀναλογία, saith Origen here, is not ratio, as the Latins render it, but "mensura competens," a competent measure, and κατ' ἀναλογίαν in Hesychius, is κατὰ τὸ μέτρον, according to the measure; and it agrees best with the phrase of St. Peter, to exercise these gifts according to the ability that God hath given them, and to be content with that, though others may enjoy it in higher measures.

[7] Ver. 7. Διακονίᾳ, Ministry.] This charisma being reckoned here before that of teaching or exhortation, I think it best to interpret it of the office of the evangelist, ranked before that of the pastor and teacher, Eph. iv. 11. and immediately after that of the prophets, as here, rather than to interpret it of the office of a deacon; all these four offices, of apostle, prophet, evangelist, and teacher, being designed, saith the apostle there, ver. 12. εἰς ἔργον διακονίας, for the work of the ministry. Hence St. Paul writes thus to Timothy, Do the work of an evangelist, fulfil τὴν διακονίαν σου, thy ministry, 2 Tim. iv. 5. and of Mark, the evangelist, he saith, Bring Mark with thee, for he is profitable to me, εἰς διακονίαν, to the ministry; i. e. to be sent to preach the gospel, or visit the churches where I cannot come; (ver. 11.) and in this sense saith St. Peter, εἴ τις διακονεῖ, if any man ministers, let him do it as of the ability that God giveth, not as of the charity of others, which was the proper office of the deacon. Of the teachers, see note on 1 Cor. xii. 28. Eph. iv. 4. Acts vi. 4. xiii. 1. xx. 24. 2 Cor. vi. 3. Colos. iv. 17.

[8] Ver. 8. Ὁ μεταδιδοὺς, He that giveth, and he that sheweth mercy.] These two expressions seem to denote the same persons who are called helps, 1 Cor. xii. 28. (See the note there.) He that ruleth may be the same with those who are there styled governments, and elsewhere προεστῶτες, or προϊστάμενοι, 1 Thess. v. 12. 1 Tim. iii. 4. v. 17. or, ὁ μεταδιδοὺς here may signify him that is moved by an afflatus to give to the church's stock; for so the word is used in Job, saying, ὀρφανῷ μετέδωκα, I have given of my meat to the orphan, xxxi. 17. Prov. xi. 26. A blessing shall be on the head τοῦ μεταδιδόντος, of him that giveth. So Luke iii. 11. He that hath two coats, μεταδότω, let him give to him that hath none; Eph. iv. 28. Let him work with his hands, that he may have μεταδιδόναι, to give to him that needs; and then the προεστὼς will be the person set over this stock to manage it aright; for as the Jews had in every city "viros notos et fideles," men of note for their fidelity, who were constituted to be collectors and distributors of their alms to the poor; so say the apostles, Look you out ἄνδρας μαρτυρουμένους, seven men of honest report, οὓς καταστήσωμεν, whom we will appoint over this business, Acts vi. 3. and these are styled προστάται and πρόξενοι, and by Eustathius are said προϊστασθαι τῶν ξένων, to preside over strangers. (See Beza in Rom. xvi. 2.) So Origen on the place, qui tribuit, et præest indigentibus; and Theophylact, προϊστασθαι δὲ ἐστὶ τὸ βοηθεῖν, καὶ διὰ ῥημάτων, καὶ διὰ τοῦ σώματος, to preside is to help both with words and deeds. (See the note on 1 Cor. xii. 28.) This in after-ages was made the work of the bishop, but in the first ages of the church was the work of the deacon.

[9] Ver. 11. Τῷ Κυρίῳ δουλεύοντες, Serving the Lord.] So the Syriac, Arabic, Ethiopic versions, and all the Greek scholiasts read. The other reading, τῷ καιρῷ δουλεύοντες, serving the time, mentioned by Ambrose, St. Jerome, and Ruffinus, seems to have had its rise from the abbreviation of the word in MSS. they reading κῷ, though it hath a good sense thus, Tempori servite, rebus præsentibus vos accommodantes; et si quid inciderit incommodorum, vel declinantes

* Cont. Celsum, lib. iii. p. 124. † Lib. ii. cap. 57.

[10] Ver. 13. Ταῖς χρείαις τῶν ἁγίων κοινωνοῦντες.] So read all the Greek scholia, St. Basil, tom. ii. p. 474. the Vulgar, and all the other ancient versions. And wherein Dr. Mills contends the true reading is ταῖς μνείαις τῶν ἁγίων; see this abundantly confuted in the examination of him upon this place.

[11] Ver. 17. Τὰ καλὰ, Honourable.] That there be actions, which, according to the voice of nature, and antecedently to any positive commands, are good and evil, honourable and praiseworthy, or matter of dishonour, or dispraise, in the general opinion of the world; and that these actions are τὰ καλὰ, honourable before men, as well as in the sight of God, (2 Cor. viii. 21.) this Epistle doth abundantly demonstrate; for the apostle in the first chapter having mentioned all the unrighteousness and impure actions of the heathen world, he adds, that the heathens knew from the consideration of the righteousness of God, that they who did such things were worthy of death, ver. 32. In the second chapter he informs us, that the gentiles having not a written law, and notwithstanding doing by nature the things contained in the moral law, shew the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience bearing witness to it, and their thoughts accusing, or else excusing one another, ver. 14, 15. that the exercise of righteousness and peace renders us not only acceptable to God, but also approved of men: (xiv. 17.) Accordingly the wise man saith, that, by observing mercy and truth, we shall προνοεῖν καλὰ, provide things honourable in the sight of God and men. (Prov. iii. 3, 4.)

[12] Ver. 19. Avenge not yourselves.] When Phocion was condemned to die by the Athenians, some of his friends desired him to leave some precept to his son, how he should demean himself: his command therefore to him was μηδὲν Ἀθηναίοις, μνησικακεῖν, not to remember the injuries the Athenians had done him; and for this, saith Ælian, every wise man must ὑπερθαυμάζειν τὸν ἄνδρα, very much admire the man. (Var. Hist. lib. xii. cap. 49.)

[13] Δότε τόπον τῇ ὀργῇ, Give place unto wrath.] i. e. Refer it to the punishment of God, συγχωρήσων αὐτῷ ἐπεξελθεῖν, τοῦτο γάρ ἐστι δότε τόπον τῇ ὀργῇ, suffer him to come in with his wrath upon those who are your enemies, and persecute you for his sake; for this is the import of these words, Give place unto wrath. So Chrysostom, Œcumenius, Theophylact. And this exposition is confirmed by the ensuing reason, For vengeance is mine, I will repay it; and from the occasion of those words, Deut. xxxii. 35. they being spoken for the comfort of God's people, whose cause he will plead, and for whose sakes he will repent of the evil he brought upon them, ver. 36.

[14] Ver. 20. Ἄνθρακας πυρὸς σωρεύσεις ἐπὶ τὴν κεφαλὴν αὐτοῦ, Thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head.] I know that many good interpreters conceive here is an allusion to artificers that melt lead, or other metals, by heaping coals of fire upon them, and so imagine that the import of these words is this, Thou shalt melt him down, or work him, by this obliging kindness, into good affection to thee: but I believe the sense is rather this, That if he persevere in his enmity, to his persecution of thee, and perverseness towards thee after these kind offices, the event, though not sought by thee, will be this, Thou by thy patience shalt engage the wrath of God to fall upon him, and to maintain thy cause against him; and so shalt be more certainly and happily delivered from his malice, than by avenging thyself thou wouldest be. So Prov. xx. 22. Say not thou, I will recompense evil, but wait on the Lord, and he shall save thee. For,

First, This suits best with the connexion of this with the foregoing verse by the particle, Therefore, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place to the wrath of God to fall upon your enemies, or persecutors, seeing he will repay vengeance to them. Therefore, let not their enmity hinder you from being kind to them; for that kindness, if it do not mollify them, will cause the wrath of God to wax hot against them.

Secondly, Because the words are plainly taken from Prov. xxv. 21. where they are exactly to be found; where, saith Grotius, "apparet de pœna Divina agi," it is evident the wise man speaks of the Divine vengeance. And this is the continual import of the phrase in the Old Testament, where only it occurs, and where it still signifies the wrath and indignation of the Lord. So Psal. exl. 9, 10. As for the head of them that compass me about, let the mischief of their own lips cover them, let ἄνθρακες πυρὸς coals of fire fall upon them. So Isa. xlvii. 14. They shall not deliver themselves from the power of the flame, ὅτι ἔχεις ἄνθρακας πυρὸς καθίσαι ἐπ' αὐτοὺς, for thou hast coals of fire to cause to sit upon them. So Ezek. x. 2. God commands the angel to fill his hand, ἀνθράκων πυρὸς, with coals of fire, and to scatter them over the city, to burn the city with them. And 4 Esdr. xvi. 52, 53. Let not the sinner say he hath not sinned, for God shall heap coals of fire upon his head, who saith before the Lord God, and his glory, he hath not sinned. (See the like saying in Stob. Serm. 82. p. 477.)

[15] Ver. 21. Μὴ νικῶ ὑπὸ τοῦ κακοῦ, Be not overcome of evil.] Vincitur a malo qui vult peccare in alium, quia ille peccavit in ipsum. Aquinas.

CHAP. XIII.

1. LET every soul be subject to the higher powers (or supreme authority placed over them). For there is no [1] power but of God (the fountain of it): the powers that be are ordained of God.

2. Whosoever therefore [2] resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God: and they that resist (the ordinance of God) [3] shall receive to themselves damnation (Gr. judgment).

3. For rulers (if they act by the authority of God, and according to law,) are not a terror to good works (i.e. such as the light of nature pronounceth good), but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power (that it will do thee any harm)? do (then) that which is good, and thou shalt (rather) have praise of the same.

4. For he is (by his institution) the minister of God to thee for good (if thou art a doer of what is good). But if thou doest that which is evil, (thou hast cause to) be afraid; for he beareth not the sword (of justice) in vain: for he is the minister of God, (a revenger) to execute wrath (Gr. for wrath) on him that doeth evil.

5. Wherefore ye must needs (Gr. ye ought to) be subject (to this minister of God), not only for wrath, but also for conscience' sake.

6. For, [4] for this cause pay ye tribute also (to them): for (that) they are God's ministers, attending continually on this very thing (the executing judgment between man and man, to preserve every man in his right, and to punish the wrong doer).

7. [5] Render therefore to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom (i. e. all legal impositions); fear to whom fear; honour to whom honour (is due).

8. Owe no man any thing (which justice obligeth you to render him), but (be especially concerned) to love one [6] another (which love, if ye observe its precepts, will preserve you from doing any evil or injustice to your brother): for he that (truly) loveth another hath fulfilled the law (relating to him).

9. For this (that which the law forbiddeth in these words), Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment (of the law relating to thy neighbour), it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, (i. e. with the like love thou bearest to thyself, though not with love equal to it. See note on Matt. xxii. 39, 40.

10. He that is acted by) love [7] worketh no ill to his neighbour (which is the thing required in these negative precepts): therefore [8] love is the fulfilling of the law.

11. And that (Gr. this exhortation to obey authority, and walk in fervent charity towards all men, I recommend to you now, is very seasonable), knowing the time, that now it is high time (for all) to [9] awake out of sleep: for now is our [10] salvation (or, the salvation of the gentiles) nearer than when we (first) believed.

12. [11] The night (of heathen ignorance, Acts xvii. 31.) is far spent, [12] the day (of grace and salvation to them) is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armour of light.

13. Let us walk [13] honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness, not in [14] chambering and wantonness, (1 Pet. iv. 3.) not in strife and envying (things inconsistent with that Christian charity which is the glory of our profession).

14. But [15] put you on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIII.

[1] Ver. 1. ΟΥ' γάρ ἐστιν ἐξουσία εἰ μὴ ἀπὸ Θεοῦ, There is no power but of God.] That this may be rightly understood, let it be noted, (1.) That God doth not now, as in the case of Saul and David, by himself appoint and nominate the person who shall sway the sceptre in any nation of the world. The Roman emperors, the powers then in being when St. Paul writ this Epistle, had no such appointment, but were elected by the Roman armies, or chosen and confirmed by the senate; whence it appears, that an immediate appointment or designation of the person by God, cannot be necessary to render any prince God's ordinance.

(2.) By virtue of God's general appointment or ordinance, whether in the fifth commandment, or by a law of nature, requiring that all nations should have some government placed over them, no individual person can claim a right to be the higher power in any nation, more than others; nor are the people by it tied to yield obedience to this man more rather than to that. This therefore cannot be sufficient to make a man the individual person who is God's ordinance, in reference to such a nation. It remains, therefore,

(3.) That this authority be conveyed to this or that individual person or family, by compact, consent, or choice of the persons governed, that such a person or family shall have the supreme authority in such a nation. It therefore must be such a choice, consent, or contract, that renders any person the ordinance of God to such a nation: and this is what men call a legal right, or title to the crown; that is, a title by the laws and constitutions of the land.

But then, as mutual consent and contract make two persons man and wife, and yet matrimony is God's ordinance, and the power of man over the wife, and of the wife over the body of the husband, is from God; and as among us, one becomes a master, another a servant, by consent and covenant, and yet the master hath from God authority over his servant; so here, the individual person becomes the higher power, by the consent, the choice, or contract original, or actual, of the community; but yet the power he exercises in that station is of God, the fountain of all power; and he acts in that station, not as the minister of man, but of God.

[2] Ver. 2. Ὁ ἀντιτασσόμενος τῇ ἐξουσίᾳ, Whosoever resisteth the power.] Origen* having cited this and the preceding verse in his Dissertation against Celsus, confesses it is a place capable of much disquisition, by reason of such princes as govern cruelly and tyrannically, or who by reason of their power fall into effeminacy and carnal pleasures; referring us to his comment on that place for the farther explication of the words. Now there he saith,† This is not to be understood of persecuting powers, for in such cases that of the apostle takes place, We must obey God rather than man, but of those powers which are not a terror to good works, but to the evil: and it is a contradiction to the holiness, justice, and goodness, of God, to say that he hath given princes any power to oppress, rob, spoil, murder, or to do any injury to their subjects. They cannot purely upon this account, that they are the ordinance of God, have any power or authority to do evil to them; and so resisting, i. e. not being subject or obedient to them in any such thing, cannot be that resisting of God's ordinance to which the penalty is here annexed. Now this is the nonresistance of which the Greek commentators speak, even the nonperformance of subjection and obedience to their commands; and so the coherence seems to require, which saith, Let every soul be subject to the higher powers, for whosoever doth resist them (by not being subject) resisteth the ordinance of God: moreover, they only are the ordinances of God as they are the ministers of God, ver. 3, 4. now they are only the ministers of God for good, for the punishment of evil-doers, and for the praise of them that do well, ver. 4. and, thirdly, the subjection here required, to which the resistance is opposed, is a subjection due to them, not only for wrath,

* Πολλῆς ζητήσεως οὔσης κατὰ τὸν τόπον διὰ τοὺς ὠμοτέρους καὶ τυραννικώτερον ἄρξαντας, ὃ τοὺς ἐκ τοῦ ἀρχειν ἐπὶ θρύψιν, καὶ τρυφὴν ἐξοκείλοντας. Lib. viii. p. 421.

† "Non hic de illis potestatibus dicit quæ persecutiones inferunt fidei, ibi enim dicendum est, oportet Deo obtemperare magis quam hominibus, sed de istis potestatibus dicit, quæ non sunt timori boni operis, sed mali."

but for conscience' sake; but we cannot be obliged from conscience towards God, to be subject to them in those things which they have no authority from God to require, and for refusal of obedience to which we have God's authority.

They who interpret this of violent resistance by force of arms, speak the truth, but not the whole truth, that being not the only resistance here forbidden. For, as Dr. Falkner observes, ἀντιτάσσεσθαι, which we translate to resist, includes all practising out of a spirit of averseness, opposition, and contradiction, and whatsoever is contrary to ὑποτάσσεσθαι, the being subject, ver. 1. 5. (See Acts xiii. 8. xviii. 6.)

[3] Ἑαυτοῖς κρίμα λήψονται, Shall receive judgment to themselves.] i. e. They shall be sentenced, punished, and condemned for it by the magistrate, who is a terror to all evil works. So the word κρίμα signifies in these words, fearest not thou God, seeing thou art, ἐν αὐτῷ κρίματι, under the same sentence of condemnation by the magistrates? (Luke xxiii. 40. see note on v. 16.) And to this sense the connexion inclines, He shall receive sentence or punishment (from the rulers), for rulers are a terror to evil works; if therefore thou doest evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain, but is an avenger of wrath. Or, if he escape the hand of the magistrate, he shall be punished by that God, whose minister and ordinance the power he resisteth is; this follows from the obligation to be subject, not only out of wrath, but also from conscience towards God; but hence it does not follow that he must be damned, as that imports his being sentenced by God to eternal torments; it follows not from the word κρίμα, seeing that in its literal import signifies judgment, and no more, and sometimes is applied to human judgments; not from the obligation to be subject out of conscience, for then all men must be damned who neglect what they, in conscience towards God, stand bound to do, or do what they in conscience are obliged not to do, and then, woe be to them who through weakness or prejudice mistake their duty, or are ignorant of it, and therefore do neglect it, or transgress against it. Seeing then the resister of God's ordinance here, is not only the wilful rebel, but he who also is not subject and obedient to the commands of lawful authority, if the punishment of this sin, without exception, be eternal torments, all must be sentenced to them, who, out of ignorance and weakness, misunderstanding or prejudice, refuse in any lawful matter to yield obedience to the commands of their superiors, and so not only sins of wilfulness, but sins of ignorance and weakness, must be damnable.

Now according to this double notion of resistance, let it be noted,

First, That the resistance which consists in nonsubjection, or a refusal to yield actual obedience to the law of the superior, can only be allowed when the matter of the law is sinful, and so forbidden by the higher power, not when it is judged inexpedient or unprofitable only; for of this subjects are not to judge, but the lawgiver only, in that they lawfully may, and therefore, to avoid scandal and punishment, and from respect to him who is God's vicegerent, ought to obey, even as servants ought to obey their froward masters, (1 Pet. ii. 18.) and children their parents in all lawful things, (Col. iii. 20.) not disputing their authority in such matters, and this from conscience towards God.

Secondly, That no resistance of the higher powers by force of arms, or violence, can be allowed purely on the account of religion; for, if so, we could not be obliged to suffer wrong in such cases from conscience towards God, as the apostle saith we are, 1 Pet. ii. 19. or from the example of our Lord, ver. 21. 24. because the sufferings which God hath not obliged us to undergo, we cannot undergo from conscience towards God.

Thirdly, That no violent resistance, or no resistance of the higher powers by force, can be allowed to any who have not the power of the sword, and who are no avengers of wrath; for he that thus useth it, plainly takes the sword without authority from him to whom belongeth vengeance, and the power of life and death originally, and so without authority from him to whom this power of the sword originally belongs; and therefore, by our Saviour's aphorism, deserves to perish by it. (Matt. xxvi. 52.) Hence therefore it must follow,

1. That, in absolute governments, there is no power of lifting up the sword against the higher powers, because there is none can claim a share in the government, and so none can have any power of the sword, or right to be an avenger of evil, but the absolute power.

2. That in mixed governments, if any persons or states can claim the power, it must be either, (1.) upon compact that such persons shall have power to defend their laws: or, (2.) by virtue of that rule of Grotius,* that where a people hath conferred, not an absolute power, but a government according to the law, they must be supposed to have reserved to themselves a power necessary to preserve their laws. Or else by some act done by the superior which is a virtual abdication, or a renunciation of his government; in all which cases we can have no direction from the words of the apostle, who in general commands subjection to the higher powers, but declares not how far any man is so, or when he ceaseth to be so.

[4] Ver. 6. Διὰ τοῦτο γὰρ καὶ φόρους τελεῖτε, For this cause pay ye tribute also.] Hence it appears, that paying tribute to, is an acknowledgment of the right of government in him to whom we pay it, it being payable only on this account, because he is the minister of God, &c. and rendered to Cæsar because it is Cæsar's; i. e. because it doth belong to him as being Cæsar, or the power God hath set over us.

[5] Ver. 7. Ἀπόδοτε οὖν πᾶσι τὰς ὀφειλάς, Render to all their dues.] It is observable, that all that is said here, and Tit. iii. 1. 1 Pet. ii. 11, 12. seems plainly to relate to those false doctrines and opinions which had obtained among the Jews, and were destructive to all government, and which all Christians therefore were concerned to shew their freedom from, and opposition to, that so they might stop the mouths of those heathens who, looking upon Christians as the offspring of the Jews, were apt to charge them with the same principles of opposition to all heathen governments. Now their principles are these:

First, That being the people of God, God alone was to be owned as their Lord and Governor, in opposition to all earthly governors; at least in opposition to all governors which were not of their own nation, and by him immediately chosen, and ruling by his laws. See this fully proved, note on 1 Pet. ii. 16.

Secondly, As a consequent of this, they refused to pay tribute to Cæsar, crying out to Agrippa,* τὰ τέλη ἀναιρεῖν, to take away their tributes; looking upon them as a sign of subjection, which they ought not to submit to.

* "Si populus regem fecerit, non pleno jure, sed additis legibus, poterunt per eas leges contrarii actus irriti fieri aut omnino, aut ex parte, quis eatenus populus jus sibi servavit." De Jure Belli et Pacis, lib. xiv. sect. 2.

[6] Ver. 8. Τὸν ἕτερον, Another.] This being, ver. 10. τὸν πλησίον, his neighbour, shews that every man is the Christian's neighbour.

[7] Ver. 10. Κακὸν οὐκ ἐργάζεται, Worketh no evil.] Not that the law is exactly fulfilled by doing no evil to our neighbour, but because, in Christ's interpretation, the neglect of doing any good we are able, and have opportunity to do for him, is doing evil, Mark iii. 4. Here therefore is a meiosis, for charity is also kind, 1 Cor. xiii. 4. and engageth us by love to serve one another, Gal. v. 13, 14.

[8] Πλήρωμα οὖν νόμου ἡ ἀγάπη, Love therefore is the fulfilling of the law.] The apostle plainly here discourseth of the fulfilling of the law, as it relateth to our neighbour; but, as Esthius here notes, love is also the fulfilling of it, as it respects our duty to God; for he that loves his neighbour aright, loves him for God's sake, and in obedience to him, and so must principally love God: he also loves his neighbour as himself: now no man truly loves himself, who loves not Him above all things who is his chief good, and in loving whom thus his happiness consists. (See Matt. xxii. 37.)

[9] Ver. 11. Ἐξ ὕπνου ἐγερθῆναι, To awake out of sleep,] Is a phrase importing two things: (1.) The conversion of heathens to Christianity, as in that call to them mentioned Eph. iv. 14. wherefore he saith, Awake, thou that sleepest, arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee life, or shine upon thee. (2.) Our care to walk as becometh converts, with true Christian vigilance; as when the apostle saith to the Corinthians, Awake to righteousness, and sin not, 1 Cor. xv. 34. and to the Thessalonians thus, Let us not sleep, as do others, 1 Thess. v. 6, 7.

[10] Νῦν γὰρ ἐγγύτερον ἡμῶν ἡ σωτηρία, For now is our salvation nearer.] i. e. Say some, the deliverance of you Christians from the persecution of the Jews, stirring up the heathens against you. And I believe this passage hath a relation to the destruction of the Jewish nation, and the dissolution of that church, and of the worship confined to the temple; but chiefly upon this account, that then was the time when the salvation of the gentiles was to be more fully and gloriously accomplished, that being the time when God would shew forth all his wrath upon the unbelieving Jews, the crucifiers of our Lord, and their Messiah, and upon that account the vessels of his wrath. (Rom. ix. 22.) Hence the apostle exhorteth the believing Jews to constancy in the faith, forasmuch as they saw this day approaching: (Heb. x. 25.) and they being then, saving a little remnant, entirely rejected, and cut off from being any more the church of God, the gentiles were to be more fully called and owned as his church. The apostle had before discoursed of this matter, telling the Romans, that by their rejection and fall came, σωτηρία, salvation to the gentiles, xi. 11. that their fall would be the riches of the world, and the diminishing of them the riches of the gentiles, ver. 12. and, ver. 13. 15. I speak (saith he) to you gentiles, that their rejection will be the reconciling of the world. And of this salvation of the gentiles he saith, It is now nearer than when they first believed, the time of the utter rejection of the Jews drawing nigh; and therefore he advised them, especially now at this season, to give no obstruction to their conversion, and lay no obstacle in their way, by any disobedience against their superiors; but by their submission to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake, to put to silence all the objections of ignorant men against them, as disturbers of government; and that they would diligently avoid all works of darkness, that they who spoke of them as evil-doers, might, by their good works which they beheld, be induced to glorify God in the day of their visitation, (1 Pet. ii. 12. 14.) and to avoid all strife and envy, and to walk in love, as being that which rendered them so amiable in the eyes of the very heathen.

[11] Ver. 12. Ἡ νὺξ προέκοψεν, The night is far spent.] Νύκτα καλεῖ τὴν ἀγνοίας καιρὸν, he calls the night the time of the ignorance of the gentiles, saith Theodoret; and so the day must be the appearance of the gospel-light to them: and this is very suitable to the language of the holy Scripture, which speaketh of the gentiles thus, Ye were sometimes darkness, but now ye are light in the Lord, Eph. v. 8. and as men darkened, and blinded in their minds, Eph. iv. 18. and whose foolish hearts were darkened, Rom. i. 20. In the Old Testament they are still represented as men who sat in darkness, and in the shadow of death, Isa. ix. 1. and when Christ was sent to be a light to the gentiles, he is said to be sent to give light to them that sat in darkness, Luke i. 78, 79. And when St. Paul was sent to convert them, he is said to be sent to turn them from darkness to light, Acts xxvi. 18. And when St. Peter mentions their conversion, he tells them, God had called them from darkness into his marvellous light, 1 Pet. ii. 9.

[12] Ἡ δὲ ἡμέρα ἤγγικεν, And the day is at hand.] i. e. The day of salvation, 2 Cor. vi. 8. whence they to whom this salvation was come, by receiving this gospel-light, are said to be τῆς ἡμέρας, men of the day, and υἱοὶ τῆς ἡμέρας, children of the day, 1 Thess. v. 5. 8. and bid here to walk honestly as in the day.

[13] Ver. 13. Εὐσχημόνως, Honestly.] Decently, honourably, as becometh Christians, both towards our governors, having our conversation καλὴν, honourable, and decorous among the gentiles, that they, beholding our good works, may glorify God, that is, may own him whom the Christians worship as a good and holy God, and so be gained to the faith.

[14] Κοίταις καὶ ἀσελγείαις, In chambering and wantonness.] Κοῖται γὰρ γυναικῶν ἐπιθυμίαι, ἀσελγὴς ἐπ' ἀρσενικοῦ ἐπὶ δὲ θηλυκοῦ οὐκέτι. Hesych. Phavor.

[15] Ver. 14. Ἐνδύσασθε τὸν Χριστὸν, Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ.] i. e. Be conformable to his doctrine and holy life. So Chrysostom saith it was a common phrase, ὁ δεῖνα τὸν δεῖνα ἐνεδύσατο, such a one hath put on such a one; that is, he is an imitator of him: so, to put on the new man, is to walk as new men in newness of life and conversation, Eph. iv. 24. In holiness and righteousness after the image of him that hath created us anew, Colos. iii. 10.

CHAP. XIV.

1. (NOW to prevent these strifes and envyings,) him that is weak in the faith (and so not rightly grounded in it) receive ye (into Christian communion), but not to [1] doubtful disputations (not respecting the difference in their thoughts and reasonings from yours).

2. For (such difference of conceptions there is among the Jewish and the gentile Christians, that) one (i. e. the gentile Christian) believeth that he may eat all things: another, who is [2] weak, (Gr. but the weak, i. e. the Jewish convert, who is mistaken in, and doth not rightly understand his Christian liberty, abstaineth from all meats, as fearing they may pollute him, and so) eateth (only) [3] herbs.

3. Let not him that (suitably to this belief) eateth (all kinds of meat) despise him that (through weakness) eateth not (of any); and let not him that eateth not judge (and condemn) him that eateth (as unclean, for not observing these distinctions between meats clean and unclean by the law, or according to their traditions, by being offered to idols, or polluted by the unclean): for [4] God hath received him.

4. (Since therefore God hath received and owned him as his servant,) who art thou that [5] judgest another man's servant? to (God) his own master he standeth or falleth, (and by him only he is to be judged: he is at present weak indeed,) yet he [6] shall be holden up (σταθήσεται δὲ, but he shall be established): for God is [7] able to make him stand (στῆσαι αὐτὸν, to establish him).

5. One man esteemeth one (Jewish) day above another (i. e. more fit to do God service in, as being set apart by him for that end): another esteemeth every (such) day (alike fit for that purpose). Let every man be [8] fully persuaded in his own mind (or act with fulness of persuasion that he doeth what is lawful).

6. (And to engage you to maintain friendship and communion, without censuring and condemning one another for these matters, consider that) he that regardeth a day, regardeth it [9] to the Lord (or out of conscience towards him); and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it (i. e. because his Lord hath freed him from any obligation so to do). He that eateth (freely of all kinds of meats), eateth to the Lord (or to his glory), for he giveth God thanks (for his liberty thus to eat); and he that eateth not (so), to the Lord he eateth not, and giveth God thanks (even for those herbs he eateth, or that he hath provided for him other food).

7. For none of us (who are Christians) [10] liveth to himself, (but to him that died for him and rose again, 2 Cor. v. 16.) and no man (dying) dieth to himself (so as to be exempted from the power and jurisdiction of the Lord, whose servants we are).

8. For whether we live, we (Christians, if we act suitably to our duty and our obligations,) live unto the Lord (under his dominion, and under the government of his laws); and whether we die, we die (and, dying, we are still subject) unto the Lord: whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's.

9. For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he [11] might be Lord both of the dead and living. (Phil. ii. 10.)

10. But why (why then) dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at nought thy brother? (as if he were thy servant, and thou his master and his judge, seeing) we shall all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ (and from him, who is our Lord and Master, shall receive the sentence according to our works).

11. For it is written, (Isa. liv. 23.) As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God.

12. So then every one of us shall [12] give account of himself (and of his behaviour in these matters) to God (and it becomes not us to antedate his judgment).

13. Let us not therefore (take upon us to) judge one another any more: but (let us) judge this rather, that no man (ought to) [13] put a stumbling-block or an occasion to fall (from the faith) in his brother's way.

14. I know, and am persuaded by (the faith of) the Lord Jesus, that there is nothing unclean of itself: but (notwithstanding this) to him that [14] esteemeth any thing to be unclean, to him (as to the use of it) it is unclean.

15. But (though nothing be unclean of itself, yet) if thy brother be [15] grieved (i. e. scandalized) with thy meat, now walkest thou not charitably (in eating it to his offence and ruin; wherefore) destroy not him with thy meat, for whom Christ died.

16. Let not then (any thing be done by you, whereby) [16] your good (i. e. your Christian calling may) be evil-spoken of (Gr. blasphemed by them who are thus offended at this use of your Christian liberty).

17. For the kingdom of God is not (a thing which consists in) meat and drink; but (in) righteousness, and peace, and [17] joy in the Holy Ghost.

18. For he that in these things serveth Christ is acceptable to God, and approved of men.

19. Let us therefore follow after the things which make for (the) peace (of the church), and wherewith one may edify (and build up) another (in Christian love and union into one spiritual temple in the Lord).

20. For meat destroy not the work of God, (i. e. the Christian convert, 1 Cor. iii. 9. for though) all things indeed are pure, but (yet) it is evil for that man who eateth with offence (to do so).

21. It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor (to do) any (other) thing (from which thou mayest abstain) whereby thy [18] brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.

22. Hast thou (then) faith? (or, a persuasion that all meats are clean, and lawfully may be eaten?) have it to thyself before God (and satisfy thyself with that). [19] Happy is he that condemneth not himself (by acting uncharitably) in that thing which he alloweth.

23. And he that [20] doubteth (Gr. that puts a difference between meats) is damned if he eat (against his conscience, making that difference), because he eateth not of faith (but against his own persuasion): for [21] whatsoever is not of faith is sin.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIV.

[1] Ver. 1. ΜΗ᾽ εἰς διακρίσεις διαλογισμῶν, Not to doubtful disputations.] Not discriminating them by their inward thoughts, or reasonings, or rejecting any from communion upon that account, because they are weak in judgment; this sense the antithesis seems to require, and this sense will be confirmed from our note on ver. 23. and from a like passage of St. James, If you say to the man in gay clothing, Sit thou here honourably, and to the poor, Stand thou there, or sit down at my footstool, οὐ διεκρίθητε ἐν ἑαυ-τοῖς; do you not put a difference or a discrimination among yourselves, and art become judges, διαλογισμῶν πονηρῶν, of evil reasonings?

[2] Ver. 2. Ὁ δὲ ἀσθενῶν, But the weak.] I have observed, note on v. 6. 1 Cor. viii. 13. that the weak person is not the man of a doubting conscience, about a thing indifferent, but of an erroneous conscience, about a thing unlawful; this is plain, 1 Cor. viii. 7. from these words, Some with conscience of the idol to this hour eat it as a thing offered to an idol, and their conscience, being weak is defiled. Now to eat with the conscience of the idol, must be to eat with an erroneous conscience; and the thing is as plain here from ver. 14. which shews that the weak person esteemeth that unclean, which in itself was not so, and therefore acted from an erroneous conscience. I have observed there also, that ὁ ἀσθενὴς the weak, and ἀσθενεῖν to be weak, is to fall and stumble; and here it also signifieth one that stumbleth at some doctrine of Christianity, viz. at that of Christian liberty from Jewish observances, and who is scandalized at it, or made to fall by the use of that liberty by others, as is evident also from these words, ver. 21. It is good not to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor to do any other thing whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak. And ver. 13. Let us not therefore judge one another any more, but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling-block, or an occasion to fall (Gr. a scandal) in his brother's way.

[3] Λάχανα ἐσθίει, Eateth herbs.] Why herbs only? St. Chrysostom thinks it was διὰ τὸ μὴ γίνεσθαι δῆλον, that it might not appear whether they did it out of observance of the Jewish law, or only out of temperance; but this the apostle contradicts, by saying, not that he did this, being cautious, but he did it, being weak; and (ver. 14.) that he did it, esteeming that which he abstaineth from as unclean: and this is supposed as a thing evident throughout this chapter, that he abstained out of conscience from eating that which he esteemed unlawful. Others say, the word λάχανα, herbs, is taken synecdochically, for all sorts of meat allowed by the law; but then they ought in reason to shew us some example, or instance, where the word λάχανα is used in this sense. Let it be therefore noted, (1.) That the Essenes,* among the Jews, abstained from all flesh, using as victuals, with great delight, green herbs, and the fruit of trees: and this they did, as judging flesh, μὴ κατὰ φύσιν, not to be natural food, as there it follows. Philo saith,† they had τράπεζαν καθαρὰν τῶν ἐναίμων, a table pure from any thing that had blood in it, as being an incentive to concupiscence, and did eat only bread and salt, and hyssop. (See note on Colos. ii. 1.) Here then is one instance of them, who, being weak, did eat herbs. Moreover, Josephus saith of some priests of his acquaintance, sent bound to Rome from Judea, for some little crime, that ‡ they were good men, who in their afflictions forgot not their piety to God, nourishing themselves there with figs and nuts; yea, their superstition would not permit them to use the oil of heathens,§ as being not clean, and so such as they could not use the meats of gentiles, much less things offered to idols (as sometimes all the meat sold in the shambles was), without transgressing their own institutions and traditions. They therefore might eat herbs, either that they might avoid eating things sold in the shambles, which had been offered to idols, and which were therefore deemed κοινὰ common, or unclean, by the whole Jewish nation;* or to avoid the eating things which they esteemed polluted by the gentiles, as the Jewish priests mentioned by Josephus did. Moreover, the person who believeth all things, here, is so like the person who saith all things are lawful for me, 1 Cor. x. 23. where the apostle is speaking of things offered to idols, and the arguments, many of them, are so apparently in sense the same here, and 1 Cor. viii. and chap. x. that I can see no reason wholly to exclude this sense.

[4] Ver. 3. Ὁ Θεὸς γὰρ αὐτὸν προσελάβετο, For God hath received him.] This is St. Peter's argument, Acts xv. 9. God put no difference betwixt us Jews and them, purifying their hearts by faith, and so making them clean in his sight, though they were not circumcised, nor abstained from those meats we count unclean; he therefore received them without requiring this of them, and therefore so should we. Note here, that though God testified his reception of them by a visible and miraculous dispensation of the gift of tongues and prophecy; yet doth not the apostle say, God hath thus testified his reception of them, but only, he hath received them, i. e. into communion with him, viz. by giving them that Spirit which is the medium of our union to, and communion with him. Note also, that these words prove against Esthius, that the apostle here speaks not of the Jews, but of the gentiles, whom the Jews always deemed unclean, till they became proselytes to their law, and so obliged to observe these differences between meats; (see note on 1 Cor. vii. 14.) and therefore thought God would not receive them, whilst they did not observe this law. Moreover, when the apostle saith, ver. 2. Another believeth he may eat all things: is this other the Jew? then the strong Jew believed not only that he might eat swine's flesh, but even things offered to idols, which yet Esthius denies, ver. 1. the reason is, because both these must be included in quibuslibet cibis, all kinds of meat. But if it be the gentile, as is far more probable, then the apostle speaks here of the gentiles. Again, when the same apostle saith, another esteemeth every day alike, does he mean the Jews? did the Jew think the obligation to observe the sabbath was abolished? and if he meant the gentile, the apostle must here speak of them. But, saith Esthius, this doctrine could not extend to the gentile, to whom it was not lawful to comply with the legal observances, no, not for the sake of the infirm Jews. To this I answer, (1.) That the apostle says nothing in this whole chapter which doth oblige him so to do, but only not to judge, not to exclude from communion, those Jews that did so, and not to eat of those meats, when that would minister scandal to the Jews; and doth he not prescribe the same rule to the gentile, in the case of this scandal, in these words, But if any man say unto thee, This is offered to idols, eat not for his sake that sheweth it, and for conscience' sake? 1 Cor. x. 28. (2.) St. Paul, who had the same persuasion, that the law was not binding to him, as any gentile could have, yet to the Jew became as a Jew, that he might gain the Jew; why therefore might he not permit the strong gentile so to do, especially when this was not done out of respect to the law of Moses, but purely to the higher law of charity?

[5] Ver. 4. Σὺ τίς εἶ ὁ κρίνων ἀλλότριον οἰκέτην, Who art thou that judgest another man's servant?] Some interpret these words thus: We are not to judge another man's servant for doing what his own master alloweth or permitteth. But this is adding to the text; for the apostle doth not say, Who art thou that judgest another man's servant wrongfully, or condemnest in him what God allows? nay, he plainly supposeth him weak, and erroneous, and yet allows not any condemning and rejecting him, and excluding him (saith Dr. Hammond) out of the church, because God hath received him to be his servant.

[6] Σταθήσεται, He shall be established.] The apostle seems plainly here to speak of the weak Jew, who, through the error of his judgment, might be apt to stumble at the liberty which the strong Christian used, and which the Christian doctrine taught, that Christ had purchased for him also, as thinking both himself and others obliged to observe the law of Moses; and of him he saith, He is now indeed weak, but he shall be established, i. e. the time will come, when, by the destruction of the Jewish temple, to which their service was annexed, and in which alone a great part of their ceremonial worship was to be performed, they should be better satisfied of the cessation of their obligation to obey those precepts. Thus also he saith, Phil. iii. 15. As many as are τέλειοι fully instructed in the Christian liberty, let them mind this thing, viz. that it is only the circumcision of the Spirit that God now regardeth, (ver. 3.) and if any be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you, i. e. he will in his due time convince them of this truth. (See the note there.) Note also, that the effusion of the Spirit on the Jews, though circumcised and zealous for the observation of the law, was an argument that God also had received the unbelieving Jew to his favour, notwithstanding his weakness of judgment in these matters.

[7] Δυνατὸς γάρ ἐστιν ὁ Θεὸς στῆσαι αὐτὸν, For God is able to make him stand.] The apostle elsewhere argues from God's power to his will; so xi. 23. If they abide not in unbelief they shall be graffed in, for God is able to graff them in again; xvi. 25. To him that is able to confirm you; 2 Cor. ix. 6. 8. He that soweth liberally shall reap liberally; for God is able to make all grace abound towards you; Heb. ii. 18. He is able to succour them that are tempted. And this argument is always good, where we put no obstruction to his will, by rendering ourselves unworthy of his illuminations and his favours; he being otherwise always as ready as he is able to do what he sees needful, and truly conducing to our spiritual good.

[8] Ver. 5. Ἕκαστος ἐν τῷ ἰδίῳ νοὶ πληροφορείσθω, Let every one be fully persuaded in his own mind.] The Greek and Latin fathers give this sense of these words: In matters of this nature, touching the observation of a day, required by Moses, to the Lord, or not, the abstaining from meats, or not, Let every man abound in his own sense; i. e. let there be no condemning, no excluding any man on the account of such different sentiments: and this sense is very agreeable to the context, if the word πληροφορέω will bear it, of which, sure, the Greek interpreters must be sufficient judges; especially when Phavorinus saith, that πληροφόρησον is the same with πλήρωσον, fulfil, as in that of the apostle, τὴν διακονίαν σου πληροφόρησον, fulfil thy ministry, 2 Tim. iv. 5. and when this sense accords so well with the Hebrew proverb, איש ימלא את לבי, i. e. Let a man fulfil his heart, or do his pleasure.

They who render the words thus, as we do, Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind, as the word πληροφορία doth import, Colos. ii. 2. Heb. vi. 9. x. 22. 1 Thess. i. 5. either refer it to the preceding words thus, Let every man content himself with this, that he is fully persuaded he doth as he ought, and not search into the actions or judgments of other men about these matters, to condemn them for them; and this also is a sense against which I know no exception, and is made more probable from ver. 14. 21, 22. or else give the sense thus, Let a man have that persuasion of the lawfulness of what he doth, or abstains from, as will preserve him from sinning against conscience in it.

[9] Ver. 6. Κυρίῳ, To the Lord.] If the Lord here signifies the Lord Christ, as we may gather from ver. 7—9. it is evident from the reason following, for he giveth God thanks, that Christ is God: if it signify God the Father, yet the following verses, which apply it to Christ, make it plain that the argument is good from God the Father to our Lord Christ, and again from Christ, ver. 10. to God the Father, ver. 11. and consequently that they must equally be God. (See Examen Millii.)

Here we are told, that "no man can be said to do any thing to the Lord, or out of conscience towards God, in such cases wherein God has not interposed his authority; nor is any man in Scripture said to do any thing to the Lord, who cannot produce a plain law for what he does; but when both contending parties can produce a Divine authority for doing, or not doing the same thing (i. e. a law forbidding, and yet commanding the same thing), there is great reason for them to receive one another, because they both act out of reverence to the Divine authority." But this assertion may be evidently disproved,

First, From the example of St. Paul, who served God from his forefathers with a pure conscience, (2 Tim. i. 3.) and conversed before God in all good conscience, (Acts xiii. 1.) and was zealous for God, even when he persecuted Christians to the death, (Acts xxii. 3, 4.) and thought himself bound in conscience to do many things against the name of Jesus: (Acts xxvi. 9.) he therefore, if he may be believed, did these things out of conscience towards God, wherein God had not interposed his authority.

Secondly, This also is evident from the instances related in this verse; for a law cancelled and disannulled by God himself, hath no Divine authority; and he who only produceth such a law, is so far from producing a plain law for what he doth, that he produceth none at all, nor doth he act out of reverence to the Divine authority, but only with respect to his own erroneous conceptions of a Divine authority, when there is no such thing; nor can he produce any Divine authority for what he doth. Oh! but God had once interposed his authority in this case, and the Jews could not be satisfied that this authority was repealed. I answer; And so it is with all the unbelieving Jews unto this very day, who still observe the law of Moses, as far as under their present circumstances they can; as believing it was given them for an everlasting covenant, and so being unsatisfied that the authority of it is repealed; so far is it from being true, that this case hath no parallel: it is therefore evident, that in this sense it cannot be said, He that regardeth a day, enjoined by the law of Moses, regardeth it to the Lord; and he that eateth not, to the Lord he eateth not: for the apostle, in this very chapter, declareth himself persuaded by the faith of the Lord Jesus, that there was nothing unclean of itself, but only through the mistaken estimation of the Jew; (ver. 14.) and elsewhere, that the Jewish feasts, new moons, and sabbaths, were only shadows of good things to come, and that Christ was the body or the substance of them, (Colos. ii. 17.) and that there was made ἀθέτησις, a disannulling of the former command, by reason of the weakness and unprofitableness of it. (Heb. vii. 18.) It could be therefore nothing but prejudice and error, which made the Jew conceive he observed those days, and abstained from those meats, by a Divine authority, or that he could produce such an authority for so doing; he therefore must be said to do this to the Lord, and out of conscience towards God, because he, through the weakness and error of his judgment, thought the law of Moses obliged him still in conscience to the observance of these things. Now this is so far from being an unparalleled case, that it is the very case of the Romanists, using still the anointing of the sick; of the anabaptists, dipping them who are baptized; of the Greek church, refusing to eat things strangled, and blood, out of reverence to the apostolical injunction; of the dissenters, using prayer by the Spirit, or conceived prayer, out of reverence to the command, to pray in the Holy Ghost, and abstaining from communion with that church which observes no church-discipline, out of respect to the command, to purge the evil from among us; for all this is done by them out of a mistaken reverence to a Divine authority, which they conceive obliging to them. But then the Greek expositors here note, that this indulgence to men of an erroneous conscience, is not to be extended *to doctrines of faith, and matters of great moment, but only to cases of meat and fasting, and the like; and that it is especially to be granted to those who are infirm, and want indulgence.

[10] Ver. 7. Οὐδεὶς γὰρ ἡμῶν ἑαυτῷ ζῇ, For none of us liveth to himself.] This I conceive to be a reason, not of that which is contained in the sixth verse, but of what was delivered ver. 4. viz. that Christ was our Master, and we his servants; and therefore, by judging one another for these things, they took upon them to judge another man's servant. For (1.) in the next verse the apostle reassumes this matter, inquiring, Who art thou that judgest thy brother? and (2.) those words are a plain proof of this; for we are his servants to whom we live, and to whom we must give an account of our actions, and who is Lord both of the dead and the living: but they seem not so applicable to what is delivered, ver. 6. or to give a clear reason why he that abstains from swine's flesh, or that religiously observes a Jewish festival, doth this unto the Lord Christ, who came to take away, not to enforce, the obligation of those things.

[11] Ver. 9. Ἵνα κυριεύσῃ, That he might be Lord.] He by his resurrection being constituted Lord of all things, and having all power both in heaven and earth conferred upon him, must have power over all, we being all his servants, and so obliged not to live unto ourselves, but to him that died for us, and rose again. (2 Cor. v. 16.) He being also the rewarder of all those that serve him faithfully, he must be the Lord over the dead, so as to be able to bring them to life again, that they may receive the promised reward.

[12] Ver. 12. Περὶ ἑαυτοῦ λόγον δώσει τῷ Θεῷ, Shall give an account of himself to God.] Here Œcumenius notes, that it is said of God the Father, that he judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to his Son, (John v. 22.) and therefore, what the apostle here saith, viz. Every man shall confess to God, and bow the knee to him, (ver. 11.) and give an account of himself to God, (ver. 12.) is manifestly spoken of Christ as judge, ἄρα Θεὸς ὁ Χριστὸς, and therefore Christ is God: and this argument was used before the Nicene council by Novatian* and others. It is a wonder, that Socinus should deny that the apostle says, that every knee should bow to Christ, when, citing the same place, Phil. ii. 10, 11. the apostle so expressly declares, that at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess that Jesus is the Lord; and here, from this place, proves, that Christ is Lord both of the dead and the living, before whose tribunal they must all stand; and so must own his power and authority over them, which is the thing expressed metaphorically by bending of the knee, and the confession of the tongue: and if these words, which the prophet certainly spake of Jehovah, the God of the Jews, be well applied by the apostle to Christ, Christ must be also the person intended by them; for how could the apostle prove, that every knee must bow to Christ, from the words of God, saying, to me every knee shall bow, if Christ were, in his whole nature and essence, as different from that God, who spake those words of himself, as is a creature from his great Creator? †. Crellius here saith, St. Paul accommodates this passage to Christ, not that he is God, but because what is contained in it, shall by Christ, as subordinate to God, be exhibited and performed to God himself. But this subterfuge is confuted by the words of the apostle, who saith expressly, Phil. ii. 10, 11. that to the name of Jesus every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess that Jesus is the Lord; and so declares, these words are fulfilled by the honour exhibited not to God the Father, but to our Lord Jesus Christ: and seeing he is Lord over the dead, by the power by which he is able to subdue all things to himself, (Phil. iii. 21.) which doubtless is the power of God; and seeing, having raised all men, he will bring to light the hidden things which they have done, and manifest the counsels of their hearts, (1 Cor. iv. 5.) and so must be omniscient, and have the knowledge of the secrets of the heart; and it is the property of God alone to raise the dead by his power, and be the searcher of all hearts: these properties ascribed to Christ here, and elsewhere, must shew that he is truly God. (See the note on Phil. ii. 10.)

[13] Ver. 13. Μὴ τιθέναι πρόσκομμα, Not to put a stumbling-block.] i. e. Not to cause our brother to stumble at the Christian faith, and fall off from it, or to perish; for

* Ταῦτα οὖν περὶ τῶν νηστεύοντων, καὶ ἐσθίοντων ἰδικῶς ἐκληπτέον ἀλλὰ μὴ ἐπὶ ἄλλων τισῶν, οὐ γὰρ ἐπὶ πάντα ὁ κανὼν οὗτος διήκει, ἀλλ' ἰδικός ἐστιν ἐπὶ τοῦτο μόνοι, καὶ τῶν ὁμοίων περιλαμβανόμενος. Chrysost. Theod. Phot. Œcum. Theophylact.

* "Neque enim, si non et Deus esset, omne so nomine ejus genuflecteret." Novat. cap. 17. Vide epist. Polycarp. sect. 6.

† "Non quod Christus sit ipse Deus, sed quia quod in hoc testimonio continetur, per Christum, tanquam Deo subordinatum, ipsi Deo præstari et exhiberi debeat."

what is here, do not put a stumbling-block (by thy meat) in thy brother's way, is, ver. 15. destroy not him with thy meat for whom Christ died; and to eat, διὰ προσκόμματος, so as to put this stumbling-block before him, is for meat to destroy the work of God: and that in this sense the phrase is still used in the epistles, see note on 1 Cor. viii. 9. only let it be noted, that, where there is the same danger of destroying my brother, or dissolving the work of God, be it not by infidelity, but schism, or idolatry, or loose living, there is the same reason and obligation, not to put a stumbling-block, or an occasion to fall in our brother's way: for the reason why the apostle would not have us put this stumbling-block, which makes our brother fall from the faith, in his way, is this, because he would not have us be instrumental to his perishing, or to destroy him for whom Christ died. He therefore must equally forbid the doing any other thing which may be left undone without sin; and, being done, hath a like tendency to cause my weak brother to perish.

[14] Ver. 14. Τῷ λογιζομένῳ τι κοινὸν, To him that esteemeth any thing unclean, &c.] Here is a plain demonstration that the person here mentioned, as weak in faith, was also weak in understanding; i. e. one who understood not that meat to be free from uncleanness, which indeed was so; and that he was therefore weak in the faith, because he was so in his understanding; and so also it is plainly, 1 Cor. viii. 7. 10. It is therefore without ground affirmed, That these two sorts of weak persons must be used very differently; you must have a care of offending those who are weak in faith, but you must instruct and govern those who are weak in understanding.

Secondly, Here also is a plain evidence that the weak Jew had no just matter of offence given him by the gentiles eating, or that they did not take offence at the open violation of an express law of God by the gentiles eating; nor were they thus weak out of reverence to any express positive law, which all men agreed was given by God to them, at whose eating they were scandalized. To make this very clear, consider that the weakness of the Jews consisted in two things;

1. That they were not convinced that the law of Moses was out of date, and therefore durst not do any thing which was forbidden by that law, nor omit doing what the law commanded: and as to this, it is true, they were weak out of reverence to an express positive law, which, through the weakness of their understanding, they thought to be still binding, but the apostle here declares to be by Christ taken away.

2. That they could not endure to see others do what they themselves durst not do; i. e. they could not endure to see the gentile converts eat those meats which the law of Moses forbade the Jews to eat: now here, I say, they were not weak out of reverence to any express positive law; nor could they take offence at the open violation of any express law of God: for there was no such law given to the gentiles, to abstain from such meats as unclean, nor to the gentile converts to Christianity to observe any such law; they therefore by eating of these meats did violate no law given by God to them, and so the Jews could take no offence at their violation of any such law. And so much stronger is the case of eating things offered to idols, in which yet the apostle doth require this abstinence, with regard to the conscience of the weak Jew, (1 Cor. viii. 7. 10. x. 28, 29.) for the eating of things offered to idols (unless it were done in the idol-temple, the place appointed for his worship) was against no law of God, but only against the canons of the Jews; and so here the Jews could not be thus offended with that action, out of reverence to any law which God had made against it, but only from the Jewish canons, and interpretations of the law, touching abstaining from idolatry: the imagination of the Jew, that such meats bought in the shambles, or set before Christians at a friendly entertainment, were unlawful, was a vain imagination, and so they had only an imaginary law which occasioned their offence. Nor doth the apostolical canon concern any other meats offered to idols, than those which were eaten in the idol-temple: for sure the apostle, who was a part of that council, would not here freely allow what the whole college of apostles thought necessary even for the gentile converts to abstain from. This scandal therefore of the weak Jews was plainly "scandalum acceptum, non datum," received, but not given; for they had no reason at all to believe that the law of Moses was ever given to, or was in force among, the gentiles, and much less that their Jewish canons could be so.

[15] Ver. 15. Εἰ λυπεῖται, If thy brother be grieved.] The Greek imports such sorrow as puts a man in danger of his life, and therefore, in the metaphorical sense, such sorrow as endangered his Christian life. So Job xxxi. 39. If I have caused the owners thereof to lose their life: Εἰ ψυχὴν ἐλύπησα, If I have grieved his soul, say the LXX. התחפי, If I have caused his life to expire, or break out. (See Dr. Hammond on the place.)

Note also here, that the apostle plainly doth suppose that he, for whom Christ died, might perish. (See the note on 1 Cor. viii. 11.)

[16] Ver. 16. Ἀγαθὸν, Your good.] Τὴν πίστιν καλεῖ, He calleth our faith our good, say all the Greek commentators, and that very appositely; for the Jews blasphemed, and fell off from Christianity upon this account.

[17] Ver. 17. Καὶ χαρὰ ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, And joy in the Holy Ghost.] This cannot here signify delight to do good, or rejoicing in unanimity, for the phrase hath no such sense in Scripture, but always signifies an inward joy arising from the consolations of the Holy Ghost; as when the apostle saith, The Thessalonians received the word with much affection, and with joy in the Holy Ghost, 1 Thess. i. 6. and when St. Luke informs us, the churches had peace, and, walking in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied, Acts ix. 31.

[18] Ver. 21. Προσκόπτει, ἢ σκανδαλίζεται, ἢ ἀσθενεῖ, Stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.] I have shewed what it is to be made weak, note on ver. 1. what it is to stumble, note on ver. 13. To offend or scandalize a weak brother, is also to be an occasion of his ruin, by causing him to fall off from the faith, or to be prejudiced against it, as will appear from a brief view of the places where the phrase is used. So Matt. v. 29, 30. If thy right eye, or hand, σκανδαλίζει σε, offend thee, i. e. if it lead thee to hell and to perdition, cut it off. So xi. 6. Blessed is he who is not offended with me; i. e. who is not by the meanness of my present circumstances, or by the doctrine I am sent to preach, diverted from believing in me. So xiii. 21. When persecution comes, the stony ground εὐθὺς σκανδαλίζεται, is presently offended. So ver. 57. xv. 11. Mark vi. 3. Luke vii. 23. The Jews were scandalized at Christ; i. e. they were diverted from owning him as their Messiah, either by reason of his words, or the meanness of his original, and his appearance in the world. So were the multitude, and some of his disciples, scandalized at his discourse about eating his flesh, John xvi. 60, 61. So doth our Lord admonish his disciples not to be scandalized at the persecutions they should suffer, John xvi. 1. So he foretells that many, who had once believed in him, would be scandalized, when tribulations should abound, Matt. xxiv. 10. So he tells his own disciples, that they would be scandalized at his sufferings, Matt. xxvi. 31. And so both Peter and the rest of them were offended, or scandalized, their faith in him failing for a season, Luke xxiv. 21. So are we to understand those words, Woe to him that offends, or scandalizeth, one of these little ones, as appears from the reason following, ver. 14. It is not the will of your heavenly Father, that one of these little ones should perish. So I have shewed the word is used, 1 Cor. viii. 13. And so it may be well interpreted, when the apostle saith, 2 Cor. xi. 29. Who is offended, i. e. in danger to fall off from the Christian faith, and I burn not with a fervent zeal for his recovery? (See Examen Millii.)

[19] Ver. 22. Μακάριος ὁ μὴ κρίνων ἑαυτὸν, Happy is he that condemneth not himself, &c.] i. e. He is comparatively a happy man, that hath this firm persuasion of the lawfulness of eating any thing that is set before him, without asking any question about it for conscience' sake; for he createth no trouble, or condemnation to himself about these matters, nor is he troublesome to others by his niceness, or scrupulosity; whereas he that puts a difference betwixt meats, is not only troublesome to others with whom he doth converse, but condemns himself, as oft as he is tempted to eat of that which his conscience doth not allow of. (See Examen Millii.)

[20] Ver. 23. Ὁ διακρινόμενος, He that doubteth.] He that discerneth, and puts a difference between meats lawful and unlawful; this is the import of this word elsewhere. So Matt. xvi. 3. You know how διακρίνειν, to discern the face of the heavens; Acts x. 28. xi. 12. Go with them, μηδὲν διακρινόμενος; making no difference betwixt the gentiles and the Jews, the circumcised and the uncircumcised, not counting them unclean any longer, as St. Peter doth himself interpret it, ver. 28. And again, Acts xv. 9. οὐδὲν διέκρινε, He put no difference betwixt them and us, purifying their hearts by faith; 1 Cor. iv. 7. Τίς σε διακρίνει; Who put the difference betwixt thee and others? xi. 29. μὴ διακρίνων, Not discerning the Lord's body, or not discriminating it from other meats. So Jude 22. Of some have compassion, διακρινόμενοι, making a difference.

[21] Πᾶν δὲ ὁ οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως, Whatever is not of faith.] i. e. With a due persuasion of the lawfulness of the action; for that is the faith spoken of in the foregoing verse, when the apostle saith, Hast thou faith? have it to thyself; and that is the faith which stands opposed to doubting in this verse; and to this faith alone agree the preceding words, He that makes a discrimination between meats lawful and unlawful, and yet eats of them without discrimination, is condemned by his own conscience, if he eats, because he eateth not of faith, or with persuasion of the lawfulness of eating what he doth partake of.

CHAP. XV.

1. WE then that are strong (and rightly understand our Christian liberty and duty) ought to bear the infirmities of the weak (being careful to forbear the doing that which doth scandalize and hurt the souls of them who have not this knowledge), and not to (do things because they) please ourselves (when our weak brother is thus injured by them).

2. Let (therefore) every one (of us rather choose to) please his neighbour for his good to (the) [1] edification (of him in his Christian faith).

3. For even Christ (whose example we are called to imitate) pleased not himself (i. e. and indulged not so to his own pleasure, ease, and quiet, as to neglect the glory of God, or the good of others); but (willingly bore with the infirmities, and sustained the reproaches of men), [2] as it is written (of him, Psal. lxix. 9.) The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me, (i. e. he was afflicted for them, his zeal for the glory of God, and the good of souls, caused him patiently to endure the contradiction of sinners, Heb. xii. 2, 3. to bear the cross they laid, and despise the shame they cast upon him; which sure is more than to abstain from a little meat on the account of others.

4. Nor ought we to think ourselves unconcerned in what was said so long before by David of others,) for (this and) whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience (in bearing the like censures, reproaches, and infirmities of others) and (through the) comfort of the Scriptures (promising a reward to that patience) might have hope (of being rewarded for it).

5. Now the God of patience and consolation (who works this patience in us, and gives this consolation to us) grant you to be like-minded one towards another (i. e. to have a like concern for others as for yourselves) according to (the example of) Christ Jesus.

6. That ye (thus bearing with the infirmities of the weak, and thus receiving one another into communion) may [3] with one mind and one mouth (in your assemblies) glorify (and worship) God, even the [4] Father of our Lord Jesus Christ (or the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ).

7. Wherefore receive ye one another (Jew and gentile, into mutual love and fellowship, without contention about the things in which your judgments differ), as Christ also received us (both, reconciling both to God in one body on the cross, and to one another, Colos. i. 20. Eph. ii. 14.) to the glory of God (which will be much promoted by this union).

8. (As he hath received us, λέγω δὲ,) Now I say that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision (or the Jews) for (the establishment of) the truth of God, to confirm the promises made to the fathers (of that nation, and so he shewed his love and mercy towards them).

9. And (he was also the Saviour of the gentiles) that the gentiles (also) might glorify God for his mercy (to them); as it is written, (Psal. xviii. 49.) For this cause I [5] will confess to thee (i. e. praise and celebrate thee) among the gentiles (or, ἐν ἔθνεσι, with the gentiles), and (will) sing to thy name.

10. And again he (the same David) saith, (Psal. lxvii. 4.) Rejoice, ye gentiles, with his people.

11. And again, (Psal. cxvii. 1.) Praise the Lord, all ye gentiles; and laud him, all ye people.

12. And again [6] Esaias saith, (xi. 1. 10.) There shall be a root of Jesse, and he that shall rise to reign over the gentiles; in him shall the gentiles trust.

13. Now (may) the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace (the fruits of hope) in believing (those things), that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost, (witnessing to your spirits that ye are the sons of God, viii. 16, 17. and shedding abroad the sense of his love in your hearts, v. 5. and so sealing you up to the day of redemption, Eph. iv. 30.)

14. And (this, I pray, not doubting the assistance of this good Spirit with you, for) I myself also am persuaded of you, my brethren, that ye also are full of goodness, filled (by the Spirit) with all knowledge, able also to admonish one another.

15. Nevertheless, brethren, I have written the more boldly to you in some sort, (Gr. ἀπὸ μέρους, as to the gentile part of you, see note on 2 Cor. ii. 5.) as putting you in mind (of the favour of God to you gentiles, and your duty to him), because of the grace that is given to me of God, (i. e. because of the apostolical office by him committed to me: see note on Rom. i. 5.)

16. That I should be the minister of Jesus Christ to the gentiles, [7] ministering the gospel of God (i. e. exercising myself in the offices of the gospel, as the priest in the legal services), that the offering up of the gentiles (by me) might be acceptable, being sanctified (not with salt, or any other libamen, but) by (the effusion of) the Holy Ghost (upon them).

17. (And this I have so effectually performed by his grace, that) I have therefore whereof I may glory through (the assistance of) Jesus Christ in those things which pertain to (my service of) God (in this gospel.

18. And here I shall only mention what I myself, by the assistance of his grace, have done:) for [8] I will not dare to speak of any of those things which Christ hath not (but only of those which he hath) wrought by me, to make the gentiles obedient, by word and deed.

19. (Viz. That he hath assisted me in preaching the gospel) [9] through mighty (Gr. ἐν δυνάμει, with the power of) signs and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God; so that from Jerusalem, and round about unto Illyricum, I have fully preached the gospel of Christ.

20. Yea, so have I strived to preach the gospel, (as to do it), not where Christ was named (i. e. preached by others before me), lest I should build upon another man's foundation:

21. But (my preaching hath been) as it is written, (Isa. lii. 15.) To whom he was not spoken of, they shall see: and they that have not heard shall understand.

22. For which cause also (wherefore, by going from one region to another to preach the gospel,) I have been much hindered from coming to you.

23. But now having no more place-(s) in these parts (unacquainted with the gospel), and having a great desire these many years to come to you;

24. Whensoever I take my (intended) journey into Spain, [10] I will (by God's assistance) come to you: for I trust to see you in my journey, and to be brought on my way thitherward by you, if first I be somewhat filled (i. e. satisfied) with your company.

25. But now I go to Jerusalem to minister to (the necessities of) the saints (there).

26. For it hath pleased them of Macedonia and Achaia to make a certain contribution for the poor saints which are at Jerusalem.

27. It hath pleased them (I say), and (with good reason, seeing) their debtors they are. For if the gentiles have been made partakers of their spiritual things (receiving the gospel from Judea), their duty is also (in gratitude) to minister to them in carnal things.

28. When therefore I have performed this (charitable office), and have sealed (and secured) to them this fruit (of the gentiles' liberality), I will come by you into Spain.

29. And I am sure that, when I come to you, I shall come in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ, (or with a full impartment of spiritual gifts to you: see note on i. 11.)

30. Now I beseech you, brethren, for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, and for the love (which is the fruit) of the Spirit, that you [11] strive together with me in your prayers to God for me;

31. That I may be delivered from them that do not believe in Judea; and that my service which I have for (my brethren in) Jerusalem may be accepted of the saints (there, though it come from the churches of the gentiles);

32. That I may come to you with (the greater) joy by the will of God, and may with you be refreshed.

33. Now the God of peace be with you all. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XV.

[1] Ver. 2. ΠΡΟΣ οἰκοδομὴν, To edification.] Edification, in the Scriptures, sometimes signifies our increase in the knowledge of our Christian duty; in which sense it is seven times used, 1 Cor. xiv. 3, 4, 5. 12. 16. 26. 29. Eph. iv. 29. especially in that knowledge which tends to our advancement in piety; and therefore is called οἰκοδομὴ Θεοῦ, the edification of God, 1 Tim. i. 4. Sometimes our growth, or confirmation in the faith, Jude 20. Sometimes it refers to the whole body, which is called Θεοῦ οἰκοδομὴ, the building of God, 1 Cor. iii. 9. Eph. ii. 21. iv. 12. And then the body is edified, (1.) By the mutual love of its members; in which sense, saith the apostle, charity edifieth, 1 Cor. viii. 1. and this is οἰκοδομὴ ἐν ἀγάπῃ, edification in love, Eph. iv. 16. (2.) By the strict union of the members to, and their peaceable conversation with, one another; and this is styled, οἰκοδομὴ εἰς τὸν ἕνα, the edifying the church into one, 1 Thess. v. 11. And thus we are bid to follow after the things which make for peace, and τὰ τῆς οἰκοδομῆς τῆς εἰς ἀλλήλους, the edification of one of us unto another, xiv. 19. Now the edification, which consists in knowledge of our Christian duty, cannot be here understood; because our forbearance of that which scandalizes our brother, tends not to the information of his understanding, but, as it is an act of charity, it tends to the edification of the body in love; as it is the avoiding that which may scandalize the weak, and so induce him to stumble at, and fall off from Christianity, it tends to his edification in the faith; and as it is receiving the weak into fellowship and communion, notwithstanding his different conceptions from us, it tends to the edifying the body in union and peace.

[2] Ver. 3. Καθὼς γέγραπται, As it is written.] That this Psalm was undoubtedly spoken of the Messiah, we learn from ver. 22. applied to Christ, John xix. 28, 29. and from the former part of the verse cited here, viz. the zeal of thine house hath consumed me, applied to Christ, John ii. 17. And the Jews themselves say, that the things contained in this Psalm shall be accomplished in the days of David, or *in the days of the Messiah; and that which is said in the close of the Psalm, that God will save Zion, &c. that men may dwell therein, and have it in possession, shall be accomplished כימיח משיח in the days of the Messiah, the rabbins own.†

[3] Ver. 6. Ὁμοθυμαδὸν ἐν ἑνὶ στόματι, With one mind and mouth.] i. e. Not only praising God with the same words in your doxologies, but also joining in those praises with a mind full of Christian love, and sense of the Divine goodness.

[4] Τὸν Θεὸν καὶ πατέρα, &c. The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.] So 2 Cor. i. 3. xi. 31. Eph. i. 3. Colos. i. 3. 1 Pet. i. 3. Apoc. i. 6. 12. On which words the descant of the fathers‡ is to this effect, That the first person of the sacred Trinity is the God of Jesus Christ, in respect of his manhood, his Father in respect of his divinity, or as he is the Word. Or the words may be rendered thus: God who is, or the God that is, or God, to wit, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, for the Hebrew ו, and so the Greek καὶ, signifies sometimes id est; (Noldius partic. Hebr. p. 180, 181.) sometimes nempe, to wit, (p. 207.) and sometimes qui est, who is, (p. 315.).

[5] Ver. 9. Ἐξομολογήσομαι, I will confess unto thee.] The very next words, Great deliverances giveth he unto his king, and sheweth mercy to David למשיחו, his Messiah, or Anointed, are by the Jews§ interpreted of the Messiah, that is, Christ, and so the preceding words are doubtless fitly applied to him.

[6] Ver. 12. Ἡσαΐας λέγει, Esaias saith.] The Chaldee paraphrast interprets the first verse of the Messiah; and R. Chanini proves from the tenth verse, that King Messiah is not to come, but to give precepts to the nations of the world.‖

[7] Ver. 16. Ἱερουργοῦντα τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, Ministering the gospel.] Here is a plain allusion to the Jewish sacrifices, offered by the priest, and sanctified, or made acceptable and savoury by the libamen offered with it; for he compares himself in the preaching of the gospel to the priest, sacris operanti, conversant about his sacrifice, to prepare and fit it to be offered. The gentiles, dedicated by him to the service of God, are his sacrifice, or oblation; the Holy Spirit is the libamen poured on this sacrifice, by which they are sanctified, and rendered εὐπρόσδεκτα, acceptable to God. (See Numb. xv. 3. 10.)

[8] Ver. 18. Οὐ γὰρ τολμήσω λαλεῖν τι, For I will not dare to speak any thing of what Christ hath not wrought by me.] The critics here tell us, that they take off the force of the apostle's words, who render them I dare not, because that intimates the apostle had a mind to do so, but fear withheld him; they therefore would have the words rendered here, and Jude 9. οὐκ ἐτόλμησε, Michael, contending with the devil, durst not bring against him a railing accusation, "non sustineo," I suffer not myself, and he suffered not himself; but our translation may be justified, by a like expression of the same apostle in the same case, οὐ καὶ τολμῶμεν ἐγκρῖναι ἢ συγκρῖναι ἑαυτούς τισι, we dare not make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some who commend themselves, 2 Cor. x. 12. And this, doubtless, he saith, not to intimate that he and Timothy had a mind to do that themselves, which there he represents as folly in others; but only to intimate, that he did not think it fit and prudent so to do, and therefore durst not do it, and this sense the word well bears, 1 Cor. vi. 15. Jude 9.

[9] Ver. 19. Ἐν δυνάμει σημείων, ἐν δυνάμει πνεύματος,] i. e. Confirming the gospel by outward miracles, and by the inward distributions of the Holy Ghost. See the difference between them, note on Heb. ii. 4.

[10] Ver. 24. Ἐλεύσομαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς, I will come to you, &c.] Here is an evidence that St. Paul, in purposes of this nature, was not assisted by the Holy Ghost, they being purposes, which by the providence of God he was hindered from fulfilling. It is also evident from i. 10, 11. and from this, and from the twenty-eighth verse, that St. Paul writ this Epistle while he was at liberty, and before Christ had told him he must testify of him at Rome, Acts xxiii. 11. and before he was constrained to appeal to Cæsar, Acts xxv. 11. for in this Epistle he speaks still of his journey to Rome, and from thence to Spain, as of a voluntary undertaking; hoping then that the unbelieving Jews would not have given him that disturbance, when he went up to Jerusalem with his alms gathered for his nation, which afterward he found they did, ver. 27. (See Examen Millii.)

[11] Ver. 30. Ἐν ταῖς προσευχαῖς, In your prayers for me.] If Paul (saith Esthius) might desire the prayers of the Romans, why might not the Romans desire the prayers of Paul? I answer, they might desire his prayers, as he did theirs, by an epistle directed to him to pray for them: he adds, If they might desire his prayers whilst living, why not when dead and reigning with Christ? I answer, because then they could direct no epistle to him, or any other way acquaint him with their mind. Hence Elijah, being to be taken up into heaven, speaks to Elisha thus, Ask what I shall do for thee, before I am taken away from thee, 2 Kings ii. 9. Note also, that we say not that such desires of the saints departed are injurious to the intercession of Christ, but that they are idolatrous, implying that creatures are omniscient, omnipresent, and have the knowledge of the heart.

CHAP. XVI.

1. I COMMEND to you (r care) [1] Phebe our sister (in the faith), which is a servant of (or, one that ministers to) the church which is at Cenchrea (or the assembly of Christians at the haven of Corinth);

2. That you receive her in the Lord (i. e. for the Lord's sake, or as one that belongs to him, Matt. x. 42.) as becometh saints (i. e. Christians), and that ye assist her in whatsoever business she hath need of you: for she hath been a succourer of many, and [2] of myself also.

3. Greet [3] Priscilla and Aquila my helpers in (the work of) Christ Jesus;

4. Who have for my life laid down their necks (i. e. exposed themselves to the hazard of their own lives): to whom not only I give thanks (for my own preservation), but also all the churches of the gentiles (for preservation of their apostle).

5. Likewise greet the [4] church which is in their house (i. e. their Christian family). Salute my well-beloved Epenetus, who is the [5] first-fruits of Achaia unto Christ.

6. Salute Mary, who bestowed much labour on us.

7. Salute Andronicus and Junia [6] my kinsmen, and my fellow-prisoners, who are of [7] note among the apostles, who also were in Christ (that is, converted to the Christian faith) before me.

8. Greet Amplias my beloved in the Lord.

9. Salute Urbane, our helper in (the gospel of) Christ, and Stachys my beloved.

10. Salute Apelles [8] approved in Christ (by the sincerity of his faith, and the integrity of his life). Salute them that are (in Christ) of Aristobulus' household.

11. Salute Herodion my kinsman. Greet them that be of the household of Narcissus, [9] which are in the Lord.

12. Salute Tryphena, and Tryphosa, who labour in the Lord ('s service). Salute the beloved Persis, which laboured much in the Lord.

13. Salute Rufus [10] chosen of the Lord, and his mother and mine (she being one who shewed the affection of a mother to me also).

14. Salute Asyncritus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobas, Hermes, and the brethren which are with them.

15. Salute Philologus, and Julia, Nereus, and his sister, and Olympas, and [11] all the saints that are with them.

16. Salute one another with a [12] holy kiss. The churches of Christ salute you.

17. Now I beseech you, brethren, [13] mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which you have learned (of the apostles); and avoid them (or turn from them).

18. For [14] they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly; and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts [15] of the simple (i. e. of innocent well-meaning persons.

19. This exhortation I direct to you to preserve you in the way, in which hitherto you have walked to the credit of the gospel;) for (the fame of) your obedience (to it) is come abroad unto all men. I am glad therefore on your behalf (that ye are not yet infected with these Judaizers): but yet I would have you wise to (discern and hold fast) that which is good, and simple concerning evil (1 Cor. xiv. 20. i. e. as men who have no knowledge of it, and no skill to practise it).

20. And (to encourage you to continue such, know that) the God of peace (who is an enemy to these divisions, mentioned ver. 17.) shall bruise [16] Satan under your feet shortly. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. Amen.

21. Timotheus my work-fellow in the gospel, and Lucius, and Jason, and Sosipater, my kinsmen, salute you.

22. I Tertius, who wrote this Epistle, salute you in (the name of) the Lord.

23. Gaius mine host, and (the host) of the church, saluteth you. Erastus the chamberlain of the city saluteth you, and Quartus a brother.

24. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

25. Now unto him that is [17] of power to establish you [18] according to my gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret [19] since the world began (or from former ages),

26. But now is made manifest, and by the [20] Scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith;

27. (That is) to God [21] only (essentially and from himself) wise, be glory through Jesus Christ (the mediator of the new covenant, the author and finisher of our faith) for ever. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVI.

[1] Ver. 1. ΦΟΙΒΗΝ τὴν ἀδελφὴν ἡμῶν, Phebe our sister.] This Phebe was a deaconess, chosen to that office according to the apostolical prescription, 1 Tim. v. 10. So Origen and Chrysostom.

[2] Ver. 2. Καὶ αὐτοῦ ἐμοῦ, And of myself also.] Hence some infer that she was not a deaconess, but one that ministered to the apostles in the preaching, of her substance; but St. Paul had none such to minister to him, 1 Cor. ix. 5. 15. and this is made one condition of a deaconess, 1 Tim. v. 10. προστασίαν τὴν φιλοξενίαν καὶ κηδεμονίαν καλεῖ, he saith, she has been a succourer of many, by reason of her care of, and hospitality towards them. Theodoret.

[3] Ver. 3. Ἀσπάσασθε Πρίσκιλλαν, Greet Priscilla.] Priscilla seems to be named first here, and 2 Tim. iv. 19. as being first converted, say interpreters; but she is named last, Acts xviii. 2. 26. 1 Cor. xvi. 19. and therefore the gloss saith, She is here placed first, there being in Christ Jesus neither male nor female.

[4] Ver. 5. Καὶ τὴν κατ' οἶκον αὐτῶν ἐκκλησίαν, And the church in their house.] They were so zealous in the faith, say Chrysostom, Theodoret, and Theophylact, ὥστε τὸν οἶκον αὐτῶν πάντας πιστοὺς ποιῆσαι, τούτους καὶ ἐκκλησίαν ὠνόμασεν, that they converted their whole families to the Christian profession of it, for such families he calls the church. See this proved note on 1 Cor. xvi. 19.

[5] Ἀπαρχὴ τῆς Ἀχαΐας, The first-fruits of Achaia.] So Chrysostom, Theodoret, Œcumenius, Theophylact, the Syriac and Arabic versions; but the Alexandrian copy, the Ethiopic, the Vulgar, and almost all the Latin commentators read, τῆς Ἀσίας, the first-fruits of Asia Minor. So doth Origen on this place, and Hom. 11. on Numbers, F. 109. D. and G. and St. Jerome, on Ezek. xliii. F. 241. 1. And this reading is to be perferred before the other, because the same apostle saith expressly, that Stephanas was the first-fruits of Achaia, 1 Cor. xvi. 15. that is, he was first converted to the faith there, and Epenetus in Asia Minor, for so the phrase, the first-fruits, is used by St. Clemens.*

[6] Ver. 7. Τοὺς συγγενεῖς μου, My kinsmen.] So St. Paul styles all the Jews, Rom. ix. 3. καὶ συναιχμαλώτους, and fellow-prisoners. Before St. Paul went to Rome, he was ἐν φυλακαῖς περισσοτέρως, in prisons often, 2 Cor. xi. 23. Ἑπτάκις δέσμα φορέσας, bearing his chain seven times, saith Clemens,† and so might well have many fellow-prisoners.

[7] Ἐπισήμοι ἐν τοῖς ἀποστόλοις, Of note among the apostles.] That is, say some, men highly esteemed by them; men eminent, say Chrysostom and Theodoret, not only among the teachers, but the apostles of the churches. For they who are coworkers with the apostles in planting of the churches, are styled, ἀπόστολοι ἐκκλησιῶν, apostles of the churches, 2 Cor. viii. 23. Phil. ii. 25. In which sense Barnabas in Scripture is called the apostle, Acts xiv. 14. and Philip the deacon by the ancients; see Coteler. Not. in Constit. Apost. p. 262.

[8] Ver. 10. Δόκιμον, Approved;] By suffering patiently great tribulations, saith Origen: for tribulation worketh patience, and patience δοκιμὴν, experience of our sincere affection to him, for whose sake we suffer them, Rom. v. 4. But because all the Greek scholiasts say, it signifies τοὺς ἁπλουστέρους, τοὺς εὐήθεις, τοὺς βραδεῖς τὴν νόησιν, men, simple, foolish, and slow of understanding, and because the word often bears this sense in the book of Proverbs, as when the wise man says ἄκακος, the simple believeth every word, xiv. 15. when he calls upon the simple to hear wisdom, viii. 5. and promises to give subtilty to the simple, i. 4. and when he adds, xxi. 11. when a scorner is punished, the simple is made wise,—this exposition, being more pertinent to the words, may be preferred before the other.

[9] Ver. 11. Τοὺς ὄντας ἐν Κυρίῳ, Which are in the Lord.] From these two verses is confirmed our observation, That, when the whole family was converted, the apostle writes to the church in such a house; when not, the salvation is directed to as many as were in the Lord in that family, according to the descant of Origen* on the place.

[10] Ver. 13. Τὸν ἐκλεκτὸν ἐν Κυρίῳ, Chosen in the Lord.] One of great excellency in Christianity, as we say, a choice man: so the word ἐκλεκτὸς often signifies, Psal. lxxviii. 31. They smote down τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς; the chosen men that were of Israel: so ἐκλεκτὰ μνημεῖα are choice sepulchres, Gen. xxiii. 6. ἐκλεκτὰ τῶν δώρων, choice gifts, Deut. xii. 11. and ἄνδρες ἐκλεκτοὶ, choice men, Judg. xx. 11. (See Acts xv. 25, 26.)

[11] Ver. 15. Πάντας τοὺς ἁγίους, All the saints.] Note here, that saints and Christian brethren are all one.

[13] Ver. 16. Ἐν φιλήματι ἁγίῳ, With a holy kiss.] Of the kiss of charity, let it be observed,

(1.) That it was used at the end of the prayer before the celebration of the sacrament. So Justin Martyr† saith expressly, ἀλλήλους φιλήματι ἀσπαζόμεθα παυσάμενοι τῶν εὐχῶν, prayers being ended, we salute one another with a holy kiss, and then the bread and cup are brought to the president. (2.) That this seems to have been done by the men apart, and the women apart, as their ‡ separate places in the church, or synagogue, seemed to require. So the Apostolical Institutions say,§ these things being done, let the men apart, and the women apart, salute one another with a kiss in the Lord. Though Origen‖ seems to make this practice proper to the men only.

[13] Ver. 17. Σκοπεῖν τοὺς τὰς διχοστασίας, καὶ τὰ σκάνδαλα ποιοῦντας, Mark them that cause divisions and scandals.] By scandals the Greek scholiasts understand heresies, whereas, through the whole New Testament this word seems rather to import such actions as give occasion to others to stumble at, and fall off from the Christian faith. (See note on Matt. xviii. 6. Rom. xiv. 13.) Esthius here notes, (1.) That unwritten traditions may be hence proved, because the apostle saith, Mark them that cause offences contrary, not to the Scriptures, but to the doctrine they had received. But to make this argument of any force, he must prove, that the doctrine they had received was not contained in the Scriptures either then, or after-written. (2.) The apostle plainly speaks here of doctrines, received from the mouths of the apostles by those very men to whom he writ; and when he hath once proved the unwritten traditions of the church of Rome to be such, we shall be ready to receive them. (3.) He adds, That this place makes for a diligent inquisition after heretics, as if St. Paul was setting up an inquisition here: whereas the word σκοπεῖν doth only signify, to mark, or to look to them, as Luke xi. 35. 2 Cor. iv. 18. Gal. vi. 1. Phil. ii. 4. Nor doth he exhort the Romans to observe them, in order to the apprehending or punishing, but, as he himself notes, in order to the declining of them. (4.) He observes truly, that the apostle here insinuates, that even the vulgar people may from some general principles discern the true doctrine, and that which was delivered by the apostles, from that which was false, and was not so delivered; but this was only then to be done, by comparing that which was thus delivered from the mouth of the apostles, who preached it by the assistance of the Holy Ghost, and confirmed their doctrine by miracles, with that which was delivered besides, or in opposition to it, and was not so confirmed; and this can only now be done by them, by comparing all pretenders to the apostles' doctrine, with those Scriptures which they indited by the assistance of the Holy Spirit, and confirmed by miracles.

[14] Ver. 18. Οἱ γὰρ τοιοῦτοι, They that are such.] That is, the gnostics, saith Dr. Hammond, to whom indeed these characters do well agree. But Theodoret saith thus, τοὺς κακοὺς τοῦ νόμου συνηγόρους διὰ τούτων αἰνίττεται, by these words he strikes at the evil defenders of the law, or those who preached up circumcision and the observance of the law, as necessary to the salvation of the gentiles; τοὺς ἐξ Ἰουδαίων αἰνίττεται, he means the Jews, say Chrysostom, Œcumenius, and Theophylact, for he still taxes them with the love of their bellies. And certain it is, that these men caused divisions and separations from others, as unclean, and not fit to be conversed with, (Acts xi. 3. Gal. ii. 12, 13.) and scandal, subverting the souls of the gentiles, (Acts xv. 24.) evacuating the gospel of Christ, (Gal. ii. 21.) and causing men to fall from grace; (Gal. v. 2. 4.) that they did this, ἐν λόγῳ κολακείας, by flattering words, (1 Thess. ii. 5.) and that in this they served not Christ, but their own bellies, (Phil. iii. 19.) doing these things for filthy lucre's sake; (Tit. i. 10, 11.) whence it appears there is no necessity of referring these words to the gnostics, or deserting the opinion of the ancients, as touching the persons here intended. (See also Examen Millii.)

[15] Ἀκακῶν, Of the simple.] Ἄκακος, in the Septuagint, answers to the Hebrew תם, the upright, Job viii. 20. Psal. xxv. 21. Prov. xiii. 6. and ἀκακία to תמים, integrity, Job xxvii. 5. xxxi. 6. Psal. vii. 9. xxvi. 1. 11. xxxvi. 39. xl. 13.

[16] Ver. 20. Τὸν Σατανᾶν, Satan.] By Satan we may understand those persecuting Jews and Judaizers, who are styled the messengers and ministers of Satan, 2 Cor. xi. 15. xii. 7. their persecutions being ascribed to Satan, who animates and provokes them to them, 1 Thess. iii. 5. Rev. ii. 9, 10. And then God's bruising him under their feet, must signify his taking away their power thus to deceive and persecute, by the destruction of Jerusalem, and these impostors with it.

[17] Ver. 25. Τῷ δὲ δυναμένῳ, To him that hath power,] And will to execute that power. (See note on xiv. 4.)

[18] Κατὰ τὸ εὐαγγέλιόν μου, According to my gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ.] Both these expressions, say the fathers, are of the same import, the gospel, which the apostle preached, being the same with that which Christ preached whilst he was on earth; and they, after his ascension, preaching in his name, by his authority, and by the assistance of his Spirit, and so delivering his laws and doctrine, not their own.

[19] Χρόνοις αἰωνίοις σεσιγημένου, Kept secret since the world began.] The Greek may signify, from the beginning of ages, the promise of the Messiah being obscurely made, or hinted to Adam from the beginning; though the fathers only render these words ἄνωθεν, before, as Theodoret, or πάλαι, of old, as Chrysostom, Œcumenius, and Theophylact. (See the notes on 2 Tim. ii. 2.)

[20] Ver. 26. Διὰ γραφῶν προφητικῶν, By the Scriptures of the prophets.] They of old foretold of the Messiah, and of the calling of the gentiles; but yet, as to many circumstances, this was still a mystery, till these prophetic sayings were more clearly revealed by the Spirit given to the apostles and prophets, and by the actual accomplishment of what they foretold. (See note on Eph. iii. 6.)

[21] Ver. 27. Μόνῳ σοφῷ Θεῷ, To the only wise God.] This, as the fathers note, cannot exclude the Divine nature of Jesus Christ, who is the wisdom of the Father, from this title, any more than those words, who only hath immortality, 1 Tim. vi. 16. exclude Christ from being immortal.

APPENDIX

TO CHAP. XI.

CONTAINING

OF THE

CALLING OF THE JEWS TO THE CHRISTIAN FAITH.

To strengthen the argument which I have offered from this chapter for the conversion of the Jewish nation to the Christian faith; let it be noted,

First, That this hath been the constant doctrine of the church of Christ, owned by the Greek and Latin fathers, and by all commentators I have met with on this place. Among the Greek fathers by St. Chrysostom,* whose words are these: "When the fulness of the gentiles is come, then all Israel shall be saved, at the time of Christ's second coming, and the consummation of all things."—"After the gentiles have received the salutary faith, they also shall receive the faith (saith Theodoret*) when the great Elias shall come, and preach it to them." Gennadius† descants upon the words of the apostle thus: "They being blinded and excluded from salvation, God translated this salvation to you." And again, "All you being called, and come in, grace shall again receive them all; for this the prophet Isaiah testifies."—"Before (saith Photius‡) the heathen being disobedient, the Jews were saved." Again, "The Jews becoming disobedient, the gentiles are saved; and the gentiles being saved, the Jews emulating them, shall also be saved:"—"Because (saith Theophylact §) the Jews, being then blinded, have not obtained this salvation, that which the apostle speaks of shall happen to them afterward."—"They of the people of Israel who believed not, and for their unbelief were deserted, that God's mercy might be shewed to you, shall not be always left in unbelief (saith Origen ‖), but when the dispensation of the fulness of the gentiles is completed, they also shall find mercy." And therefore, when Celsus had, as it were, prophesied that the Jews should presently perish, "this (saith Origen) he said, not knowing how present God was formerly with them, and how that, by their sin, salvation came to the gentiles, and their fall brought riches to the world,¶ till the fulness of the gentiles be come in, that after this all Israel, which Celsus understands not, may be saved." In his fifth homily upon Jeremiah, he exhorts the Christian to live so as that he may not receive a bill of divorce, "but may enter into the holy inheritance. And Israel may then also enter; for, if the fulness of the gentiles be come in, then all Israel shall be saved, and there shall be one fold and one shepherd." In his commentary on St. Matthew he saith, (ibid. p. 410. C.) "Those that whipped Christ were whipped, and shall be whipped till the fulness of the gentiles is come in:" and (p. 397. D.) "that they were worthy to be deserted, either till the fulness of the gentiles was come in, or till they had fulfilled the punishment of their sins." Nor is this denied by him in the passage cited from his book against Celsus; for he saith not there, "they shall never be converted to the Christian faith," but that they should never be restored to their own worship or country, that "they had been long since cast out from τῆς σεμνῆς ἁγιστείας καὶ λατρείας, their venerable service and ceremonies, or purgations;†† and we confidently affirm, ὅτι οὐδ' ἀποκατασταθή-σονται, that they shall never be restored again to Jerusalem, or the land of promise, which before (saith he) they were; for then, being captivated, they returned to their own land, and enjoyed their laws as before, which now they shall never be restored to." All the Latin fathers who have left us any commentaries, or notes on this Epistle, are plainly of the same mind, as you may see by consulting Hilary the deacon, Primasius, Sedulius, and Haymo, upon the twenty-fifth verse of this chapter. This also many of the fathers do conclude,

First, From those words of the prophet Hosea, The children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an altar, and without an ephod, and without teraphim. Afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their king, and shall fear the Lord, and his goodness, in the latter days, iii. 4, 5. Which words St. Augustine * having produced, to prove that the carnal Israelites, who now will not believe, shall hereafter do so, he saith, "nothing is more manifest than that, by David their king, the prophet here meaneth Jesus Christ, in whom they now believe not."—"This (saith St. Jerome †) is the blindness that happened to Israel in part, that the fulness of the gentiles might come in, and all Israel be saved, and after a long time might return and seek the Lord. Some (saith he) do interpret this of the captivity of Babylon; but others (saith he), with us, refer it to a time yet future." St. Cyril saith, "Here is a manifest declaration of what shall hereafter happen to the adulterous synagogue, and that she should be received again; that Israel ‡ should not always be rejected, but, being recalled, and converted to the faith, should own Christ according to the flesh to be the king of all, and that this glorious grace should be afforded to her at the end of the world."

Secondly, That in which they universally agree, excepting only St. Jerome, is, That Elias is to come, before the end of the world, to convert the Jews to Christ: and this they gather from those words of Malachi, Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet, before the great and terrible day of the Lord; and he shall turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, iv. 5, 6. and those of Christ, Elias truly shall come first, and shall restore all things, Matt. xvii. 11. "We know (saith Justin Martyr, Dial. cum Tryph. p. 268, 269. 306.) that Elias shall come before the Lord's second advent, and that then the Jews shall know him whom they have dishonoured." Origen says, § that "by those words of Malachi it seemeth to appear, that Elias shall come before Christ, and by his sacred words, and the dispositions they shall work in their souls, shall prepare them for the coming of Christ." Theodoret paraphraseth the words of Malachi thus: "Lest at my second coming, finding you all in unbelief, I should subject you to eternal punishment, Elias shall come first, and teach you of my advent, and shall prevail upon you, O Jews, without doubting, to join yourselves to the churches of the gentiles, and to be made one."* Yea, even St. Jerome, upon these words of St. Matthew, Elias indeed shall come, and restore all things, descants thus: † "He, who is to come in the body at our Lord's second advent, came now by John in virtue and the Spirit." And in his comment on the third of Habakkuk, ver. 17. having cited those words of Christ, spoken of the barren fig-tree, Let no fruit grow on thee for ever, Matt. xxi. 19. he bids us ‡ "diligently consider, that he saith not for ever and ever, but only in seculum, for that age; and when that age is past, and the fulness of the gentiles is come in, then shall the fig-tree bring forth her fruits, and all Israel shall be saved." So generally did this doctrine obtain among the ancients.

Moreover, as this doctrine hath the suffrage of all the ancient fathers, and commentators do thus generally agree in exposition of this chapter, so is it easy to confirm it, by shewing the absurdity of other expositions, and the plain inconsistence of them, both with truth and with the words of the apostle. For,

First, The words of the apostle cannot be expounded, as Dr. Lightfoot § and others do interpret them, of the spiritual Israel, i. e. of all those persons, whether Jew or gentile, which belong to God's election. For, 1. the text speaks of that which was a mystery to the believing gentiles, i. e. a secret not obvious to their understanding. Now that God's elect, whether Jew or gentile, should be saved, could be no mystery, but the first article of Christian faith; and so of this the apostle could not say, I would not have you ignorant, lest you should be wise in your own conceit; especially since the apostle had before said of the believing Jews, there is now an election of grace, ver. 5. and, ver. 7. the election hath obtained.

Secondly, The Jews and Israelites here mentioned, are manifestly distinguished from the elect of Israel by this character, that they were the blinded Israel, ver. 7. who lay under a spiritual slumber, ver. 8. whose eyes were blinded that they saw not, ver. 10. who had stumbled at the stumbling-stone, ver. 11. they are that Israel, whose casting away was the riches of the world, whose diminution was their fulness, ver. 12. they are Israel according to the flesh, ver. 14. the branches broken off for unbelief, ver. 17. 19, 20. they who believed not, ver. 23. 30—32. and who were enemies to the gospel for the gentiles' sake, ver. 29. this is the Israel of whom the apostle here asserts, they shall be saved, of this blinded, this unbelieving, this Israel cut off, these branches broken from their own olive-tree, these enemies to the converted gentiles; as there hath been, saith the apostle, a diminution, so shall there be a fulness; as there hath been a casting them off, so shall there be a reception of them; as there hath been a breaking them off from their own olive-tree, so shall there be an inserting of them into it again, ver. 24. as there hath been a time of their unbelief, and so of severity, ver. 22. and of wrath to them, Rom. ix. 22. 1 Thess. ii. 16. so shall there be a time of mercy, ver. 31, 32. Now since the unbelief, the diminution, the rejecting, the breaking the branches off, must necessarily be understood of Israel according to the flesh, of the natural branches of the stock of Abraham, ver. 22. 24. beloved for the fathers' sake, ver. 28. of the seed of Jacob, whose sins were not yet taken away, ver. 26. if you understand the fulness, the reception, the ingraffing of them, the salvation here mentioned of the spiritual Israel, and of the elect opposed to Israel that was blinded, ver. 7. the antithesis is wholly lost; since then the diminution and the fulness, the rejection and reception, the breaking off and the insertion, the severity and the mercy, will not relate to the same persons. Again, blindness in part hath happened to Israel (saith the apostle) till the fulness of the gentiles shall come in, and then all Israel shall be saved; now certainly the blindness happened to Israel according to the flesh, and must not the antithesis require that the salvation should belong to the same Israel? It happened not to the elect, for the election (saith the apostle) hath obtained, and the rest were blinded, and therefore the salvation cannot respect them only.

Moreover, to whom did this blindness happen? Was it not to the national church and body of the Jews? to them to whom our Saviour had said, Whilst you have the light, believe in the light, lest darkness come upon you? John xii. 35. Is it not of the children of Israel that the apostle saith, They could not see to the end of that which was to be abolished, 2 Cor. iii. 13, 14. but their minds are blinded, for until this day remaineth the same veil untaken away? Was it not that very people who had eyes, and saw not, ears, and heard not; whose heart was waxed gross, their ears dull, and their eyes closed? Isa. vi. 9. Acts xxviii. 26, 27. ver. 8. 10. and from whose eyes were hid the things which belonged to their peace, because they knew not the time of their visitation? Luke xix. 42. 44. To whom belonged this ἀποβολὴ, rejection, or casting off? Doth it not respect the generality of that church and nation? Doth not our Saviour say of them, The children of the kingdom shall be cast out into utter darkness, Matt. viii. 12. that their house should be left unto them desolate, Matt. xxiii. 38. that the kingdom of God should be taken from them, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof? Matt. xxi. 41. Who were the branches broken off, are they not all the unbelieving Jews? (ver. 20.) i. e. the bulk and body of that church and nation. Doth not our Saviour tell them, that their vineyard should be let out to other husbandmen? Matt. xxi. 41. are not they that barren tree which was to be hewn down? Luke xiii. 7. 9. and must not then the recovery of them from this blindness, the receiving of them again, the ingraffing them into their own olive-tree, respect some few straggling converts of them only, but the chief bulk or body of that nation?

Thirdly, It is easy to observe two questions in this chapter; the first is this, λέγω οὖν, μὴ ἀπώσατο, &c. I say then, Hath God cast off his people? ver. 1. to which the answer is, God hath not cast off his people whom he foreknew, or the remnant according to the election of grace, ver. 5. 7. but only the obdurate Jew, ver. 8—10. The second is this, λέγω οὖν, μὴ ἔπταισαν, ἵνα πέσωσι; I say then, Have these unbelieving Jews, who stumbled at the stumbling-stone, ix. 32, 33. stumbled, that they should fall entirely, so as that they should never rise again? And to this the apostle answers in the negative, from ver. 11. to the 25th, and proves it from ver. 25. to the 32d. It is therefore evident, that his discourse, from ver. 11. to the 32d. respects not the spiritual Israel, i. e. the gentile converts, nor the elect of Israel, but the obdurate, blinded nation, which God hath then cast off. And,

Fourthly, Here is evidently a time prefixed for this conversion of the Jews, viz. when the fulfilling of the gentiles is come in; here is a blindness to continue on them till that time: whilst blindness doth continue on them, their salvation is not to be expected, and when they shall be saved that blindness, of necessity, must cease: but to the spiritual Israel, or the elect converted at all times, nothing of this can be applied, for their conversion is not limited to the time of the coming in of the fulness of the gentiles, but they are converted in every age, and at all times.

Secondly, The opinion of the reverend Dr. Hammond is to this effect:* 1. "That it is not necessary that this should still belong to any yet future return of the Jews, in a visible and remarkable manner, the circumstances of the context applying it to the first times, wherein the Epistle was writ.

2. †"That the fulness of the Jews, mentioned ver. 12. is their being added to the church, their coming in, and being gathered, and laying hold of the faith, being provoked so to do by seeing the gentiles believe, and so filling up the vacuities, as it were, which were formerly in the church, by their standing out impertinently; and the fulness of the gentiles is the gentiles coming in to the church, receiving the faith, they then becoming one part of the visible church, as the Jews another.

3. "That the mystery ‡ here mentioned is this, that a great part of the Jews are now become blind, and that that is made use of by God, that by occasion of that the gospel may (by departing awhile from them) be preached to, and received by, the generality of the gentiles, and they compacted into Christian churches; and this in very mercy to those Jews, that they, by seeing the gentiles believe, might at length be provoked to do so too, by way of emulation, (ver. 11. 31.)

4. "That so § all Israel shall be saved, i. e. all the true children of Abraham, Jews and heathens both; but particularly the remnant of the Jews shall come in, and repent, and believe in Christ.

5. "That the addition of ‖ Jewish believers shall be matter of confirmation of the faith to the gentiles, and a means to bring them all to receive it, to convert the gentiles over all the world.

6. "As for the truth of that, that as yet many more Jews should repent and receive the gospel, that, saith he, has been demonstrated by the event; (1.) When the Jews saw Christ's predictions, Matt. xxiv. manifestly fulfilled in the Roman armies sitting down before the city, for then many turned Christians, and went out of the city, and were delivered from the following evils. And,

(2.) "After that, when the temple and city were destroyed, and they brought into subjection by the Romans, then many were humbled, and turned Christians. And,

(3). "After that also, in Justin Martyr's days, every day there were some that came in to be Christ's disciples. Now to these things I

Answer, first, That whereas this reverend person saith, the circumstances of the context apply this conversion of the Jews to the times in which this Epistle was writ, i. e. about the year of Christ 56. it seems extremely evident, both from the circumstances of the context, and from many other Scriptures, that nothing could more unfitly be assigned, as the time of the conversion of the then hardened and rejected Jews, than this. For,

1. In the ninth chapter of this Epistle, the apostle calls our Lord Christ, the Holy Ghost, and his own conscience to witness, that he had great heaviness, and continual sorrow in his heart, on the account of the infidelity of his Jewish brethren, the spiritual slumber and blindness which then was upon them, and their rejection by God, ver. 1—3. And, ver. 22. he plainly represents them as vessels of wrath fitted for destruction, and only reserved, as Pharaoh was of old, for a more illustrious ruin, in which God's vengeance on them, and the causes of it, should be conspicuously seen. And, ver. 27. he proceeds to shew, from the predictions of the prophets, that only a little remnant of them should be saved; a remnant, like to those seven thousand men reserved in the ten tribes of Israel, when the whole visible body of them had revolted to Baal: and, ver. 31. speaking of them in general, he saith, Israel hath not attained to justification, because they sought it not of faith, but stumbled at the Messiah, even at that Jesus who is the end of the law for justification, to every one that believeth, x. 4. he being to them a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence.

In the tenth chapter, he declares, that they had not submitted to the righteousness which was of God through faith, ver. 2, 3. and from ver. 16. to the end of that chapter, he proves, that the preaching of the gospel to the gentiles, and the incredulity of the Jews, was a thing long ago foretold in the prophetic writings. In this chapter, he begins with the inquiry to which his former discourse, and the general infidelity of that people, had given occasion, viz. Hath God entirely cast off his people? and answers it by saying, That as in the time of Elias, in that general revolt of the ten tribes, God still reserved seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal, οὕτως καὶ ἐν τῷ νῦν καιρῷ, so in this season also he had reserved a like remnant according to the election of grace, ver. 5. confessing, notwithstanding, touching the body of that church and people, that Israel had not attained to that righteousness it sought for, but was, excepting this election only, wholly blinded; that God had given them up to a spirit of slumber, and blinded their eyes; had broken them off for their infidelity, and had shewed his severity upon them. Wherefore the times, when this Epistle was written, being the times of the apostle's heaviness, and his continual sorrow for their rejection; the times when they are represented by him as vessels of wrath fitted for destruction; when the prophets had foretold their incredulity; when Israel had not attained to justification, but had stumbled at the Messiah; when they were ignorant of the righteousness of God, and had not submitted to it; when to that very day they were blinded, and given up to a spiritual slumber; is it possible that these should be the very times assigned by the apostle for the ceasing of their blindness, and that so generally, that it might be truly said, all Israel were then saved, and God had mercy on them all?

The same apostle, anno Christi, 49. speaks to them of that nation thus: It was necessary that the word of God should be first spoken to you; but since you thrust it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life, lo, we turn (from you) to the gentiles, Acts xiii. 46. In his First Epistle to the Thessalonians, written A. D. 51. he declares of the Jews, that they killed the Lord Jesus and their own prophets, and they persecuted the apostles; and they pleased not God, and were contrary to all men, 1 Thess. ii. 14—16. Forbidding us to speak to the gentiles, that they might be saved, to fill up their sins always, for the wrath is come upon them to the uttermost. "That is (saith Dr. Hammond), by this they do so fill up the measure of their sins, that the wrath of God to the utter destruction of them is now come out upon them, already denounced, and, within a very little while, most certain to overtake them." In his Second Epistle to the Corinthians, written before that to the Romans, though perhaps in the same year, he saith, that even then their minds were blinded, and the veil still remained upon them. And when he came to Rome, about three years after the writing this Epistle, and preached to some of the chief of them residing in that city, he declares that these words of Isaiah were fulfilled upon them, Acts xxviii. 23. viz. Hearing you shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing you shall see, and not perceive: for the heart of this people is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing; and they have closed their eyes, lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their hearts, and be converted, and I should heal them. Concluding thus, Be it known therefore to you, that the salvation of God is sent to the gentiles, and they will hear it. Now after they had thus put away the gospel from them, and judged themselves unworthy of eternal life, and the apostles had thus turned from them to the gentiles; after the wrath was thus determined to come upon them, εἰς τέλος, to the end, that is, say all the ancient commentators, not as in the times of the judges, for twenty or forty years, or as in the time of their captivity, for seventy years, but for many generations; after their minds were thus blinded, their eyes thus shut, their hearts thus hardened, can we expect this blindness suddenly should cease, and this wrath presently give place to mercy and salvation?

Secondly, That "many of the Jews turned Christians, when they saw Christ's prediction, Matt. xxiv. fulfilled in the Roman army sitting down before that city, and went out of the city with the Christians, and so were delivered from the following evils," is also said, without all ground or testimony of writers of those times. Epiphanius,* who lived in Palestine, and Eusebius,† who was born and educated there, give us an accurate relation of this matter, and carefully inform us, that οἱ Μαθηταὶ, the disciples of Christ, οἱ ἐν Χριστῷ πεπιστευκότες, they that believed in Christ, being admonished by an angel, or by an oracle, so to do, left Jeru- salem, and went to Pella, where they were preserved; but, of one convert of the Jews then made, they say not a word. How unlikely then it is that the same Epiphanius, who so particularly relates the conversion of one single Aquila from Judaism to Christianity, when they returned to Jerusalem after the ruin of it, and his revolt again to Judaism, should never speak one word of these supposed converts before their departure!

Moreover, this was the time when there happened a great apostacy of the Jewish converts, according to our Lord's prediction, that, because iniquity should then abound, the love of many should wax cold, Matt. xxiv. 12. And therefore the Epistle to the Hebrews written in the ninth, the Epistle of St. James writ also in the ninth, and the Epistle of St. Peter writ in the tenth year of Nero, all near this very time, are very full of exhortations to them that they would not be double-minded, wavering, or unstable in the faith, James i. 6—8. that they would not count that fiery trial, which was come to try them, a strange thing, 1 Pet. iv. 12. that they would patiently, and with long-suffering endure it, as knowing they were happy who did thus endure, James i. 12. v. 8. 10, 11. 1 Pet. iii. 13, 14. v. 9, 10. The Epistle to the Hebrews is full of exhortations to them, to see to it that there be not in them an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God, Heb. iii. 12. that they hold the beginning of their confidence firm to the end, ver. 14. to fear, lest, a promise being made of entering into rest, they should fall short of it through unbelief, iv. 1. 11. there being no renewing them to repentance, who, after such miraculous evidences of the truth, apostatized, vi. 6. and no more sacrifice for sin for them, x. 25. that they would not cast away their confidence, God having said, xii. 35. 38. If any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him; and that they would diligently look to it, lest any man failed of the grace of God, xii. 15. These, saith our Saviour, are the times of vengeance, and of wrath upon that people, Luke xxi. 22, 23. the times when, the things belonging to their peace being hid from their eyes, their house was to be left unto them desolate, Luke xix. 42—44. And could the times of the apostacy, even of the converted Jews, be the times of the salvation of the unbelieving Jews? Was it to be expected they should then, more than ever, see the things belonging to their peace, when they were hidden from their eyes? or could the times of wrath and vengeance upon that people, when the avenger came out of Zion, to punish the iniquity of Zion with the sorest judgments, be the very times when the Deliverer came out of Zion to turn away iniquity from Jacob?

Thirdly, Whereas it is added, that "after that, when the temple and city were destroyed, and they brought into subjection by the Romans, then many were humbled, and turned Christians; and that after that, even in Justin Martyr's days, every day there were some who came in to be Christ's disciples:" I answer,

1. That as for their conversion when the temple and city were destroyed, I cannot find one word in church-history concerning it, but much to the contrary: for, 1. Epiphanius speaks particularly of the return of the Christians to Jerusalem after the ruin of it, and of the miracles they then wrought, and yet he mentions only one Aquila, a Jew, converted to the Christian faith; adding, that he soon after renounced the faith, and turned to his former Judaism. And Justin Martyr* observes, in express contradiction to the doctor, that "after their country was destroyed, and their city laid waste, they repented not, but proceeded still in their execrations of Christ, and of all that believed in him." And Tertullian† adds, that, "seeing from the time of Tiberius to Vespasian they repented not, their land was made desolate, and their cities burnt with fire." And indeed this was the very time when wrath came actually upon them to the uttermost, when this barren tree was hewn down, and cast into the fire, Luke xiii. 7. 9. when their house was left desolate, because they would not be gathered; when all the righteous blood, shed by them from Noah to that time, came upon them, and they had filled up the measure of their sins, Matt. xxiii. 35. 37, 38. when the kingdom was wholly taken from them; when the Son of man came to take vengeance on them; and when he sent forth his armies to destroy those murderers, and to burn up their city, because they refused to come unto the marriage-feast, Matt. xxii. 7. And could this be the time of their humiliation and conversion? Was this a fit time to expect the completion of those words of St. Paul, concerning the sending the Deliverer out of Zion, to turn away iniquity from Jacob, and to take away their sins, and to shew mercy to them, in such a signal manner, that all Israel should be saved?

To proceed to the history of them in the following times: Justin Martyr in his Apology, writ in the year of the Lord 140. saith of the Jews in all places, That they were‡ "as great enemies to the Christians in all places as the heathens were, and as ready to torment and kill them, when they could do it;" and "that this was evident from the last Jewish war, in which their captain Barchochebas commanded only the Christians to be tormented, if they refused to deny and to blaspheme the Lord Jesus Christ." Now this carries down the hatred of the Jews against Christians, and their impenitency, till after the times both of Trajan and Hadrian. Some years after this, he writ his Dialogue with Trypho; and there he informs us, that the Jews§ still continued "to curse those who believed in Jesus, and to lay violent hands upon them when they could do it;" that "even then their hand was high to do wickedness, they still hating and killing Christians as oft as it was in their power."

But we are told that this very Justin Martyr saith, That "every day there were some (of them) who came in to be Christ's disciples."

I answer, That what Justin Martyr there saith, relates not at all to any Jewish converts, but to the gentiles coming in from the way of deceit, to the faith of Christ; and as he had told the emperors in his Apology, p. 45. B. that the "consummation of the world was deferred, διὰ τὸ σπέρμα τῶν Χριστιανῶν, for the seed of Christians, which was then springing up:" so he tells Trypho, p. 256. D. that the day of judgment, of which he had before spoken, and of which the Psalm he there citeth treats, was * "deferred by God, because he knew that some would come daily in to be Christ's disciples, and would quit the way of deceit." Now that this cannot be spoken of the Jews is evident, because wrath was come upon them to the uttermost, as Justin Martyr often intimates, not saying that God had not brought wrath and judgment upon them; but only that he had not brought the general judgment on the world for this cause. He goes on, and says, that "every one of those, who thus believed, received gifts from Christ as they were worthy:" and this he proves, because it was prophesied, that †"after our Lord's ascent to heaven, he should lead us captive from our error, and should give us gifts;" where the word πλάνη, used ordinarily of the gentiles deceived by Satan, and especially the word ἡμᾶς, us, shew that the Martyr speaks not of the Jews, but gentile converts; and so it follows, "therefore we gentiles, who have received these gifts, shew you Jews to be fools," &c. so that the good doctor was utterly mistaken, in applying this passage to the Jews, as others led by his authority have done.

From this time to the days of Constantine, the period assigned by Mr. Calvert for the conversion mentioned by St. Paul, the fathers generally represent them, as a nation whose "ears were shut, and their hearts hardened,"‡ declaring, that the "Scripture had clearly foretold they should be disinherited, and fall off from the grace of God."§ Origen‖ testifies, that "God had turned his providence from the Jews to the gentiles; that they were wholly deserted, and retained nothing of what before was venerable among them, nor any footsteps of the Divine presence with them; that after the crucifixion of our Lord they were perfectly deserted, and not to be converted till the end of the world." Tertullian¶ saith, "that from the time that they crucified their Lord, God had taken from them the prophet, wise man, and the Holy Spirit, and had left them destitute of his grace;" and that "only at his second coming, he should be received by them who had thus rejected him." And this seems most agreeable to our Lord's predictions, that the kingdom of God should be taken from them, and given to another nation that would bring forth the fruit of it; that he would miserably destroy those husbandmen, and would let out his vineyard to other husbandmen, who should render him the fruits in their season, Matt. xxi. 41. 43. that none of them who were bidden and refused, should taste of his supper, Luke xiv. 24. that many should come from the east and west, and should sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven, but the children of the kingdom should be cast out into utter darkness, Matt. viii. 11, 12. that they who were first (i. e. the Jews) should be the last, and they who were the last (i. e. the gentiles) should be first; for that this is spoken of the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the gentiles, is evident from these words of St. Luke, xiii. 26—30. Then shall ye (Jews) begin to say, We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets. But he shall say, I tell you, I know you not whence you are, depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity. There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out. And they shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God. And, behold, there are last which shall be first, and there are first which shall be last. Now if we do consider that wrath was come upon this nation, εἰς τέλος, to the end, can we imagine either that this kingdom taken from them, this vineyard let out to other husbandmen, these children of the kingdom cast out into outer darkness, should suddenly receive again this kingdom, be restored to this vineyard, or admitted to the light of the gospel? or that all Israel should be saved, or iniquity should be taken away from Jacob, whilst that nation lay under these dreadful judgments? or that when our Lord hath so solemnly foretold there should be wrath upon this people, and they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down by the gentiles, until the time of the gentiles be fulfilled, (Luke xxi. 23, 24.) this wrath should not continue on them whilst they were captives in all nations, and Jerusalem was trodden down?

Here, I confess, the reverend doctor (on Luke xxi. 23.) hath a peculiar notion, "That the treading down of Jerusalem by the gentiles, is not particularly their victory over it by Titus, but their consequent possessing it, and even till Hadrian's rebuilding a part of it, and calling it by his own name Ælia, and inhabiting it by gentiles——upon the doing this, saith he, it followed, that as all the (unbelieving) Jews were utterly banished the city; so the believing Jews returned thither again from their dispersions, and inhabited it again, and joined, and made one congregation, one church with the gentiles, which had then, till that time, received the faith also, and till then continued a distinct church from the Jews: by which it appears how punctually this prediction, in our notion, was fulfilled, that Jerusalem should be inhabited by the gentiles, all the Jews in a manner excluded, till the time that the gospel had been freely preached to the gentiles, and by them in some eminent manner been received; and then it should be reinhabited by the Jews again, i. e. the Christian Jews, who, being wrought on by emulation of the gentiles, were now, many of them, brought to receive the faith. In his note on the two witnesses, Rev. xi. 2. he makes them to be the two bishops of the church in Jerusalem, one of the Jewish, the other of the gentile converts; which state of that church continued, saith he, till the time of Marcus, a gentile bishop of that church, i. e. from after the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, till that time." But here again are many things delivered, not only without all suffrage of history, but in perfect opposition to the histories of those times. For,

First, Eusebius and Sulpitius Severus do inform us, that, till the time of Hadrian,* all the bishops and priests of Jerusalem were only of the circumcision. Here therefore is no room for his two bishops, one of the Jewish, the other of the gentile converts, till the time of Marcus.

Secondly, They also do inform us, that all the Christians then at Jerusalem were of the circumcision, and so not of the gentiles; for Sulpitius observes, that the edict of Hadrian† (for banishing all the Jews from Jerusalem) "happened for the advantage of the Christian faith, because, till then, they almost all joined the observation of the law to the faith of Christ: the Lord so ordering it, that, by this means, the servitude of that law might be removed from the church." Eusebius also saith, that the whole "church of Jerusalem‡ consisted of the faithful Hebrews, who, from the times of the apostles, had continued there till the siege of Bitter, in the eighteenth year of Hadrian:" so that here is no room for his supposed gentile converts to be governed by a bishop of the gentiles.

Thirdly, They also do expressly say, not only that the unbelieving Jews, but that all the Jews in general, were by this edict banished both from Jerusalem, and from the region round about it. "He placed a band of soldiers which should banish all the Jews from Jerusalem," saith Sulpitius; and this he did, "quia Christiani ex Judæis potissimum putabantur," because the Christians were thought to have their rise chiefly from the Jews. Eusebius saith, that τὸ πᾶν ἔθνος, "the whole nation was banished from Jerusalem, and the country round about, and not permitted to set one foot in it." And then adds, that § "the city being after this manner emptied of the Jews, and wholly cleared of its inhabitants, and made up of aliens flowing in thither, it was made a Roman city and colony, and, in honour of the emperor, was named Ælia." The same is said by him in his Evangelical Demonstrations,‖ and by Tertullian,¶ that "not one Jew was permitted to stay there." Eusebius also adds, that τῆς αὐτόθι ἐκκλησίας ἐξ ἐθνῶν συγκροτηθείσης, the church there consisting only of the gentiles, Marcus was the first bishop of it. So that here is no place for the doctor's supposed church, consisting both of Jews and gentiles, or for the inhabiting of it by the Christian Jews, and much less for his feigned "many of them brought now to receive the faith by emulation of the gentiles." In a word, Epiphanius saith, that Hadrian the emperor, travelling to Jerusalem, found there only τὴν ἐκκλησίαν μικρὰν, one little church, and seven synagogues, standing like cottages; and was this likely to be the seat of two great bishops? So that I find nothing agreeable to the truth of history, in any thing which this reverend person saith upon this subject, and much less any thing confirmed either by Scripture or antiquity.

What hath been thus discoursed, is abundantly sufficient to confute the exposition of this reverend and learned person, as being not agreeable to matter of fact; for when was there any such conversion made of the Jews at the times assigned by him, which can in any probability of construction answer to the phrase used by the apostle, that by it all Israel shall be saved; ungodliness should be turned away from Jacob; God should bless them by taking away their sins; that they who now were blinded should have the veil taken away from before their eyes; they, who now were diminished, should have again their fulness; and they, who now were cast off, should be again received? This could not happen in the very times when this Epistle was at first indited: for though it be true that St. James mentions many thousands or myriads of Jewish converts, all zealous of the law, Acts xxi. 20. yet were they all converted at or before the time of writing this Epistle, and so belonged only to the remnant according to the election of grace, here mentioned, not to the residue that were blinded, of whose conversion the apostle here speaks from ver. 12. to 32. Nor could their conversion and salvation be a mystery to be then revealed to the gentiles. That no such conversion after the blindness mentioned in this chapter happened to them, upon their seeing the abomination of desolation standing in the holy place, or soon after the destruction of Jerusalem, hath been already shewed; and that Justin Martyr saith nothing of any such remarkable conversion of them, hath been also proved.

That there might be some conversion of them in the reign of Trajan, is by some argued from the words of Eusebius; "that Justus,* then bishop of Jerusalem, was one of the many myriads or thousands of the circumcision which then had believed." Yet is this testimony of no force, as to this matter; for, (1.) grammarians well know that μύρια and μυριάδες, when put indefinitely, do only signify many: now if the πόσαι μυριάδες, the many myriads, mentioned by St. James, hindered not, but that the Jewish converts might be only a little remnant, in respect to the blinded Jews, this may be as true of the ὅσαι μυριάδες, the so many myriads of Eusebius; especially if we consider, that most of them might be the very persons mentioned by St. James, he carefully informing us that the whole church of Jerusalem, under her fifteen bishops of Jerusalem, of which this Justus was the eleventh, was made up of believers who had continued from the apostle's time till the wars and siege under Hadrian; and speaking of these persons, not as men believing then, but as πεπιστευκότες, men who had before that time embraced the Christian faith. And hence Ruffinus† makes no mention of these supposed myriads, but only saith, "that Justus, being one of those of the circumcision who had embraced the faith of Christ, was made their bishop." In a word, this very Eusebius concurring so exactly with the sentiments of all other fathers, that the Jews were then rejected, and lay under a curse, and proving from this very apostle, and from the words contained in the beginning of this very chapter, that they should generally fall and be rejected for their unbelief, σπανίων ἐξ αὐτῶν εἰς τὸν σωτῆρα καὶ κύριον ἡμῶν πιστευσάντων, a very few of them only believing;* and that after the coming in of all nations to the Christian faith, they did not yet see or understand;† he cannot be supposed to mention any thing which answers to the conversion of the Jews intended in this chapter, but must, with us, refer that to that glorious time when the prophecies‡ shall more fully (saith he) be fulfilled; i. e. the time when the fulness mentioned by the apostle shall come in. This being therefore all that hath been pleaded for the remarkable conversion of the Jews, after the writing this Epistle; and this all being almost nothing, and far from bearing any correspondence to the comprehensive words of the apostle on that subject; I conclude that no conversion of this nature happened to them, between the writing this Epistle and the times of Constantine.

And whereas it is said, that this conversion should be wrought in them by way of emulation, and that they should lay hold of the faith, being provoked so to do by seeing the gentiles believe, it is confessed, that the apostle represents this a fit means to work this emulation in them; but it is as certain, that it hath not yet had the designed effect upon them, they being so far from being provoked to embrace the Christian faith, by seeing the gentiles admitted to it, that this was to them the great stumbling-block, and they were enemies to the gospel for their sakes, ver. 28. they being prejudiced against it, because the gentiles were admitted to the blessing of it without circumcision, and observance of the law of Moses: see note on Gal. iii. 4. vi. 12. This is that prejudice of the Judaizing Christians which the apostle labours to remove in most of his Epistles, but more especially in that to the Galatians; and as for the unbelieving Jews, they could not endure to hear of any to be sent for the converting of the gentiles, Acts xxii. 21, 22. but they persecuted the apostles upon this account, forbidding them to preach to the gentiles that they might be saved, 1 Thess. ii. 16. And the same enmity to the Christians seems to continue to this day among them upon the same accounts.

Wherefore there having been as yet, so far as we are able to discern, no such remarkable conversion of the Jews, since the inditing this Epistle, and no such happy emulation of the converted gentiles, as did provoke them to embrace the Christian faith, this could not be, as here the doctor doth suggest, a confirmation of faith to the gentiles, and much less a means to bring them all to receive it, or to convert the gentiles over all the world. And what records and histories make the least mention of any such conversion of the gentile world, on the account of the remarkable conversion of the Jews after the writing this Epistle? When came in such a fulness of the unbelieving Jews, as was the riches of the world? ver. 12. or such a reception of them to the Christian faith, as was unto them life from the dead? ver. 15. Or how can these assertions be reconciled to the words of the apostle? For, if the coming in of the fulness of the gentiles be their receiving the faith in those times, then the partial blindness of the Jews must cease in those times also; for blindness (saith the apostle) hath happened to the Jews in part, and that blindness is to continue only till the fulness of the gentiles shall come in: if then the blindness of the Jews is not yet ceased, but they have generally continued, even from the time of writing this Epistle, to this very moment, in as much blindness and obduracy, as they then lay under, and as much branches broken off, as now they are, it follows, that the fulness of the gentiles, mentioned by the apostle, is not yet come in.

Lastly, The mystery mentioned ver. 25. cannot be this, that, by occasion of the infidelity of the Jews, the gospel was preached to, and received of the gentiles; for of this the apostle introduceth the believing gentiles speaking thus, ver. 19. Thou wilt say then, the branches were broken off, that I might be graffed in, &c. This therefore could not be to them a mystery. Nor could it be this, viz. that this was done in mercy to the Jews, viz. that they, by seeing the gentiles believe, might at length be provoked to do so too. For of this the apostle had spoken twice, declaring it to be foretold by Moses, saying, I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people, x. 19. And in this chapter, saying, Through their fall salvation is come to the gentiles, to provoke them to jealousy, ver. 11. It remains then, as the apostle and the primitive church from him declare, that it be this, that when the time for the fulness, i. e. for the conversion of the still heathen gentiles is come in, then shall the blindness of the Jews be removed, and so all Israel shall be saved; and then all nations shall flow in unto them, and their reception shall be to the gentiles as life from the dead.

I think I have said what is sufficient to shew these words cannot admit the sense imposed upon them by the reverend Dr. Hammond; I proceed now more largely to discuss the proper import of that phrase, The fulness of the gentiles shall come in. This is by some interpreted thus, Blindness hath happened to the Jews, till the full number of the gentiles, which God shall call, be completed. But this sense is contrary to the express words of the apostle, who declares there shall be a greater and more glorious conversion of the gentiles than that which happened by occasion of their fall, that their fulness should be much more the riches of the gentiles than their fall was, ver. 12. and that their coming in should be unto the gentiles as life unto the dead, and should much more enrich them than their casting off, ver. 15.

Note therefore, that there is a double fulness of the gentiles mentioned in the holy Scriptures:

First, That which is spoken of ver. 12. in these words, If the diminution of them was the fulness of the gentiles; and this consisted in the preaching of the gospel to all nations, and the imparting the glad tidings of salvation to them, and was, in a great measure, to be accomplished before the destruction of Jerusalem, and the ruin of that church and nation, according to our Lord's prediction, in these words, The gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness to all nations, and then shall the end come, Matt. xxiv. 14. Mark xiii. 10.

Secondly, There is to be another fulness of the gentiles by a more glorious conversion of them, and a coming in of those nations which have not hitherto embraced the gospel, or have relapsed into heathenism or Mahometism, to be effected when this rejection of the Jews shall cease, and God shall send the Deliverer out of Zion, to turn away iniquity from Jacob: and of this only can we understand those words of the apostle, ver. 12. If the fall of the Jews hath been (already) the riches of the (gentile) world, and the diminution of them the riches of the gentiles, how much more shall their fulness, i. e. the time of their conversion, be the increase and fulness of the same gentiles? And, ver. 15. If the casting away of them be reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving them again be (to the same world), but even as life from the dead? And, ver. 25. Blindness in part hath happened to the Jews, till the fulness of the gentiles shall come in. This blindness therefore still continuing upon them, as much as ever, another fulness of the gentiles is to be expected, when it entirely shall be removed from them, and so all Israel shall be saved.

* Demonst. Evang. lib. ii. p. 62. B. et passim. † Lib. ix. p. 455. A. B.

‡ Ἔσται δὲ ὅτι πληρεστάτη ἡ προφητεία συμπερασθήσεται, ὅταν τὸ πλήρωμα τῶν ἐθνῶν εἰσέλθῃ τὸ περὶ τοῦ ἱεροῦ ἀποστόλου εἰρημένον. Lib. ix. p. 458. D.

Secondly, Jerusalem is yet trodden down of the nations, and the Jews are yet captives in all nations, whereas the captivity and the treading down of Jerusalem is to cease, when the times of the gentiles are fulfilled; according to those words of Christ, concerning the destruction of the Jews, They shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be carried captive into all nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodden down, till the times of the gentiles be fulfilled; (Luke xxi. 24.) i. e. till the times when they shall have a plenary conversion by the coming in of the Jews, and shall no more lord it over them, as now they do, but serve them, and flow in unto them. And to this purpose let it be noted,

First, That, if we consult ancient prophecies concerning the vast extent of our Saviour's kingdom over all nations, we shall find reason to believe they had not yet had their full accomplishment upon them; for he hath not yet had the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession; (Psal. ii. 8.) God hath not yet made all people, nation, and languages, to serve him, and all dominions to obey him; (Dan. vii. 4. 27.) he hath not yet filled the whole earth, or broke in pieces and consumed all other kingdoms. (Dan. ii. 34, 35.) That seems not yet fulfilled, which was foretold by Micah, that the Lord should be king over all the earth, (Micah v. 4.) and by Zechariah, that there should be but one Lord, and his name one; (Zech. xiv. 9.) and by David, that all kings shall fall down before him, and all nations serve him; that all the ends of the earth should remember, and turn to the Lord, and all the kindreds of the nations worship before him. (Psal. lxxii. 8.) These, and sundry other such-like prophecies there are, which yet were never accomplished according to the full import of them. For, as Brerewood observes,* "If we divide the known regions of the world into thirty equal parts, the Christians' part is (only) as five, the Mahometans' as six, the idolaters' as nineteen;" whence we have reason to conclude, That there is yet a time to come, before the consummation of all things, in which our Saviour will yet once more display the victorious banner of his cross; and, like a mighty man of war, march on, conquering and to conquer, till he hath confounded or converted his enemies; and, finally, consummated his victories in a glorious triumph over all the powers of the earth, and made all nations, tongues, and languages, to serve him.

* Enquir. chap. 14. p. 118.

Secondly, That there is still to be a glorious conversion of the Jewish nation, as it seems evident from the words of the apostle here, who speaketh of a time when the partial blindness which then had happened to the Jews, and still continues upon them, should cease; when God would turn away ungodliness from Jacob, and take away (the punishment of) their sins, which yet he hath not done; when not a little remnant only, as at our Lord's first advent, but all Israel shall be saved; when that Israel, whose minds were then, and still are blinded by the veil that is upon them, shall have that veil taken away by their turning to the Lord. So also from those prophecies of the Old Testament, which promise to that nation such kindness, favour, and salvation, as either hath not been at all as yet, or but imperfectly fulfilled; as when he promiseth to bless her with such blessings as never should be taken from her, and to shew mercy to her, so as never to forsake her more. To this effect are these expressions: As I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth, so I have sworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee (any more); for the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed, but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee, Isa. liv. 9, 10. And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and to them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord. As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord; my Spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, from henceforth and for ever, Isa. lix. 20, 21. I will make thee an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations. Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, and thy gates Praise. The sun shall be no more thy light by day, neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee; but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory. Thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw itself; for the Lord shall be thy everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended, Isa. lx. 15. 18—20. Everlasting joy shall be unto them, and I will make an everlasting covenant with them, Isa. lxi. 7, 8. Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken, neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate, but thou shalt be called Hephzi-bah, and the land Beulah; for the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married, Isa. lxii. 4. 12. I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people; and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying, Isa. lxv. 19. For as the new heavens and new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain, Isa. lxvi. 22. And I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me for ever, for the good of them, and of their children after them. And I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them to do them good, but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me, Jer. xxxii. 39, 40. And they shall be no more a prey to the heathen, neither shall the beasts of the land devour them; but they shall dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid. And I will raise up for them a plant of renown, and they shall be no more consumed with hunger in the land, neither bear the shame of the heathen any more, Ezek. xxxiv. 28, 29. And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt, and they shall dwell therein, even they and their children and their children's children for ever; and my servant David shall be their prince for ever. Moreover, I will make a covenant of peace with them, it shall be an everlasting covenant with them; and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore. My tabernacle shall be with them; yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people, Ezek. xxxvii. 25—27. I have gathered them unto their own land, and have left none of them any more there: neither will I hide my face any more from them, Ezek. xxxix. 28, 29. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land, which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God, Amos ix. 15.

Now it seems very evident, that scarcely any of these things can be applied to the return of the Jews from their captivity in Babylon. For, since that time, his kindness hath departed from them, and his covenant of peace hath been removed for above one thousand six hundred years; violence hath been heard in their land, wasting and destruction within their borders, and their land hath been made desolate; the days of wrath, of mourning, and of weeping, have been long upon them; their sun hath been, according to our Lord's prediction, darkened, and their moon hath not given her light; their sanctuary and tabernacle have been consumed, and they have been a prey to the heathen; they have long since ceased to be his people, and he to be their God.

Nor can we reasonably confine these promises to that little remnant which believed in the times of the apostles, for they were never gathered out of all lands, nor did they inherit the land for ever, but were banished thence, as well as the unbelieving Jews by Hadrian; they can in no propriety of speech be styled the house of Israel, the whole house of Israel. Nothing, indeed, seems more unlikely, than that the time of the casting them off, the breaking of the branches, the leaving them under a spiritual slumber, the taking the kingdom from them, and casting them out into utter darkness, should be the time of the completion of these glorious promises; and that this sense cannot accord with the discourse of our apostle here, hath been already shewed.

Nor, thirdly, can we apply these promises to the believing gentiles; for sure they could not be a prey to the heathens, or bear their shame, or be the people whom God hath led into captivity, and after gathered into their own land, and so planted there, as never to be plucked up again; the promise could not be made to them, that they should suck the breasts and eat the riches of the gentiles.

Fourthly, I have already shewed from Scripture prophecies, that, after this conversion, the nations generally shall flow in to them, and walk in their light, and so their fulness (which signifies not their incorporation into another church, but as the opposite words, their fall, their diminution, their rejection, require; and as the apostle doth himself interpret it, their reception to the Christian faith, and so into the favour of God,) shall be the riches of the gentiles, and as life from the dead to them: then the gentiles shall come to their light, and kings to the brightness of their rising; and nations that have not known them shall run in unto them, because God hath glorified them. Then (saith God) I will gather all nations and tongues, and they shall come and see my glory, Isa. lv. 5. lvi. lxvi. 18. 22. Then all nations shall turn, and fear the Lord truly, saith Tobit, xiii. 10, 11. And this I conceive to be that fulness of the gentiles of which the apostle here speaketh.

PARAPHRASE AND COMMENTARY

ON

THE FIRST EPISTLE

TO

THE CORINTHIANS.

PREFACE.

§. 1. THAT this was an Epistle written by St. Paul the apostle, as is asserted, i. 1. was never doubted in the church of God; but whether this was the first Epistle of St. Paul to the Corinthians, hath been a matter of dispute; because he saith in it, I have written to you in an epistle, (v. 9.) which seemeth plainly to relate to some epistle formerly by him writ to them: for this, saith Pseud-Ambrosius, was spoken de præterita epistola quam ante hanc, quæ prima dicitur, scripserat. But, as I have observed in the note upon that verse, no fathers ever ascribed to St. Paul more than fourteen epistles, including that to the Hebrews. Eusebius never mentions any third epistle to the Corinthians, amongst the true, controverted, or spurious writings which pass under his name: no Christian writer ever cited any thing from this supposed epistle: all the Greek scholiasts declare the apostle speaketh in those words, not of another, but of this very Epistle, which is sufficient to justify the version I have given of those words, I had written, or was writing, in this Epistle. Moreover, his supposed epistle to Laodicea is cited as a book exploded by St. Jerome;* his epistles to Seneca are in like manner cited by St. Jerome and St. Austin;† the Acts of Paul are cited and rejected by Origen and Eusebius,‡ but none of them makes any mention of more than two Epistles to the church of Corinth.

§. 2. That this Epistle was written by St. Paul whilst he was at Ephesus, and before he went thence to Macedonia, is clear from the very words of this Epistle: for, xvi. 8. he saith, I will tarry still at Ephesus till Pentecost; and adds, ver. 19. The churches of Asia (of which Ephesus was the metropolis) salute you; Aquila and Priscilla salute you, with the church which is in their house. Now that they dwelt at Ephesus, we read Acts xviii. 25. that it was writ before he went thence into Macedonia, these words inform us, xvi. 5. I will come to you when I pass through Macedonia; for I do pass through Macedonia. It is therefore generally agreed, that it was written in the fifty-seventh, as Dr. Pearson, or in the fifty-fifth year of Christ, as Dr. Lightfoot hath it. As also may be probably concluded thus: In the ninth year of Claudius, saith Orosius, in the tenth, say others, in the twelfth, saith Dr. Pearson, the Jews were banished from Rome, and St. Paul, coming into Corinth, finds Aquila and Priscilla newly come from thence to Corinth, upon that occasion: (Acts xviii. 2.) he stays there a year and a half, (ver. 11.) that is, till the eleventh of Claudius, at Ephesus three years; (Acts xx. 31.) and at the close of these three years he writes this Epistle. If then you begin this banishment of the Jews from Rome, as Valesius doth, in the tenth of Claudius, these five years that Paul continued at Corinth and Ephesus will end in the first of Nero, A. D. 55.: if, with Dr. Pearson, you begin them only at the twelfth of Claudius, they will end in the third of Nero, A. D. 57.

§. 3. That the persons to whom it was written were chiefly gentiles, is evident from these words, Ye know that ye were gentiles, carried away to these dumb idols, even as ye were led: (xii. 2.) that it was also written to the Jewish converts then at Corinth, Esthius conjectures, because he saith, (x. 1.) that all our fathers were under the cloud. But it is not necessary that should relate to their fathers according to the flesh, but only to the preceding church of God called before them out of Egypt, and partaking of like privileges with them: for the apostle declares, that not they who are the children of the flesh are counted for the seed, but they who are the children of the promise; (Rom. ix. 8.) and that the promise belonged not only to the seed according to the law, but according to the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all, Rom. iv. 16. (See Gal. iii. 14. 29. iv. 28.)

§. 4. The occasions of writing this Epistle we may best learn from the ancients, and from the Epistle itself.

First, then, the ancients inform us of this city, that "Corinth was full of rhetoricians* and philosophers, and that they gave occasion to most of those miscarriages which the apostle reprehends in this Epistle."

Secondly, That there were † "Judaizers crept in among them, who magnified themselves, and debased the apostle as a great boaster, but of little worth, styling him an apostate from the law, and commanding the observation of it to them."

Thirdly, They add, that the "city of Corinth was very rich,* and that some of them chose themselves teachers out of the rich, as being most able to support them, as others did out of the philosophers, as being most able to teach them more than the apostle could do."

Fourthly, They say, that "the Corinthians sent questions to St. Paul,† concerning marriage and virginity, by Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, by whom the apostle more fully was informed of the state of their church; and therefore sent his answer to them concerning these several heads."

And, suitable to these things mentioned by the ancients, we find,

First, That the apostle spends the latter part of the first chapter, from ver. 20. to the end, in shewing the vanity of the wisdom which the philosophers pretended to, in comparison to the wisdom discovered by the gospel preached by the apostles. And, chapter the second, he shews the impossibility of knowing or assenting to the things delivered by the gospel, by those who, depending on philosophy and human reason, rejected what was taught purely by revelation, and consequently the necessity of admitting that revelation of the Spirit they challenged to themselves, that the doctrine of the gospel might be made known to the world. And against both the rhetoricians and philosophers, he shews the necessity of preaching the gospel, not in the words of human wisdom, i. 17—19. ii. 1. iii. 18, 19. 28. iv. 20.

Secondly, Because on the account of those philosophers and rhetoricians, as well as of the Judaizers, they broke out into parties and factions, he reminds them of those factions, beseeching them carefully to avoid them, i. 10. as tending to the dividing of Christ's body, ver. 13. and as indications that they were yet carnal, iii. 4. pursuing this under his own name, and that of Apollos, through the whole third chapter; shewing that they ought not to glory in men, or be puffed up for one against another, whatever were their gifts or eloquence, but give the glory of their labours unto God alone. (See iv. 8.)

Thirdly, Because they, who declared they were of Cephas, seem to be those Judaizers who looked on the apostle as unfaithful in his office, for rejecting the circumcision and the law; he declares that he found no occasion thus to charge himself, nor was he much concerned for their censures of him in that kind, iv. 4, 5. shewing, by his sufferings, how great an evidence he had given of his fidelity in the discharge of his office, from ver. 9. to the 14th, and that he had begotten them to that faith in which they ought to stand, and follow his example, from ver. 14. to the 17th: and because, he having sent Timothy to them, they imagined he either durst not or would not come to them himself, he declares he would both come and use his apostolical authority amongst them, and try the power of them who were thus puffed up against him by reason of their human wisdom.

Fourthly, Because one of these eloquent persons had been guilty of a very heinous crime, he commands them to punish him by removing him from their society, and delivering him up to Satan. And,

Fifthly, Because, being rich and wealthy, (iv. 8.) they were unwilling to part with their wealth, and therefore went to law, for preservation of it, before heathen judges, to the scandal of Christianity, he reprehends this vice in them, chap. vi. from ver. 1. to the 10th; and having said all this by way of preface, he begins, chap. vii. to return his answer to the questions they had sent unto him.

§. 5. There is one farther observation useful for, and worthy to be pondered by, the licentious persons of our age, that because fornication and lasciviousness were vices to which the heathens were generally addicted, and their philosophers, and perhaps some heretics, viz. the Nicholaitans, which were amongst them, maintained this was a thing indifferent, therefore the apostle, both in the Epistles to the Corinthians, and to most other churches, is very copious in shewing the destructive nature of this sin. It is to be observed, that Corinth was, above all other cities, even to a proverb, infamous for fornication and lasciviousness, so that Κορινθία γυνὴ, a Corinthian woman, is, in the language of the ancients, a whorish woman, according to the proverb, ἃ Κορινθία ἔοικας χοιροπωλήσειν,* ut Corinthia videris corpore quæstum factura: and Κορινθιάζειν, Κορινθιάζεσθαι, is ἑταιρεύειν, scortationibus indulgere. (Hesych. Phavor.) There was, saith Strabo,† in it a temple dedicated to Venus, which πλείους ἢ χιλίας Ἱεροδούλους ἐκέκτητο ἑταίρας. These vices also reigned in Galatia, the worshippers of the mother of the gods; in Ephesus, (see note on Eph. v. 5.) Thessalonica, Crete, (Athenæus, lib. xii. p. 527. A. 528. C.) and generally in all heathen nations. Hence the apostle is so frequent and express in his condemning this vice:

First, As a sin contrary to nature, as being against our own body: (1 Cor. vi. 18.) a sin of unrighteousness, to which God gave them up for their idolatry; (Rom. i. 28.) and a sin, which they who committed, were given up to a reprobate mind, and knew they did things worthy of death; (ver. 29. 32.) a sin contrary to the moral law, or to the law of nature; for he declares that law was given for the condemning fornicators. (1 Tim. i. 10.)

Secondly, As a sin contrary to the Christian faith, and inconsistent with it. Know ye not (saith he) that your bodies are the members of Christ; shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of a harlot? God forbid! (1 Cor. vi. 15.) And again, But fornication, and all uncleanness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints; (Eph. v. 3.) for God hath not called us to uncleanness, but unto holiness. He therefore that despiseth this his call, despiseth not man but God, who also hath given us of his Spirit. (1 Thess. iv. 7, 8.) Hence he declares it to be contrary to the sound doctrine of the gospel, (1 Tim. i. 10, 11.) and forbids Christians to eat with any brother who is a fornicator. (1 Cor. v. 11.)

Thirdly, As being a sin which will exclude the fornicator from the kingdom of God. Be not deceived (saith he), no fornicator shall inherit the kingdom of God. (Gal. vi. 10, 11.) To the Galatians he speaks thus, The works of the flesh are manifest; adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness: of which I tell you again, that they who do such things, shall not inherit the kingdom of God. (Gal. v. 19—21.) To the Ephesians thus, This know ye, that no fornicator, or unclean person, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ, or of God. (John v. 5.) They, saith St. John, shall be excluded from the New Jerusalem. (Rev. xxii. 15.)

Fourthly, As that which will assuredly expose them to the wrath of God. For thus he speaks to the Colossians: Mortify your earthly members, fornication and uncleanness; for which things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience. (Col. iii. 5, 6.) To the Ephesians thus, Be not deceived with vain words, for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience. (Eph. v. 6.)

Fifthly, As that which will subject them to eternal punishment. For whoremongers and adulterers κρινεῖ ὁ Θεὸς, God will adjudge to condemnation: (Heb. xiii. 4.) the portion of the whoremonger shall be assigned him in the lake that burns with fire and brimstone. (Rev. xxi. 8.)

§. 6. And this is all that I at first intended by way of preface to this Epistle. But finding that the doctrine of the resurrection of the same body which dieth, is now either questioned, or thought unnecessary to be believed, though anciently the very heathens looked upon it as a fundamental doctrine of Christianity, and the ground of their most raised hopes; and upon this account they burnt the very bones of Christian martyrs, and reduced them to ashes, and then threw those ashes into the river Rhodanus, or Roan, that so they might defeat the *hope of a resurrection, which enabled the Christians to suffer death with alacrity, and to endure all kinds of torments for their religion; which sure had been a vain attempt, had not the Christian doctrine promised, as the foundation of their hopes, the resurrection of the same body thus consumed, but only of some other body in its stead; and seeing the fifteenth chapter of this Epistle is the seat of that controversy—I shall therefore endeavour briefly to evince two things:—

1. That it was certainly the received doctrine of the professors of the Christian faith.

2. That it is truly grounded on the Scriptures, and therefore ought to be owned as an article of Christian faith. And,

1. That it was certainly the ancient and received doctrine of the orthodox professors of the Christian faith, is evident,

First, From the second epistle of Clemens Romanus,† writ in the first century; for there he doth expressly caution Christians against the denial of this article, in these words,—Let none of you say that this same flesh shall not be judged, for as you were called in the flesh, so shall you come in the flesh to judgment, and in this very flesh shall you receive your reward. And in his first epistle, to prove that God will raise them from the dead, who have served him in holiness, he cites those words from Job xix. 25, 26. ἀναστήσεις τὴν σάρκά μου ταύτην, Thou wilt raise up this my flesh which hath suffered all these things.

Secondly, From Irenæus,* who in the second century makes this one article of faith of the whole church received from the apostles, and kept, taught, and delivered, in all places with the greatest care and uniformity; viz. that Christ will come from heaven in glory, ἀναστῆσαι πᾶσαν σάρκα πάσης ἀνθρωπότητος, to raise up all flesh of all mankind. Tertullian,† in the third century, producing the Christian's creed as the rule of faith, which came from Christ, and was by his companions handed down to the church, the institution of Christ, which all nations ought to believe, makes this one article of it, that Christ will come to judge the quick and dead; "facta utriusque partis resuscitatione cum carnis restitutione," or "per carnis resurrectionem," by raising and restoring of their flesh. Accordingly the article of the resurrection of the flesh; or, as the Aquilcian Symbol hath it, "hujus carnis," of this flesh; or, as other confessions have it, of their bodies, hath been received in all Christian churches. And they have been condemned as heretics from the beginning of the second century, who denied σαρκὸς ἀνάστασιν,‡ the resurrection of the flesh; "et carnis salutem et regenerationem ejus, dicentes non eam capacem esse incorruptibilitatis,"§ the life and reproduction of the flesh, saying, it was incapable of incorruption: as did the Valentinians,‖ the Basilidians, and the Marcionites, say the fathers.

§. 7. I proceed, secondly, to shew, that this doctrine of the primitive Christians is truly grounded on the Scriptures, and therefore ought to be received and owned as an article of Christian faith. This I prove,

1. From all those places which speak of the resurrection of the body; these places I shall produce, for their sakes who do not remember, in any place of the New Testament, any such expression as the resurrection of the body: v. g. He that raised Jesus from the dead, ζωοποιήσει καὶ, shall also make alive your mortal bodies; (Rom. viii. 11.) that is, he shall raise them from the dead: for that ζωοποιεῖν and ἐγείρειν, to quicken and raise up, are, with relation to this matter, words of the same import, we learn from these words: As the Father, ἐγείρει τοὺς νεκροὺς, καὶ ζωοποιεῖ, raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, so the Son ζωοποιεῖ quickeneth whom he will. (John v. 21.) Again, saith the apostle, How are the dead raised up? i. e. the bodies of the dead; it follows, καὶ ποίῳ σώματι, and with what kind of bodies do they come forth of the grave? (1 Cor. xv. 35.) So ver. 44. It is sown a natural body, it is raised σῶμα πνευματικὸν, a spiritual body. And still more evidently, τὸ φθαρτὸν τοῦτο, this corruptible (body) must put on incorruption, καὶ τὸ θνητὸν τοῦτο, and this mortal (body) must put on immortality, (ver. 53.) So when this corruptible (body) shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal (body) put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. If any one likes not my addition of σῶμα, body, to the pronoun and adjective, four times here mentioned, I desire him to find out, if he can, another substantive; if he cannot, he must confess the resurrection of the body is here mentioned four times: for the apostle argues thus, The dead shall be raised up, δεῖ γὰρ, for this corruptible (body) must put on incorruption; and when this is done, then death, which only happeneth to this corruptible mortal body, shall be swallowed up in victory.

It is said, that "he who reads with attention this discourse of St. Paul, where he speaks of the resurrection, will see that he plainly distinguisheth between the dead that shall be raised, and the bodies of the dead; for it is νεκροὶ, πάντες οἱ, which are the nominative cases to ἐγείρονται, ζωοποιηθήσονται, ἐγερθήσονται, all along, and not σώματα, bodies, which one may in reason think would somewhere or other have been expressed, if all this had been said to propose it as an article of faith, that the same bodies shall be raised." The same manner of speaking the Spirit of God observes all through the New Testament, where it is said, raise the dead, quicken, or make alive the dead, the resurrection of the dead, Matt. xxii. 27. 52. John v. 28, 29. Rom. iv. 17. 2 Cor. i. 9. 1 Thess. iv. 16.

Ans. I hope the instances produced already are sufficient to confute this observation; I shall, therefore, go on farther to observe and prove, that the resurrection of the dead is by the apostle used with plain relation to the bodies of the dead: so that he even proves the resurrection of the dead, because the body is raised, and so doth not plainly distinguish betwixt the dead that shall be raised, and the bodies of the dead. This is evident enough from what I have observed already, that the apostle proves οἱ νεκροὶ ἐγερθήσονται, the dead shall be raised, because the corruptible body must put on incorruption, &c. But it is still more evident from these words: So is also ἀνάστασις τῶν νεκρῶν, the resurrection of the dead; for it is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption, ver. 42, 43. where I desire to know what is the nominative case to ἐγείρεται, it is raised, used three times here? If it be σῶμα, body, I have sufficiently confuted this criticism; if it be not, why doth the apostle so expound it in the immediate ensuing words, it is sown a natural body, ἐγείρεται σῶμα πνευματικὸν, it is raised a spiritual body?

I add, that this appears almost from all the places cited, that the οἱ νεκροὶ, and the πάντες ἀποθνήσκοντες, the dead, and the all dying, hath relation to the body only, which being that alone, which is by death bereft of life, must be that only which, in propriety of speech, is said to die. Thus, when it is said, "these very words, urged for the resurrection of the same body, run thus, πάντες οἱ ἐν τοῖς μνημείοις, all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good εἰς ἀνάστασιν ζωῆς, to the resurrection of life, but they that have done evil to the resurrection of condemnation:" and is then added, "would not a well-meaning searcher be apt to think, that if the thing here intended by our Saviour were to teach and propose it as an article of faith, necessary to be believed by every one, That the very same bodies of the dead should be raised, the words should rather have been πάντα τὰ σώματα τὰ ἐν τοῖς μνημείοις, i. e. all the bodies that are in the graves, rather than all who are in their graves; which must denote persons, and not precisely bodies?"

To this I answer, (1.) that the words πάντες οἱ ἐν τοῖς μνημείοις, i. e. all that are in the graves, and πάντα τὰ σώματα τὰ ἐν τοῖς μνημείοις, all the bodies that are in the graves, are plainly words of the same import. For what is laid down in the graves or sepulchres, is it not σώματα τῶν κεκοιμημένων, the bodies of them that sleep only? (Matt. xxvii. 52.) and must it not then be these bodies that come forth of them? May we not discern, in the passage now cited, how the Holy Ghost passes immediately from the bodies of the saints that slept, to their persons, saying, the bodies of the saints that slept arose, καὶ ἐξελθόντες ἐκ τῶν μνημείων, and they coming out of their graves, after his resurrection, went into the holy city, and appeared unto many? (ver. 53.)

(2.) When God said to Adam, what was also true of his posterity, In sorrow shalt thou eat thy bread, until thou return to the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return: (Gen. iii. 19.) and the Psalmist, of man in general, His breath (or spirit) goeth forth; he returneth to his earth: (Psal. cxlvi. 5.) will any one be tempted, from these personal demonstrative pronouns, thou and he, to say that these words must denote the persons, and not precisely the bodies of men? and thence infer, that the whole person of Adam was taken out of the earth, and was but dust, and that the whole person of man returneth to his earth? If not, why is it argued that the like pronoun οἱ, they, must here denote persons, and not precisely bodies? Are we not told that the word person stands for a thinking intelligent being, that has reason and reflection, and can consider itself as itself? And can they who are in their graves do this? If so, surely they are not dead in them, but buried alive: if they cannot, why must these words οἱ ἐν τοῖς μνημείοις denote persons?

But it is said, that, "according to this interpretation of these words of our Saviour, no other substance being raised but what hears his voice; and no other substance hearing his voice, but what, being called, comes out of the grave; and no other substance coming out of the grave, but what was in the grave, any one must conclude, that the soul, unless it be in the grave, will make no part of the person that is raised."

Ans. To this I answer, that any one may reasonably hence conclude, that the soul makes no raised part of him that is raised, or that it is not called, or raised out of the grave, as the body is; but by what logic can we hence conclude it makes no part of the raised person? For instance, we profess in our creed to believe that Jesus Christ died, and rose again, i. e. from the grave: and, saith St. Peter, This Jesus hath God raised up, having loosed the pains of death, because it was impossible he should be holden of it: (Acts ii. 24. 32.) now because nothing can be raised from the dead, but that which died, nothing can be raised from the grave, but what was laid in it; shall we hence infer, that the soul of the Lord Jesus, or his spirit (which he commended into his Father's hands, and which went to paradise), unless it died, and was in the grave, could make no part of the person which was dead, and was raised from the dead, and out of the grave? When our Lord says, (ver. 28, 29.) they that were in the graves shall come forth to the resurrection of life; and, (ver. 25.) the dead shall live: what can live again but that which was dead? What can have a resurrection to life, but that which had no life; and was not that the body only? Yea, are not these things said in pursuance of what went before: As the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth (or gives life to) them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will. Now what can be raised from the dead, but that which was dead? What can be quickened, or have life given to it, but that which had no life? If then that were the body only, must not the raising of the dead and quickening them, import only the raising and quickening of the body, although this be performed completely by the union of the soul to the raised body?

Secondly, That, in our Saviour's discourse against the sadducees, περὶ τῆς ἀναστάσεως τῶν νεκρῶν, touching the resurrection of the dead, he also speaks of raising that which was dead, i. e. the body, is evident from this, that he saith of them who partake of that resurrection, οὐκ ἔτι δύνανται ἀποθανεῖν, they can die no more; (Matt. xxii. Mark xii. Luke xx. 35, 36.) which can be only spoken of that body which died before.

Thirdly, We read of God τοῦ ζωοποιοῦντος τοὺς νεκρούς, quickening the dead. (Rom. iv. 7.) Now what doth he quicken, but what was dead? What doth he give life to, but that which ceased to have life, that is, the body?

Fourthly, St. Paul saith, We had in ourselves the sentence of death, that we might not trust in ourselves, but in God, τῷ ἐγείροντι τοὺς νεκρούς, who raiseth the dead. (2 Cor. i. 9.) Now what was this sentence of death? Did St. Paul, and his Christian companions, believe the whole man should be killed by their persecutors? or, as their Lord had taught them, that they could kill the body, but could not kill the soul? (Matt. x. 26.) Doth he not say in their names, that that which perished, or was corrupted, was only ὁ ἔξω ἡμῶν ἄνθρωπος, our outward man, (2 Cor. iv. 16.) in opposition to the inward man? That, whilst they lived, they were at home in the body, and that at death they did ἐκδημῆσαι ἐκ τοῦ σώματος, dwell out of the body, (2 Cor. iv. 16.) or, as to the soul, were absent from it? And must not then the sentence of death, they had in themselves, be only this, that their bodies might die by the hands of persecutors; that their outward man might perish by them? And must not then their trust in God, that raiseth the dead, relate to his raising their dead bodies?

Fifthly, The dead in Christ that shall be raised, (1 Thess. iv. 16.) are they that sleep, (ver. 13. 15.) that is, that sleep in the dust: (Dan. xii. 2.) now is it not τὰ σώματα, the bodies of the saints that thus sleep, (Matt. xxvii. 52.) and must not then the apostle speak of them only? Is not this spoken to comfort the Thessalonians, concerning them that were asleep? (ver. 13. 18.) and were they troubled for the souls of them that slept in Jesus? (ver. 14.) or doth the apostle say any thing to comfort them, but that which relates to the body only? And will it not hence follow, that what he there saith, touching the resurrection of the dead, concerneth their dead bodies only?—Thus have I shewed that all the places here cited, as speaking of the resurrection of the dead, refer to the resurrection of the bodies.

§. 8. But farther, had not the Scripture so expressly spoken of raising our mortal bodies, of raising that a spiritual body which was sown a natural body, and proved the dead shall be raised, because this corruptible shall put on incorruption; and could it not be proved, that raising of the dead, and of the bodies of the dead, were in import the same, this article might be established from other passages of Scripture, speaking the same thing in effect; as, v. g.

First, We who have the first-fruits of the Spirit, groan within ourselves, expecting υἱοθεσίαν the sonship, even the redemption of our body. (Rom. viii. 23.) Now what is this redemption τοῦ σώματος ἡμῶν, of our body, but the delivery of it from the bondage of corruption? (ver. 21.) What did they groan for? It was, saith the same apostle, that mortality might be swallowed up of life, (2 Cor. v. 4, 5.) which only is to be done, when this mortal body shall put on immortality, saith the same apostle; this therefore was to be done to accomplish the redemption of the body spoken of; and is not then the redemption, and the resurrection of the body, in effect the same?

Secondly, We expect that Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ from heaven, who shall change τὸ σῶμα τῆς ταπεινώσεως ἡμῶν, our vile body into the likeness of his glorious body. (Phil. iii. 20, 21.) The body therefore to be changed is σῶμα ἡμῶν, our body, the body of our humiliation, so styled, as Methodius saith, because ταπεινοῦται ἀπὸ σφάλματος, it is humbled and made mortal by the fall; or, as Irenæus, (lib. v. cap. 13.) "quod et humiliatur cadens in terram," because it is humbled by falling into the earth. This body is therefore to be thus changed when our Lord cometh down from heaven, that is, at the resurrection of it; for the Lord shall descend from heaven, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. (1 Thess. iv. 16.) Is it not therefore manifest from these words, that our vile mortal bodies, fallen into the earth, or laid in it, shall be raised, and by or at the resurrection, shall be changed into the likeness of Christ's glorious body?

Now hence I argue for the resurrection of the same body thus: If the Scripture teacheth that there shall be a quickening, by raising up our mortal bodies, a redemption, by the resurrection of our bodies, a changing of our bodies, at and by the resurrection, into the likeness of Christ's glorious body, it seems sufficiently to say, there shall be a resurrection of the same body which before was mortal, and a change by it, of the same body which was vile, or humble; and a redemption by it from corruption, of the same body which was formerly in bondage to corruption; for all this must be said of the same body, or not of the same body: if of the same body, then the same body must be raised; if not of the same body, then of another: and how then is it said of our body? How are these other bodies, τὰ θνητὰ σώματα ὑμῶν, your mortal bodies; (Rom. viii. 11.) the redemption of them, the redemption τοῦ σώματος ἡμῶν the change of them, the change τοῦ σώματος ταπεινώσεως ἡμῶν, of our mortal vile bodies?

Secondly, When the apostle saith,* this corruptible, this mortal body, does he mean this body of ours, or does he not? If he does mean this mortal, corruptible body of ours, then he asserts of that, that it shall be raised immortal and incorruptible; if he does not mean it of ours, he must mean it of some other body than ours, and how then is that raised a spiritual body, which was sown a natural body? How doth this mortal put on immortality? How are we concerned in the resurrection of another body? Or what assurance doth it give us, that we shall rise from the dead, seeing, when any of us departs this life, it is our body that dies, and not another's? Yea, why then doth he say, the dead shall rise, and we, that are living, shall be changed?—We shall all be changed; i. e. our vile bodies shall be changed into the likeness of Christ's glorious body; our mortal bodies into immortal; our natural bodies shall be changed by being raised spiritual bodies. Let any man try his utmost skill, and see if he can find any nominative case to σπείρεται, it is sown, used here four times, but σῶμα, body, or understand this of any other body than ours: seeing then the same word is the nominative case to ἐγείρεται, it is raised, which was so to σπείρεται, it is sown, the apostle must be supposed to say, this body of ours is raised in incorruption.

* "Cum dicit istud corruptivum et istud mortale, entem ipsam tenens dicit. Certe istod nisi de comparenti pronuntiasse non potuit: demonstrationis corporalis est verbum." Tertull. de Resurrect. Carn. cap. 51.

§. 9. Arg. 2. To proceed to other Scriptures of like import: All that are in their graves shall come forth, saith Christ, ἐκπορεύσονται ἐκ τῶν μνημείων, they shall come out of the graves in which they were. (John v. 28, 29.) Shall they come forth with the same body which was laid in the grave, or with another? If with the same, then the same body must be raised; if with another, how came these graves to be called their graves, and how are the dead, and they that are in the graves, raised out of them, and not another?

Again, when it is said, the sea gave up the dead, ἐν αὐτῇ in it, and death and hades (the place of the dead) gave up the dead in them: (Rev. xx. 13.) did they give up the same bodies which were laid down in them, or some others? The first is the thing contended for: if they gave up some others, how did they give up the dead that were laid down in them?

To say that a great part of these dead bodies possibly may have undergone variety of changes, and entered into other concretions, even in the bodies of other men, is to me no objection against the raising of the same body, if God hath engaged so to do; for then, as he is able, so is his providence concerned to prevent the entering of one body so into the concretion of another, as to hinder it from being the same body when raised, as it was when laid down in the sea, or grave; and I know what he hath promised he is able to perform.

Lastly, Even the phrase *the resurrection of the dead, and especially the resurrection ἐκ νεκρῶν, from the dead, used Col. i. 18. Rev. i. 15. where Christ is styled the first-born of those that arise from the dead, proves this. For the proper notion of a resurrection consists in this, that it is a substantial change, by which that which was before, and died, or was corrupted, is reproduced the same thing again. I call it a change of that which died, or was corrupted disjunctively, because in the resurrection of our Lord, and of Lazarus, and others whom he raised from the dead, the body was not corrupted. Hence it follows,

(1.) That the soul, which is immortal and incorruptible, cannot be said to rise again, resurrection implying a reproduction; whereas that which, after it was, never ceased to be what it was, cannot be reproduced; and so the resurrection of the dead* can only signify the resurrection of the bodies of the dead, with the reunion of them to those souls to which they were before united, which makes this resurrection advance into a resurrection of life. And seeing that which never fell, cannot be said to be raised up, that which did never die, cannot be restored from death; men cannot properly be said to rise again from the dead, but in respect to that part, or that state, which had fallen and was dead. And as for a man to be born at first signifies the production and union of the essential parts of an individual man, his body and his soul: so to be born again, or born from the dead, implies the restitution and reunion of his body and his soul; a man only by that becoming the same entire person which he was before. Seeing therefore it is acknowledged, that the same persons shall be raised, yea, that there can be nothing plainer than that in the Scripture it is revealed, that the same persons shall be raised, and appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, to answer for what they have done in the body; and the same person cannot be raised without the raising of his body to be united to his soul, much less be raised from the dead, without raising that of him which was dead, which only was his own, and not another body, which before was not part of him: it follows, that, if the same person be raised from the dead, that of them which was dead, or their own bodies, must be raised; and so the meaning of the Scripture, when it saith, the same persons shall be raised, must be this, that their bodies, separated from their souls by death, shall be raised from the dead.

Moreover, by saying that the resurrection is only of that which died, or was corrupted, it appears, that I, with the ancients, only assert the resurrection of that body which died, or was corrupted, and am not in the least concerned for any changes that it underwent before; and so the Scripture forces me to speak, when it styles the resurrection, the quickening of the dead; the vivification of our mortal bodies; the raising of those bodies which were sown in corruption; the coming forth of them which were in their graves; the awakening of them that sleep in the dust of the earth; and saith, that then the sea, death, and hades, shall give up their dead, allowing a resurrection only to them that shall then be dead, and saying only of them that shall be found alive, they shall be changed. And if this only be the true sense of the Scripture in this matter, and this only the resurrection there intended, it cannot be concerned in the least, in what the philosophers say touching the change the body undergoes whilst living, though I am far from thinking, that, to the raising the same bodies, it can be requisite that these bodies should be made up wholly of the same particles, which were once vitally united to their souls in their former life, without the mixture of any other particle of matter: for, were this necessary to the same living body, we could not have the same bodies for a day; and if it be not necessary to make the body continue still the same while we live, it cannot be necessary to make the raised body the same with that which died.

* "'Resurrectionis' vocabulum non aliam rem vendicat quam quæ cecidit: surgere enim potest dici, et quod omnino non cecidit, sed semper retro jacuit; resurgere autem non est nisi ejus quod cecidit; iterum enim surgendo, quia cecidit, resurgere dicitur." Tertull. advers. Marc. lib. v. cap. 9.

Ἀνάστασις γὰρ οὐ καλεῖται τοῦ μὴ πεπτωκότος. Epiph. Hær. 67. sect. 6.

* Ἀνάστασις γὰρ ἡ ἄνωθεν στάσις, τὸ σῶμα δέ ἐστι τὸ φθειρόμενον, καὶ διαλυόμενον· τούτου τοίνυν ἡ ἄνωθεν σύστασις εἰκότως καλεῖται ἀνάστασις· τῆς γὰρ δὴ ἀθανάτου ψυχῆς οὐκ ἀναστασις, ἀλλ' ἐπάνοδος γίγνεται πρὸς τὸ σῶμα. Μακρίων δὲ Κέρδων καὶ ὁ Μάνης, καὶ ὅσοι τῶν σωμάτων οὐκ ἐδέξαντο ἀνάστασιν, ὡς ἀδύνατον παντελῶς τόνδε τὸν βίον ἐξικνεῖσθαι. Theodor. Hær. Fab. lib. v. cap. 19. p. 293. A. B.

That, which here seems to me of greatest moment to be considered, is this, that the dead being raised, that they may be judged according to their works, (Rev. xx. 12.) and that every one may receive τὰ διὰ τοῦ σώματος, the things done by the body, as the instrument of the soul, it is only requisite that the dying body, which is to be raised to the resurrection of condemnation, should be then united to a soul, sentenced hereafter to condemnation for the evils done whilst in the body, and by the body as its instrument, and not repented of, and reformed, before its separation from the body. And, that the body should be raised to the resurrection of life, it is only requisite that, some time or other before its death, it should have been united to a soul that truly repented of all its past sins, and did, from thence forward, do that which was lawful and right whilst they were thus united: now seeing this is the state of all bodies which arise to the resurrection of life, or of condemnation, it is only necessary to this last resurrection that it should be the raising the bodies of men dying in their sins, as in my hypothesis it is; and that the bodies, raised to the resurrection of life, should be the bodies of men dying in the favour of God; it is therefore only necessary their dying bodies should arise. And now the argument arising from these Scriptures, which teach that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, and so of their dead bodies, that every one may receive according to what he hath done in, or by, the body, will run thus:

Either the body is to be raised, and reunited to the soul, to receive rewards and punishments with it, or to be the instrument by which the soul shall be rewarded or punished; or it is not: if not to any of these ends, why is it raised at all? why do good men, by the direction of the Holy Spirit, expect the resurrection of the body? or why is it propounded as their great encouragement, to be steadfast, immoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord? (1 Cor. xv. 58. 1 Thess. iv. 18.) and as a comfort to them that mourn for the dead? Why are the wicked to be punished with everlasting fire, or said to go away after the resurrection into eternal punishment? (Matt. xxv. 41. 46.) Or why doth our Saviour require us, not to fear them who can kill the body, but can do no more, in comparison of him who can destroy both soul and body in hell-fire? (Matt. x. 28.) and say that it is better one of thy members perish, than that thy whole body should be cast into hell-fire? (Matt. v. 29, 30.) If it be to be raised for these ends, it is necessary the same body should be raised which sinned with, or was the instrument of the soul in doing good or evil, it being absurd to think, that one body should sin, and another should be punished for it; or that one body should suffer, and another should be crowned for it: and, for any thing I can discern to the contrary, we might as well appear before Christ's judgment-seat without any body at all, as without that which we deposited. Let it now be remembered, that the body, in which the impenitent is to suffer, is only the same body which was laid down in the grave, and then the arguments usually offered to invalidate his suffering in his own body, or in the same body in which he sinned, will be almost as strong to excuse a murderer from suffering in his body for a murder committed twenty years ago, as to the purposes they are used in this case: nay, I have met with nothing said in this affair, which does not prove as strongly that the body of our blessed Lord, born of the Virgin Mary, after he had sucked and digested that milk into chyle, was not the same body which was born of the Virgin, as not having all the same individual particles, and then, when he grew in stature, he grew into another body, and so into a body which came not from the loins of Abraham, and was not of the seed of David according to the flesh; and that, when the Jews destroyed his body, they destroyed not that body of which he spake, when he said, Destroy this body, because the body they destroyed had by perspiration lost, and by nutrition gained, many particles.

§. 10. I come now to answer the objections against this article; viz.

"The appellation the apostle bestows on him that enters into this inquiry, Whether the dead shall have the same bodies or no? seems not much to encourage him in that inquiry; nor will he, by the remainder of St. Paul's answer, find the determination of the apostle to be much in favour of the very same body, unless the being told, that the body sown is not the body that shall be; that the body raised is as different from that which was laid down, as the flesh of a man is from the flesh of beasts, fishes, and birds; or as the sun, moon, and stars, are different from one another; or as different as a corruptible, weak, natural, mortal body is from an incorruptible, powerful, spiritual, immortal body; and, lastly, as a body, that is flesh and blood, is from a body that is not flesh and blood; for flesh and blood cannot (says St. Paul, in this very place) inherit the kingdom of God; unless, I say, all this, which is contained in St. Paul's words, can be supposed to be the way to deliver this as an article of faith, which is required to be believed of every one."

Now to this I answer:

First, That it seems to me a great mistake, to say the apostle in that appellation, Thou fool, reflects upon him that inquires, Whether the same body which was dead shall be raised or no? He had already entirely dispatched that question against those philosophers, who said *there is no resurrection, (ver. 12.) and that the resurrection of the body was a thing impossible, (ver. 15.) He begins the inquiry, not about the truth of the resurrection, but about the manner in which it shall be made, and the qualities which the raised bodies should have, asking the question of philosophers,† ποίῳ σώματι, with what kind of bodies, or with what qualified bodies do they come? For they conceiving that the body was the prison of the soul, and that it was her punishment to be tied to it, thought we could not be truly happy, till, by death, we were delivered from it; they therefore judged it an unjust and an unworthy thing, for God to raise these bodies to be united to the souls of good men; and therefore Celsus saith, the hope of the resurrection of the flesh is the hope of worms, a filthy and abominable thing, and so a thing which God neither will nor can do. (See all this proved from their own words, in the note upon this verse.) Now to this objection the apostle returns a full and satisfactory answer, by shewing the happy change which will then pass upon the raised body,

* "Hinc dicit Plinius ne Deum quidem posse omnia, nec mortales æternitate donare, nec revocare defunctos," Hist. Nat. lib. ii. cap. 7. "Negant hæc fieri posse." Lactant. lib. vii. cap. 22.

† "Utrum sine corpore, an cum corporibus? et corporibus quibus, ipsisne, an innovatis resurgatur?" Cecil. apud Min. p. 11.

and the excellent qualities it shall then have, and which were wanting to it, whilst it was on earth.*

Secondly, When the apostle adds, ver. 37. That which thou sowest (when thou sowest it) is not that body which shall be (again produced), but bare (or naked) grain; it is evident he speaketh there not of the body of man, but of the body of wheat, or of some other grain, and is there still pursuing the same question, With what kind of bodies do they come? answering, as it was common with the Jews to do, by this very similitude, to a like question among them, viz. Whether the body should arise naked, or clothed upon?† and therefore saith, thou sowest not the body which shall be, i. e. a body clothed with a shell, as in peas, beans, and lentils; or with a hull, or chaff, as in wheat, rye, barley; but γυμνὸν κόκκον, naked grain, whereas God raiseth it up clothed: and so, saith he, will it be with our bodies at the resurrection; they will not be raised γυμνὰ naked, but ἐνδυσάμενα, clothed upon, for this corruptible body must put on incorruption. (2 Cor. v. 2—4.) This being then the whole intendment of this similitude, it ought not to be urged any farther.

Thirdly, The same is evidently the apostle's purpose in the following verses, which in sense run thus:

Ver. 39. (And as) all flesh is not the same (manner or kind of) flesh, but there is one kind of flesh of men, another (kind of) flesh of beasts, another of fishes, and another of birds:

Ver. 40. (And as there is a like difference in the qualities of bodies, for) there are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial; but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another:

Ver. 41. (And as in the celestial bodies) there is one glory of the sun, and another of the moon, and another of the stars (among themselves); for one star differeth from another star in glory:

Ver. 42. So also is (it, as to) the resurrection of the dead, (the body raised being in qualities much different from the body we now have, for) it is sown in corruption, (frail, mortal, subject to putrefaction,) it is raised in incorruption, &c. Now from the words thus paraphrased, let it be noted;

First, That the apostle says not, that the body raised is as different from that which is laid down, as the flesh of man is from the flesh of beasts, fishes, and birds; or, as the sun, moon, and stars, are different from one another; but only as the flesh of men differs in quality from that of beasts, fishes, and birds, and as the sun, moon, and stars, differ in their glorious qualities from one another; so do our raised bodies differ in quality from those earthly bodies we at present have; as is evident from the ensuing words, in which he mentions this difference betwixt them in qualities. Note,

Secondly, That in the instances of flesh of man and beasts, and of celestial and terrestrial bodies, and of celestial bodies among themselves here used by the apostle, there is not only a difference as to qualities, but also as to the subject-matter, that being in them only specifically, but not numerically the same; whereas it is not so as to our bodies sown and raised, they differing only as to the qualities from the body sown, but not as to the subject-matter, it being this corruptible body which must put on incorruption. As therefore the different qualities of divers souls, good and bad, learned and unlearned, made glorious and miserable, infer a difference in substance, because the subject of those qualities is not the same; but when the same soul becomes virtuous and learned, all this new ornament of grace and knowledge, and even its advancement to a state of perfect happiness and glory, makes it not cease to be the same soul still: so it is here as to the difference of glorious qualities, the raised body hath above the body sown. I therefore,

Thirdly, Grant that the raised body is as different from the earthly body we at present have, as a corruptible, weak, natural, mortal body is from an incorruptible, powerful, spiritual, immortal body; but then the subject of these different qualities being still the same, this difference hinders not its being the same body still, since otherwise Christ's body, being also raised an incorruptible, powerful, immortal body, could not be the same with that in which he suffered; and if his body is still the same that suffered, and was raised from the dead, then a like change of our vile bodies will not hinder their being still the same.

But it is still objected, that "the body raised is as different from the bodies we at present have, and lay down in the grave, as a body, that is flesh and blood, is from a body that is not flesh and blood; for flesh and blood (saith St. Paul) cannot inherit the kingdom of God."

Ans. To this I answer, (1.) ab absurdo, that if even this hinder the body raised from being the same body, our Saviour cannot now have the same body with that which he suffered in, or which was raised from the dead; for doubtless he is entered into, and doth inherit, the kingdom of God: if therefore flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, and the body which hath not flesh and blood, cannot be the same body with that which hath flesh and blood; our Saviour's glorified body cannot be the same body, which was raised from the dead, or in which he suffered.

Secondly, I answer, that flesh and blood do, in the Scripture language, denote the weakness and the frailty of that which is compounded of them, as when it is said, we wrestle not with flesh and blood, i. e. weak frail men, Eph. vi. 12. (See Matt. xvi. 17. Gal. i. 16. Heb. ii. 14. Ecclus. xiv. 18.) And thus it is true, that flesh and blood, that is, such weak frail bodies as they are, which here consist of flesh and blood, unchanged into incorruptible bodies, or unclothed upon with their celestial bodies, which will keep them from mortality, or a possibility of corruption, (ver. 48. 49. 2 Cor. v. 1, 2.) cannot inherit the kingdom of God; and therefore the apostle adds, that this mortal must put on immortality, this corruptible put on incorruption, and so it shall be changed, as to its qualities: but then I have shewed that this change from mortal and corruptible, to an immortal and incorruptible body, hinders not its being still the same body, that is, the same in substance as it was before.

Thirdly, I think it is evident, from the apostle's words, that the bodies of good men, then living, shall have the same qualities with the bodies of them who are raised from the dead, for they also shall inherit the kingdom of God;

---

* "Non considerat apostolus in hac similitudine diversitatem rei, sed qualitatis et conditionis, quod et quæstio requirebat, quasi corpore venient. Itaque fallentur, qui, ex his apostoli verbis, corpora non eadem secundum substantiam resuscitanda esse colligunt: quod qui dicunt, resurrectionem revera tollunt, non enim resurgit nisi id ipsum quod cecidit." Esthius.

† Pirk. Eliez. cap. 33. p. 80.

they shall have spiritual, powerful, immortal bodies; their bodies, saith he, shall be changed; for this corruptible must put on incorruption: and yet can it be thought that this change shall amount to the destruction of that body they then had, and the production of another body, as it must do, if they cease to have the same body which they had before this change? If it do not, it is hence evident that the body may still be the same body, notwithstanding the great change which shall then pass upon it.

In a word, what the apostle says here, evidently concerns only the bodies of good men, and so gives us no cause to think the bodies of the wicked shall be changed at all; and if the wicked shall be raised with the same bodies to the resurrection of condemnation, why not the good with the same bodies to the resurrection of life?

CHAP. I.

1. PAUL, called to be an apostle (or, the called apostle) of Jesus Christ through the will of God, and Sosthenes our brother,

2. Unto [1] the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints (or, the saints called), [2] with all that in every place [3] call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, [4] (yea) both theirs and ours:

3. [5] Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

4. I thank my God always on your behalf, [6] for the grace of God which is given you by (or, in) Jesus Christ;

5. That in every thing ye are (or, have been) enriched by him, [7] in all utterance (of tongues), and in all knowledge (of Divine mysteries, or, in the gift of prophecy, 1 Cor. xiv.)

6. [8] Even as (by these gifts) the testimony (we gave) of (or, doctrine concerning) Christ was confirmed in you (or, established among you):

7. [9] So that ye come behind (the other churches) in no gift; waiting for the coming (or revelation) of our Lord Jesus Christ:

8. [10] Who shall confirm you to the end, that you may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ.

9. (For) God is faithful, by whom ye were called to the fellowship (or communion) of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord. (i. e. That God, by whom ye are called, is faithful to perform his part, in preserving you blameless to that day, or to confer upon you the promised inheritance.)

10. Now, I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that you all speak the same thing (owning and teaching the same doctrine which you have received, 1 Cor. xi. 2. xv. 1. Rom. xvi. 17. in love and unity), and that there be no divisions (or schisms) among you; but (that) ye be perfectly joined [11] together in the same mind, and in the same judgment (in the same belief, and in the same kind affections, one towards another).

11. For it hath been declared to me of you, my brethren, by them that are of the house of Chloe, that there are contentions among you.

12. Now this I say (or mean, by charging you with these contentions), that every one of you saith, (one) [12] I am (a follower) of Paul; and (another), I of Apollos; and (a third), I of Cephas; and (a fourth), I [13] of Christ.

13. (Why do you not all say the same thing? viz. I am of Christ, iii. 23.) Is Christ divided? (Was it one Christ that sent, and enabled Paul; another that sent Peter to preach the gospel to you? Is not one and the same Christ preached to you by us all? or is his body divided? 2 Cor. xi. 4.) Was Paul (or any other but Christ Jesus) crucified for you (that you should be baptized into their death, as Christians are into the death of Christ)? or were you baptized in the name of Paul? (so as to be called the disciples of Paul.)

14. I thank God (whose providence so ordered it) that I baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius;

15. Lest any should say that I had baptized in my own name.

16. And I baptized also the household of Stephanas: besides, [14] I know not whether I baptized any other.

17. For [15] Christ (when he called me) sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel (to the gentiles; and that) not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ (i. e. the doctrine of Christ crucified) should be made of none effect (by that means).

18. For the preaching of the cross (or, of a crucified Jesus, in this plain manner), is (only) to them that perish (by rejecting it, because not attended with this human wisdom,) foolishness: but unto us who are saved (by it) it is (evidently) the power of God; (we embracing this faith, because it is confirmed by demonstrations of the Spirit and power, ii. 4.

19. Whereas the preaching of it, in the words of human wisdom, would render it of none effect;) for it is written, I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent, (Isa. xxix. 14. as he hath already done: for)

20. [16] Where is (now the wisdom of) the wise (philosophers among the gentiles)? where is (the wisdom of) the scribe (the interpreter of the law, or teacher of traditions among the Jews)? where is the disputer of this world (or the searcher into the secrets of nature, or into the sense of the Scripture)? hath not God (by this dispensation) made (or declared to be) foolish the wisdom of this world?

21. [17] For (to begin with the philosophers) [18] after that, in the wisdom of God (discernible in his works of creation and providence), the world by (all its) wisdom knew not (the true) God, (so as to glorify him as God, and to be thankful to him for his blessings, Rom. i. 21.) it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching (as they think fit to style it) to save them that believe (in a crucified Jesus, thus preached to them.

22. Which salvation, thus tendered, the wise men of the world and the Jewish doctors will not accept;) for the Jews require [19] a sign, and the Greeks seek after (profound) wisdom (to induce them to believe):

23. But (or, nevertheless) we preach Christ crucified, (though his crucifixion be) [20] unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and [21] to the Greeks foolishness;

24. (For this he is to infidels only:) but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, (he is) Christ the power of God (in the signs and wonders which are wrought by faith in Christ for confirmation of this doctrine, and so he gives the sign the Jews require), and the wisdom of God,

(in the manifold and Divine wisdom discovered in this dispensation for the saving lost man, ver. 30. and so answers the Greeks' request for wisdom.

25. I say, the power and the wisdom of God;) because the foolishness of God (i. e. the way of God, which is esteemed foolishness by the Greeks) is wiser than (all the wisdom of) men (and much to be preferred before it); and the weakness of God (i. e. that way of propagating man's salvation, which is weak in their eyes) is stronger than (the power of) men: (for the weapons of our warfare are mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds, and confounding all the strength, policy, and wisdom of the world opposed against it, 2 Cor. x. 3, 4.)

26. For you see (Gr. look upon) your calling, brethren, (and you will discern) how (agreeably to these things the Divine wisdom hath so ordered it), that [22] not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are (either) called (by, or made use of to propagate, the gospel):

27. But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world (that simple way of instructing mankind which they call foolishness, and those unlearned apostles whom they represent as fools,) to confound the wise (philosophers, so that they shall not be able to gainsay or resist the wisdom with which they speak, Luke xxi. 15. Acts vi. 10.) and God hath chosen the weak things of the world (unarmed fishermen, tent-makers, assisted with no human force,) to confound the things that are mighty; (to break through all the opposition that the kings and rulers of the world do make against them, to pull down the strong holds, cast down the reasonings, level the heights of the philosophers, who do exalt themselves against the knowledge of Christ, 2 Cor. x. 4, 5.)

28. And (he hath chosen the) base things of the world, [23] and things which are despised hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not (i. e. the gentiles who are esteemed base, and looked upon as nothing by the Jews), to bring to nought (Gr. to abolish) things that are: (to become God's church and people, and so to cause the Jewish church and economy to cease, Rom. xi. 15. 17. Phil. iii. 3.)

29. That no flesh should (have cause to) glory in his presence (either of their wisdom, birth, or privileges.

30. Not you who are advanced to this happy state;) for of him are you in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us [24] wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption:

31. That, according as it is written (Isa. lxv. 16. viz.) He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord (so it may be done by us Christians).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. I.

[1] Ver. 2. ΤΗῖ ἐκκλησίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ, The church of God.] The sanctified in Christ Jesus, the saints called, seem here to be words of the same import, denoting such as are called out of the world, and separated from others, through faith in Christ, to be a peculiar people to God, as the Jews were before: all Christians being, by virtue of this calling, a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people: (1 Pet. ii. 9.) though many members of the church of Corinth, and of other churches, wanted the inward sanctification of the Holy Spirit. So that the word saints in many places of the Acts and the Epistles, is as large as the word Christians, and stands opposed not to the unsound Christians, but to the heathen world; Acts ix. 13. 32. 41. xxvi. 10. 1 Cor. vi. 1, 2. (See here, 1 Cor. xiv. 33. xvi. 1. 15. 2 Cor. viii. 4. ix. 1. 12. xiii. 13.)

[2] With all that in every place.] Hence it appears that St. Paul's Epistles, though occasionally written and directed to particular churches, were designed for the use of all Christians.

[3] Τοῖς ἐπικαλουμένοις ὄνομα Κυρίου, That call upon the name of the Lord Jesus.] This, in the New Testament, is the character of a Christian, that he is one that calleth on his name, Acts ix. 14. 21. xxii. 16. Rom. x. 12, 13. 2 Tim. ii. 22. And that these words ought not to be rendered passively, viz. All that are called by the name of Christ, is evident from the Septuagint, who still translate the phrase יקרא בשם, which is active, by ἐπικαλέσεται ἐν ὀνόματι Θεοῦ, or ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου, i. e. He shall call on the name of the Lord. (See Gen. iv. 26. xii. 8. xiii. 4. xxi. 33. xxv. 25. Psal. lxxix. 6. xcix. 6. cxvi. 4. Isa. lxv. 1. Lam. iii. 55. Zech. xiii. 9.) But when the phrase runs thus, שמך נקרא, that is, thy name is called upon, or, we are called by thy name, it is rendered thus, τὸ ὄνομά σου ἐπικέκληται ἐφ' ἡμᾶς, Deut. xxviii. 10. 1 Kings viii. 43. 2 Chron. vii. 14. Isa. iv. 1. lxiii. 19. Jer. xiv. 9. xv. 16. Dan. ix. 18, 19. Amos ix. 12. (See the note on Acts ix. 2. xxii. 16.)

Secondly, We are expressly told that the disciples were first called Christians at Antioch, Acts xi. 26. Now, before this time, we find not only Stephen ἐπικαλουμένον, calling upon this name, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit, (Acts vii. 59.) and St. Paul bid to wash away his sins, calling upon the name of the Lord, or ἐπικαλούμενος τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου, (Acts xxii. 16.) but we find this to have been the character of a disciple, or a convert to the faith of Christ, that he was one that called upon the name of the Lord. Thus Ananias speaks to the Lord Jesus of St. Paul, He is one who hath received power from the high-priest, to bind τοὺς ἐπικαλουμένους τὸ ὄνομά σου, all that called upon thy name, (Acts ix. 14.) and of St. Paul, converted, it is said, that he had destroyed τοὺς ἐπικαλουμένους τὸ ὄνομα τοῦτο, them that called upon this name in Jerusalem, (ver. 21.)

Thirdly, The reverend Dr. Hammond, who here translates this phrase passively, doth elsewhere translate it actively, the context forcing him so to do. So Rom. x. 13. Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord, i. e. pray and adhere to Christ, shall be saved; and, Acts ix. 14. He hath authority to bind all that call upon thy name, i. e. saith he, that publicly own the worship of Christ. (Acts xxii. 16.)

[4] Yea, both theirs and ours.] All the Greek interpreters, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Œcumenius, Theophylact, observe, that the words, theirs and ours, are to be connected with the word Lord, τὸ δὲ αὐτῶν τε καὶ ἡμῶν τῷ Κυρίῳ συνήρμοσται; and so the sense is this, The Lord, I say, both of me who writ, and you to whom I write.

[5] Ver. 3. Χάρις ὑμῖν, &c.] It is unadvisedly said by some, that this is a wish, and not a prayer. The full import of the phrase is, as St. Peter, 2 Pet. i. 2. and St. Jude, ver. 2. and Polycarp* do cite it, viz. Grace and peace be multiplied to you from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. Now, is not this to desire for them grace and peace from God the Father, and consequently to pray for it? Why,

* Proœmio Epist. ad Philip.

therefore, is it not also to desire the same blessings from God the Son? Are they not both the givers of grace and peace to the church? Doth not Christ know all the necessities of his church in this kind? Doth not he who searcheth the heart and reins, (Rev. ii. 24.) know the desires of his servants? And why then should they only wish these things from I know not whom, and not to pray to him who is the giver of grace and peace for them? Especially when they have St. Paul's example for it in these words, For this thing I besought the Lord (Christ) thrice, and he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee. (2 Cor. xii. 8—10.) And again, The Lord Jesus Christ, and God the Father, who hath loved us, and given us eternal consolation, and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts, and confirm you in every good word and work. (1 Thess. iii. 11, 12. 2 Thess. ii. 16.)

[6] Ver. 4. Ἐπὶ τῇ χάριτι τοῦ Θεοῦ, For the grace of God.] Here the context seems to restrain this phrase to the favour of God shewed to the Corinthians, in vouchsafing these spiritual gifts, which is a frequent import of this phrase in Scripture. So Rom. xii. 6. Having gifts differing according to the grace (of God) that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith, &c. Eph. iv. 7, 8. To every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. 1 Pet. iv. 10. As every one hath received the gift, so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God. 2 Cor. i. 12. Not in fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to you-ward. Our preaching to you being not in the words of human wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit, and in power. (1 Cor. ii. 4.) Thus, to sing with grace in the heart, (Eph. v. 19. Col. iii. 16.) is, say the ancients,* to sing, using the spiritual gift vouchsafed to them by the Holy Ghost: which interpretation is confirmed from the spiritual psalms, hymns, and songs, there mentioned. (See 1 Cor. xiv. 15. Eph. vi. 18.) And this is very suitable to the language of the Jews, who, when the Hebrew mentions "chen," grace, do render it, the Spirit of prophecy: so Psal. xlv. 2. Grace is poured into thy lips. Datus est Spiritus prophetiæ in labiis tuis, saith the Chaldee.

[7] Ver. 5. Ἐν παντὶ λόγῳ.] Esthius saith, this ought not to be interpreted of the gift of tongues, because λόγος in Scripture never bears that sense. But (1.) it is certain, from ver. 7. that it is χάρισμα, a gift; and it is joined with faith and knowledge, which are gifts, 2 Cor. viii. 7. and cannot well be referred to any other gift vouchsafed then to the church. And (2.) the word γνῶσις relating to prophecy, or the knowledge of mysteries, was usually attended with the gift of tongues: (see Acts xix. 6.) and though we find not the word λόγος absolutely put in this sense, yet λόγος σοφίας, the word of wisdom, and λόγος γνώσεως, the word of knowledge, are reckoned among spiritual gifts, 1 Cor. xii. 8. All this, indeed, with Mr. Le Clerc, passes for mere niceties; and he saith, it is more natural to understand by λόγος, the knowledge of religion, though that, as he confesses, is the import of the following word γνῶσις, knowledge: so that, according to this exposition, the apostle thanks God here, and 2 Cor. viii. 7. commends them for abounding in the knowledge, and in the knowledge of religion. Besides, the knowledge of religion cannot be called grace in the sense given of that phrase, ver. 4. nor was the testimony of Christ confirmed to the Corinthians, (ver. 6.) by that, but by the gifts of the Holy Spirit.

[8] Ver. 6. Καθὼς, Even as.] This particle signifies sometimes when, as Acts vii. 17. καθὼς δὲ ἤγγιζεν ὁ χρόνος, but when the time drew nigh.

[9] Ver. 7, 8. From these two verses it is to be observed, first, that the Corinthians were abundantly replenished with the gifts of the Holy Ghost, the gifts of tongues and knowledge, (ver. 5.) that they came behind the other churches in no gift, (ver. 7.)

Secondly, That they obtained these gifts by Jesus Christ, and through faith in him, (ver. 4.)

Thirdly, That by these, the doctrine of Christ, the testimony of the apostles concerning him, that he was raised from the dead, and become the author of salvation to them that believe, was confirmed to them, (ver. 6.)

Fourthly, That by these gifts, and by this earnest of the Spirit, they had encouragement to expect, or wait for, the second coming of the Lord.

[10] Ver. 8. Βεβαιώσει ὑμᾶς, Who shall also confirm you to the end, &c.] These words are by the ancients thus interpreted, viz. Who, in that day of the Lord Jesus which you expect, will confirm you for ever blameless. And this is suitable to his prayer, that Christians may be unblamable in the day of the Lord, Phil. i. 9, 10. 1 Thess. iii. 12, 13. v. 23. for, say they, God is faithful, who hath promised to them that obey the gospel υἱοθεσίαν, the adoption, that is, the redemption of the body, (Rom. viii. 23.) or, that they shall be partakers of that kingdom and glory to which he hath called them, 1 Thess. ii. 12. Others thus, He will do all that is requisite on his part, quod suarum est partium, * to render you unblamable to the end; so that you shall not fail of it through any want of Divine grace necessary to that end, or any unfaithfulness on God's part to his promise, who hath already reconciled you to himself, through the death of Christ, to present you holy and unblamable, and unreprovable in his sight; if you continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, Col. i. 21—23. (See Phil. i. 6. Heb. iii. 6. 14.) That the apostle speaks not here of any promise of perseverance made to the elect only among the Corinthians, is evident, (1.) because he plainly speaks to the whole body of the church, to the church of God which was in Corinth, to all that call upon the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. And (2.) he speaks not only of their being preserved from falling away finally; but of their being preserved unblamable, whereas it is certain, the elect are not always so preserved.

[11] Ver. 10. Ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ νοΐ, That ye be perfectly joined in the same mind and judgment.] † This can be no farther the matter of an exhortation than it is in our power to obey it; seeing then it is not in any man's power to change his settled judgment, or to think otherwise upon our entreaty, because our exhortation gives no conviction to the understanding, it follows, that this exhortation must only be to do what was in the power of the Corinthians; viz. (1.) to prevail with them to lay aside their strife, envy, and divisions, (1 Cor. iii. 3.) and the sad consequents of them, debate, wrath, backbiting, whispering, swelling, tumult; (2 Cor. xii. 20.) and to this the reason of this exhortation leads, Be of one mind and judgment; for I hear there be contentions among you, (ver. 11.) And (2.) to engage them unanimously to own the doctrine they had received, and he had preached to them, (1 Cor. xv. 1.) which, if they were so minded, might easily be done, since they so lately had received it, the heads of it were so few, (1 Cor. xv. 3.) and it was so easy for them to consult the apostles in their doubtings of the sense of what he had delivered. But at this distance of time from the first discovery of the Christian faith, and after it is become a system of very many, and those disputable opinions, for the truth of which we have now no apostle, no living and infallible judge of controversies, to consult, if it be not sufficient to preserve unity in the church, that men heartily believe all the articles of the apostles' creed, which are plainly delivered in Scripture, and live peaceably and quietly together, following after peace and charity with all that call upon the Lord Jesus out of a pure heart, (2 Tim. ii. 22.) and avoiding any separations from their brethren, where nothing sinful is enjoined to be believed, or done, to hold communion with them, I doubt there will be little union in the church of God.

[12] Ver. 12. Ἐγώ εἰμι Παύλου, I am of Paul, &c.] Of the gentile part of the church of Corinth; some preferred St. Paul, as being their spiritual father, who in Christ Jesus had begotten them through the gospel: (1 Cor. iv. 14, 15.) others preferred Apollos, as being an eloquent man, and mighty in the Scriptures: (Acts xviii. 24.) the Jewish Christians preferring St. Peter, as the chief apostle of the circumcision out of the territories of Judea. That this is here said, not by a fiction of names or persons, under which the apostle taxed the heads of the sects among the Corinthians; but that they really divided upon these accounts, is evident, first, from St. Paul's thanking God that he baptized so few of them, lest they should have occasion to say he baptized in his own name, and so made disciples to himself; secondly, from these words, Let no man glory in men; for all are yours, whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, (iii. 21, 22.)

[13] I am of Christ.] Epiphanius* observes of the Ebionites, that they pleaded for the circumcision of Christians, from the example of Christ, who was circumcised, because the disciple was to be as his Master; and so the import of these words may be this, Others say, I am for the circumcision of the gentiles, that they may be like Christ.

[14] Ver. 16. Οὐκ οἶδα, I know not.] Therefore his inspiration, or Divine assistance in writing his Epistles, did not reach to an information in such things as these, but only to direct him in all the truth he was to teach unto the churches. (See xvi. 7. 1 Pet. v. 12.)

[15] Ver. 17. Οὐ γὰρ ἀπέστειλέ με Χριστὸς βαπτίζειν, Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach, &c.] i. e. When he appeared himself, and after sent Ananias to him, he expressly sent him to preach to the gentiles, (Acts xxii. 21.) and (xxvi. 16, 17.) to bear his name before the gentiles: (Acts ix. 15.) but, in that threefold rehearsal of his commission, there is no mention made of his being sent to baptize; nor was it needful, after the general commission given to Christ's apostles for that end: (Matt. xxviii. 19.) that was not, say the Greek expositors, his great business; for * to baptize is easy to any who is admitted to sacred orders; but to preach the gospel requires a Divine revelation, and great assistance of the power of God. Hence Peter himself preaches to Cornelius and his kinsmen, but commands them to be baptized by others; (Acts x. 48.) and this gospel he sent me to preach, not with the wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect: men not ascribing the prevailing of it to the power of God, but to the persuasion of human wisdom; God not approving, (ver. 19.) and therefore not assisting the preaching of the gospel in that way. Ἴσως γὰρ, εἰ κάλλος καὶ ὑπερβολὴν φράσεως, ὡς τὰ παρ' Ἕλλησι θαυμαζόμενα, εἶχεν ἡ γραφὴ, ὑπενόησεν ἄν τις οὐ τὴν ἀλήθειαν κεκρατηκέναι τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἐμφαινομένην ἀκολουθίαν, καὶ τὸ τῆς φράσεως κάλλος ἐψυχαγωγηκέναι τοὺς ἀκροωμένους. Orig. Philocal. p. 25.

[16] Ver. 20. Ποῦ σοφός;] That is, What hath been done by the wisdom of the philosophers, or by the Jewish doctors, or by the searchers into nature's secrets, to bring men to the true knowledge of God, and of his will? Hath not God discovered their wisdom to be but folly, in comparison of this way which he hath chosen to bring men to the knowledge of himself? The disputer of this world is by St. Jerome rendered, Causarum naturalium scrutator, Com. in Gal. iii. and so the naturalists are styled by the Jews חכמי המחקר,† "sapientes scrutationis," the searchers into the secrets of nature; though I conceive the apostle here doth rather understand, the Midrashim, or the disputers in the Jewish schools and academies, touching their traditions. That the σοφὸς, i. e. the wise man, mentioned here, refers not to the Cochmin, or wise men of the Jews, but to the philosophers among the gentiles, is evident; for that the wisdom of the wise, (ver. 19.) is the wisdom of the heathen world, appears from ver. 21. where it is said, the world through wisdom knew not God, which is true only of the gentiles, not of the Jews. It is therefore reasonable to conceive the wise, in the twentieth verse, should signify the same persons: so doth St. Paul interpret the wise in these words, I am a debtor to the Greek, and to the barbarian; to the wise, and the unwise. (Rom. i. 14.) So Chrysostom, Theodoret,‡ Œcumenius, Theophylact, upon the place, saying, That by the wise the apostle understands the man adorned with the verbosity and eloquence of the Greeks. I have not been solicitous to shew the agreement of the words of St. Paul here, with those of Isaiah, xxxiii. 18. because I find not that St. Paul intendeth here to cite them.

[17] Ver. 21. Here two things are to be learned, (1.) That from the creation, beauty, order, and grandeur of the world, and the direction of all things in it to an end, and the fitting them with parts and instruments adapted best to the obtaining that end, it might be known, that the Creator of the world was God alone, and so was only to be glorified as God, Psal. xix. 1, 2. civ. 24. cxxxvi. 5. Jer. x. 12. li. 15. Rom. i. 19, 20. (2.) That the gospel was sent into the world, that they, who did not know the true God acceptably by the true light of nature, might do it by the light of that revelation, which made such a bright and glorious manifestation of the power, wisdom, justice, and goodness of God, which they whom Satan had not blinded must discern. (2 Cor. iv. 4.)

[18] Ver. 21. Ἐπειδὴ γὰρ. Ver. 22. ἐπειδὴ καὶ.] The argument here seems to lie thus; The wise men among the Greeks, the scribe or interpreter of Scripture among the Jews, are by this dispensation convinced of folly, and insufficiency to give men the knowledge of saving truth; ἐπειδὴ γὰρ, for, since the world by all its wisdom could not obtain the right knowledge of God, he by this dispensation hath given this saving knowledge to believers. And ἐπειδὴ καὶ, seeing also the unbelieving Jews for confirmation of this doctrine require a sign, and the Greeks seek after human wisdom, it is on that account a scandal to those Jews, and in the estimation of the unbelieving Greeks is foolishness: yet is he, and his doctrine, to the believing Greeks, Christ the wisdom of God, they seeing in it wisdom sufficient to engage them to believe this doctrine; and, to the believing Jews, the power of God, they being convinced of its truth by the signs wrought in confirmation of it, and with great reason do they so esteem it: for what the unbelieving Greeks deem foolishness, hath more of sound reason in it, than all the wisdom of the Greeks, or those who are accounted wise men by the Jews, have shewn; they, who by them are deemed fools, having discovered that wisdom of God in a mystery, which they with all their wisdom never knew, and that, which they style weakness, is attended with such a visible power of God, as enables it, without human power or wisdom, to prevail over all the strength and wisdom which Jew or gentile can oppose against it.

[19] Ver. 22. Σημεῖον, A sign.] From heaven, such as was that of Moses, giving them bread from heaven, (John vi. 30, 31.) that in the time of Joshua, when the sun stood still, (x. 13.) or of Elijah, who brought down fire from heaven to consume the offering, (1 Kings xviii. 38.) and to consume the captains and their fifties; (2 Kings i. 10. 12. Luke ix. 54.) the Son of man being to come in the clouds of heaven, as he did at the destruction of Jerusalem, (Dan. vii. 13. Matt. xxiv. 30.) and to give signs from heaven, (Joel ii. 30.) as he did at the day of Pentecost, (Acts ii. 2.) and as God did by a voice from heaven at our Saviour's baptism, (Matt. iii. 17.) at his transfiguration, (Matt. xvii. 5.) and at his preaching. (John xii. 28, 29.)

[20] Ver. 23. Ἰουδαίοις μὲν σκάνδαλον, Unto the Jews a stumbling-block.] Your Jesus (saith Trypho) having by this fallen under the extremest curse of the law of God, we cannot sufficiently admire how you can expect any good from God, who place your hopes in a man that was crucified, ἐπ' ἄνθρωπον σταυρωθέντα. (Dial. cum Just. p. 227. 249. 317.) And again, We doubt of your Christ, who was so ignominiously crucified; for our law styles every one that is crucified, accursed. Hence, by way of ignominy, they still call our Saviour Talui, * "suspensum," one hanged upon the tree.

[21] To the Greeks foolishness.] They count us mad (saith Justin Martyr), * that after the immutable and eternal God, the Father of all things, we give the second place ἀνθρώπῳ σταυρωθέντι, to a man that was crucified.—It is wicked and abominable (saith Celsus †).—The wise men of the world insult over us (saith St. Austin ‡), and ask, Where is your understanding, who worship him for a God who was crucified? So M. Felix, p. 9. Arnob. lib. i. p. 20. Lact. lib. iv. cap. 16. Euseb. lib. iii. de Vita Const. cap. 1.

[22] Ver. 26. Οὐ πολλοὶ σοφοὶ, Not many wise.] This seems to be spoken in a direct opposition to that celebrated maxim of the Jews, That prophecy resides not, but upon a wise, a strong, and a rich man.

[23] Ver. 28. Καὶ τὰ μὴ ὄντα, &c.] To confirm the explication of these words given in the paraphrase, let it be noted,

First, That the apostle in this chapter often speaks conjunctly of the Jew and gentile, interweaving them together in his discourse: so ver. 20. he speaks of the wise men of the Greeks, and then of the scribes among the Jews; ver. 22. of the Jews requiring signs, and the Greeks wisdom; of Christ crucified, being to the Jews a stumbling-block, and to the gentiles foolishness. So here, ver. 27. he seems to speak of the gospel, preached by the apostles in a plain familiar way, and by them deemed weakness, and styled foolishness, as confounding all the wisdom and the power of the Greeks; and, ver. 28. of the gentile church succeeding and abolishing that of the Jews. Note therefore,

Secondly, That the Jews looked upon themselves as the only εὐγενεῖς persons of true nobility, as being of the stock of Abraham; even the poorest Israelite (saith R. Akibah) is to be looked upon as a gentleman, as being the son of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. But the gentiles they horribly despised, as the base people of the earth, not fit to be conversed with by them, they being in their law styled οὐκ ἔθνος, not a nation, λαὸς ὁ τεχθησόμενος, a people that shall be born, (Psal. xxii. 31.) ὁ κτιζόμενος, that shall be created in the generation to come, (Psal. cii. 19.) and so yet had no being, (Deut. xxxi. 21.) οὐ λαὸς, not a people. (Hos. i. 10.) And it being said by the prophet, that all the heathens are as nothing, and were accounted as nothing, (Isa. xl. 17.) they still accounted them as such. Hence Mordecai is introduced as praying thus, Lord, give not thy sceptre, τοῖς μὴ οὖσι, to them that are not: (Esth. iv. 11.) and Esdras speaking to God thus, As for the people which also came of Adam, thou hast said they are nothing, but like unto spittle, and hast likened the abundance of them to a drop that falleth from a vessel. And now, O Lord, these heathens, who have ever been reputed as nothing, have begun to be lords over us. (2 Esd. vi. 56, 57.) Thus Abraham is said to be the father of the gentiles, before that God who calleth things which § are not as if they were: (Rom. iv. 17.) and Clemens Romanus ‖ saith of the gentiles, He called us who were not, and would that of no being we should have a being. So fitly are the gentiles represented here by τὰ μὴ ὄντα, τὰ ἀγενῆ, τὰ ἐξουθενημένα, the things base, accounted as nothing, and the things which are not. (See also 1 Cor. vi. 4.) And this is the ancient exposition of Origen, who speaking of the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the gentiles, and God's provoking the Jews to jealousy by them that were not a nation, he confirms this from these words, God hath chosen the base things of the world, and the things which are not, that he might abolish the things which were before, that Israel according to the flesh might not glory before God.*

[24] Ver. 30. Σοφία, &c. Wisdom.] As being the author of that evangelical wisdom, which far excels the wisdom of the philosopher and scribe, and even that legal constitution which is called the wisdom of the Jews, Deut. iv. 6. The author of justification, as procuring for us that remission of sins which the law could not give. (Gal. ii. 21. iii. 21.) The author of sanctification, as procuring for, and working in us, not only an external and relative holiness, as was that of the Jews, but ὁσιότητα τῆς ἀληθείας, true and eternal holiness, (Eph. iv. 24.) wrought in us by the Holy Spirit. The author of redemption, not from the Egyptian bondage, or Babylonish captivity, but from the servitude of Satan, the dominion of sin and death, and from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the sons of God, or the redemption of the body. (Rom. viii. 21. 23.) They who say Christ is made our righteousness, by his righteousness imputed to us, have the same reason to say also, that he is made our wisdom, by his wisdom; and our sanctification, by his holiness imputed to us.

See the discourse concerning the imputation of Christ's perfect righteousness, or obedience to the law, to us, for righteousness, or justification, at the end of this Epistle.

CHAP. II.

Ver. 1. AND I, brethren, (have acted suitably to what I told you, that Christ sent me not to preach the gospel with wisdom of words, 1 Cor. i. 17. for) when I came to you, (I) came not with excellency of speech or of (human) wisdom, declaring to you [1] the testimony of God:

2. For I determined [2] not to know any thing among you (i. e. to discover any other knowledge to you), save (that of) Jesus Christ, and him crucified.

3. And I was with you [3] in weakness, and [4] in fear, and in much trembling (or, in much fear and trembling).

4. And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but [5] in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: (the power of God confirming what I preached with signs and wonders, Rom. xv. 19. 2 Cor. xii. 12.)

5. That your faith should not (seem to) stand in the wisdom of man, but in the power of God.

6. Howbeit we speak the (highest) wisdom [6] among them that are perfect (men in Christ Jesus; i. e. fully instructed in the principles of Christian faith): yet not the wisdom of the (heathen) world, nor of the princes of the world (the Jewish magistrates and doctors), who come to nought (and are to be abolished):

7. But we [7] speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even [8] the hidden wisdom, which God ordained [9] before the world, (to be revealed in due time) to our glory (i. e. to be the means of our happiness and glory);

8. Which [10] none of the princes of this world knew: for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory.

9. But (God hath dealt with us) as it is written, (Isa. lxiv. 4.) [11] Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him.

10. But God hath revealed them to us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep (and mysterious) things of God.

11. (And as it is among men, so it is here in reference to these things;) for what man knoweth the (secret) things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the (secret) things of God knoweth no man (Gr. none), but the [12] Spirit of God (which is in him).

12. Now we have not received the spirit of the world (which suggests worldly wisdom), but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God.

13. Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; [13] comparing spiritual things with spiritual.

14. But [14] the natural man (who acteth only on the principles of human reason, and of worldly wisdom) [15] receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness to him, (as being destitute of his human wisdom, i. 23.) [16] neither can he know them (by any study of his own), because they are spiritually discerned (i. e. by Scripture prophecies, and by the revelation of the Spirit; and therefore, while he continues to reject this way of knowledge, he cannot receive them).

15. But he that is spiritual (i. e. who hath the revelation of the Spirit) [17] judgeth (or discerneth) all things (relating to this mystery, ver. 7.) yet he himself is judged of no man (or discerned by none, who hath no higher principles than that of nature to discern things by).

16. For who (without a revelation) hath known the mind of the Lord, [18] that he may instruct him? (or, which will and can instruct him in these things? Sure no man by natural principles:) but we (who are spiritual) have the mind of Christ (and so are able to discern and instruct others in it).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. II.

[1] Ver. 1. ΤΟ᾽ μαρτύριον τοῦ Θεοῦ, The testimony of God.] This is the reading of Chrysostom, Œcumenius, Theophylact, who intimate not in the least, that they knew any copies which read μυστήριον. The testimony of the apostles concerning the Messiah, or the Son of God, his death, his resurrection, and exaltation to be a prince and Saviour, is called the testimony of God, 1 John v. 9. because God testified to the truth of these doctrines by signs and wonders, and divers miracles, and distributions of the Holy Ghost. (Heb. ii. 4.)

[2] Ver. 2. Οὐ εἰδέναι τι, Not to know any thing.] To act as one who knew nothing, τῆς ἔξω σοφίας, of the eloquence and wisdom of the Greeks, but only to give you the knowledge of a crucified Saviour, which was to them foolishness, (i. 23.) So Chrysostom.

[3] Ver. 3. Ἐν ἀσθενείᾳ, In weakness.] Of the body, and of speech, his bodily presence being weak (and mean), and his speech contemptible. (2 Cor. x. 10.) This infirmity of flesh rendering him despicable in the eyes of others. (Gal. iv. 13, 14.)

* Ἵνα ἐκεῖνα τὰ πρόπαιρον ὄντα καταργήσῃ, καὶ μὴ καυχήσηται ὁ κατὰ σάρκα Ἰσραὴλ καλούμενος ὑπὸ τοῦ Ἀποστόλου σὰρξ ἐνώπιον Θεοῦ. Philocal. cap. p. 3.

[4] Ἐν φόβῳ καὶ ἐν τρόμῳ, In fear and trembling.] By reason of the violent opposition which he found from the Jews, which made so deep impression on him when he was at Corinth, that Christ saw fit to appear to him; and encourage him, by saying, Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace; for I am with thee. (Acts xviii. 6. 9.)

[5] Ver. 4. Ἐν ἀποδείξει Πνεύματος, In demonstration of the Spirit.] This is, saith Origen,* by demonstration of the truth of what I said concerning Christ out of the prophets, who spake by the Spirit, and comparing spiritual things revealed to us, with spiritual things revealed to them; (ver. 13.) reasoning with the Jews out of the Scripture, as St. Paul's manner was: (Acts xvii. 2.) and saying no other things but those which Moses and the prophets said should come, that Christ should suffer, and that he should rise from the dead, and should shew light to the gentiles. (Acts xxvi. 22, 23.)

Others, as Chrysostom,† Theodoret, Œcumenius, and Theophylact, understand by this phrase, the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost; only it must be noted against Mr. Le Clerc, that neither the word πνεῦμα is to be restrained to the gift of tongues, but comprehends all the internal gifts of the Holy Ghost; nor must the word δύναμις, power, be restrained to healing diseases; but comprehend all the external gifts shewed upon others, as casting out devils, raising the dead, &c.

[6] Ver. 6. Ἐν τοῖς τελείοις, Among them that are perfect.] i. e. Fully instructed in the principles of the Christian faith; that this is the sense of the word perfect here, appears from the opposition of those that are perfect, to the babes in Christ; as in those words, You have need that one teach you which be the first principles of the oracles of God, and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong drink; for every one that useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness. Therefore, leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on to perfection, (Heb. v. 12, 13. vi. 1.) εἰς τὴν τελειότητα. Thus to the question of the young man, What lack I yet? Christ answereth, εἰ θέλεις τέλειος εἶναι, If thou wilt be perfect, i. e. fully instructed in the conditions of life required by the gospel, go sell all, and follow me: (Matt. xix. 21.) so Phil. iii. 15. Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, i. e. fully instructed in our Christian liberty, mind this. (See 1 Cor. xiii. 10. Col. i. 28.) Strong meat is for them that are perfect. (Heb. v. 14.)

[7] Ver. 7. We speak the wisdom, ἣν προώρισεν ὁ Θεὸς πρὸ τῶν αἰώνων, which God hath ordained before the world to our glory.] Hence also it seems plain, that God hath appointed his gospel for the salvation of all, to whom it is revealed: for though the apostle charged many of the church of Corinth with those things that would exclude them without repentance from this glory; yet he excludes none of them from being by God ordained or appointed to receive glory by it.

[8] Τὴν ἀποκεκρυμμένην, The hidden wisdom.] i. e. Before, not after, the revelation of it; for this mystery, saith the apostle, God has revealed to us by his Spirit, (v. 10.) It is the mystery which hath been hid from ages and generations, but now is made manifest to the saints. (Rom. xvi. 25, 26. Eph. i. 9. iii. 3, 4. 9, 10. vi. 19. Col. i. 26, 27. ii. 2. iv. 3, 4.)

[9] Πρὸ τῶν αἰώνων, Before the world.] At the beginning of the ages of the world, (Gen. iii. 15.) and before any of them were completed, or run out. Hence it is styled the mystery concealed in the times of the preceding ages, (Rom. xvi. 25.) as being not made known in other ages to the sons of men as now it is, (Eph. iii. 5.) but being a mystery hid from those ages, (ver. 9.) In this sense seemeth it to be, that God hath promised us eternal life, πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων, from ancient generations, ἐξ ἀρχῆς, from the beginning, saith Photius; and this grace in the promise of it is said to be given us in Christ, 2 Tim. i. 9. πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων, a long time, saith Dr. Hammond; ἄνωθεν, καὶ ἐξ ἀρχῆς, from the beginning, or of old, saith Theodoret.

[10] Ver. 8. Οὐδεὶς τῶν ἀρχόντων, None of the princes.] Pilate, or the Jewish rulers, for they only can be said to have crucified the Lord of glory, they only are the rulers which were to be abolished; (ver. 6.) and they are styled οἱ ἄρχοντες, princes and rulers, Luke xiv. 1. and xviii. 18. the princes who stood up, and the rulers which took counsel against the Lord, and against his Anointed. (Psal. ii. 2. Acts iv. 26.) They were the princes who delivered him to be condemned to death, and crucified him, and this they did out of ignorance. (Acts iii. 17. xiii. 27.)

[11] Ver. 9. Ὀφθαλμὸς οὐκ εἶδε, Eye hath not seen.] These words do not immediately respect the blessings of another world, but are spoken by the prophet of the gospel-state, and the blessings then to be enjoyed by them that love God. (Rom. viii. 28.) For all the prophets (say the Jews *) prophesied only of the days of the Messiah; but as for the world to come, or the state of things then, (as it is written,) Eye hath not seen, O God, besides thee, where the gloss adds, The eyes of the prophets could not see these things. Hence the apostle adds in the following verse, But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit; whereas our future happiness is not yet revealed, saith St. John. (1 John iii. 2.) Yea, the words of Isaiah, lxiv. 4. in their primary sense, may only intimate that no man, by his own sense or reason, or by instruction from others, can discern any other God besides the true God, or know what kindness he will afford them that wait on him. And both the context, and the opposition of these words to the revelation of these things by the Spirit, shew the primary intent of the apostle to be this, that no human wisdom, by any thing that may be seen, heard of, or conceived by us, can acquaint us with the things taught by the Holy Spirit, without a revelation.

[12] Ver. 11. Εἰ μὴ τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, But the Spirit of God.] These words accord with those of the book of Wisdom, Thy counsel who hath known, except thou give wisdom, and send thy Spirit from above, which knoweth and understandeth all things? (xix. 11.) whence it seems plainly to follow,

First, That the Holy Spirit is omniscient, as knowing all things, even the deep things of God. Wisdom is a loving Spirit, and will not acquit a blasphemer of his words; for God is witness of his reins, and a beholder of his heart, and a hearer of his tongue: for the Spirit of the Lord filleth the world, and that which containeth all things hath the knowledge of the voice. (Wisd. i. 6, 7.)

Secondly, That the Holy Spirit is with God, and in God, even as intimately as the soul is in the body, according to those words of the book of Wisdom, She is μετά σου with thee, an assessor of thy throne, and was present with thee when thou madest the world. (Wisd. ix. 4. 9.)

[13] Ver. 13. Πνευματικὰ πνευματικοῖς συγκρίνοντες, Comparing spiritual things with spiritual.] That is (says Mr. Le Clerc), speaking spiritual things to spiritual men. But where doth συγκρίνω signify to speak, or why doth he limit what is spoken to the spiritual man, since the apostles spake as well to the unbelieving Jew and gentile, as to the spiritual man? And how doth it appear that ἄνθρωπος man is here to be understood, because it follows in the next verse, rather than πράγματα things, which is understood in the immediate foregoing words? The interpretation of the fathers is much more probable; viz. we speak these things in the words taught by the Holy Ghost, * comparing the things which were writ by the Spirit of the Old Testament, with what is now revealed to us by the same Spirit, and confirming our doctrines from them. Moreover, from this and the preceding verses, as also from the following, it is exceeding evident, that the apostles spake and writ by inspiration of the Holy Ghost, as did the prophets of old time, and delivered only those things as from God, which God revealed to them by the Holy Spirit, according to those words of St. Peter, We preach the gospel to you by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. (1 Pet. i. 12.)

[14] Ver. 14. Ψυχικὸς ἄνθρωπος, The natural man.] By the natural man (saith Mr. Le Clerc), is not here meant the man that makes use of nothing but reason; but the man that is wholly devoted and enslaved to earthly things, and entirely taken up with the concernments of this life, like a brute creature. The opposition made here between spiritual and animal things (saith he), plainly proves what I have said: whereas there is not a word spoken of ψυχικὰ, animal things, in the whole chapter, but only an opposition between ψυχικὸς, the natural or animal, and πνευματικὸς, spiritual person, whom I shall prove to be a person endued with a spiritual afflatus, and by that confound his notion. That the natural man here is the man who rejects revelation, and admits of no higher principle to judge of things by but philosophy, and demonstration from the principles of natural reason, or, in the words of Porphyry, † τῆς κατὰ τὸν λογισμὸν πειθοῦς εὑρισκομένης, of persuasion to be found out by a rational deduction, is the express assertion of Theodoret, ‡ St. Chrysostom, § Photius, Œcumenius, and Theophylact, ‖ upon the place; they therefore thought the word would bear this sense: and evident it is to any one who considers the chain of the apostle's discourse, from i. 17. to the end of this chapter, that this must be the sense; for, ver. 17. he begins to declare, he preached the gospel, οὐκ ἐν σοφίᾳ λόγου, not in wisdom of words, or human wisdom; here, ver. 1. that he did not καθ' ὑπεροχὴν λόγου ἢ σοφίας, with excellency of speech, or human wisdom; there the persons which reject the gospel are σοφοὶ, the wise men of the world, ver. 19—21. styled σοφοὶ κατὰ σάρκα, wise men according to the flesh; the Greeks that seek for wisdom, ver. 22. they who esteemed it foolishness are the same Greeks, ver. 23. here it is the ψυχικὸς, natural man who receives it not, and to whom it is foolishness. Who therefore sees not that the natural man is the same with the wise man, the disputer, the philosopher, the Greek, there? There the gospel rejected by them for want of this wisdom, and accounted foolishness, is indeed the power of God, and the wisdom of God, ver. 24: here it is the wisdom of God in a mystery revealed to the apostles by the Spirit; (ver. 7. 10.) i. e. the Spirit, not of the world, or of human wisdom, but the Spirit they had received from God, that they might know it; (ver. 12.) and therefore they delivered it not in the words of human wisdom, in which the Greeks gloried, and which they sought for in the gospel, but in words taught them by the Holy Ghost; (ver. 13.) when then it follows, But the natural man receives not τὰ τοῦ Πνεύματος, the things of the Spirit, must he not be the man who receives not the things taught by the revelation of the Holy Ghost? The opposition which he bears to the πνευματικὸς, the man who hath this wisdom revealed to him by the Spirit of God, demonstrates this to be the sense.

[15] Οὐ δέχεται, &c. He receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God.] But counts them foolishness, (i. 23.) when propounded to him, because he doth not see them proved from principles of natural reason, by philosophical deductions, which is the wisdom he seeks after, (ver. 22.) Hence again it is evident he is the Greek, and not the sensual person.

[16] Οὐ δύναται γνῶναι, He cannot know them.] viz. By that wisdom which alone he will be conducted by, because they are spiritually discerned, or by the revelation of the Spirit; for, being mysteries, they are not knowable by human reason, till God is pleased to reveal them. (So ver. 9—11. 16.)

Note also, That the apostle doth not here discourse of the inability of a heathen to understand the sense of any revelations discovered to him, for how then are they to be discovered to him? but only of his inability to find out, and originally come to the knowledge of them by the mere light of reason; and from the denial of this, he infers the necessity of a supernatural revelation, that the hidden wisdom of God may be made known to the world. Nor doth he say, that the natural man cannot understand these revelations when discovered to him, because he wants farther means to do it, but only that he cannot know them, before they are discovered by the revelation of the Spirit; and that he will not then receive them, because they are not taught him, as the wisdom of the world is, by deductions from principles of human reason. The Jew, saith he, admits of revelation, and so he only doth require a sign to prove this revelation; but the Greek seeks after human wisdom, and because he finds not that in our way of preaching, he will not receive the revelation, though it be confirmed by demonstration of the Spirit, and of power.

[17] Ver. 15. Ἀνακρίνει Judgeth all things.] The passive ἀνακρίνεται is rendered discerned in the foregoing verse, and so should have been rendered here; and the active, search- eth or discerneth, as Acts xvii. 11. and here, x. 25. 27. and xiv. 24. So Iren. lib. iv. cap. 66. Hic examinat omnes, à nemine autem examinatur.

[18] Ver. 16. Ὃς συμβιβάσει αὐτὸν, That he may instruct him.] Though these words in the prophet Isaiah do certainly refer to God, they lying in the Hebrew thus, Who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord? And (who is) the man of his counsel that made him to know? (xl. 13, 14.) yet, as they are varied here thus, Who hath known the mind of the Lord? who will (or can) direct him? they seem plainly to refer to the spiritual man, and to affirm, that he could not be instructed in the mysteries of the gospel by any human wisdom. (1.) Because our knowing of the mind of Christ may enable us to direct others; but not that Lord who affords us this knowledge. (2.) Because this is plainly introduced as a proof that the spiritual man can be judged or discerned by no other person, who is not spiritual, and therefore must respect not God but him.

Πνευματικὸς here, and in other places of this Epistle, is not the man who is adorned with the fruits of the good Spirit, much less, as Mr. Le Clerc suggests, the man who relishes, or is affected with the spiritual doctrines of the gospel; but* ὁ τῆς τοῦ πνεύματος χάριτος ἠξιωμένος, the man who is endued with a spiritual afflatus, and hath those gifts of the Spirit which are styled the word of wisdom and of knowledge; (xii. 8.) for (1.) he is the man who speaks in demonstration of the Spirit, (ver. 4.) the wisdom of God in a mystery, (ver. 7.) to whom God hath revealed it by the Holy Spirit, (ver. 10.) that he might know the things that are freely given us of God, (ver. 12.) and who speaks of them in words taught by the Holy Ghost, (ver. 13.) and who, by this revelation of the Spirit, hath the mind of Christ made known to him, (ver. 16.) who speaks πνεύματι Θεοῦ, by the Spirit of God, and by the Holy Ghost, (xii. 3.) Such were the prophets in the first age of the church, who by this afflatus performed all sacred offices in the church, before they had stated church-officers among them. (See note on 1 Cor. xiv. 32.) Whence the apostle saith, If any man be a prophet among you, or spiritual, let him know (i. e. acknowledge and discern by its spiritual afflatus) that the things which I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord: (1 Cor. xiv. 37.) and to those prophets he writes thus, Brethren, if any man be overtaken with a fault, you that are spiritual restore such a one in the spirit of meekness. (Gal. vi. 1. see the note there.) This is the constant notion of the spiritual man in Irenæus,† who, speaking of those men who had the prophetical gifts for the edification of the church, saith, They are men whom the apostle styles spiritual. When afterward church-governors were appointed, they seem to have been chosen out of these spiritual men, or to have had for a time, together with their ordination, this gift, which therefore he styles the gift of truth: and from whom (saith he) the truth is to be learned by others. If the church of Rome would from this chapter gather the infallibility of their doctors met in council, let them shew it by their spiritual gifts, or exhibit charismata veritatis, as Irenæus speaks.*

CHAP. III.

1. AND I, brethren, (though I speak the highest wisdom among them that are perfect, yet) could (I) not speak unto you as to spiritual (persons), but as unto carnal, (by reason of those fruits of the flesh which still abide in you, ver. 3. and your affection to those who are only wise according to the flesh, chap. xxviii. and) even as unto babes in Christ.

2. I have fed you with milk, (the principles of the doctrines of Christ, Heb. v. 12, 13. vi. 1.: see 1 Cor. xv. 2, 3.) and not with meat (the higher doctrines of Christianity): for hitherto (or, then) [1] ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able.

3. For ye are [2] yet carnal: for whereas there is (yet) among you envying, and strife, and divisions, (which are the works of the flesh, Gal. v. 20, 21.) are ye not carnal, and walk as men (who have little of the Spirit in you? see note on ix. 8.)

4. For while one saith (in opposition to each other), I am (the disciple) of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal?

5. Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos? (not authors of your faith,) but (only) ministers by whom ye believed (which faith also they wrought in you), even as the Lord gave (his gifts) to every man (and his blessings on their labours).

6. I have planted (the gospel among you), Apollos watered (the seed sown); but God (only) gave the increase (of it).

7. So then neither is he that planteth (to be esteemed as) any thing, nor he that watereth; [3] but (the glory of all must be ascribed to) God that giveth the increase.

8. Now he that planteth and he that watereth [4] are one (in the design and ministry): and every man (of them) shall receive his own reward (from that God whose workmen they are) according to his own labour.

9. (I say, according to his labour,) for we are labourers together with God (his grace assisting us): ye are [5] God's husbandry, ye are God's building.

10. According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise [6] master-builder (assisted by Divine wisdom), I have laid the foundation, (Jesus Christ, and him crucified, 1 Cor. ii. 2.) and another (coming after me) buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon.

11. For other (true) foundation can no man lay than that (which) is laid (already by me), which is (faith in) Jesus Christ.

12. Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones (i. e. sound doctrine, which will bear the trial of the fire), wood, hay, stubble (human eloquence

13. Every man's work shall be made manifest: [7] for the day (of Christ's advent to destroy the Jewish temple, church, and nation,) shall declare it, because it shall be (Gr. it is) revealed by fire; (i. e. to be attended with great tribulation, Matt. xxiv. 21. πυρώσει πρὸς πειρασμὸν, with burning for trial, 1 Pet. iv. 12.) and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is (whether it be gold or silver, to abide the fire; or hay and stubble, to be consumed by it).

14. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon (as sound evangelical doctrine will, suffering nothing by, but being confirmed by, the conflagration which shall burn up the Jewish economy), he shall receive a reward, (be approved as a wise builder, and shall be eminently preserved from the evils of that day of trial, Matt. xxiv. 13.)

15. If any man's work shall be burned (as theirs must be, who build upon the foundation of legal observances and Judaical rites, for they must perish with that church and temple, which is the foundation of them), he shall suffer (the) loss (of all his labour): but he himself shall be saved; [8]yet so as by fire: (i. e. not without great hazard and difficulty, as one snatched out of the fire.)

16. (Moreover, to pass from their false doctrines, to the evil effects of them in your divisions:) know ye not that ye (Christians) are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you (the Christian church, as the Schechinah did in the temple)?

17. If (then) any man [9] defile the temple of God (by dividing that church which is his temple, and in which one and the same Spirit dwells, into parts and factions), him shall God destroy; for the temple of the Lord is holy, (and therefore not to be profaned by those divisions which render you carnal, 1 Cor. iii. 1. 3.) which temple ye are.

18. (And because you break into these divisions on the account of, or are taught these practices by, the philosophers of this age, men in whom you glory for their eloquence and wisdom;) let no man deceive himself. If any man among you seemeth to be [10] wise in (the wisdom and learning of) this world, let him (embrace that gospel and doctrine of Christ, which the world calls foolishness, and so) become a fool (to them), that he may be wise, (according to the wisdom of God, 1 Cor. i. 24, 25.)

19. For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. For it is written, (Job v. 13.) He taketh the wise in their own craftiness (causing one sect of philosophers to destroy what another established, and so shewing the uncertainty and vanity of their pretended wisdom).

20. And again, (Psal. xciv. 11.) The Lord knoweth the thoughts (and machinations) of the wise, that they are vain.

21. Therefore let no man (so) glory in men (as to be induced by their esteem of them to rend or divide the church, or to indulge those vile practices which corrupt the temple of God): for [11] all things (or persons) are yours (as being appointed for your service);

22. Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas (they have received their apostleship for your sakes), or the world (as being made for you), or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours (as being all designed for your good);

23. And ye are (only) Christ's (who is your head); and Christ [12] is God's (or, of God, having, as Mediator, his commission and his power from him, and acting all things to his glory).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. III.

[1] Ver. 2. Ο᾽ΥΠΩ γὰρ ἠδύνασθε, For yet you could not, add, bear it.] So in the Old Testament, lo ochol is often used, i. e. I cannot, or I would not, where endure, or bear it, is understood: so Job xxxi. 23. By reason of his highness I could not, sup. endure; Psal. ci. 5. Him that is of any haughty eye and proud look, I cannot; Isa. i. 13. The calling of assemblies I cannot, i. e. bear.

[2] Ver. 3. Σαρκικοὶ, Carnal.] This word, being here plainly applied to the works of the flesh, seems to imply that the spiritual man, opposed to him, should signify the man endued with the fruits of the good Spirit, or who walketh in the Spirit, not fulfilling the lusts of the flesh. (Rom. viii. 1. 4. Gal. v. 16.) And thus the Greek interpreters do understand these words; hence noting, that it is possible for men to have great gifts, as the Corinthians had, and yet be carnal. Yet Irenæus* interprets the words thus, that they were carnal, because the Spirit of the Father did not rest upon them; i. e. because he, being the Spirit of love and union, would not abide with them when they indulged to envy and divisions, or be unto them a Spirit of instruction; and, according to this interpretation, he must deny them to be spiritual, as the word signifies one who enjoys some spiritual gift, and receives some illumination from him: or as one that is not purely governed by the revelation made by the Spirit, but rather walks κατ᾽ ἄνθρωπον, as a man attending not the dictates of the Spirit, but of human reason, or of his natural inclinations, for that this is the genuine import of that phrase, to walk as men, see note on Rom. iii. 5. 1 Cor. ix. 8. Whatever be the sense, it must be noted that the apostle doth not here style them carnal, in that worst sense in which the carnal person is represented as one who is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be, (Rom. viii. 7, 8.) and therefore can do nothing pleasing to God; and as it wholly doth exclude us from any interest in Christ, (Gal. v. 24.) for he allows them to be babes in Christ: (ver. 1.) but as it imports men, through the too great prevalency of their carnal appetites lusting against the Spirit, still subject to such things as shewed some strong remainders of a carnal mind in them.

But one great difficulty remains, scarce observed by any interpreter excepting Crellius, viz. How the same Corinthians could be such babes in Christ, and have such need of milk, and not of meat, and yet be enriched in all utterance and knowledge, (1 Cor. i. 5.) and abound in faith, utterance, and knowledge. (2 Cor. viii. 7.)

I answer, that these encomiums must be restrained to some few of them who were their extraordinary church-officers, and enjoyed this faith and knowledge for the instruction of the rest; and then, notwithstanding this, it may be true that the apostle could not write to the generality of them as such, but rather as to babes in Christ. Or (2.) this faith, utterance, and knowledge, must be restrained to the gift of miracles, of tongues, and the interpretation of them, which might be given for the confirmation of the gospel, and the good of others, to them who were not spiritual in the best sense, but of very small proficiency in the saving fruits of the good Spirit. Hence we find them puffed up on the account of these gifts, envying others who had them in a higher measure, and abusing them to vain ostentation and confusion in the church, and not to edification, which things sufficiently evidence they were but babes in Christ.

* "Nondum autem Spiritus Patris requiescit super vos propter vestram infirmitatem." Lib. iv. cap. 75.

[3] Ver. 7. Ἀλλ' ὁ Θεὸς, But God, &c.] Whence it is evident, that there can be no cause why you should run into factions about, or desire to be named from them, who have no excellency but from God, and do nothing but by his assistance.

[4] Ver. 8. Ἕν εἰσιν, Are one.] Κατὰ τὴν διακονίαν, according to their ministry, saith Clemens Alexandrinus,* as being God's ministers in this dispensation; or, ἑνότητι τοῦ πνεύματος, as having both received their different gifts from the same Spirit, it being one and the same Spirit, who divideth to every man as he will. (1 Cor. xii. 11.)

[5] Ver. 9. Θεοῦ γεώργιον, God's husbandry.] This I think is better rendered God's field, by Chrysostom,† Œcumenius, and Theophylact, who hence infer, that the field is God's; the apostles only, γεωργοὶ αὐτοῦ, his labourers sent forth to labour in it, and enabled by him for that work; and that they ought as a field to be fenced, ἐνὶ τῷ φραγμῷ τῆς ὁμονοίας, with the hedge of concord, and not be divided into parties. Accordingly the word answers to the Hebrew shadeh: so Prov. xxiv. 30. I went by γεώργιον, the field of the slothful; and, xxxi. 16. The wise woman considereth, γεώργιον, a field, and buyeth it.

[6] Ver. 10. Ἀρχιτέκτων, A master-builder.] So the Jews call their wise men, בנאים, architecti, (see Buxtorf. Lex. Talm. p. 318.) which the apostle here uses.

[7] Ver. 13. Ἡ γὰρ ἡμέρα δηλώσει, For the day will declare it.] Here observe,

First, That a day, absolutely put, doth often signify a day, or a time of punishment; so they that come after him shall be astonished at his day, Job xviii. 21. The Lord shall laugh at him, for he seeth that his day is coming, Psal. xxxvii. 13. Remember, O Lord, the children of Edom, what they did in the day of Jerusalem, Psal. cxxxvii. 7. So the day of Midian, Isa. ix. 4. Woe unto them, for their day is come, the time of their visitation, Jer. l. 27.

Secondly, That in like manner the day, here mentioned, is the day of our Lord's coming, to destroy the unbelieving Jews, to burn their temple, and to destroy the Jewish economy, will appear probable from the description of that day, as a refiner's fire, Mal. iii. 2, 3. iv. 1, 2. Joel ii. 1. 13. 30, 31. and as the fire of an oven, burning up the chaff and stubble; for, behold the day of the Lord cometh, that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, and all that do wickedly, shall be as stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up.

But whether we understand these words of that day, or any other day of judgment, this is certain, that the apostle cannot be here supposed to speak of the Roman purgatory fire; (1.) because the fire the apostle speaks of, as Origen‡ hath noted, is not πῦρ ὑλικὸν καὶ αἰσθητὸν, ἀλλὰ τροπολογικὸν, fire properly, but metaphorically, so called, as appears from those words, he shall escape as by fire. (2.) Because this fire is to try every man's work, Paul and Apollos's, as well as theirs who built on the foundation hay and stubble; and sure they will not say Paul and Apollos went to purgatory. (3.) This fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is: now purgatory fire doth not try every man's works, but punishes them for them.

[8] Ver. 15. Ὡς διὰ πυρὸς, As out of the fire.] To be saved out of the fire, is a proverbial speech concerning them that escape with great danger out of a calamity; so it is used in the Old Testament, I have plucked them as a firebrand out of the fire, Amos iv. 11. Is not this a brand plucked out of the fire? Zech. iii. 2. So L. Æmilius, in Livy,* saith, he escaped the popular flame half burnt. The interpretation of Sir Norton Knatchbull, He shall be saved, but so as he pass through the fire of persecution with constancy to the faith, accords well with Christ's words, Matt. xxiv. 13. but not with the use of this proverbial expression. Now hence it is evident, that the apostle speaks not of the gnostics, who denied the resurrection, (1 Cor. xv. 14. 17.) and so believed in vain, and taught that Christ might be denied with the mouth in the time of persecution, and so were then ashamed of him, and also were abominably filthy both in doctrine and manners: for of such the apostles would not say, they should be saved yet, but so as by fire; but, as Jude and Peter do, they are of old ordained to condemnation; their judgment lingereth not, and their damnation doth not slumber. (Jude 4. 13. 2 Pet. ii. 3.)

[9] Ver. 17. Εἴ τις τὸν ναὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ φθείρει, If any man corrupt the temple of God.] I have, in the paraphrase, followed the common interpretation of these words; but the like words used chap. vi. from ver. 15—19. by way of dehortation from fornication, and 2 Cor. vi. 16. from communion with heathens in their idolatrous rites and evil practices, and by way of inducement to cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, (vii. 1.) more naturally incline us to refer these verses to the corrupting of the temple of God, by filthiness of the flesh, uncleanness, and fornication, or by filthiness of the Spirit, i. e. idolatrous practices; both which the Corinthians did: (see the note on 1 Cor. vii. 1.) and then the connexion will run thus—I have declared you to be a building of God, (ver. 9.) as being built up together for a habitation of God through the Spirit. (Eph. ii. 22.) If therefore you do not keep this temple of God holy, but corrupt it by joining the temple of God with idols, (2 Cor. vi. 16.) or profane and defile it by uncleanness and fornication, you may expect that these sins, by which God's temple is destroyed, should end in your own ruin and destruction.

[10] Ver. 18. Σοφὸς εἶναι ἐν τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ, To be wise in the wisdom of this world.] That the Corinthians were induced to eat things offered to idols in the idol-temples, by men pretending to great knowledge, see viii. 1, 2. that they also introduced among them the doctrine of the lawfulness of fornication, see note on v. 1. vi. 16. vii. 1. And to this sense of the two last verses agree the descants of the ancients, who say the apostle (ver. 17.) begins to speak περὶ τοῦ πεπορνευκότος, of him that had committed fornication, (v. 1.) and against them, "qui turpiter viventes corpora sua violando corruperunt," who by filthy practices had corrupted their bodies, and violated the temple of the [11] Ver. 21. Πάντα ὑμῶν ἐστιν, All are yours.] The Jews believed that the world was made for them, and that God despised the gentiles, and looked upon them as nothing when he made it. (2 Esd. vi. 55. 59.) The apostle on the contrary affirms, the world was made for the gentiles, converted to the Christian faith: and adds, that the apostles had received their gifts and authority for their sakes; that if life were continued to them under continual perils, it was for their furtherance and joy in the faith; (Phil. i. 15.) or if we, saith he, be always given up to death, so that death worketh in us, it is that life may work in you, (2 Cor. iv. 11, 12.) for we suffer all things for you; (ver. 15. 2 Tim. ii. 10.) that things present, the pressures they now suffered, and things to come, the prosperity and adversity they might afterward be subject to, were for their sakes; for whether we be afflicted, it is for your consolation and salvation; or whether we be comforted, it is for your consolation and salvation. (2 Cor. i. 6.)

[12] Ver. 23. Χριστὸς δὲ Θεοῦ, And Christ is God's.] Here the Socinians cry out, "Vide hic discrimen inter Deum et Christum;" See here the difference betwixt God and Christ.—Hence it appears (saith Crellius) that Christ is in no wise God most high, as having another above him, as his head, on whom he depends, and from whom he is here manifestly distinguished.

But the fathers thought not so, who say Christ is of God, ὡς προαιώνιον, γέννημα καὶ ὡς αἰτίαν ἔχων τὸν Πατέρα, as being begotten by him before all ages, and having him for his Father, ἐξ αὐτοῦ γεγενημένος κατὰ τὴν θεότητα, as receiving the Divine nature from him. Others grant this of Christ as mediator betwixt us and God, in which sense he performing that office as man, or by virtue of his human nature, in which alone he could be a prophet sent from God, or offer up himself to the death for us, or intercede in our behalf, or be exalted to the right hand of God, to be a Prince and a Saviour; he therefore was exalted thus to the glory of God the Father, and so depended on him in the exercise of that office. (See note on 1 Cor. xi. 3.)

CHAP. IV.

1. (WE are yours, I say; yet) let a man (also) so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God; (i. e. of those revelations of the gospel which are styled mysteries, as not being before revealed to the world. See note on ii. 2. 7.

2. Moreover, it (chiefly) is required in stewards, that a man (taking that office upon him) be found faithful.

3. But (whether it be thus, or not,) with me it is a very small thing [1] that I should be judged of you, or of man's judgment; yea, I judge not my own self (so as to acquiesce in that judgment).

4. For I know nothing (of unfaithfulness) by myself; [2] yet I am not thereby justified (at God's tribunal): but he that (farther) judgeth me is the Lord.

5. Therefore [3] judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will [4] make manifest the counsels of the heart: and then shall every man have praise of God.

6. And these things, brethren, [5] I have in a figure transferred to myself, (one rude in speech, but not in knowledge, 2 Cor. xi. 6.) and to Apollos, (a man of eloquence and wisdom, Acts xviii. 24.) for your sakes; that you might learn in (the example of) us not to think of (other) men above that which is written, (viz. that we are only ministers of Christ by which ye believed, iii. 5.) that no one of you be puffed up for one against another (because of the different gifts vouchsafed to them).

7. For [6] who maketh thee (what doctor soever thou art) to differ from another? and what (gift) hast thou that thou didst not receive (from God)? now if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory, as if thou hadst not received it (from him)?

8. Now [7] ye (Corinthians) are full (of secular wisdom), now ye are rich (both in wealth and spiritual gifts, 1 Cor. xiv. 26.) ye have reigned as kings (flourishing in the enjoyment of these things in all tranquillity and honour) without (any want of) us; and I would to God ye did reign (indeed, and not in conceit only), that we also (poor, persecuted, and despised apostles,) might reign with you.

9. For I think that God hath set forth us the apostles last (i. e. as the last, or the meridian gladiators), as it were (men) [8] appointed unto death: for we are made a spectacle to the world, and to angels, and to men.

10. We are (counted as) fools for Christ's sake, but ye, (who flourish in your eloquence and wisdom, are accounted) wise in Christ; we are weak (as to bodily presence, 2 Cor. x. 10. and bodily infirmities, 1 Cor. ii. 3. 2 Cor. xii. 9. and made still weaker by our continual wants and persecutions), but ye are strong (and lusty); ye are honourable (for your gifts and wisdom, which have gotten you a great name and reputation among others), but we are despised (or in disgrace every where).

11. Even to this present hour we both hunger, and thirst, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling-place (or, are in no certain condition);

12. And labour, working with our own hands: being reviled, we bless; being persecuted, we suffer it (or, we bear, as weak persons, who know not how to escape, or help ourselves):

13. Being defamed, we entreat: we are made as [9] the filth of the world, and (are as) the offscouring (or refuse) of all things to this day.

14. (But though I thus speak of your glorying in these things, with the neglect of us, ver. 8.) I write not these things to shame you, but as my beloved sons I warn you (to behave yourselves hereafter more like dutiful children towards me).

15. For though you have ten thousand instructers in Christ, yet have you [10] not many fathers (indeed, not any besides me): for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel.

16. Wherefore I beseech you, be ye followers of me, (adhering to the doctrine received from me, and walking as I do, and teach, ver. 17.)

17. For this cause have I sent unto you Timotheus, who is my beloved son, and faithful in the Lord, who shall bring you into remembrance of my ways which are in Christ, as I teach every where in every church.

18. Now some (among you) are puffed up, as though (because I have sent Timothy to you) I would not (myself) come to you.

19. But I will come to you shortly, if the Lord will, and will know (and examine), not the speech (and eloquence) of them which are puffed up, but the power (and spiritual authority which attends their preaching, whether that be equal to the power God has given us for edification).

20. For the kingdom of God is (confirmed and propagated) [11] not in (and by the wisdom of the) word, but in (and by the) power (of the Spirit; which if they want they cannot be sent from God, as we are).

21. What will you? shall I come unto you [12] with a rod (inflicting punishments upon you), or (will you so reform that I may come unto you) in love, and in the spirit of meekness?

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IV.

[1] Ver. 3. Ἵνα ὑφ' ὑμῶν ἀνακριθῶ, That I should be judged of you.] Not that he was unconcerned whether the Corinthians had a good esteem of him or not; the contrary is evident from the whole drift of his Epistles, in which he labours to convince them of the truth of his doctrine and of his sincerity in the discharge of his office, and rejoiceth greatly in their affection to him. (2 Cor. vi. 13. vii. 14, 15. viii. 24.) His meaning only is, that their judgment is little to him, in comparison of the final and unerring judgment of the Lord.

[2] Ver. 4. Οὐκ τούτῳ δεδικαίωμαι, Yet am I not thereby justified.] Here also the apostle doth not intend to say that he, and others, could have no good assurance of their present justification and favour with God, from the testimony of an upright conscience, which, saith St. John, gives confidence with God; (1 John iii. 21.) for then farewell all joy and comfort in this world: he doth himself assure us, that their rejoicing was this, even the testimony of their conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity they had their conversation in this world: (2 Cor. i. 12.) he adviseth all men to approve their actions to themselves, and then (saith he) they shall have rejoicing in themselves, and not in another: (Gal. vi. 4.) his meaning therefore is, that our final justification, or absolution from condemnation, depends not on the judgment which we pass upon ourselves, but upon that which God, the righteous judge, will pass upon us at the last day. Here also note in St. Paul another sense of justification, as it relates to our absolution from condemnation, and our approbation as righteous at the last day, which will be, saith he, according to our works, (2 Cor. v. 10.) and our fidelity in execution of the trusts committed to us, (ver. 2.)

[3] Ver. 5. Μὴ πρὸ καιροῦ τι κρίνετε, Judge nothing before the time.] The apostle doth not here condemn all judgment, civil or ecclesiastical, of any persons, deeds, or words, or bid us suspend our judgment of things occurring to our senses, till the day of judgment; but only forbids our censures of things uncertain, of which no righteous judgment can be passed, because we cannot be certain of the truth of that judgment, and of things which it belongs not to us to judge of. And this appears both from the words and the occasion of them: from the words, for they respect the hidden things of darkness, and the counsels of the heart, of which no certain judgment can be passed; from the occasion of them, they passing their censures on St. Paul, (ver. 3.) and questioning his fidelity in his office, (ver. 2.) of whom they had no authority so to judge, nor any occasion so to judge.

[4] Ὃς φανερώσει τὰς βουλὰς τῶν καρδιῶν, Who will make manifest the counsels of the heart.] Hence note, that Jesus Christ must have the knowledge of the secrets of the hearts of all men subject to his judgment, and so must be that God, who alone knows the hearts of all men, (1 Kings viii. 39.) and is alone the searcher of all hearts; (1 Chron. xxviii. 9.) to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doing; (Jer. xvii. 10.) and therefore Christ expressly ascribes this knowledge to himself, by saying, All the churches shall know that I am he which searcheth the reins and the hearts, and I will give to every one of you according to your works. (Rev. ii. 23.)

[5] Ver. 6. Μετεσχημάτισα, I have in a figure transferred.] This seems not to refer, as most interpreters conceive, to what the apostle had said, i. 12. viz. their saying, I am of Paul, I am of Apollos, I of Cephas, for here is nothing said of Cephas; but it refers to what he had said, iii. 5—8. that Paul and Apollos were only ministers by whom they believed; that therefore neither Paul nor Apollos was to be looked upon as any thing, they doing nothing but by the grace given them by that God, to whom therefore the whole praise was due for the success of all their labours. And this scheme of speech I have used, saith he, touching myself and Apollos, instructing you not to think highly of other doctors among you, who have done less for the promoting your faith than we have done.

[6] Ver. 7. Τίς σε διακρίνει; Who maketh thee to differ?] The apostle manifestly speaking here of those gifts of the Spirit which were immediately infused without human industry, and were dispensed by God and by his Spirit according to his good pleasure; (1 Cor. iii. 15. xii. 11.) it cannot be hence argued, that no man doth any thing to make himself differ from another, in any virtue or pious disposition. For to what purpose are men continually exhorted and stirred up by powerful motives to all Christian duties, and particularly to excel in virtue, if these exhortations and motives are not proposed to engage them to exercise these Christian virtues, to choose the good, and refuse the evil? And if one man, upon consideration of these motives, doth choose to live a pious life, whereas another is not by the same motives prevailed on so to do, doth he not differ from another by virtue of that choice? And though the grace of God, by way of excitation, worketh in us thus to will; yet, since our faculties do first deliberate upon and then comply, and choose to do that thing to which this grace excites us; if to consider, be to differ from him that does not so, and to comply with and embrace the call of God, be to differ from him who complies not with the same call, it must be certain, that as God's grace preventing and exciting, so my faculties co-operating, tend to make me differ from another, though having also these faculties from God, the action may be well ascribed, and the whole glory of it must be due, to him.

Seeing then no act of virtue and no good habit is produced in us without a frequent and manifold co-operation of our own faculties to the same action and habit, whereas these gifts of tongues, interpretation, and prophecy, were gifts conferred upon Christians in the primitive times, without any such co-operation of their faculties: it cannot, with like reason, be inquired of the former, as it may be of these gifts, Who made thee to differ from another in them? And though all ground and even pretence of glorying, by this immediate infusion of these gifts, is evidently excluded; yet the apostles do themselves glory in those good actions which they choose to do; (1 Cor. ix. 15, 16. 2 Cor. i. 12. xi. 20.) and say to others thus, Let every man try and approve his own work, and then shall he have καύχημα rejoicing, or glorying in himself. (Gal. vi. 4.)

[7] Ver. 8. Κεκορεσμένοι ἐστὲ, ἐπλουτήσατε, Ye are filled, ye are rich.] All the ancient commentators having noted in their prefaces to this Epistle, that Corinth* was a city which abounded in wealth, and was full of rhetoricians, and of philosophers, and that hence arose their disorders, pride, and vain-glory, as well as from their gifts; I thought fit in the paraphrase to take notice of both.

[8] Ver. 9. Ὡς ἐπιθανατίους, As men appointed unto death.] Here the apostle seems to allude to the Roman spectacle, τῆς τῶν θηριομάχων, καὶ μονομαχίας ἀνδροφόνου,‖ that of the bestiarii† and the gladiators, where in the morning men were brought upon the theatre to fight with wild beasts, and to them was allowed armour to defend themselves, and smite the beasts that did assail them; but in the meridian spectacle were brought forth the gladiators naked, and without any thing to defend them from the sword of the assailant, and he, that then escaped, was only reserved for slaughter to another day; so that these men might be well called ἐπιθανάτιοι, men appointed for death: and this being the last appearance on the theatre for that day, they are said here to be set forth ἔσχατοι, the last. Of these two spectacles Seneca‡ speaks thus: In the morning men are exposed to lions and to bears; at midday to their spectators; those that kill are exposed to one another; the victor is detained for another slaughter; the conclusion of this fight is death. The former fighting, compared to this, was mercy; here is only butchery: they have nothing to cover them, their whole body is exposed to every stroke, &c. Hence Tertullian§ cites these words thus: " Puto nos Deus apostolos novissimos elegit velut bestiarios;" I think God hath chosen us apostles last, as men to be exposed to wild beasts.

[9] Ver. 13. Περικαθάρματα, περίψημα.] These words, which we render filth and offscouring, do probably relate to the sacrifices which the heathens used for the lustration of a city. The Athenians (saith Phavorinus‖) nourished some very base and refuse people, and, when any calamity or plague befel them, they sacrificed them for the purgation of the city, and these they called καθάρματα. And Suidas¶ saith, they said of such a man, Be thou our περίψημα, redemption, or propitiation, and then flung him into the sea as a sacrifice to Neptune. Hence Origen* saith, that our Lord, giving up himself for the propitiation of our sins, was made much more than his apostles, περικάθαρμα τοῦ κόσμου, πάντων περίψημα, the lustration of the world, and peculiar sacrifice of all men.

[10] Ver. 15. Οὐ πολλοὺς πατέρας, Not many fathers.] The masters of tradition among the Jews† called them children whom they instructed in their traditions; and the Targum upon Numb. iii. 1. observes, that Nadab and Abihu are called the sons of Moses, because he had instructed them: for he who teacheth another is, as it were, his father. Thus the disciples of the prophets are called the sons of the prophets. So Jonathan, These are the names of the sons of Aaron, the disciples of Moses, and the sons of Israel, who were called by his name: and so both Irenæus ‡ and Clemens Alexandrinus§ do observe, That they were called fathers, who taught and catechised others; and they, sons, who were taught by them.

[11] Ver. 20. Οὐ ἐν λόγῳ, ἀλλ' ἐν δυνάμει, Not in word, but in power.] It is propagated, saith Theophylact, διὰ σημείων τῇ δυνάμει τοῦ Πνεύματος γινομένων, by miracles done by the power of the Spirit; for to convince men of the truth of it, saith Chrysostom, it is not enough to use fine words, but the dead must be raised, the devils cast out, and other mighty wonders must be wrought: by these things the gospel is established.

[12] Ver. 21. Ἐν ῥάβδῳ, With a rod.] That the apostles had power of inflicting corporal punishments on some who did oppose the progress of, or who notoriously offended against, the rules of the gospel, is the opinion of all the ancient commentators, who instance in the death inflicted by St. Peter on Ananias and Sapphira, (Acts v. 10.) the blindness inflicted by St. Paul on Elymas, (xiii. 11.) the delivery of Hymenæus and Alexander, and the incestuous person unto Satan, (1 Tim. i. 20. 1 Cor. v. 5.) ὥστε παιδεῦσαι τὸ σῶμα, so as to chastise the body of them, saith Theodoret; ἵνα νόσῳ αὐτὸν τήξῃ, that he might macerate him with some disease, say Chrysostom, Œcumenius, and Theophylact; and so they interpret these words, Shall I come unto you with a rod? that is, ἐν κολάσει, ἐν τιμωρίᾳ, with punishments and chastisements. And this sense will appear highly probable, if we consider these words of the apostle, I write unto you, being absent, lest, being present, I should use sharpness, according to the power God hath given me for edification, and not for destruction: (2 Cor. xiii. 10.) for, that these words cannot be understood only of the power of excommunication, common to him with others, we may learn from the same words, 2 Cor. x. 8. where the mighty weapons of his warfare, able to remove every height exalting itself against, and to captivate every mind to, the obedience of Christ, and to avenge all disobedience, being premised, it follows, for should I boast exceedingly of the power God hath given me for edification, and not for destruction, I should not be ashamed.

CHAP. V.

1. IT is reported commonly that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not [1] so much as named among the gentiles, (viz.) [2] that one should have his father's wife (i. e. his stepmother).

2. And [3] ye are puffed up, and [4] have not rather mourned (for the scandal of this great offence, nor taken care) that he that hath done this deed (so reproachful to the society of Christians) may be taken away (and cast out) from among you (as he ought to be).

3. For I verily, as (being) absent in body, but [5] present (with you, Col. ii. 5.) in (and by the) Spirit (exciting me so to do), have judged already, as though I were present, concerning him that hath so done this deed, (that he ought to be removed from your body, and delivered up to Satan.

4. And do therefore command you) in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, when ye are gathered together (in your Christian assemblies), and my spirit (supplying my absence), [6] with the power of our Lord Jesus Christ (is present with you),

5. To deliver such a one to (the buffetings of) Satan for the destruction of the flesh (so lascivient in him), that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

6. [7] Your glorying (in such a doctor, or such wisdom) is not good. Know ye not that (as) a little leaven [8] leaveneth (and soureth) the lump, (so such a member, continued among you, will defile the whole body or society)?

7. [9] Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, (forasmuch) as ye are (by your Christianity obliged to be) unleavened. For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us (Christians, and, at that feast, all leaven was to be put out of their houses, Exod. xii. 15.)

8. Therefore let us keep the feast, not with (the) old leaven (of our former uncleanness), nor with the (pharisaical) [10] leaven of malice and (deceitful) wickedness; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth.

9. [11] I wrote to you in an epistle, (or, I had writ to you in this Epistle, before I was fully acquainted with the state of your affairs, by the coming of Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, 1 Cor. xvi. 17.) not to company with fornicators.

10. Yet not (intending) altogether (to forbid you any conversation) with the fornicators of this world, or with the covetous, or extortioners, or with idolaters; for then must ye needs go out of the world.

11. [12] But now (since I heard this great miscarriage, and have been more exactly informed of the state of your church,) I have (changed my style, and) written to you not to keep company, if any man that is [13] called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer (a contumelious person), or a drunkard, or an extortioner; (and that so strictly, as to charge you) with such a one [14] no not to eat.

12. [15] For what have I to do to judge (or censure) them also that are without (the church, as heathen fornicators, and the stepmother of this incestuous fornicator are)? do not ye (and all other churches and societies) judge them that are within (their body)?

13. But them that are without God judgeth. Therefore (leaving them to the judgment of God, censure them that thus offend within your body, and you will, by so doing) put away from among yourselves that wicked person.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. V.

[1] Ver. 1. ΟΥΔΕ᾽ ὀνομάζεται, Not named.] i.e. Not countenanced among civilized heathens, but forbidden by their laws; by the laws of the Greeks, say Ocellus Lucanus* and Jamblichus;† and by the Romans, it being, saith Cicero, "scelus inauditum," an unheard-of wickedness, of which the Persians only are accused by Philo,‡ Tertullian,§ Minutius Felix;‖ and therefore this was one of the three great infamies with which the ¶ heathens loaded the primitive Christians, that they had incesta convivia among them, and practised the very crime here censured by St. Paul, and the words ὅλως ἀκούεται, it is every where heard of, do make it not improbable that this very thing might give the rise to that vile objection against Christianity, especially if the Corinthians had the foundation of this practice from the Jews, from whom the Christians for some time were not distinguished.

[2] Ὥστε γυναῖκά τινα τοῦ πατρὸς ἔχειν, That one should have his father's wife.] Either as his wife, or so as to commit fornication with her. Now this, saith Dr. Lightfoot, was done by them agreeably to the Jewish doctrine concerning proselytes; viz. that they were as persons new born, and had lost all their kindred they had before: so that by the law, as the rabbins expounded it, they might marry their mother and sister. And to this Tacitus†† seems to refer in his account of the Jews, when he saith, All things by them are deemed profane, which to us are sacred, " rursum concessa apud illos quæ nobis incesta," and what we account incestuous is with them lawful; and that they are first of all taught to contemn the gods, parentes, liberos, fratres vilia habere, and to have no regard to parents, children, and brethren. But considering that Corinth abounded with philosophers, and that Chrysippus‡‡ the stoic reckons the enjoyment of a mother, sister, or daughter, as things blamed without reason; and that hence the Nicholaitans and Carpocratians §§ had their doctrine of the community of women, not excepting mothers, and daughters, and sisters; I think it probable that this corruption might have had its rise from them, and that, upon one or other of these accounts, they so tamely endured him who had done this infamous thing: yea, they were puffed up, say the Greek interpreters, on account of the eloquence and wisdom of this very man.

your conceit, that you have got such a profound and eloquent teacher; or on the account of some high wisdom, which makes you look on these things as indifferent.

It is conjectured, that this woman, cohabiting with her son-in-law, had divorced herself from her husband; and true it is, as I have observed, note on vii. 11. that the Attic laws allowed the woman to do this, but then she was first to bring, τῆς ἀπολείψεως γράμματα, the causes why she desired to leave her husband before the archon, or judge of such matters, and to have his allowance so to do: if this stepmother did not this, she was still her husband's wife; if she did, and the causes she alleged were allowed of by the judge, this freed her from that relation to her former husband, and then he suffered no wrong by this action, as the apostle intimates that he did, by styling him ἀδικηθέντα, the person that had suffered wrong. (2 Cor. vii. 12.)

[4] Καὶ οὐχὶ μᾶλλον ἐπενθήσατε, And have not rather mourned.] It was the custom, both of the Jews and Christians, when any one was to be cut off from the church as a dead member, to do it with fasting and humiliation, to shew their sympathy with him, and to demonstrate their sorrow for the scandal brought upon the society.

The school of Pythagoras, (saith Origen*) put coffins in the room of them who deserted the society, looking upon them as dead men; and the Christians lament them who have been guilty of lasciviousness, or any other absurd action, as persons lost and dead to God. And among the Apostolical Constitutions† this is one, With sorrow and mourning cut off from the church the incurable person; for, saith the apostle, you shall put away from among you the evil person: and to this custom the apostle seemeth to allude, 2 Cor. ii. 1—3. xii. 21.

[5] Ver. 3. Παρὼν δὲ τῷ πνεύματι, Present in spirit.] That is, say the fathers, not only with mind and consent,‡ but διὰ τῆς πνεύματος χάριτος, by the gift of the Spirit, by which I am enabled to discern what is fit to be done in this case; even by the Spirit by which I am enabled, καὶ τὰ πόρρωθεν εἰδέναι, to discern things done at a distance, as Elisha did the actions of Gehazi by his prophetic spirit. (2 Kings v. 26.) So Chrysostom and Theophylact. And so the phrase seems to be used in these words: For though I am absent in the flesh, yet I am with you in the Spirit, rejoicing and beholding your order, and the steadfastness of your faith: (Col. ii. 5.) since in his absence he could not behold their order, and the steadfastness of their faith by his own spirit, but only by the assistance of the Holy Spirit. So also do they interpret, τοῦ ἐμοῦ πνεύματος, my spirit, (ver. 4.) by my spiritual gift; so that the sense of these words, ver. 3, 4. seems to run thus,—I by the spirit of discerning, and the authority God hath given me, have already adjudged, that this person ought to be delivered up to Satan; and therefore, when you are gathered together in the name of Christ, and have my Spirit, who also presides in your assemblies, and there assists you in the performance of your Christian offices, and have the power of Christ ready to confirm and execute your sentence, do you in his name deliver such a one to Satan.

[6] Ver. 4. Σὺν τῇ δυνάμει, With the power of the Lord Jesus Christ.] The word δύναμις, power, hath still reference to some miraculous and extraordinary power, and is not used, that I know of, concerning any simple act of discipline; as when Christ answers St. Paul thus, ἡ δύναμίς μου, my power is perfected in weakness; and the apostle saith on that account, most gladly will I rejoice in my weakness, ἵνα ἡ δύναμις τοῦ Χριστοῦ, that the power of Christ may rest upon me: (2 Cor. xii. 9, 10.) i. e. say the ancients, that, in the midst of my manifold infirmities, the power of Christ, enabling me to do all kind of miracles, may more conspicuously reside in me. This miraculous assistance is by the apostle sometimes called simply, the power, 1 Cor. ii. 4. iv. 19, 20. xii. 28, 29. sometimes the power of God, 1 Cor. ii. 5, 6. 14. xviii. 24. 2 Cor. iv. 7. xiii. 4. and sometimes the power of Christ, as in the place now cited. Now among the powers of Christ, which attended the preaching of the gospel, this was one, of delivering men for their offences up to Satan, to inflict corporal punishments on them for the destruction of the flesh. This power seems to have been peculiar to the apostles, and therefore here St. Paul prescribes the doing of it, the authority or power of his Spirit being present with them. That this is indeed the import of delivering up to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, is evident, not only from the concurring exposition of the ancients, who all interpret it of some disease to be inflicted on him by Satan,* but also from the end of that delivery to him, which is, saith the apostle here, for the destruction of the flesh; and in the case of Hymenæus and Philetus, that they might not learn to blaspheme. Now bodily afflictions plainly tend to mortify the flesh, and to awaken men as oft as they came thus from a miraculous power, to consider of their ways, and quit those courses which thus subject them to the hand of God; whereas excommunication hath no apparent tendency to those ends, when no such dreadful issue follows from it, and therefore seems not to be all that is intended by this delivery up to Satan: though, I confess, the Jews expected some like effect of their excommunication, called cherem, which, saith Buxtorf,† ran in this form of words, "Sint super ipsum plagæ magnæ, et fideles, morbi magni, et horribiles:" Let his strokes be great, and his diseases horrible. Moreover, the apostle speaks not of this as a common act of discipline, which every presbyter might exercise, but as of that which required his extraordinary presence in the Spirit, and the power of Christ assisting them; and therefore seems to speak of it as an act which was to be attended with some miraculous effect.

[7] Ver. 6. Οὐ καλὸν τὸ καύχημα ὑμῶν.] Some Latin copies omit the negative οὐ, whence, saith Dr. Mills, this is undoubtedly the true reading; whereas it is retained by all the Greek commentators, and all the versions, by Hilary the deacon, and Cod. Alex. and so undoubtedly ought to be read: that also φύραμα ζυμοῖ, and not δολοῖ, is the true reading here, and Gal. v. 9. see proved Examen Millii here.

[8] Ζυμοῖ, Leavens.] i. e. Soureth and corrupteth: so Jerome, "totam massam corrumpit," it corrupts the whole lump. Thus Plutarch saith,‡ The priest of Jupiter might not touch leaven, because ἡ ζύμη δὲ γέγονεν ἐκ φθορᾶς, αὐτὴ καὶ φθείρει τὸ φύραμα μιγνυμένη, leaven both arises from corruption, and corrupts the mass it is mixed with.

[9] Ver. 7. Ἐκκαθάρατε τὴν παλαιὰν ζύμην, Purge out the old leaven.] Here the apostle speaks of cutting off the incestuous person, according to the metaphor of the Jews, whose saying is, that, as a little leaven leavens the whole lump, so concupiscence corrupts the whole man; and that, by the command to abstain from leaven, adultery is forbidden. This impurity he calls the old leaven to be purged out, because the Corinthians were infamous for it to a proverb, as Phavorinus,* Hesychius, and Erasmus, shew. He alludes also to the command to put away leaven out of their house, in commanding to put away the evil person; and to the paschal feast, in giving this reason why the old leaven should be put away, because Christ our passover is sacrificed for us; which being done once for all, we Christians must ever keep the feast, by being always a new lump, pure from hypocrisy, which is the leaven of the pharisees, (Luke xii. 1.) from the leaven of false doctrine, and corrupting of the word of God, which is the leaven of the pharisees and sadducees, (Matt. xvi. 6. 12.) and from the leaven of wickedness, and wicked men, according to those words of the Psalmist, Deliver me out of the hands of the wicked; and from the hands of the cruel, וחומצ, and the leavened; (Psal. lxxi. 4.) i. e. the sour and the angry man, who corrupts and depraves others.

[10] Ver. 8. Μηδὲ ἐν ζύμῃ κακίας, Not with the leaven of that malice,] Which is usually carried on with dissimulation of affection, and concern for piety, and so is pharisaical; nor with that wickedness which prompts us to deceive another to his hurt. Thus Theophylact here saith, he is κακὸς an evil man, who doth evil things; but he is πονηρὸς who doth them with profound subtilty, and deceitful, or hurtful, counsel. Thus πονηροὶ καὶ γόητες, evil men and deceitful, are joined together as deceiving and being deceived, 2 Tim. iii. 13. but with the unleavened bread of sincerity; which expression seems to allude to the import of the Hebrew מצים, or azyma, which, saith Bochart,† signifies "panes puros et sinceros," pure and sincere loaves, from all mixture of leaven. And so this is an exhortation to reject such false apostles, and deceitful workers, as this doctor was, and others in the church of Corinth, who transformed themselves into the apostles of Christ, (2 Cor. xi. 13.) and yet were not ἐξ εἰλικρινείας, men of sincerity, (2 Cor. ii. 17.) but corrupters of the truth, who walked in craftiness, handling the word of God deceitfully, (2 Cor. iv. 2.) and by their subtilty seduced them from the simplicity which was in Christ. (2 Cor. xi. 3.) More intolerable is it in the doctor to reject these words, ἀλλ' ἐν ἀζύμοις εἰλικρινείας, καὶ ἀληθείας, upon the sole authority of the Ethiopic version, they being owned by all the other versions, by all the Greek scholiasts, by Origen, ed. Huet. in Jer. p. 143. in Matt. p. 170. in Joh. 163. 172. by Hilary D. by Jerome, lib. i. contra Pelag. F. 97. and the very word mattsoth, azymos, might have taught him the pertinency and elegancy of these words; that signifying, saith Bochart, panes puros, et sinceros, chap. vi. 5. He rejects οὐδὲ εἷς, upon the sole authority of the same version, though it be owned by all the other versions, and all the Greek and Latin commentators. See the mischief of this licentiousness, Examen Millii in locum.

[11] Ver. 9. Ἔγραψα ὑμῖν ἐν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ, I had written to you in this Epistle.] All the Greek commentators upon this place conclude he wrote this, οὐκ ἐν ἄλλῃ, ἀλλ' ἐν ταύτῃ, not in another, but in this Epistle: so Chrysostom, Theodoret, Œcumenius, Photius, and Theophylact, on this place. And who ever heard among the ancients of more than fourteen epistles of St. Paul? Or of one word cited from an epistle of his to the Corinthians supposed to be lost? It cannot therefore be concluded hence, that any epistle of St. Paul, writ and sent to the church of Corinth, is lost: but only that some things in this Epistle were changed by him, before he sent it to them. But, saith Mr. Clerc, there is a contrariety in this interpretation to all the rules of grammar, which it seems none of the Greek scholiasts understood so well as he. Moreover, it is the common observation of grammarians, that the aorist is so called, because it is of an indefinite signification, and is sometimes used for the perfect, sometimes for the plusquam perfect tense. So Herod, laying hold of John, ἔδησεν αὐτὸν, had bound him, Matt. xiv. 3. He commanded his servants to be called, οἷς ἔδωκε τὸ ἀργύριον, to whom he had given the silver, Luke xix. 15. Jesus ἐμαρτύρησεν, had testified, John iv. 44. ἐξένευσεν, he had withdrawn himself, John v. 13. Annas ἀπέστειλεν, had sent him bound to Caiaphas, John xviii. 24. (2.) That τῇ, as Phavorinus saith, is put ἀντὶ τοῦ ταύτῃ, instead of this, he both confesses and proves from Col. iv. 16. 1 Thess. v. 27. and where then is the contrariety of this interpretation to the rules of grammar?

[12] Ver. 11. Νυνὶ δὲ ἔγραψα ὑμῖν, But now I have written to you.]

Obj. 1. This only shews (saith Mr. Clerc) that the apostle here speaks of this Epistle, and in ver. 9. of another.

Ans. This only shews that he speaks of this Epistle sent, and of ver. 9. of what he had writ in it, before he saw this cause to change his style, and to add, to what he had said before, a railer and a drunkard.

Obj. 2. But (saith he) he had no where, in the former part of this, admonished his Corinthians not to associate with fornicators.

Ans. Nor is it to be wondered, that he should no where say that which he had changed into these words, ver. 11. And, secondly, according to my exposition, what he before had written, is contained in the immediate preceding words, ver. 10.

[13] Ὀνομαζόμενος ἀδελφὸς, Called a brother.] Some think the word ὀνομαζόμενος refers to the words following, and imports, that if any man be defamed, and noted for the vices following, he is by the apostle's direction to be avoided: but the word plainly refers to the brother, and imports, that if any one, who hath professed himself a Christian, be found guilty of these crimes, he is to be avoided: now of all these sins, some among the Corinthians were still guilty; of fornication, 2 Cor. xii. 21. of covetousness and extortion, 1 Cor. vi. 8. 2 Cor. xi. 20. they were idolaters, 1 Cor. x. 7. xiv. 20. railers or contumelious persons, 2 Cor. x. 2. xi. 19. drunkards, 1 Cor. xi. 21.

[14] Μηδὲ συνεσθίειν, No not to eat.] According to the Jewish canons, it was not lawful to eat or drink with one that was under their cherem. Tertullian and Theodoret carry this farther, and say, "Cum talibus non vult nos cibum sumere, nedum eucharistiam," with such we must not eat at our own, much less at the Lord's table. But this, being a matter of discipline, can concern only those who are intrusted with the government of the church, not private communicants; though doubtless he, who was by excommunication separated from the place where this and other sacred functions were performed, was also separated from the table of the Lord.

[15] Ver. 12. Τί γάρ μοι καὶ τοὺς ἔξω κρίνειν; For what have I to do to judge them that are without?] Here our critic Mr. Le Clerc is too bold; (1.) when he quarrels with St. Paul's Greek; asking, what construction this is, τί μοι κρίνειν? I answer, none at all, but τί μοι προσήκει καὶ τοὺς ἔξω κρίνειν, what concerns it me to judge them that are without? is both good sense and good Greek. As in Latin, "Quid mea refert?" In English, What is it to me? So τί μοι ὄφελος, what profit (is it) to me? 1 Cor. xv. 32. τί γὰρ, what is it to the truth of God? Rom. iii. 3. τί γὰρ, quid enim refert? Phil. i. 18. (2.) It is horribly bold to add, without any, yea, against all copies, μὲν οὖν γε instead of κρίνειν οὐχὶ, which have no affinity either in letters or in sense: the words need none of these criticisms; they are taken from Deut. xiii. 5. xxii. 21. and there they run thus, καὶ ἐξαιρεῖς τὸ πονηρὸν ἐξ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν, so shall you put away the evil from among you; and the Greek commentators read them thus, καὶ ἐξαιρεῖτε τὸ πονηρὸν, and you will put away the evil. So the whole sense runs thus, κέκρικα, I have judged already of the incestuous person, (ver. 3.) and I judge concerning all other persons, in profession Christians, but in practice fornicators, &c. that you ought not to communicate with them; but I say nothing of the stepmother of this person, who hath not owned the Christian faith: for what belongs it to me to judge of them who are without the church? Do not you in your church, and civil assemblies, judge them only which are of your body? But them who are without the church, God, who is the governor of all men, judgeth; and, by thus judging those that are within your body, you will put away the evil, or, this evil person, from you.

CHAP. VI.

1. DARE any of you, having a matter (of complaint, suit, or action,) against another, [1] go to law before the unjust (the heathen tribunals), and not (rather submit it to be heard) before the saints?

2. Do you not know (from Daniel) that [2] the saints (of the Most High shall receive the kingdom, Dan. vii. 27. and so) shall judge the world? and if the world shall be judged by you (Christians, and by Christian magistrates), are ye unworthy (of the smallest judicatures, or) to judge [3] the smallest matters?

3. Know ye not (from Christ) that we (endued with the Holy Spirit) [4] shall judge, (condemn, and cast out, the prince of this world, and his evil) angels? [5] how much more (worthy are we, by the assistance of the same Spirit, to judge of the) things that pertain to this life?

4. If then ye have judgments, (controversies, or judicial causes) of things pertaining to this life, (do ye) set them to judge who [6] are least esteemed in (and by) the church (i. e. the heathen magistrates).

5. I speak (this) to your shame. Is it so, that (by this action you should even confess before the heathen, that) there is not a wise man among you? no, not one that shall be able to judge between his brethren?

6. But brother goeth to law with (his Christian) brother, and that before the unbelievers (as if there were not among them one believer sufficient to decide their controversies).

7. Now therefore [7] there is utterly a fault (or a defect) among you, because ye go to law (about these matters) one with another. Why do you not rather take wrong? why do you not rather suffer yourselves to be defrauded?

8. Nay, (so far are you from this Christian temper of bearing injuries with patience, that) you do wrong, and defraud, and that your brethren.

9. (And what will be the issue of these evil practices?) Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind,

10. Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God.

11. And such were some of you: but ye are washed (by baptism), but ye are sanctified, but [8] ye are justified in the name of our Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God.

12. (And whereas your false teachers encourage you to eat things offered to idols, in the idol-temples, x. 23. and to indulge unto excess, because all meats are lawful; I grant that) all (these) things are lawful to me, but all things (lawful) are not expedient (to be done, especially when tending to my brother's ruin, or my own): all things (of this nature) are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any (so as that I cannot refrain from them in such cases).

13. Meats (indeed are) for the belly, and the belly for meats (nor have either of them any other use): but (this is only for this present life: the time will come, when) [9] God shall destroy both it and them. And (but now, whereas some extend the words all things are lawful for me, to fornication also; know ye that) [10] the body is not (at all) for fornication, but for (the service of) the Lord (the Head of the body); and the Lord for (the resurrection and glorification of) the body.

14. And (accordingly) God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by his own power.

15. Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ (your head? 1 Cor. xii. 12. 27.) shall I [11] then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of a harlot (as I by fornication shall most surely do)? God forbid.

16. What! know ye not that he who is joined to a harlot is one body (with her)? for two, saith he, shall (by that action) be one flesh (as doing that by which, according to God's institution, two are made one flesh).

17. But he that is joined to the Lord is one spirit (with him, as being partaker of his Spirit; for by one Spirit we Christians are all united to this head, Rom. viii. 11. 1 Cor. xii. 13.)

18. Flee (therefore) fornication. (For) every (other) sin that a man doeth is without (the pollution of) the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth [12] against (and polluteth) his own body.

19. What! know ye not that [13] your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, (and) which you have of God, and you are not your own (he having by his Spirit taken possession of you, and sealed you up as his own proper goods)?

20. (You, I say, are not your own:) for you are bought with a price (even the precious blood of Christ): [14] therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's (by right of purchase, and the possession of his Spirit).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VI.

[1] Ver. 1. ΚΡΙΝΕΣΘΑΙ ἐπὶ τῶν ἀδίκων, Go to law before the unjust.] The saying of the Jews is this, That* he who goes to law before the tribunal of the gentiles, profanes the name of God, and gives honour to an idol; that he is to be accounted a wicked man, and as one that hath reproached and blasphemed, and lifted up his hand against the law of Moses. Accordingly, the apostle here represents this action in the Christian, as a reproach to the society, and to the spirit of wisdom which was poured out upon the church, (ver. 5, 6.) and as that which gave occasion to the heathens to observe in the Christians a contentious spirit.

[2] Ver. 2. Οἱ ἅγιοι τὸν κόσμον κρινοῦσι, The saints shall judge the world.] We often read that even the best of saints shall stand before the judgment-seat of Christ; (Matt. xxv. 33. 2 Cor. v. 10. Rev. xx. 12.) that they shall be assessors with Christ then, we read not; the words of Christ, Matt. xix. 28. in what sense soever taken, prove it not; they being spoken not of all saints, of whom the apostle here speaks, but of the twelve apostles only: these words must therefore admit of one of these two senses; viz. that there shall be Christian magistrates, who shall be governors, and so judges of the world, according to the prophecy of Isaiah, That kings shall be their nursing-fathers, and queens their nursing-mothers, (Isa. xlix. 23.) and that of Daniel, (vii. 18.) The saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom; or, that they shall judge and condemn the world by the faith preached for a testimony to them, (Matt. x. 18. xxiv. 14. Luke xxi. 13. 1 Cor. i. 6. ii. 1. 2 Thess. i. 10. 1 Tim. ii. 6. 2 Tim. i. 8.) as Noah did, (Heb. xi. 7. whence is the gospel so often called the testimony of Christ,) and by the Spirit given to convince the world of sin, of righteousness, and judgment; (John xvi. 8.) in which sense our Lord saith, Now is the judgment of this world, John xii. 31.

[3] Κριτηρίων ἐλαχίστων, The smallest matters.] This word κριτήρια here, and ver. 4. saith Grotius, doth not signify tribunals, but controversies and judicial causes. Accordingly the βιωτικὰ κριτήρια, judgments concerning things of this life, ver. 4. are by Photius rendered τὰ βιωτικὰ φιλονεικήματα, καὶ τὰς πρὸς ἀλλήλους δίκας καὶ ἔριδας, their controversies, contentions, and judicial causes, against each other, about these matters.

[4] Ver. 3. Ἀγγέλους κρινοῦμεν, We shall judge angels.] i. e. Evil angels, say all the Greek scholiasts; and this the Christians gloriously did by expelling them from their seats and their dominions, and forcing them to confess before their votaries they were only devils: (see the general preface, §. 18.) in which sense, saith our Saviour, Now is the prince of this world cast out; the prince of this world is judged, John xii. 31. xvi. 11.

* Buxt. Lex. Talm. p. 1666.

[5] Μήτι γε βιωτικά, How much more.] Μήτι γε, πόσῳ γε μᾶλλον, Hesychius, Phavorinus, and Photius apud Œcumenium.

[6] Ver. 4. Τοὺς ἐξουθενημένους, Them who are least esteemed.] That the ἐξουθενημένοι are the heathens, hath been shewed, note on 1 Cor. i. 27, 28. Moreover, it is manifest that these words are to be read by way of question, as in the paraphrase; or by way of charge against them, thus, If you still retain your secular judicatures, or tribunals, you set them to be judges over you, who are despised in the church. For the apostle doth not here command them to do this, but sharply doth rebuke them for it, saying, I speak this to your shame: and this he doth by shewing that this in effect signified, that there was not a wise man among them.

[7] Ver. 7. Ὅλως ἥττημα, There is utterly a defect,] Among you, that go to law at all; it being either, on the one side, want of patience and Christian contentment, that you do not rather bear some injuries, than thus seek to redress them; or, on the other, covetousness and injustice, which move you to do wrong to and defraud your brethren.

[8] Ver. 11. Ἀλλ' ἐδικαιώθητε ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι Κυρίου, &c. But ye are justified in the name of our Lord.] Here is the figure called hyperbaton, for, we are justified in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and sanctified by the Spirit of our God: so Philem. 5. Hearing of thy love and faith which thou hast towards the Lord Jesus Christ, and towards all saints; i. e. which faith thou hast towards Christ, and love to his saints. Moreover, whereas Mr. Clerc here saith, That to be justified is the same thing with being washed, or sanctified, and that to be so by the name of the Lord, is to be so by taking upon them the profession of the Christian religion in baptism, he is utterly out in both, for sure I am he cannot produce one passage in all St. Paul's Epistles, where δικαιωθῆναι, to be justified, bears any such sense; but it still signifies to be absolved from the guilt of sin, and approved as righteous, either at present, or before God's tribunal. And so the name of Christ, when we are said to be justified by it, must signify, not the profession of Christianity, but faith in Christ dying for us, and be the same with ἐν αὐτῷ, in him, for in him shall all that believe be justified, &c. (Acts xiii. 39.) Moreover, justification here is ascribed to the name of Christ, i. e. to faith in him; sanctification, to the Spirit of God; which shews they cannot signify the same thing: for, where the cause is different, the effect must be so also.

[9] Ver. 13. Ὁ Θεὸς καταργήσει, God shall destroy both it and them.] From these words that opinion, not of Origen only, but of Athanasius,* St. Basil,† Hilary,‡ Theodoret,‖ and others, seems to be confirmed, that at the resurrection, when we shall neither eat nor drink, marry, nor be given in marriage, (Matt. xii. 30.) there will be, as no meats, the world being then burnt up; so no belly, nec quæ sunt sub ventre, nor any difference of sexes.

[10] Τὸ δὲ σῶμα οὐ τῇ πορνείᾳ, The body is not for fornication.] The heresy of the Nicolaitans held, that it was lawful to eat things offered to idols, and to commit fornication, (Rev. ii. 14, 15.) as Irenæus, Clemens Alexandrinus, Theodoret, and St. Austin, testify. (See the notes on 2 Pet. ii. and the Epistle of St. Jude.) And therefore Theodoret introduces the words thus, τοῦτο λέγεις, This thou sayest in defence of thy eating thus, and of thy fornication, All things are lawful for me.

* Orat. 3. cont. Arian. † In Psal. cxiv. ‡ Con. 23. in Matt. § In locum, Vide Huet. Orig. lib. ii. qu. 9. §. 8.

[11] Ver. 15. Ἆραϛ οὖν.] Taking them then from Christ, shall I make them the members of a harlot? For, saith Hilary here, "Membra adhærentia meretrici desinunt esse membra Christi," The members, which cleave to a harlot, cease to belong to Christ.

[12] Ver. 18. Εἰϛ τὸ ἴδιον σῶμα, Against his own body.] Other sins pollute the heart and the soul, but those of fornication and uncleanness do properly pollute the body. Hence are those actions styled always in the Scripture, pollutions: for though all sins (saith Hilary) render a man carnal, yet is this more especially, "desiderium carnis, quod sordibus maculatam animam cum corpore tradit gehennæ," carnal concupiscence, which exposes to hell the soul, together with the body, defiled by its filthiness. This argument against fornication, from the defilement of the body by it, plainly shews, that it is a sin against the law of nature, and is a fault in man, as man.

[13] Ver. 19. Τὸ σῶμα ὑμῶν ναὸϛ, &c. Your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost.] Two things concur to make up the notion of a temple:

First, That the Divinity should either dwell in or give some signal tokens of his especial presence there. Hence was the temple of Jerusalem called the house of God's habitation, and the tabernacle, the house where the Divinity or Schechinah dwelt in the midst of them. Accordingly, I am with you, Hag. ii. 4. is there interpreted, ver. 5. My spirit is in the midst of you, or among you. Hence is the tabernacle styled, the place of the habitation of God's glory, Psal. xxvi. 8. and from thence he is said to shine forth, when he gave them a testimony of his gracious presence. Now the Holy Spirit, being that in the new testament, which answers to the Schechinah in the old, he dwelling in the bodies, and being present in the assemblies of the saints, doth make them a spiritual temple, or habitation of the Lord. (Eph. ii. 22.)

Secondly, That it be a place dedicated and appropriated to his use: hence were the tabernacle and temple so often styled the house and temple of the Lord, and by him my house, according to those words of Christ, Wist you not that I must be ἐν τοῖϛ τοῦ πατρὸϛ, in my Father's house? for as to be ἐν τοῖϛ τοῦ Διὸϛ,* is to be in the temple of Jupiter, so to be ἐν τοῖϛ τοῦ πατρὸϛ, must signify to be in my Father's temple; and therefore, saith the apostle, you are not your own, as being dedicated and appropriated to God's use and service.

He also saith, If any man corrupt, or desecrate, the temple of God, him will God destroy, for the temple of God is holy, (1 Cor. iii. 17.) i. e. appropriated and consecrated to his use. And he exhorts all Christians to abstain from all idolatrous and profane actions by this inquiry, What communion hath the temple of God with idols? proving all Christians to be the temple of God, and so appropriated to him by these words, You are the temple of God; as God hath said, I will dwell and walk in them; I will be their God, and they shall be to me a people. (2 Cor. vi. 16.)

* Apud Joseph. lib. i. contr. Apion. 1043. A.

Excellent therefore is the inference of Tertullian,* that since all Christians are become the temple of God, by virtue of his Holy Spirit sent into their hearts, and consecrating their bodies to his service, we should make chastity the keeper of this sacred house, and suffer nothing unclean or profane to enter into it, lest that God who dwelleth in it, being offended, should desert his house thus defiled.

CHAP. VII.

1. NOW (to speak) concerning the things whereof you wrote unto me: (viz.) [1] It is good for a man not to touch a woman (i. e. to live unmarried, or without the use of a woman, or, it is not good to marry, Matt. xix. 10. This I grant as Christ did to him who, having the gift of continency, can receive the saying).

2. Nevertheless, to avoid (that) fornication (which is so common at Corinth, and so freely practised by the Nicolaitans, under the pretence that matrimony is a thing indifferent), let every man have (ἐχέτω, retain,) his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband.

3. Let (also) the husband render to the wife due benevolence (i. e. the conjugal duty): and likewise also the wife to the husband.

4. (For) the wife [2] hath not power over her own body, but the husband: and likewise also the husband hath no power of his own body, but the wife.

5. Defraud ye not (therefore) one another (of this benevolence), except it be with (mutual) consent for a time, that ye may give yourselves [3] to fasting and prayer; and (then) [4] come together again, that Satan tempt you not for your incontinency.

6. But I speak this (which I am now about to say of continence, ver. 2.) [5] by permission, and not by commandment (of the Lord, enjoin continence, ver. 25.)

7. For I would that all men were (unmarried) even as I myself (am). But every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that.

8. I say therefore [6] to the unmarried (men) and (to the) widows, It is good for them if they abide even as I (do).

9. But if they [7] cannot contain, let them marry: for it is better to marry than to burn (or to be inquieted with filthy lustings).

10. And to the married I command, yet not I (only), but the Lord (also, Matt. xix.) [8] Let not the wife depart (or separate herself) from her husband.

11. But if she depart (Gr. ἐὰν δὲ χωρισθῇ, but if she be separated), let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away (or divorce) his wife.

12. But to the rest (you mention to me, who are coupled with unbelievers,) speak I, [9] not the Lord (by any decision he hath made, or any precept he hath given, in this case, ver. 25. as in the former instance): If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, [10] let him not put her away.

13. And the woman which hath a husband that believ-

* "Cum omnes templum simus Dei, illato in nos et consecrato Spiritu Sancto, ejus templi æditua et antistita pudicitia est, qui nihil immundum nec profanum inferri sinat, ne Deus ille, qui inhabitat, inquinatam sedem offensos derelinquat." De cultu fœmin. lib. ii. cap. i.

eth not, and (yet) he be pleased to dwell with her, [9] let her not leave him.

14. For the unbelieving husband is (Gr. hath been) sanctified [11] by the (believing) wife, and the unbelieving wife is (hath been) sanctified by the (believing) husband: [12] else were your children (seminally) unclean (and so not to be admitted to the Christian covenant); but now are they holy.

15. But if the unbelieving (person will) depart (and so break off the matrimonial duty), let him depart. A brother or sister [13] is not under bondage (Gr. is not enslaved) in such cases: but God hath called us to peace (and therefore we must give no occasion of quarrel with, or separation from, so near a relative, or of disturbance of the family).

16. For what knowest thou, O wife, whether (by dwelling with him) thou shalt (not be a means to) save thy husband? or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt (not, by dwelling thus with her, be a means to) save thy wife?

17. [14] But (whether this be so or not) as God hath distributed (the gift of continence) to every man (or not), as the Lord hath called every one (to the faith, married to an unbeliever, or servant to them, or not), so let him walk (doing nothing on his part contrary to those relations). And so ordain I in all churches (which I have converted).

18. Is any man called being circumcised? [15] let him not (endeavour to) become (as one) uncircumcised. Is any (man) called in uncircumcision? let him not be circumcised.

19. Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing (that renders us more or less acceptable in the sight of God), but the keeping of the commandments of God (is all in all).

20. Let every man (still) abide in the same calling in which he was called (to the faith, not thinking himself obliged by it to quit his calling).

21. Art thou called being a servant? care not for it: but if thou canst (lawfully) be made free, use it rather (care not I say).

22 For he that is called in the Lord, being a servant, is the Lord's freeman: (being delivered by him from his bondage to sin, John viii. 36.) likewise he that is called, being free, (nevertheless) is Christ's servant.

23. [16] Ye are bought with a price; (Gr. Have you been bought with a price from your slavery?) be not ye (again) the servants of men (who are unbelievers, 1 Tim. vi. 2.

24. Otherwise,) brethren, let every man, wherein he is called, therein [17] abide with God.

25. Now [18] concerning virgins I have no (particular) commandment of the Lord [19] yet I give my judgment, as one that hath obtained mercy of the Lord to be (found) faithful (in my apostolical function, by advising still what is best and most expedient in those cases to be done).

26. I suppose therefore that this is good [20] for the present distress (of Christians, daily subject to persecution), I say, that it is good for a man so to be (i. e. a virgin still).

27. Art thou (then) bound to a wife? seek not to be loosed. Art thou loosed from a wife? seek not a wife.

28. But if thou marry, thou hast not sinned; and if a virgin marry, she hath not sinned. Nevertheless such (in these times of persecution) shall have (more) trouble in the flesh: but I spare you (not thinking it therefore fit to lay the yoke of celibacy upon you).

29. But this I say, brethren, (that) the time (of this life) is short: it remains (then) that both they that have wives be as though they had none;

30. And they that weep, as though they wept not; and they that rejoice, as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy, as though they possessed not;

31. And they that use this world, [21] as not abusing it, (or, as those that use it not): for the fashion of this world passeth away.

32. But (this advice I give, because) I would have you without carefulness (for the things of the world: now so it is that) he that is unmarried careth (only) for the things that belong to the Lord, how he may please the Lord:

33. But he that is married careth (also) for the things that are of the world, (and is solicitous) how he may please his wife.

34. [22] There is (the same) difference also between a wife and a virgin. (For) the unmarried woman careth (only) for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy both in body and spirit: but she that is married careth (also) for the things of the world, how she may please her husband.

35. And (of) this (difference) I speak for your own profit, not that I may cast a snare upon you; (by restraining you wholly from marriage), but for that which is comely, and that you may attend upon the Lord without distraction.

36. But if any man think that he behaveth himself uncomely towards his virgin, [23] if she pass the flower of her age (Gr. if it be overaged), and need so require (or, he thinks this ought to be done), let him do what he will, he sinneth not: let them (who so think) marry.

37. [24] Nevertheless, he that stands steadfast in his heart, having no necessity, but hath power over his own will, and hath so decreed (or determined) in his heart that he will keep his virgin (i. e. virginity), doeth well.

38. So then he that giveth (her) in marriage doeth well; but he that giveth (her) not in marriage doeth better. (Or thus, So that he that marrieth doeth well, but he that marrieth not doeth better.)

39. The wife is bound by the law so long as her husband liveth; but if her husband be dead, she is at liberty to be married to whom she will; only (she ought to do it) [25] in the Lord.

40. [26] But she is happier if she (can, and therefore doth) so abide, after my judgment: and I think also I have the Spirit of God (to direct me even in this judgment, δοκῶ δὲ κἀγὼ, I think that I also have the Spirit of God).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VII.

[1] Ver. 1. ΚΑΛΟ'Ν ἀνθρώπῳ γυναικὸς μὴ ἅπτεσθαι. It is good for a man not to touch a woman.] It was an old philosophical question, An uxor ducenda esset, whether a man should marry? In which many of them held the negative, as Bion and Antisthenes,* who said, A handsome wife would be common, one deformed a punishment, οὐ λῃπτέον ἄρα, therefore we should have none. Hence that of Menander,† οὐ γαμεῖς, ἐάνγε νοῦς ἔχεις, if thou art wise, thou wilt not marry. This was held out of different sentiments; as, v. g. by some out of good liking to that celebrated doctrine of Plato, κοινὰς μὲν γυναῖκας, κοινοὺς δὲ εἶνι παῖδας, that women and children should be common; and this doctrine was improved by the Nicolaitans into all manner of impurity, who therefore did ἀναίδην ἐκπορνεύειν, commit whoredom without shame. But others of the school of Pythagoras refused to touch a woman, as being an impediment to philosophy, and that which defiled that purity they aimed at. Hence Apollonius* the magician is represented as a man of so great chastity, Γυναικείας ὅτι καθαρὸν ἑαυτὸν μίξεως διὰ τέλος ἤγαγε, that he lived ever free from converse with women. And Porphyry saith,† that a philosopher must not marry; that, to live the intellectual life, we must abstain from women, all use of them being a defilement. The word γυνὴ, which, in this chapter, still signifies a wife, seems to refer this question to the first opinion, but the phrase γυναικὸς μὴ ἅπτεσθαι, inclines us to refer it to the latter; the first question being too gross to be propounded by the Corinthians to the apostle; the second being a question then in vogue, on the account of which Apollonius and the Pythagoreans obtained great repute.

[c] Ver. 4. Οὐκ ἐξουσιάζει, Hath not power.] Here is a plain argument against polygamy: for, if the man hath no power over his own body, he cannot give the power of it to another, and so he cannot marry another; nor could his wife, exclusively to him, have the power of his body, if he could give his body to another.

[d] Ver. 5. Τῇ νηστείᾳ καὶ τῇ προσευχῇ, To fasting and prayer.] The apostle speaks not here of ordinary prayer, which is the daily work of Christians, but of extraordinary devotions on some special occasions; for daily prayers, public or private, needed no such consent of parties, nor by them could either of them be defrauded of their due benevolence. Vain therefore are the questions of St. Jerome, Quale illud bonum est quod orare prohibet, quare non ingrediuntur ecclesias? as if the bed undefiled could hinder men's prayers, or their going to church. Vain is his inference, "Si sacerdoti semper orandum est, ergo semper carendum matrimonio," if the priest must always pray, he must never marry: for to pray always, and without ceasing, is also the duty of the laity. (Luke xviii. 1. Eph. vi. 18. 1 Thess. v. 17.)

[e] Καὶ πάλιν ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ συνέρχεσθε, And come together again.] This chapter affords many arguments against the vow of continence, and those perpetual divorces from the bed, which are so commonly practised by the papists, on pretence of religion. For (1.) the apostle here admits of no separation of the wife and husband, but only with condition that they come together again to perform conjugal duties, as the word συνελθεῖν doth import, not allowing a perpetual separation, no not that they may give themselves to prayer and fasting; and that for a perpetual reason, at least whilst an age capable of temptation, and which may be subject to incontinence, remains. (2.) He declares the gift of continence not to be common to all, but proper to some only, as being the proper gift of God, and therefore not to be gotten by our industry: I would (saith he) that all men were unmarried, even as I myself am; but every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that; he then that can receive it, (Matt. xix. 12.) saith our Saviour, let him receive it: whence it is natural to conclude, that all men cannot. (3.) Notwithstanding the present necessity which rendered it so desirable, that they might serve the Lord without distraction, and which made their condition better and more happy who had the gift of continence, he abstains from laying any obligation to celibacy upon them, lest he should lay a snare on their consciences, (ver. 35.) and bring them under a necessity of burning, (ver. 9.) Much less would he have urged young men and women to that vow, which lays a greater snare and an absolute necessity upon them, rather to burn than marry. And, lastly, he supposes that some cannot contain, (ver. 9.) some have a necessity to marry, and need so requires them to do, (ver. 36, 37.) This respects not what the apostle had said, but what he was about to say of continence, it being very usual with the apostle to make this preface to what he was about to say: so ver. 29. of this chapter, τοῦτο δέ φημι, But this, I say, brethren, the time is short; 1 Cor. i. 12. τοῦτο δὲ λέγω, but this I say, viz. That every one of you saith, I am of Paul; 1 Cor. xi. 17. τοῦτο δὲ παραγγέλλων, but as to this I am about to declare unto you, I praise you not. 1 Thess. iv. 15. See Gal. iii. 17. blot out therefore the note there, and substitute this in the room of it.

[f] Ver. 8. Ἀγάμοις, The unmarried men.] The apostle begins his discourse concerning the virgin man and woman, ver. 25. here therefore he must speak of the unmarried man, or the man loosed from a wife, and of the widow, as ver. 11. Ἄγαμος, is the woman, who must not embrace a second marriage. And perhaps this only was St. Paul's case, as may, saith Grotius, be probably collected from this place, and may be argued from the testimony of Clemens of Alexandria,* and the interpolated Ignatius, who both reckon St. Paul among the apostles that were married; and from the strictness of the Jewish canons, which obliged all Jews to marry at twenty.

[g] Ver. 9. Εἰ δὲ μὴ ἐγκρατεύονται, γαμησάτωσαν, If they contain not, let them marry.] Had the apostle then known of any vow of continence, or any ecclesiastical law rendering it a damnable sin, and a renouncing their first faith to marry, though they burned, he could not so generally have propounded and prescribed marriage as the remedy of that disease; but would have restrained his words, as Esthius here doth, "Iis quibus conjugii contrahendi potestas esset, id est, qui à lege et voto continentiæ sunt liberi," to those who were free from the law and vow of celibacy. But I believe he knew of none, whom God's law had placed under a necessity of burning; that is, say the Greek commentators, of being subject to the insults of lust.

[h] Ver. 10. Γυναῖκα ἀπὸ ἀνδρὸς μὴ χωρισθῆναι, Let not the wife depart from her husband.] Note, that the apostle speaks here of the married persons, who had mutually embraced the Christian faith, forbidding them to divorce themselves, except for cause of fornication, as it was customary for women as well as men to do, both among the Jews and Romans. Dr. Lightfoot on this place cites this canon from R. Juchanan, The wife hath power to put away her husband; and he gives instances of it in Herodias divorcing herself from Philip, and Drusilla from Azizas; and our Lord supposes this was practised, in these words, If a woman put away her husband, and marry another, she commits adul- tery. (Mark x. 12.) That this was common among the heathens, is apparent from that saying of Seneca,* that none blushes at it, because there was scarce a marriage without it. Hence had they divers names for the divorce of both kinds: for, the wife being after marriage carried to the house of her husband, her divorce was called † ἀποπομπὴ, a sending her away from his house; and because the woman, being not mistress of the house, could not do this to the man, but only leave his house, her divorce was called ἀπόλειψις, a leaving of the house, though it was conceived in the usual form, Res tuas tibi habeto: (see note on 1 Tim. iii. 2. 12.) and therefore, though the word ἀφιέτω be used both ver. 12. and 13. it was not amiss in our translators, when it related to the man, to render it, let him not, ἀποπέμπειν, put, or send her away; and, when it related to the woman, to render it, let her not ἀπολείπειν, leave him: that here the apostle condemns these divorces, with our Saviour, is evident, because he saith, he speaks this by commandment of the Lord.

[9] Ver. 12. Οὐχ ὁ Κύριος, Not the Lord.] St. Paul doth not say this, to intimate that this direction was given by him, only as a man using his natural reason to direct them to what he thought best, but not as delivering the mind of Christ; for he had before declared the contrary, saying, We have the mind of Christ, ii. 16. and after doth it in these words, If any man think himself a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord, xiv. 37. but he speaks thus to declare, our Lord in his discourse, touching divorce, had not decided the case, "de imparibus conjugiis," of the marriage of a believer with an infidel; but left this to the decision of the apostles, by the assistance of the Holy Ghost, promised to lead them into all truth. Theophylact here notes, that this and the former verse speak of those who were both infidels, when they first married; for, saith he, οὐδ' ὅλως ἐξῆν πρὸς ἄπιστον ζευγνύσθαι, it was not lawful for a Christian to be joined to an infidel.

[10] Ver. 13. Μὴ ἀφιέτω αὐτὸν, Let her not leave him.] This caution was needful, because the primitive Christians were sometimes in doubt of this, as finding that the Jews did null all marriages of the holy seed with infidels; and hence conjecturing that they also might be obliged to do so, and thinking it ἀσεβὲς, an impious thing to cohabit with a heathen, especially if he were addicted also to unnatural lusts, and that by being ὁμόκοιτοι, bedfellows to such a one, they communicated with him in his iniquity and idolatry; and concluding, that as he, who was joined to a harlot, was one body with her, so she, that was joined to an idolater, was one body with him. Hence Justin Martyr saith of one of these Christian women, not without seeming approbation of the fact, that ‡ τὸ λεγόμενον παρ' ὑμῖν ῥεπούδιον δοῦσα ἐχωρίσθη, giving him a bill of divorce, she was separated from him.

[11] Ver. 14. Ἐν τῇ γυναικὶ, By the wife.] Uxoris gratiâ, because of the wife, i. e. he is to be reputed as sanctified, because he is one flesh with her who is holy. So ἐδούλωσεν Ἰσραὴλ ἐν γυναικὶ, καὶ ἐν γυναικὶ ἐφυλάξατο, Israel served for a wife, and for a wife he kept sheep, Hos. xii. 12. I desire that you faint not, ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσί μου, by reason of my tribulations, Eph. iii. 13. and that no man be shaken ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσι ταύταις, by reason of these tribulations, 1 Thess. iii. 3. (See Noldius in the twenty-third signification of the particle Beth.) Or we may take these words in the sense of the Greek interpreters; viz. The unbelieving husband hath been sanctified by the believing wife, by his consent to cohabit with her, and to have seed by her.

[12] Ἐπεὶ ἄρα τὰ τέκνα ὑμῶν ἀκάθαρτά ἐστι, νῦν δὲ ἅγιά ἐστι, Else were your children unclean, but now they are holy.] He doth not say, Else were your children bastards, but now they are legitimate; but, Else were they unclean, i. e. heathen children, not to be owned as a holy seed, and therefore not to be admitted into covenant with God, as belonging to his holy people. That this is the true import of the words ἀκάθαρτα and ἅγια, will be apparent from the Scriptures, in which the heathens are styled the unclean, in opposition to the Jews in covenant with God, and therefore styled a holy people. So Isa. xxxv. 8. ὁδὸς καθαρὰ ἔσται ἐκεῖ, καὶ ὁδὸς ἁγία κληθήσεται, A highway shall be there, and it shall be called, The way of holiness, ἀκάθαρτος, the unclean shall not pass over it; but the redeemed of the Lord shall walk therein, ver. 9. and, lii. 1. God saith of Jerusalem the holy city, There shall no more come into thee, ἀπερίτμητος καὶ ἀκάθαρτος, the uncircumcised and unclean: so Acts x. 28. You know that it is unlawful for a Jew to keep company with a man of another nation; but God hath shewed me that I should call no man common, or ἀκάθαρτον, unclean. Whence it is evident, that the Jews looked upon themselves as δοῦλοι Θεοῦ καθαροὶ, the clean servants of God, (Nehem. ii. 20.) and upon all heathens and their offspring as unclean, by reason of their want of circumcision, the sign of the covenant. Hence, whereas it is said that Joshua circumcised the people, (v. 4.) the Septuagint say, περιεκάθαιρεν, he cleansed them. Moreover, of heathen children, and such as are not circumcised, they say, they are not born in holiness; but they on the contrary are styled zeray kedosh, σπέρμα ἅγιον, a holy seed, (Isa. vi. 13. Ezra ix. 2.) and the offspring from them, and from those proselytes which had embraced their religion, are said to be born בקדשה in holiness, and so thought fit to be admitted to circumcision, or baptism, or whatsoever might initiate them into the Jewish church; and therefore, to this sense of the words holy and unclean, the apostle may be here most rationally supposed to allude, declaring that the seed of holy persons, the offspring born ἐκ τῶν ἁγιασμένων, of saints, * as Christians are still called in the New Testament, are also holy. And though one of the parents be still a heathen, yet is the denomination to be taken from the better, and so their offspring are to be esteemed not as heathens, i. e. unclean, but holy, as all Christians by denomination are. So Clemens Alexandrinus† infers, saying, I suppose the seed of those that are holy is holy, accord- ing to that saying of the apostle Paul, The unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband, &c. Hence then the argument for infant-baptism runs thus, If the holy seed among the Jews was therefore to be circumcised, and be made federally holy by receiving the sign of the covenant, and being admitted into the number of God's holy people, because they were born in sanctity, or were seminally holy; for, the root being holy, so are the branches also: then, by like reason, the holy seed of Christians ought to be admitted to baptism, and receive the sign of the Christian covenant, the laver of regeneration, and so be entered into the society of the Christian church. The substance of this argument is in Tertullian de Anima. cap. 39. and the author of the questions, ad Antiochum, qu. 114.

Else were your children, ἀκάθαρτα, unclean, &c.] I think that the other translation, else were your children bastards, is not sufficiently confuted by saying, that then the argument will not prove what the apostle had asserted: for what more strongly enforceth the believer of each sex to own, that they may lawfully cohabit still as man and wife, than this inference, that otherwise they must own that the guilt of whoredom lay upon them both, and that their children were born, ἐκ πόρνης, i. e. bastards? (Deut. xxiii. 2.) but then the word used for a bastard by this apostle, being νόθος, (Heb. xii. 8.) and the word γνήσιος, being the proper word for a legitimate offspring, had the apostle intended such a sense, he would have used the words which, in the Greek writers, are generally used in that sense, and not such words as in the Septuagint, and in the Jewish language, always have a relation to federal holiness, or the want of it; but none at all to the legitimacy or spuriousness of the birth.

[13] Ver. 15. Οὐ δεδούλωται, Is not under bondage.] That is, saith Hilary, * the Christian in this case is free to marry to another Christian.—He is free (saith Photius†) to depart, because the other hath dissolved the marriage.—If he depart (say Chrysostom, Œcumenius, and Theophylact,‡) because thou wilt not communicate with him in his infidelity, be thou divorced, or quit the yoke; for it is better that thy marriage should be dissolved, than thy piety. These fathers therefore plainly supposed, that the laws which say, He that marries her which is put away committeth adultery, (Matt. v. 32.) and that the wife is bound to the husband as long as he liveth, (ver. 39. Rom. vii. 1—3.) concerned only equal marriages; partly because the apostle saith, he had no commandment of the Lord to produce for the decision of this case; and partly because he doth not here say, as in the case of equal marriages, ver. 11. ἐὰν χωρισθῇ, if she be separated, let her remain unmarried. It is the opinion of Mr. Thorndike,§ that the apostle looked upon marriage made by persons before they were Christians, to lay no stricter obligations on them than the laws which they were under when the marriage was contracted, designed to lay upon them; but this seems not consistent with our Lord's decision touching divorce and polygamy: for, though they were allowed both by Jews and gentiles, our Saviour pronounces them disagreeable to the first institution of matrimony by God; and, these laws binding all that were Christians, no Christian convert could, after his or her conversion, do any thing on their parts opposite to them; and whatsoever liberty of divorce the laws of Jew or gentile might allow of, the apostle will not permit the believing wife or husband to make use of them by beginning the separation: (ver. 12, 13. 15.) if then these words, a brother or sister is not in bondage in these cases, do import they are not obliged to live unmarried, such a total and perpetual desertion must dissolve the matrimony, and render the deserting person as dead unto the other: but though all the Romanists, and many of the reformed, allow of this interpretation of the fathers, it must be dangerous to admit of it without this restriction—A brother or sister is not enslaved, after all means of peace and reconciliation have been in vain attempted, and the unbeliever hath entered into another marriage, or rather hath dissolved the former by adultery, as may well be supposed of those heathens, who thus separated from their Christian mates: and this interpretation seems to be confirmed from the former words relating to the case of the believing wives and husbands; if they depart, let them remain unmarried: it being not to be supposed that believers would dissolve the bond of matrimony by adultery. Therefore the apostle seems to grant this in the case of unbelievers departing from Christians on the account of their faith.

[14] Ver. 17. Εἰ μὴ, But.] Or rather, if not. So אִם אֵין and אִם לֹא Gen. xviii. 21. εἰ δὲ μὴ, and if it be not so; see xxiv. 8. and xlii. 16. 37. Job ix. 24. εἰ δὲ μὴ, and if it be not so, who will make me a liar? and xxiv. 25. John xiv. 2. εἰ δὲ μὴ, if it were not so I would have told you. (See Naldius de partic. Hebr. p. 92.) To others, εἰ δὲ μὴ seems to be misplaced, as being added to the beginning of this verse, when indeed it belongs to the close of the former, thus: How knowest thou, O man, εἰ τὴν γυναῖκα σώσεις, whether thou shalt save thy wife or not? And so the seventeenth verse will begin ἑκάστῳ, as the twentieth and the four-and-twentieth verses, which answer to it, do.

[15] Ver. 18. Μὴ ἐπισπάσθω, Let him not be uncircumcised.] Ὅτι καὶ ἀπὸ περιτομῆς ἀκρόβυστοι γίνονται. Epiph. de Ponder. et Mensur. p. 172. He also says, that Esau did this, and therefore God said, Esau have I hated. (Photius apud Œcum. p. 423.)

[16] Ver. 23. Τιμῆς ἠγοράσθητε, Have ye been bought with a price?] That the charity of Christians was employed to buy their brethren out of slavery, we learn from the Apologies of Justin Martyr,* and Tertullian,† who tell us, that the offerings of Christians at the sacrament were, amongst others, employed for that use: and that these words ought to be rendered by way of interrogation, is evident from the preceding discourse, which is still by way of question: Is any man called, being uncircumcised? (ver. 18.) Art thou called, being a servant? (ver. 21.) And that they are to be thus interpreted the design of the apostle shews, which is to inform them, that their Christianity did not exempt them from their secular relations to heathens, the believer still continuing in his conjugal relation, and in the same relation of a servant to his heathen master. Now to tell them they were bought with a price by Christ, and therefore ought not to be the servants of men, is plainly to contradict this design; but it is well consistent with the foregoing advice, If thou canst be made free, use it rather, to add, Are ye then bought out of servitude by the charity of Christians? return not again to the service of unbelievers.

[17] Ver. 24. Let him abide with God.] Neither deserting his master upon pretence of being God's servant, nor doing any thing against the laws of God in obedience to his master.

[18] Ver. 25 Περὶ τῶν παρθένων ἐπιταγὴν Κυρίου οὐκ ἔχω, Concerning virgins I have no commandment of the Lord,] To produce, touching their continuance in, or change of, that state. Here Esthius takes care to add, that the apostle must be understood only de virginibus quæ nondum Deo voverunt continentiam, of such virgins, which were not under the vow of continence. And when the apostle saith without exception, if a virgin marry, she hath not sinned, (ver. 28.) he adds, "Nisi sit virgo Christo dicata," i. e. unless she be a virgin consecrated to Christ by such a vow; both which exceptions, seeing St. Paul, assisted by the Holy Spirit, thought not fit to add; we may presume that he knew nothing of that matter.

[19] Γνώμην δὲ δίδωμι, &c. But I give my judgment, as one that hath obtained mercy of the Lord to be found faithful.] This, saith the apostle, is all that is required of a minister of God, and a steward of his mysteries, that he be found faithful in administering the grace of his apostleship. (1 Cor. iv. 1, 2.) And this fidelity was still attended with the power of Christ assisting them, as appears from these words, I thank Christ Jesus our Lord who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry. (1 Tim. i. 12.) So that this phrase doth not imply, as some imagine, that the apostle had only an ordinary assistance in this advice, such as any pious skilful pastor may still expect; much less, that this is a counsel which might be disregarded without sin.

[20] Ver. 26. Διὰ τὴν ἐνεστῶσαν ἀνάγκην, For the present distress.] This phrase plainly shews this cannot relate ad pacata ecclesiæ tempora, to the peaceable times of the church, for they are not times of tribulation, as the word ἀνάγκη often signifies: so Luke xxi. 23. There shall be ἀνάγκη μεγάλη great tribulation, ἐν ἀνάγκαις, ἐν στενοχωρίαις, in afflictions, necessities, distresses, 2 Cor. vi. 4. ἐν ἀνάγκαις, ἐν διωγμοῖς, in necessities and persecutions, 2 Cor. xii. 10. Nor can it signify the troubles common to this life, for they are not always instant or present: see ver. 28. where the phrase is θλῖψις, ἐν σαρκὶ trouble in the flesh.

[21] Ver. 31. Ὡς μὴ καταχρώμενοι, As not abusing it.] So this expression is used in Philo;* This is another's, do not covet it; this is thy own, use it so as not abusing it; hast thou abundance, give to others: for the excellency of wealth consists not in thy purses, but in helping those that want.

Note also, That they who interpret these words, the time is short, with relation to the troubles shortly to come at the destruction of Jerusalem, and the fashion of the world passing away, of a new scene of things beginning to appear, seem not to give the true import of the apostle's words: for (1.) it is not easy to conceive what concernment the Corinthians then had in the destruction of Jerusalem; what peculiar troubles happened; what loss of wives or of possessions they did then sustain; or, indeed, what persecution they then lay under, from which the destruction of Jerusalem might free them.

Secondly, The fashion of the world's passing away, seems plainly to refer to the dissolution of it, or at least to our passing out of it in a short time, according to those words of St. John, Love not the world, nor the things of the world: for the fashion of the world passeth away, and the lusts thereof. (1 John ii. 15. 17.) Again, to have, and use these things, as if we had them not, or did not use them, is to be moderate in the enjoyment of them; not to be much affected with them when we have, or much afflicted when we want or lose them.

[22] Ver. 34. Μεμέρισται ἡ γυνὴ καὶ ἡ παρθένος, There is a difference between a wife and a virgin.] The reading of the king's manuscript is this, καὶ μεμέρισται, and is distracted. And then begins the thirty-fourth verse, thus, καὶ ἡ γυνὴ ἄγαμος, καὶ ἡ παρθένος ἡ ἄγαμος, and the unmarried woman, i. e. the widow, and the virgin careth for the things of the Lord: but though this reading makes a good sense, it is not found in any of the Greek or Latin interpreters. (2.) It makes too great a variation from the ordinary reading, by adding καὶ before μεμέρισται, and by joining ἡ γυνὴ, ἡ ἄγαμος, which in all printed copies and ancient interpreters are separated. And (3.) it makes ἡ γυνὴ here to signify the sex only, and to be indeed a virgin, or unmarried woman: whereas in this chapter it above twenty times signifies a wife, and always stands opposed to the virgin, or unmarried person: so ver. 1, 2. ver. 3. twice; ver. 4. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. twice; 16. twice; 27. thrice; 29. 39. which observation is sufficient to destroy this reading; especially seeing the common reading gives a good sense, and may be rendered thus, The virgin and the wife are divided, or drawn several ways: the first, looking only after purity; the second, after the pleasure of her husband also.

[23] Ver. 36. Ἐὰν ᾖ ὑπέρακμος, If it be overaged.] The Jews,* from the precept to increase and multiply, thought themselves obliged to marry at twenty, and that they offended against the law if they did not so, declaring that whosoever neglected this precept was guilty of homicide. The philosophers say, with Hesiod,† that γάμος ὥριος, marriage was seasonable to the woman about thirty, to the male from thirty to thirty-five. By the law of Lycurgus,‡ they who continued unmarried were prohibited to see the games: by the laws of the Spartans they were punished: and by Plato, they are declared unworthy of any honour: to either of these opinions the discourse of the apostle may relate.

[24] Ver. 37. Note, It is generally supposed, that these three verses relate to virgins under the power of parents and guardians; and hence the usual inference is this, Children are to be disposed of in marriage by their parents. Now this may be true, but it hath no foundation in this text; for τηρεῖν ἑαυτοῦ παρθένον, is not to keep his daughter's, but his own virginity, or rather his purpose of virginity: for, as Phavorinus* informs us, He is called a virgin who freely gives up himself to the Lord, renouncing matrimony, and preferring a life spent in continency.

And that this must be the true import of these words, appears from this consideration, that this depends upon the purpose of his own heart, and the power he hath over his own will, and the no necessity arising from himself to change this purpose: whereas the keeping a daughter unmarried depends not on these conditions on her father's part, but on her own; for, let her have a necessity, surely the apostle would not advise the father to keep her a virgin, because he hath determined so to do; nor could there be any doubt whether the father had power over his own will or not, when no necessity lay upon him to betroth his virgin. The Greek runs to this sense, If he had stood already firm in his heart, finding no necessity, to wit, to change his purpose; and hath power over his own will not to marry, finding himself able to persist in the resolution he hath made to keep his virginity; he doeth well to continue a virgin: and then the phrase, If any man thinks he behaves himself unseemingly towards his virgin, if it be overaged, and thinks he ought rather to join in marriage; refers to the aforesaid opinions of Jew and gentile, that all ought to marry at such an age; if any think thus, saith the apostle, let them do what they will, let them marry, for, in so doing, they do not sin: and then he concludes with those words applied to both cases, So then both he that marries doeth well, and he that marries not doeth better.

[25] Ver. 39. Ἐν Κυρίῳ, In the Lord.] That is, ὁμοπίστῳ, to one of the same faith, say Theodoret, Tertullian, St. Cyprian, and St. Jerome, declaring, that all marriage with heathens is forbid to Christians. Hence also it is evident, that second marriages are allowable. (See Rom. vii. 3. 1 Tim. v. 14.)

[26] Ver. 40. "This (say some) is not spoken with the authority of an apostle, or a teacher sent from God, but in such a style as implies an ordinary assistance, such as any skilful pastor may still expect."

But these men did not well consider, that the apostle was writing to them, who were apt to question his apostleship, and required a proof of Christ speaking in him, (2 Cor. xiii. 3.) to whom it was proper to say, whatsoever you may conceive of me, I suppose I have the Spirit of God. Nor (2.) that δοκέω is frequently an expletive, and so δοκῶ ἔχειν may be here rendered, I have the Spirit of God. So, ὃ δοκεῖ ἔχειν, that which he seems to have, Luke viii. 18. is ὃ ἔχει, that which he hath, Matt. xiii. 12.; οἱ δοκοῦντες ἄρχειν, they which are accounted to rule, Mark x. 42. is ἄρχοντες, they which rule, Matt. xx. 25. so, in this Epistle, ὁ δοκῶν ἑστάναι, is he that stands, x. 12. ὁ δοκῶν εἶναι φιλόνεικος, he that is contentious, xi. 16. and εἴ τις δοκεῖ προφήτης, if any man be a prophet, or spiritual, let him know that the things I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord, xiv. 37.

CHAP. VIII.

1. [1] NOW as (for the plea mentioned in your letter) touching (the lawfulness of eating) things offered to idols, we (who abstain from eating these things to the scandal of others) know (as well as others) that (an idol is nothing, for) we all have (this) knowledge. (Yet) knowledge (when it is not joined with charity) puffeth up (against), but charity edifieth (our brother).

2. And (therefore) if any man think he knoweth any thing (and by reason of that knowledge despiseth others, not regarding their welfare), he knoweth nothing yet [2] as he ought to know.

3. But if any man love God (and, for his sake, his brother, John iv. 17. using his knowledge to the glory of God, and the benefit of his brother), the same is known (and accepted) of him.

4. As concerning therefore the eating of those things that are offered in sacrifice to idols, we (also generally) know that [3] an idol is nothing in the world (of that it is esteemed by them that worship it, i. e. no deity), and that there is no other God but one.

5. For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, [4] as (to the heathens) there are gods many, and lords many (they having their celestial and terrestrial gods and lords);

6. But (or, yet) to us (Christians) there is but [5] one God the Father, of whom are all things, and we in (or for) him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him.

7. [6] Howbeit there is not in every man this knowledge: for some with conscience of the idol ('s being something) unto this hour eat (what is offered to) it, as a thing offered to an idol (i. e. not as common meat, but as a sacred banquet in honour of the idol); and their conscience being weak (i. e. erroneous, subject to stumble and fall,) is defiled.

8. But (it is to be considered by us, that) meat commendeth us not to God: for neither, if we eat, are we the better (for so doing in the sight of God); neither, if we eat not, are we the worse (you therefore ought not so to eat, as to give occasion to the fall of your weak brother).

9. But (rather to) take heed, lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumbling-block to them that are weak [7] (so as to provoke them to fall from Christianity, or to defile themselves with idolatry).

10. For if any man (who with this erroneous conscience goes to these feasts) see thee who hast knowledge [8] sit at meat in the idol's temple, shall not the conscience of him that is weak be (the more) emboldened (by thy example) to eat those things which are offered to idols (in honour of the idol, or as thinking it no hurt to worship idols)?

11. And (so) through thy knowledge shall thy weak brother perish, for [9] whom Christ died?

12. But (surely it deserves well to be considered, that) when ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak consciences, ye sin against Christ (wounding and murdering the members of his body; defeating the great end of his death, and destroying them whom he designed to save).

13. Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend (and so to perish), [10] I will eat no flesh whilst the world stands, lest I make my brother to offend (and perish).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VIII.

[1] Ver. 1. ΠΕΡΙ᾽ τῶν εἰδωλοθύτων, Now as touching things offered to idols.] This is that other doctrine of the

* Παρθένος ὀνομάζεται ὁ ἐκουσίως ἑαυτὸν προσαγαγὼν τῷ Κυρίῳ, καὶ ἀποταξάμενος τῷ γάμῳ καὶ τὸν ἐν ἁγιασμῷ βίον προτίμησας.

Nicolaitans, "Nullam differentiam esse docentes, idolothyton edere," That things offered to idols might be eaten without discrimination; which the apostle here sets himself to confute, speaking of these things both in the general, x. 23. to the end; and in particular, as they were eaten, with relation to the idols in the idol's temple.

[2] Ver. 2. Καθὼς δεῖ γνῶναι, As he ought to know.] To know thus, saith St. Bernard,* is to know in what order, with what study and endeavour, and to what end, we ought to know all things. In what order, as desiring to know that first which is most necessary to salvation. With what study, as desiring most ardently to know that which is most vehemently to be loved, and most tends to provoke love in us. To what end, viz. not out of curiosity, vain-glory, or filthy lucre; but for the edification of thyself, or of thy brother.

[3] Ver. 4. Οὐδὲν εἴδωλον, An idol is nothing.] This aphorism, that an idol was nothing, was usual among the Jews, who were taught by the Old Testament, that the heathen deities were הבלים and אלילים, vanities and nothings. Thus in Echa Rabboth,† or the old comment on the Lamentations, Rachael speaks thus to God, Why enviest thou an idol, which is nothing? And in the Elle Shemeth Rabba,‡ we have this aphorism, There is nothing solid in an idol. And hence the rabbins concluded, saith Dr. Lightfoot, that it could have no power to pollute, and that whatsoever worship was paid to it, if it were not worshipped under the notion of a God, it was nothing: but whatever they meant of an idol's being nothing, it is certain the apostle only means that it is nothing of a God; for he proves that it is nothing, because there is no God but one; and so all the criticisms about the word εἴδωλον, idol, are impertinent.

[4] Ver. 5. Ὥσπερ εἰσὶ θεοὶ πολλοὶ, As there are gods many, and lords many.] Here Mr. Clerc § translates the words thus, As really there are gods many, &c. and magisterially saith, The apostle hath no reference to the gods or idols of the heathens; but, by gods in heaven, are meant God and the angels; in the earth, magistrates, who are also called the lords of the world. But he proves not a word of all this: yea, the contrary is not only said by all the ancient fathers and commentators ‖ upon the place, who both assert and prove the contrary, but also is evident from the words themselves: for, first, when the apostle had said expressly, we Christians know there is no God but one; would he immediately add, there are really gods many? What would this have been, but, as Chrysostom and Theophylact say, τοῖς φανεροῖς μάχεσθαι, to speak things repugnant? Which to avoid, the apostle adds, though there be οἱ λεγόμενοι θεοὶ, those that are called gods, by these words separating them from him who truly is so: and shewing they are only so in name, but not in reality; not in truth, but in word only. And this is evident from the words following: though (to them) there be gods many, and lords many, παρ' ἕλλησι θεοὶ καὶ κύριοι λεγόμενοι, yet to us (Christians) there is but one God and one Lord. Lastly, whereas he saith, by gods in heaven, are meant God and the angels, let him shew any instance in the New Testament, where Θεοὶ is put for God and the angels; or where both are thus mentioned under that one name. Here to be sure it cannot be so, for the apostle had not only said before, we Christians know there is no other God but one; but saith after, this is he, of whom are all things, i. e. whose creatures the angels are; could he then say, in the intermediate words, there really are many gods in heaven, God and the angels.

[5] Ver. 6. Εἷς Θεὸς ὁ Πατὴρ, One God the Father.] Hence the Arians and Socinians argue thus against the Deity of Christ, viz. As he who saith there is one emperor, to wit, Cæsar, saith in effect there is no other emperor but Cæsar; so he that saith there is one God the Father, saith in effect there is no other God besides the Father. Again, He who, having separately spoken of one God, proceeds distinctly to speak of one Lord, to wit, Jesus Christ, doth by that distinct title sufficiently shew Jesus Christ is not that God.

Ans. To the second argument the reply is obvious, by retorting the argument as do the ancient commentators, against this Arian objection, thus: That as the apostle, by saying, there is one Lord, to wit, Jesus Christ, cannot be reasonably supposed to exclude the Father from being also the Lord of Christians, as he is often styled in the New Testament; so neither by saying, there is one God the Father, ought he to be supposed to exclude Jesus Christ from being also the God of Christians. So Origen* and Novatian.† Especially if we consider, (1.) that he is here styled that one Lord, by whom are all things, i. e. by whom all things are created, Eph. iii. 9. All things which are in heaven or in earth, Colos. i. 16. for he that made all things is God, Heb. iii. 5. and by the work of the creation is the Godhead known, Rom. i. 20. And this is elsewhere made the very description of God the Father, that it is he by whom are all things, Rom. xi. 35. Heb. ii. 10. (2.) That all things were created, not only by this Lord, but εἰς αὐτὸν, for him also, Colos. i. 16. Now this is the very thing which the apostle here ascribes to God the Father.

Secondly, To the other argument I answer, That we and all the ancients assert, as truly as they can do, the unity of the Godhead, and that Christ Jesus is not another God, but only another person from the Father; and that the application of the word God here to the Father, doth not necessarily exclude the Son from being God also; but only from being the fountain of the Deity, as the Father is. Thus, when these words, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and last, (Rev. i. 17. ii. 8. xxii. 13.) are by St. John applied to Christ; it cannot be concluded hence, that the Father is not also Alpha and Omega, the first and the last, as he is often called in the Old Testament: and though our Saviour be the proper title of our Lord Jesus, as his very name informs us; yet is the Father in Scripture styled our Saviour, 1 Tim. i. 1. ii. 3. and the Saviour of all men, iv. 10.

Novatian, cap. 30.

The primitive fathers therefore considering God the Father as the fountain of the Deity, and Jesus Christ as God of God, do frequently assert two things which may serve to illustrate this passage; viz.

First, That Christians* acknowledge one God only, even the Father, and yet that Jesus Christ was truly God, of the substance of the Father.

Secondly, That God the Father was the Creator of all things, and yet that all things were created by the Word.

[6] Ver. 7. Ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐν πᾶσιν ἡ γνῶσις, There is not in all this knowledge.] This contradicts not what is said, ver. 1. We all have knowledge; that being spoken of them, who abstained from things offered to idols, out of scandal to others only; this of them who through weakness did eat of them: the first, being well-informed Christians, knew there was but one God the Father, and one Lord Jesus Christ, to be worshipped: the weak, thought there might be some deastri, or inferior lords, to whom some reverence was due.

[7] Ver. 9. Πρόσκομμα γίνεσθαι τοῖς ἀσθενοῦσιν, To be a stumbling-block to the weak,] Is not barely to offend them, or to induce them to do any thing with a doubting conscience; but to make them stumble at the Christian faith, or fall off from it, or perish by idolatry. For thus it follows, and so shall thy weak brother perish: so, Rom. ix. 32, 33. Israel stumbled at the stone of stumbling, as it is written, Behold, I lay in Zion, λίθον προσκόμματος, a stone of stumbling, 1 Pet. ii. 8. to them that be disobedient, the stone, which the builders disallowed, is made λίθον προσκόμματος, a stone of stumbling.

[8] Ver. 10. Ἐν εἰδωλείῳ κατακείμενον, Sitting at meat in the idol's temple.] The gentiles, saith Josephus,† offer hecatombs to their gods, καὶ χρῶνται ἱερείοις πρὸς εὐωχίαν, and use their temples for their banqueting-house; so we read, Judg. ix. 27. Amos ii. 27. and in profane authors very frequently: When therefore, saith the apostle, the weak Jews who abhorred idols, or the gentiles newly converted from the worship of them, shall see thee doing the same thing which heathens do in honour of their idols, and that in places appropriated to their worship; will they not be tempted, by the example of such a strong and knowing Christian, to conclude, that either idolatry is by Christians accounted no sin, or that the idol deserves some honour; and so comply with them from these erroneous principles in eating things offered to idols?

[9] Ver. 11. Δι' ὃν Χριστὸς ἀπέθανεν, For whom Christ died.] From this, and the like place, Rom. xiv. 15. it is strongly argued, that Christ intentionally died for those that may for ever perish: for here the apostle dissuades the Corinthians from scandalizing their weak brethren, by an argument, taken from the irreparable mischiefs they do them, the eternal ruin they may bring upon them, by this scandal: whereas, if it be as some assert, that all things, even the sins of the elect, shall work together for their good, and that they can never perish; if the apostle knew and taught this doctrine to them, why doth he go about to fright them from this scandal, by telling them it might have that effect, which he before had told them was impossible? If you interpret his words thus, So shall he perish for whom in charity you ought to judge Christ died; it is certain from this doctrine, that they must be assured this judgment of charity must be false, or that their brother could not perish. In the first case, they could not be obliged to act by it; and, in the second, they could not rationally be moved by it, to abstain from giving scandal on that impossible supposition. If you interpret him thus, So shalt thou do that which in its nature tends to make thy brother perish, and might have that effect, had not God determined to preserve all for whom Christ died from perishing; since this determination renders it sure to me, who know it, that they cannot actually perish, it must assure me there can be no cause of abstaining from this scandal, lest they should perish by it. Moreover, by thus offending, saith the apostle, ye sin against Christ, viz. by sinning against them whom he hath purchased with his blood, and destroying them for whose salvation he hath suffered. Deny now this intent of Christ's death, and shew, if you can, in what Christ hath demonstrated his great love to them that perish; how they can ever sin against redeeming love; or, how by thus offending them, who neither do nor can belong to him as members of his body mystical, we are injurious to Christ.

[10] Ver. 13. Οὐ μὴ φάγω κρέα, I will eat no flesh.] It being customary for the heathens to consecrate all the flesh they used to eat to some demon* or idol, and the weak Jews being so nice in matters of that nature, this necessity might sometimes lie upon the Christians to abstain from all flesh, to avoid the offence of the weak brother; and the apostle here engageth rather to submit to it, than to be an occasion of his ruin. (See Theodor. H. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 15. and the note on Rom. xiv. 2.)

Note also, That there is nothing in this chapter, which intimates that the apostle discourseth of a conscience doubting about things indifferent; but rather that he all along discourseth of an erroneous conscience, which from a false persuasion falleth into sin: for, saith he, some with conscience of the idol, to this hour, eat it as a thing offered to the idol, (ver. 7.) Now so to do, is to act plainly, not from a doubting conscience about a thing indifferent, but from an erroneous conscience about a thing unlawful: and yet this is the man whose conscience, being weak, is defiled. And in this sense are the words ἀσθενὴς, ἀσθενεία, ἀσθενεῖν, to be weak, and weakness, commonly used in the Septuagint, answering to the Hebrew כשל which signifies to fall and stumble. (See note on Rom. v. 6.)

To scandalize, or offend, this weak brother,] Is not only to do a thing ungrateful to him, or to cause him to sin by acting with a doubting conscience; but to divert him from the faith, or cause him to dislike it, because he sees that Christians so freely do communicate with idols; or to encourage him to join idolatry with the profession of it. That this is the constant sense of the word σκανδαλίζεσθαι, see note on Rom. xiv. 13. 21.

Hence evident it is, that what dissenters say from hence against our ceremonies, that they offend or grieve them, that they cannot comply with them by reason of those doubts which they lie under, touching the lawfulness of the use of them, is impertinent to the apostle's argument; if they would have the apostle here to patronize them, they must confess that they are acted herein by a false judgment and erroneous conscience, as the weak person mentioned by him was.

Nevertheless, this seemeth to press hard on them, who believe the schism of such weak persons will finally tend to their ruin, and render them exiles from the flock of Christ, and yet, in things indifferent, will in this dreadful sense cause their weak brother to offend, or to be scandalized; since this they do for that, which commends them not to God; which doing, they are not the better, or omitting, they are not the worse, (ver. 8.) For if schism or idolatry be equally damning sins, and equally cause my brother to offend, and him to perish, for whom Christ died, we are equally to take heed in both cases, lest ἐξουσία ἡμῶν, our power to do the thing indifferent become a stumbling-block to the weak, or the erroneous, in their judgment of these things. For let men imagine what other difference they please in the case, whilst the sad issue or event is in general the same, to wit, the perishing of my brother, and my power to have abstained from that which, through his erroneous conscience, gave occasion to it, is the same, I fear the guilt will be the same.

To this purpose tend those words of Origen:* If we did more diligently attend to these things, we should avoid sinning against our brethren, and wounding their weak consciences; Ἵνα μὴ εἰς Χριστὸν ἁμαρτάνωμεν, that we may not sin against Christ. Πολλάκις ἀπολλύμενον οὐ μόνον τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ γνώσει, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἄλλοις τισὶ τῶν παρ' ἡμᾶς ἀδελφῶν, δι' οὓς ὁ Χριστὸς ἀπέθανεν, ἐφ' οἷς εἰς Χριστὸν ἁμαρτάνοντες τίσομεν δίκας, ἐνδικουμένης τῆς τῶν δι' ἡμᾶς ἀπολλυμένων ψυχῆς ἐξ ἡμῶν. Our brethren that are among us, for whom Christ died, often perishing, not only by our knowledge, but by many other ways and things; in which things we, sinning against Christ, shall suffer punishment, the soul of them, that perish by us, being required of, and avenged upon, us.

CHAP. IX.

1. [1] AM I not (who thus abstain from what is offensive to the weak) an apostle (as well as others)? am I not free (to do what they may)? [2] have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord (as well as they)? and are not you my work in the Lord? (and so, if others have a power to live upon your temporal things, have not I rather? ver. 11, 12.)

2. If I be not (so visibly and demonstratively) an apostle to others, yet doubtless I am (so) to you: for the [3] seal (and testimony) of my apostleship are ye in the Lord; (as being converted by me, exercising the signs of an apostle among you in all patience; in signs and wonders, and in mighty deeds, 2 Cor. xii. 12.)

3. My answer (or apology) to them that do examine me (why I and my companions use not the same freedom as other apostles and evangelists) is this,

4. Have we not power to eat and to drink (without using so much abstinence; or at the charge of the church, as well as they)?

5. Have we not power [4] to lead (or carry) about a sister, a wife, as well as other apostles, and as the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas?

6. Or I only and Barnabas, have we not power to forbear working (and to receive maintenance of the church as others do)?

7. [5] Who goeth a warfare at any time at his own charge? who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock? (And shall we, soldiers of Jesus Christ, 2 Tim. ii. 2. the planters of his spiritual vineyard, the pastors of his flock, Acts xx. 28. be debarred of this privilege?)

8. Say I these things [6] as a man (only, from principles of natural reason and equity)? or saith not the law the same also?

9. For it is written in the law of Moses, Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Doth God (say this only to shew he) take (-th) care for oxen?

10. Or saith he it altogether for our sakes? [7] For our sakes, no doubt, this is written: that (in this spiritual husbandry, 1 Cor. iii. 9.) he that ploughs should plough in hope (reaping some advantage by it); and (that) he that thresheth in (that) hope should be partaker of his hope.

11. If (then) we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap (some of) your carnal things? (Rom. xv. 27.)

12. If others be partakers of this [8] power over you, are not we rather (so, who laid the foundation of a Christian church among you, 1 Cor. iii. 10. and have begotten you through the gospel? 1 Cor. iv. 15.) Nevertheless we have not used this power (among you; 2 Cor. xi. 7—9.) but (choose rather to) suffer (the want of) all things, lest we should hinder the (advancement of the) gospel of Christ.

13. (And not to insist only on mystical interpretations of the law:) Do not you know that they who minister about holy things (excoriating, washing, and preparing a sacrifice for the altar, as do the Levites,) live of the (holy) things of the temple? and (that) they which wait at the altar are (according to the institution of the law) partakers with the altar? (for that consumes not always the whole sacrifice, but leaves some portion to be eaten by the priests.)

14. Even so hath the Lord (Jesus, in the gospel, Matt. x. 20. Luke x. 7.) ordained, that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel.

15. But (yet) I have used none of these things: neither have I written these things, that it should be so done unto me: for it were better for me to die (for want of food), than that any man should make my glorying (in thus advancing the gospel) void.

16. (I say, my glorying;) For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of (upon that account): for necessity is laid upon me (by the command and special call of our Lord Jesus Christ, so to do); yea, woe is to me, if I preach not the gospel! (because then I shall be guilty of disobedience to the heavenly vision, Acts xxvi. 9.)

17. [9] For if I do this thing willingly (if I choose to take nothing for preaching the gospel, when I am under no obligation so to do), I have a (special) reward (and may glory in it): but if against my will (I preach the gospel, yet am I under a necessity of doing this; and therefore cannot glory in it, or expect any special reward above others for it, since) a dispensation of the gospel is committed to me (and so in that I only can discharge my trust).

18. [10] What is my reward then (or, what is matter of special reward and glory to me)? Verily (this), that, when I preach the gospel, I may make the gospel of Christ without charge, that I abuse not (or use not, see 1 Cor. vii. 31.) my power (which is given me) in the gospel: (and this matter of rejoicing I have:)

19. For though I be free from all men (as being a servant to none), yet have I made myself (as a) servant to all, that I might gain the more.

20. And to the (unconverted) Jews I became as a Jew, (circumcising Timothy for their sakes, Acts xvi. 3.) that I might gain the Jews; to them that (in their opinion) are (yet) under the (obligation of the) law, as under the law, (purifying myself in the temple, because they were zealous of the law, Acts xx. 21. 26.) that I might gain them that are under the law;

21. To them that are without law, (the unbelieving gentiles, I became) as without law (discoursing to them from those natural principles which they owned, Acts xvii. rather than from the law and the prophets), being not without law to God, but under the law to Christ (or obedient to the law of Christ, and taking care notwithstanding that I did nothing contrary to the moral law of God, and to the rules of Christianity), that I might gain them that are without law.

22. [11] To the weak (converts among the gentiles) I became as weak (by condescending to abstain from what might hurt their consciences), that I might gain the weak: I am made all things to all men (by my compliance with them in all lawful matters), that I might by all means save some.

23. And this I do for the gospel's sake, that I might be partaker of (the promise and rewards of) it with you.

24. (Which neither you nor I shall obtain by the bare profession or knowledge of it without charity, and a life suitable to the precepts of it: for) know ye not (among whom the Isthmian games are acted) that they who run in a race run all, but one (of them only) receiveth the prize? So (therefore) run (your Christian race), that ye may obtain (the reward of it).

25. And (then you will be moved to abstain, as I do, from what may cause your weak brother to fall and perish; for) every man that striveth for the mastery (or is a wrestler in these games) is temperate in all things (i. e. observeth a strict abstinence). Now they (who thus abstain, that they may prevail in wrestling,) do it (only) to obtain a corruptible crown (of bays or olives); but we (Christians, by using this temperance, shall obtain) an incorruptible (crown).

26. I therefore so run (this race), not as uncertainly (or not regarding whether I am within the lines, or come first to the goal or not); so fight I, not as one that beateth the air, (i. e. not vainly, as you seem to do: for what advantage have you by going to the idols' temples, or eating things offered to idols, to the destruction of your brother?)

27. But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection (by denying myself these liberties in things indifferent), [12] lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway; (as being not partaker of the blessings of the gospel, ver. 23.)

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IX.

[1] Ver. 1. Οὐκ εἰμὶ ἀπόστολος; Am not I an apostle?] The apostle here, from his own example, in abstaining from the power which the Lord had given him, to receive the necessaries and conveniences of life from them to whom he preached the gospel, shews how much it concerned them, in a matter unnecessary, to abstain from the exercise τῆς ἐξουσίας, of their rightful power granted by Christ; to avoid the scandal of the weak, and to promote men's spiritual welfare. (So Esthius.) This condescension indeed was not in the exercise of his apostolical authority; but it was in that which he might have challenged as an apostle of Christ. (1 Thess. ii. 6.) Hence he speaks thus, Am not I an apostle? and, therefore, have I not ἐξουσίαν, power to eat and drink? Yea, it was in that he might have challenged by the nature of his office, (ver. 7.) by the prescriptions of the law, (ver. 8.) and by the ordinance of Christ, (ver. 14.) And this abstinence he used not only in Achaia, but in Thessalonica, (1 Thess. ii. 9. 2 Thess. iii. 8.) that he might be an example for their imitation, (ver. 9.) It was not therefore any private or personal right which he here waved, but a right of office belonging to all who did officiate in things sacred. (See note on 2 Cor. ix. 2.)

[2] Οὐχὶ Χριστὸν ἑώρακα; Have I not seen Christ?] The apostles being chosen to be witnesses of the resurrection, it was requisite that St. Paul, being called to that office, should also see him risen. Hence Ananias speaks to him, The God of our fathers hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest see the Just One, and shouldest hear the words of his mouth: for thou shalt be his witness to all men of what thou hast seen and heard. (Acts xxii. 14, 15. xxvi. 26.) Accordingly we find, that Christ was seen of him, (1 Cor. xv. 8.) yea, often appeared to him after his resurrection, (Acts xviii. 9. xxii. 18.) and that he was taught the gospel by the immediate revelation of Jesus Christ. (Gal. i. 12.) The Syriac, Arabic, and some MSS. read thus, Am I not free? Am I not an apostle? Have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord?

[3] Ver. 2. The seal of my apostleship are ye in the Lord.] This text seems very much abused by our sectaries, when from these words they argue, That seeing they have been instrumental to work some reformation in others by their preaching or discourses, therefore they have a legal, yea, Divine call to exercise their ministry, and to administer the holy sacraments; which argument will plead as much for masters or mistresses of large families, who have successfully employed themselves in a religious education of their children and servants; and for schoolmasters, who have instilled good principles of virtue and religion into their scholars; and for every good man and woman, who spend themselves in examples of exhortations, and encouragement to others, to lead a virtuous and religious life, and therefore prevail more than others, because they know they do it not from prospect of advantage, or in pursuance of their calling, but out of pure affection to their souls. Moreover I inquire, what it is they would prove from these words? Is it that they are of the number of Christ's apostles? If not, why do they use this text? Is it that they have converted men from heathenism to Christianity, by signs and miracles, and powers of the Holy Ghost? or that the signs of an apostle have been wrought among their auditors, by signs, wonders, and powerful operations, as this apostle doth, 2 Cor. xii. 12.? Or that they have given their hearers such a proof of Christ speaking in them, as St. Paul did, xiii. 3.? Or by their means their hearers were endowed with the gifts of tongues and prophecy, as the Corinthians were? If not, this text cannot concern them at all, who had no such seal or sign of their apostleship, as St. Paul saith he had.

[4] Ver. 5. Ἀδελφὴν γυναῖκα περιάγειν, To lead about a sister, a wife.] It is the observation of Hilary, Œcumenius, and Theophylact, That as some women attended on the Lord when he was on earth, to minister necessaries to him and his disciples; so some rich women, converted by them, followed the apostles to provide diet and other necessaries for them; and they, who so interpret these words, translate them a sister-woman. This exposition Theodoret mentions, but seems not to approve; and indeed it seems to have had its rise from Tertullian* when he was a Montanist.

For Clemens of Alexandria† not only saith, that he that marrieth, εἰκόνας ἔχει τοὺς ἀποστόλους, hath the apostles for examples; and that St. Peter carried his wife with him till her martyrdom; but confutes the enemies of matrimony from these very words, Have we not power to lead about a sister, a wife, as well as other apostles? adding, that οὐχ ὡς γαμετὰς, ἀλλ' ὡς ἀδελφὰς, περιῆγον τὰς γυναῖκας,‡ they carried their wives about, not as wives, but as sisters, to minister to those that were mistresses of families; that so the doctrine of the Lord might, without any reprehension or evil suspicion, enter into the apartments of the women. This exposition seemeth (1.) most agreeable to the words, which are not γυναῖκα ἀδελφὴν, but ἀδελφὴν γυναῖκα, which cannot be well rendered a sister-woman, there being no sister which is not a woman. (2.) It is most agreeable to the context, which plainly seems to speak not of such wealthy women, which could nourish the apostles out of their abundance, but of such which were to be nourished with them by others. And (3.) to the language of the Jews, who called their wives, sisters. Thus Tobit saith to his wife, μὴ λόγον ἔχε, ἀδελφὴ, Take no care, my sister: (Tob. v. 20.) and Clemens, in the words now cited, saith, They were carried with them not as wives, but as sisters. And, lastly, this seems best to consult the credit and esteem of the apostles, who could not, without evil suspicion, carry about with them single women, or the wives of other men. As for the women who are said to have followed Christ, they were none of his retinue, they attended not upon his person, but upon his doctrine, and so they ministered no such ground of suspicion. But hence I think it doth not follow, as Mr. Clerc saith, that St. Paul then had a wife, but only that he, or Barnabas, had one, or at least might have had one, no law then forbidding it: Tertullian saying, if not in his own sense, yet in the person of the orthodox, Licebat apostolis nubere, et uxores circumducere. (De Exhort. Castit. cap. 8.)

[5] Ver. 7. Τίς στρατεύεται, Who goeth a warfare?] The pertinency of this instance will be more visible, if we consider that, both in the Old and New Testament, the ministerial function is represented as a warfare: (see note on 1 Tim. i. 18.) and the Levite, who was consecrated to the service of the tabernacle, is said to enter into the host, Numb. iv. 3. λειτουργεῖν, to officiate, saith the Septuagint; to serve the service, saith the Chaldee. The church of God is also represented as his vineyard, Isa. v. 1. 5. Matt. xx. 1. xxi. 18. 33. 40. 41. Luke xiii. 6. 7. and as his flock, Isa. xl. 11. lxiii. 11. Matt. xxvi. 31. Luke xii. 32. Acts xx. 28, 29. 1 Pet. v. 1, 2. But then St. Chrysostom* and Theophylact observe, that he saith not, Who goeth a warfare, and is not rich? Who plants a vineyard, and heaps not up gold of the fruits of it? Who feeds a flock, and makes not a merchandise of the sheep? Teaching us, that the spiritual pastor should be content with little, and seek only what is necessary, not what is superfluous.

[6] Ver. 8. Κατ' ἄνθρωπον, As a man.] This phrase in the New Testament doth always signify to speak, act, and live, after the manner of a mere natural man, not yet acquainted with the mind of God, nor acting by the guidance of Divine wisdom, or not assisted by the Holy Spirit. So, Rom. iii. 5. I speak κατ' ἄνθρωπον, as a man by mere strength of reason would be apt to argue; 1 Cor. iii. 3. Are ye not carnal, and walk as men, i. e. as natural and not spiritual men; (ver. 1.) 1 Cor. xv. 32. If, κατ' ἄνθρωπον after the manner of men, i. e. the heathen manner, I have fought with beasts at Ephesus; Gal. i. 11. The gospel which was preached by me was not κατ' ἄνθρωπον after man, i. e. it was not the product of human wisdom, but received from the revelation of Jesus Christ; Gal. iii. 15. Brethren, I speak after the manner of men, i. e. what is acknowledged in all civilized nations. (See note on 1 Pet. iv. 6.)

[7] Ver. 10. Δι' ἡμᾶς γὰρ ἐγράφη, For our sakes this was written.] A like expression occurs in Maimonides,† who having cited these words, Thou shalt not take the dam with the young, saith, If God took such care for beasts and birds, how much more for men? And R. Menachem, on the same words, saith, The intention of the command was not to shew mercy to birds, sed propter homines hoc dicit, but he saith this to teach men mildness and commiseration; and Philo,‡ in the beginning of his discourse περὶ θυόντων, of those who offer sacrifice, says, the law took not care of brutes, but of reasonable creatures, οὐ τῶν θυομένων ἀλλὰ τῶν θυόντων, by its prescriptions that the sacrifice should be perfect and without blemish, having regard not to things offerred, but to him that offered them, that he should be free from vile passions, or evil dispositions: so that these words do not import that God takes no care for beasts, for he saveth man and beast, (Psal. xxxvi. 6.) and giveth to the beasts their food; (Psal. cxlvii. 9.) but only that the commands he gives us, to shew mercy and kindness to our beasts, are especially designed to teach us greater kindness to our brother man. Thus the high-priest Eleazer saith to Aristæas,* that all the precepts of this nature, delivered by Moses, had λόγον βαθὺν, a profound sense; and that God did not make them as being concerned about mice or weasels, or such-like beasts, but that all these laws were made for righteousness' sake, and the information of our manners.

[8] Ver. 12. Ἐξουσίας ὑμῶν, Power over you.] So ἐξουσίας πνευμάτων is power over unclean spirits, Matt. x. 1. ἐξουσίας πάσης σαρκὸς, power over all flesh, John xvii. 2.

[9] Ver. 17. Εἰ γὰρ ἑκὼν τοῦτο πράσσω, If I do this willingly.] This is the interpretation of Œcumenius, and it seems best to suit with the scope of the apostle: the other sense, mentioned by the ancients, and followed by most interpreters, is this, If I preached the gospel as a volunteer, having no command from Christ to do it, I might expect a peculiar reward; but having this command from Christ, I execute it only in obedience to the trust committed to me, and so I cannot glory in, or expect a reward for that above others.

[10] Ver. 18. Note, first, from ver. 12. 15. 18. that our power, in things indifferent and uncommanded, is not to be used to the hinderance of the gospel of Christ, and the scandal of the weak.

Secondly, That there is καύχημα, or matter of glorying in things done by the assistance of the grace of God, and it is for the glory of a man to do them, (ver. 15, 16. 2 Cor. xi. 10.) ἡ καύχησις ἡμῶν, our rejoicing, or our glorying, is this, even the testimony of our conscience. (2 Cor. i. 12.) And again, Let every man approve himself to his own conscience, and then shall he have τὸ καύχημα, rejoicing in himself, and not in another. (Gal. vi. 4.) The glorying therefore, or the καύχημα, which the apostle elsewhere doth reject and exclude, is only that of the merit of our works, or their sufficiency to procure the justification of a sinner, (Rom. iii. 27. iv. 2.) or that which doth exclude the help or the assistance of the grace of God in Christ. (1 Cor. i. 29. 31.) Note, Thirdly, That there may be some actions eminently good, which fall under no particular command; I say, particular command: for I believe this very action of St. Paul, in which he glories, was done according to that charity which seeketh not her own, but the things of Jesus Christ, (Phil. ii. 5.) and that it was in the general his duty to take care not to hinder the gospel of Christ, (ver. 12.) and to cut off occasion from others to glory, to the impairing of the truth, (2 Cor. xi. 12.) to perform that which rendered him instrumental to gain the more; (ver. 19.) and therefore he saith, (ver. 27.) All this I do for the gospel's sake, that I may be partaker of it with you. I think every good work, which respects our duty towards God, falls under the general command of loving God with all our heart, our mind, and soul; and all the kindness we shew to our brother, under the command of loving him as ourselves; and think no action eminently good can be done by any Christian, which is not comprehended under the general precept of doing whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, and of good report; if there be any virtue, any praise, &c. (Phil. iv. 8.) But yet this action, as to the substance of it, being under no precept, but being a refusal to use the power God had granted to him as much as others, and this refusal being done out of respect unto God's glory, and the good of souls, was that of which he justly gloried, and for which, though he did not merit any thing, yet he might reasonably expect from God, whose glory he promoted by it, an especial recompence, according to the rule of his own nation, *To him a reward is given, who doth any thing uncommanded.

[11] Ver. 22, 23. See the reading of the text vindicated against the surmises of Dr. Mills, as also x. 19. 24. 28. 31. Examen Millii in hæc loca.

[12] Ver. 27. Ἀδόκιμος, Lest I myself should be a castaway.] i. e. One disapproved of by God at the last. Excellent here is the note of the ancient commentators, Εἰ δὲ Παῦλος τοῦτο δέδοικεν, ὁ τοσούτους διδάξας, τί ἂν εἴποιμεν ἡμεῖς; If Paul, so great a man, one who had preached and laboured so much, dreaded this, what cause have we to fear lest this should befal us?

Note also, That the Agonistical phrases, mentioned in these four last verses, are fully and excellently explained by the reverend Dr. Hammond, who informs us,

First, That the Isthmian games† were celebrated among the Corinthians, and therefore the apostle speaks thus to them, Know ye not?

Secondly, That, of the five games there used, the apostle alludes only to two or three, running, ver. 24. 26. wrestling, ver. 25. cuffing, ver. 26, 27.

Thirdly, That he, who won the race by running, was to observe the laws of racing, keeping within the white line, which marked out the path or compass in which they were to run, and was also to outrun the rest, and come first to the goal, otherwise he ran uncertainly, (ver. 24. 26.) and was ἀδόκιμος, one to whom the prize would not be judged by the βραβευταὶ, or judges of the games.

Fourthly, That the athletæ, combatants, or wrestlers, observed a set diet,‡ both for the quantity and quality of their meat, and carefully abstained from all things that might render them less able for the combat; whence they are here said to be the temperate in all things, (ver. 25.)

Fifthly, That he who cuffed used to prepare himself for the exercise by a σκιομαχία,§ or thrusting out his arms into the air. And this is styled, so fighting as to beat the air: (ver. 26.) but, when he came to the combat, then his fist strove to hit the face and eyes of his adversaries; and this is, ver. 27. ὑπωπιάζειν, to strike under the eye, or give his adversary a blue eye, and, applied to the body, is so to keep it under, by beating it black and blue, as these combatants did one another.

Sixthly, That the rewards of all these exercises were only a crown made of leaves of some plant, or boughs of some

CHAP. X.

1. MOREOVER, brethren (to make you the more diligent in running this Christian race, and to avoid these sins which will cause you to fail of the prize you run for, I shall lay before you the case of the Israelites, your forerunners, shewing what privileges and what advantages they had, and by what means most of them so unhappily miscarried: for, to begin with their privileges), I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers (the church of Israel) [1] were under (the protection of) the cloud, and all passed through the sea;

2. And (so) were all baptized into (the covenant made with God, and the doctrine taught by) Moses in the cloud and in the sea;

3. And did all eat [2] the same spiritual meat; (that manna which was a type of Christ, the true bread which came down from heaven, John vi.)

4. And did all drink the same spiritual drink: for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock [3] was Christ: (as typifying him, and the spiritual waters to be received from him, John iii. 37. 39.)

5. But (notwithstanding these privileges and favours common to them with us), with many of them God was not well pleased: for they were overthrown (by him) in the wilderness. (Heb. iii. 17.)

6. Now these things were (written for) [4] our examples (who succeed them in like privileges and favours), to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as they also lusted (after flesh, when they had manna, food sufficient for them, Numb. xi. 4.)

7. Neither be ye idolaters (by eating things offered to idols, and partaking of the table of devils), as were some of them; as it is written, [5] The people sat down to eat and drink (of the sacrifices offered to the golden calf), and [6] rose up to play.

8. Neither let us commit [7] fornication, as some of them committed (fornication, at the sacrifices of Baal-Peor, Numb. xxv. 16—18.) and (upon that account, there) fell in one day [8] three-and-twenty thousand (of them).

9. Neither let us tempt [9] Christ (our Lord), as some of them also tempted (him), and were destroyed of serpents. (Numb. xxi. 5, 6.)

10. Neither murmur ye, as some of them also murmured, (Numb. xiv. 2.) and were destroyed [10] of the destroyer, (ver. 37.)

11. Now all these things happened to them for examples (to posterity): and they are written for our admonition, [11] upon whom the ends of the world (the last of ages) are come (i. e. the Christian age).

12. Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth (and is in high favour with God, as they once were, and still think they are,) take heed lest he fall.

13. (And whereas the great inducement to symbolize with Jew or gentile in their rites is this, that you may avoid persecution, you have no cause to doubt of Christ's protection under them, for he hath so preserved you hitherto, that) there hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man (ἀνθρώπινος, supportable by the strength and resolution of a man): but (moreover) God is faithful, [12] who will not suffer you to be tempted (at any time) above that you are able, but will with the temptation also make a way (so fair) to escape (it), that you may be able to bear it.

14. Wherefore, my dearly beloved, flee from (the) idolatry (committed by the participation of things offered to idols in the idol-temple).

15. I speak as to wise men (in what I am now offering, to shew the idolatry of this practice); judge ye (the reasonableness of) what I say.

16. [13] The cup of blessing which we bless (or receive with thanksgiving to God for it), is it not the [14] communion of the blood of Christ (or that rite by which we Christians do profess to hold communion with, and own him as, our Lord and Saviour, who shed his blood for us)? The bread which we break, is it not (also) the communion of the body of Christ (i. e. do we not by eating at his table, declare our fellowship with, and own him as, our Lord, whose body was thus broken for us)?

17. [15] For we being many are one bread, and one body (or, because the bread is one, one loaf being broken for us all, we who partake of it, being many, are one body, owning ourselves thereby all members of that body of which Christ Jesus is the head): for we are all partakers of that one bread (and thus you see that, by partaking of this Christian sacrifice, we own ourselves to have communion with the Lord Jesus, and with the whole society of Christians).

18. Behold Israel after the flesh, (and see if it be not so there also: for) are not they who eat of the sacrifices (the peace-offerings, for of these only did the people eat,) [16] partakers of the altar (and so hold communion with him whose altar it is? ix. 13.)

19. What say I then (i. e. what need I then to say)? that the idol is any thing, or that which is offered in sacrifice to idols is any thing (which can of its own nature pollute)?

20. But (this) I say, that the things which the gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice [17] to devils, and not to God: and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils (or do service to them in the idol-temples; for)

21. You cannot drink the cup of the Lord (and thereby declare your fellowship with him, and that you own him as your Lord, in opposition to all others), and (yet drink) the cup of devils (and so make the like acknowledgment concerning them): ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, [18] and the table of devils.

22. Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy (by bringing devils into competition with him)? are we stronger than he? (so that we need not fear the punishments he may inflict on them who give his honour to another.

23. And whereas you plead thus for yourselves,) All things are lawful for me (i. e. all meats may lawfully be eaten; be it so;) but (yet) all (lawful) things are not expedient (to be done): all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not, (as charity doth, viii. 1.

24. For the rule of charity is this:) Let no man seek his own (only), but every man another's wealth, (preferring the public to his private good, and the good of souls to that of his own body.

* Τοῖς ἀθλήταις ἐξ αὐτῆς δίδοται νικήσασι στέφανος. Porphyr. de antro Nymph. p. 270.

25. Concerning then the eating of things offered to idols in the general, and without relation to the idol-temple, in which to eat them is idolatry, I thus determine:) Whatsoever is sold in the shambles, that eat (ye), asking no question for conscience' sake (as if you thought it matter of conscience, whether you might eat it, if offered to idols, or not).

26. For the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof, (and therefore you may eat of any creature the earth provideth for your food, without scruple of conscience, when others are not scandalized at it.

27. And again I say,) If any of them that believe not bid (or invite) you to a feast, and you be disposed to go; [19] whatsoever is set before you, eat, asking no question for conscience' sake.

28. But if any man say unto you, This is offered in sacrifice to idols (thinking that, by thus partaking in such meat, you must own the idol, or concur in the worship of it), eat not for his sake that shewed it, and for conscience' sake: for the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof (who therefore can replenish thee out of other meats provided for thy food):

29. Conscience, I say, (meaning) not thy own, but (that) of the others (who shewed thee this was offered to idols): for why is my liberty (so used by me, as that I be) judged of (and condemned by) another man's conscience?

30. For if I by grace be a partaker (of God's good creatures), [20] why (do I use them so as that) I am evil spoken of (by others) for that for which I give thanks (because of benefits received by it)?

31. Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, [21] do all to the glory of God.

32. Give [22] no offence, neither to the (weak) Jews, nor to the (unbelieving) gentiles, nor to the (weak members of the) church of God:

33. (But walk) even as I (do, who) please all men in all (lawful) things, not seeking my own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be saved.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. X.

[1] Ver. 1. Ὑπὸ τὴν νεφέλην ἦσαν, Were under the cloud.] To understand the allusion here, note, that to be under the cloud, is to be under the protection or covert of the cloud. For the cloud of glory (saith the tradition of the Jews*) signified the care and providence of God, and his presence with them day and night; and that accordingly it compassed their camp, as a wall doth a city. And therefore of the feast of tabernacles, which in the Hebrew is chagigah succoth, the feast of coverings, the Jews† say, it was especially appointed to admonish them, of the Divine protection exhibited to them by the cloud. And the Chaldee paraphrase saith, this feast was instituted, that their posterity might know, that I made the children of Israel to dwell under the shadow of the cloud: and therefore Philo‡ styles it σκεπαστήριον, a covering. And so the Psalmist represents it, when he says, He spread out the cloud for a covering to them, and a fire to enlighten them by night. (Psal. cv. 39.) And the prophet, when he says, The Lord will create upon every dwelling-place of Mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of flaming fire by night; for upon all their glory shall be a covering. (Isa. iv. 5, 6.) Πάντα τὰ περικύκλῳ αὐτῆς σκιάσει ἡ νεφέλη, The cloud shall overshadow all her circuits, saith the Septuagint. He was to them as a covering by day, and a light of stars in the night-season, saith the book of Wisdom, (x. 17.) By these things Mr. Clerc may see we have good warrant for saying, The cloud was a covering to them, and that they were under the cloud, because it was over them; not only because it went before them, which indeed is a greater impropriety than that which he charges upon others, that being indeed none at all: for what hinders the same cloud from being at one time contracted into the figure of a pillar, and at another expanded as a covering? For do we not read that the cloud covered the mount? (Exod. xxiv. 15.) that it covered the seat of the congregation? (Exod. xl. 34.) that it covered the tabernacle? (Numb. ix. 15, 16.) The learned Bishop of Ely notes, that there were three several uses of the cloud: (1.) To guide them in their journeys; and this it did, as a pillar going before them. (2.) To preserve them from the heat of the sun in the wilderness; and then it was spread out as a covering, (Psal. cv. 39.) and was a cloud shadowing the camp. (Wisd. xix. 7.) (3.) To defend them from their enemies, that they might not assault them; and so it stood betwixt the whole host of Israel and the Egyptians, and was a cloud of darkness to the latter, so that they came not near the Israelites: (Exod. xiv. 20.) it therefore must be large enough to darken their whole camp.

Secondly, That they all passed through the sea so as to come to the opposite shore, saith Josephus;* they went through it, saith St. Paul,† elsewhere; through the middle of it, say the Septuagint.‡ I confess some rabbins and commentators say, they only fetched a compass like to a half-circle in the sea, and came out again on the same side; because, before they entered into the sea, they were in the edge of the wilderness Etham; (Numb. xxxiii. 6.) and after they had passed the sea, they go three days' journey in the wilderness of Etham. (Exod. xv. 22.) But to this it is answered, that the wilderness, on each part of that arm of the sea, was called the wilderness of Etham, and beyond the Red Sea was the same with Shur, (Exod. xv. 22.) for the Hebrew word קְצֵה which we render edge, is by the Septuagint forty times rendered μέρος, a part. And here, say they, they came to Buthan, ὅ ἐστι μέρος τῆς ἐρήμου, which is some part of the wilderness; (Numb. xxxiii. 6.) intimating, that beyond the sea there was another part of the same wilderness. And, thirdly, as it follows,

Ver. 2. They were baptized unto Moses in the cloud.] i. e. Into the doctrine taught by Moses: for the cloud was not only for direction, but for a covering over them; according to the words of the Psalmist, He spread out the cloud for a covering. (Psal. cxxxv. 29.)

And in the sea.] For they were covered with the sea on both sides: (Exod. xiv. 22.) so that both the cloud and the sea had some resemblance to our being covered with water in baptism; their going into the sea resembled the ancient rite of going into the water, and their coming out of it their rising up out of the water. And this the Jews* do so far own, that they say they were baptized in the desert, and admitted into covenant with God before the law was given.

Note, fourthly, That the cloud had a bright shining side, as well as a dark side: so that their baptism in the sea, answered to that of water; and their baptism in the cloud, to baptism by fire, or by the Holy Ghost; which, say the Jews,† was represented by the Schechinah, or the cloud of glory.

[2] Ver. 3. Τὸ αὐτὸ βρῶμα, τὸ αὐτὸ πόμα, The same meat and the same drink.] For though some manuscripts omit τὸ αὐτὸ, the same, in both these verses, yet is that word to be retained in both places: for so read Irenæus‡ and all the Greek expositors. (See Examen Millii in locum.) And whereas Esthius interprets the words thus, They eat the same among themselves, not the same with us; this exposition is contrary, not only to what St. Austin§ and all the Greek fathers teach, but also to the scope of the apostle, which is to shew, that they had the like spiritual advantages and privileges with us, which yet he doth not do, unless their spiritual meat and drink signified or typified to them Christ, as ours doth to us. That all of them were not believers in Christ by faith, but some of them were unbelievers, is no objection against this sense: for so it is with Christians now; the wicked not partaking of the benefit of Christ by faith, as the fathers speak, though they receive the sacrament of his body and blood with their mouths.

Note also, That St. Paul represents manna as spiritual food; and the rock as being spiritual, and affording them spiritual drink, agreeably to the descants of the Jews: for manna (saith Philo‖) is the food of the soul; it signifies the law of God, and the Divine Logos, whence all permanent instruction and knowledge flow. And this is the heavenly food, of which Moses, in the person of God, speaketh, saying, Behold, I rain down for you bread from heaven. The food of the soul (saith the same Philo) is heavenly, not earthly, as the holy Scripture testifieth, saying, I rain down for you bread from heaven. He calls the manna put into the ark,¶ τῆς οὐρανίου καὶ θείας τροφῆς τὸ μνημεῖον, the memorial of the Divine and heavenly food, and saith, that *manna is the Divine Logos, the celestial and incorruptible nourishment of a soul desirous of knowledge. The Jews also declare, that manna†† was a type of the eternal happiness of man; that it had its rise from heaven, and thence descended on the earth, by opening the gates of heaven; that it is the Divine light incorporated, the splendour of the glory of the majesty of God; the bread on which angels feed, and by which the sons of the world to come are to subsist. And with these representations of it agree the words of the apostle, saying, the Jews by eating of it did eat τὸ αὐτὸ βρῶμα πνευματικὸν, the same spiritual food with us. But here Mr. Clerc saith, The word πνευματικὸς, spiritual, is here opposed to φυσικὸς, natural, not to σωματικὸς, corporeal; for manna was corporeal food, which could not be spiritual in any other respect, than as it was prepared, not by sensible causes, but by spirits; viz. angels, whose bread therefore it is said to be, Psal. lxxviii. 2. I answer, Here is nothing true, or at least nothing certain: for (1.) the Chaldee paraphrast saith, it is called the bread of angels in the Psalmist, because it came from heaven, the habitation of the angels; as the Psalmist himself interprets it, saying, He opened the gates of heaven, he rained upon them manna for to eat, and gave them bread from heaven; bread of the Mighty did man eat. (2.) Why did he say, It could not be called spiritual food in any other sense, than as it was prepared by spirits? It is, because it was corporeal food. And might it not be also the food of the soul? Are not bread and wine corporeal food? And yet may they not be also spiritual food? Yea, doth not the apostle's argument plainly require that the manna should be spiritual? For how else did they eat the same spiritual food with us? And, (3.) how absurd is it to say, it is called spiritual food, because prepared by spirits? Can he give one instance of any corporeal things called spiritual upon that account? Was it not spiritual meat, as the water issuing from the rock was spiritual drink, and was that so, because prepared by spirits?

[3] Ver. 4. And that Rock was Christ.] i. e. It typified Christ: for as the rock, being smitten, gave forth waters, so our Lord, being smitten, water came forth out of his side; and the Holy Ghost, signified by this effusion of waters from the rock, was poured forth as a river. By the solid rock (saith Philo*) Moses understands the wisdom of God, which is the nurse and the instructor of all that desire the incorruptible life. He by a synonymous word calls the rock manna; that is, the most ancient of beings, the Divine Logos. And again, The rock, cleft in the top, is the wisdom of which he makes the souls that love him to drink; and being thus made to drink, they are also filled with the universal manna, for manna is called τὶ, which is the progeny of all things. Now the most general cause of all things is God, and the second the Word of God. By these things Mr. Clerc may be convinced, that the Jews might understand these types by tradition; and, seeing them thus accomplished, might be induced to believe. And as for Christians, the apostle here shews the influence they ought to have on them, viz. to preserve them from the like offences, lest they become subject to the like judgments to which the Jews were obnoxious, (ver. 5, 6.) But Mr. Clerc denies that the words bear this sense, the Rock signified Christ, or represented him; and saith, the import of these words, that Rock was Christ, is only this, That which may be said of that rock in a carnal sense, may in a spiritual be affirmed of Christ: which is to expound the apostle as speaking thus, They all drank the same spiritual drink, for they drank of the Rock that followed them: now, what may be said of that rock in a carnal sense, may be said of Christ in a spiritual; i. e. they all drank the same spiritual drink, because they drank what was carnal. Moreover, we find many phrases of the like nature, both in the Old and the New Testament; as when it is said, The three branches are three days; the seven kine, and seven ears of corn, are seven years; the four great beasts are four kingdoms; thou art the golden head; the seed is the word, the field is the world, the reapers are the angels, the harvest is the end of the world; the hair is Jerusalem; this bread is my body, this cup is my blood. (Gen. xl. 12. xliii. 26. Ezra v. 5. Dan. ii. 38. vii. 17. Matt. xiii. 38, 39. xxvi. 26, 27. Luke viii. 11.) Now in all these instances, doth not is import typifies, signifies, represents? Why therefore should it not do so in the like proposition, This Rock is Christ? Or what one instance can Mr. Clerc produce, that any thing was ever said to be another thing, because what might be said of it in a carnal sense, might in a spiritual sense be said of the other? And is it not sufficient prejudice against this παρερμηνεία, or uncouth interpretation, that it hath no parallel example? Whereas our exposition is confirmed from numerous examples of like nature.

[4] Ver. 6. Τύποι ἡμῶν, Our examples.] The examples he here puts (saith Theodoret) exactly answer to the sins of the Corinthians; for, as the Jews lusted to eat flesh, so the Corinthians lusted to eat things offered to idols, when they had other meat provided plentifully by God for them: for the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof, (ver. 28.)

[5] Ver. 7. Ἐκάθισεν ὁ λαὸς φαγεῖν, &c. The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play.] When the heathens had offered upon the altar, and consumed that part which belonged to the god they worshipped, they banqueted in the idol-temple upon the remains, and so did Epulis accumbere divûm, as Virgil * speaks, at long tables prepared for that purpose, whence this is by the apostle called partaking of the tables of devils; and used very appositely, say the fathers, to convince the Corinthians, that, by eating things offered to the idols in the idol-temple, they must be guilty of heathenish idolatry.

[6] Rose up to play.] Here almost all the critics observe, that παίζειν, to play, bears an impure sense, importing their fornication with one another; as when we say, such a one hath played the whore; but this criticism seems here to be without foundation: for (1.) the Scripture often mentions their idolatry, but never charges them with whoredom, then committed when they made the golden calf; all that God himself charges upon them is, that they had made them a molten calf, and had worshipped and sacrificed to it, and said, These be thy gods, Exod. xxxii. 8. 35. Nehem. ix. 18. Psal. cvi. 19, 20. Acts vii. 41. (2.) The apostle speaks of whoredom in the verse following as a distinct sin, and therefore cannot reasonably be supposed to charge them with it here. (3.) The exposition of the ancients, that they rose up to dance before the calf, is confirmed by these words, And when Moses saw the calf, and the dancing, he was wroth. (Exod. xxii. 19.) And because this was done after the manner of the heathens,† and was one of the rites by which they honoured their gods, the apostle useth it as a confirmation of their idolatry. And this is all the fathers seem to mean by saying, that to play, is used ἀντὶ τοῦ εἰδωλολατρεύειν, for committing idolatry; and the Jerusalem Targum, when it saith, they did ludere cultu peregrino, play after the heathen manner.

[7] Ver. 8. Μηδὲ πορνεύωμεν, Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed.] How prone the Christians of the church of Corinth were to this sin, which made the heathen Corinth infamous to a proverb, we learn from these words of the apostle, I fear, when I come, I shall bewail many who have sinned already, and have not repented of the uncleanness, and fornication, and lasciviousness, which they committed, 2 Cor. xii. 21. (See 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17. v. 11. vi. 9. 13. 15, 16.)

[8] Εἰκοσιτρεῖς χιλιάδες, Three-and-twenty thousand.] The number of the slain was four-and-twenty thousand, (Numb. xxv. 9.) and so Œcumenius saith some ancient copies read here; but of this number one thousand was slain by the judges, and that probably the day before the plague; three-and-twenty thousand by the immediate hand of God. Now the design of the apostle here, is only to mention them who fell in one day by the hand of God. (See Bochart. Hieroz. lib. ii. cap. 34.)

[9] Ver. 9. Τὸν Χριστὸν, Christ.] This reading ought not to be questioned, for we find it not only in Hilary the deacon, St. Chrysóstom, Œcumenius, Theophylact, but in Irenæus.* Hence Primasius of old proved the Divinity of Christ, as being that God whom they tempted, (Psal. cvi. 14.) and others his pre-existence before the birth of the blessed Virgin, against the Socinians. That the apostle here cannot speak, as Crellius contends, of Moses, is plain:

First, Because, though the name of Jesus be once given to Joshua (Heb. iv. 8.) in the New Testament, as being the true import of his name, and the translation of it by the Septuagint, yet is the name of Christ never given to Moses, nor doth it bear any affinity with his name. Nor,

Secondly, Is Moses ever called Christ in the Old Testament. For though Crellius contends that name is given him in these words of Habakkuk, (iii. 13.) Thou wentest forth for the salvation of thy people with thy Christ; yet it is evident that this is spoken of God's going forth with Joshua, by the captain of the Lord's host (who is described, Josh. v. 14, 15. and so honoured by Joshua, as to leave no place of doubting that he was a Divine person); or, ver. 11. the prophet saith, The sun and moon stood still, as they did only in the time of Joshua, (x. 12.) and ver. 12. Thou didst march through the land in indignation, thou didst thrash the heathens in anger, as he did by Joshua; and then follow the words cited. 2. This appears farther from the words tempt and tempted, which, both in the Old and New Testament, signify distrusting the power or the will of God to do what he had given those who tempted him sufficient evidence he was able and willing to perform. (See this proved, note on Matt. iv. 7.) Now thus they did not tempt Moses, (Numb. xi. 6.) but God, by distrusting his power to give them bread and water in the wilderness, (ver. 5.)

Their second answer therefore is, That there being no accusative case expressed after the words καθὼς καί τινες αὐτῶν ἐπείρασαν, as some of them tempted, they may as well add God, as we add him. But,

1. This exposition must ascribe that Divine power to Christ, which belonged unto him they tempted in the wilderness, by virtue of the preceding argument, and also render it as wicked and as dreadful to tempt Christ now, as it was to tempt God then; and so by consequence it must ascribe to him that Divine nature, from which a Divine power is inseparable.

2. They have not yet produced one instance, where the person spoken of in reference to the same action, in the same instance, is thus changed. Crellius, indeed, who never wants a shift, such as it is, brings his instance from ver. 6. viz. These things were spoken, that we might not be lusters after evil things, as they also lusted: but as here is the fallacy of a transition, εἰς ἄλλο γένος, from things to persons; so is there nothing said, ver. 6. to signify that the evil things forbid to the Corinthians, to be the subject of their lusts, were to be quails or flesh, as in the Jews they were, but only that they were, for the kind, evil, as theirs also were.

[10] Ver. 10. Ὑπὸ τοῦ ὀλοθρεύτου, Of the destroyer.] i. e. By a plague sent by the hand of Samuel, the angel of death, called ὀλοθρεύων, the destroyer, Wisd. xviii. 25. Heb. xi. 28. and him that had the power of death, Heb. ii. 14. Now the Corinthians murmured, saith Theodoret, because some of them had received only inferior gifts; say others, by reason of the persecutions they suffered for the Christian faith.

[11] Ver. 11. Τὰ τέλη τῶν αἰώνων, The end of the ages.] This phrase either signifies the end of the Jewish age, as if the apostle did intend to say, These things, which happened in the beginning of the Jewish age, were recorded for caution and example to us, who are come to the conclusion of it; or the last of the ages of the world, i. e. the Christian age; for the Jews, according to the tradition of Elias, divide the duration of the world into three ages: the age before the law, the age of the law, and the age after the law, or that of the Messiah. (Talmud. in Sanhedr. cap. Chelek.)

[12] Ver. 13. Ὃς οὐκ ἐάσει ὑμᾶς, Who will not suffer you,] i. e. Any of you, who do what in you lies to arm yourselves against them, to be tempted above what you are able; this therefore ought not to be restrained to the elect: for the preceding words, no temptation hath happened to you, are spoken to all the members of the church of Corinth; and God hath doubtless engaged to all that enter into covenant with him, to enable them to perform the condition of that covenant; since a covenant upon an impossible condition, he knows cannot be performed; and all are bound to pray in faith, that God would not suffer them to be tempted above what they are able, by his strength, to bear.

[13] Ver. 16. Τὸ ποτήριον τῆς εὐλογίας, The cup of blessing.] The paschal cup being styled by the Jews the cup of blessing, because they sanctified it, i. e. they gave thanks for it in these words, Blessed be thou, O Lord our God, the King of the world, who hast created the fruit of the vine; and being also styled the cup of blessing of the table, it cannot reasonably be doubted, that the eucharistical cup was so called for the same reason, and that it was sanctified or consecrated by thanksgiving to God for it.

[14] Κοινωνία, The communion.] This word, communion, hath two significations: (1.) when the subject spoken of may be distributed into parts, so that each man may have a share of it, it denotes a distribution and communication of those parts to the community, or body mentioned. Thus, in the case of alms, seeing there is a distribution of our substance to those that want, this is in Scripture styled κοινωνία, and is sometimes rendered contribution, (Rom. xv. 26.) sometimes distribution; (i. 9. 13. Heb. xiii. 16.) and since there were διαιρέσεις divisions and diversities of gifts, ministrations and operations vouchsafed to the church; all which the Holy Spirit wrought, dividing to every member of it severally as he would; (2 Cor. xii. 11.) the giving these gifts and several operations to them, is called the communion of the Spirit, 2 Cor. xiii. 13. Phil. ii. 1. Thus, because one consecrated loaf was anciently distributed among all the communicants, and they all drank their share of the same cup of blessing, therefore the bread thus broken and shared out, may be said to be the communion or communication of the body of Christ, as being the communication of that bread which represented his broken body; and the cup they severally drank of, may be styled the communication of the blood of Christ, as being the communication of that wine which represented his blood shed: and to this import lead the following words, because the bread or loaf is one of which we all partake, we being many are one body, for we are all partakers of one loaf, according to the old proverbial expression, σύσσιτοι καὶ σύσσωμοι.

But where the subject mentioned is not capable of such division, or distribution, but every one is to have the whole, or the same with another, it imports a fellowship and communion in the same thing; in which sense we are said to be called by God, εἰς κοινωνίαν to the fellowship of his Son, 1 Cor. i. 9. to have κοινωνίαν a fellowship in his sufferings; to have κονωνίαν communion with God the Father, and the Son, 1 John i. 5. and, in the apostle's symbol, to believe the communion of saints: and in this import of the word the sense runs thus, Do we not, by partaking of this bread and wine, consecrated in memorial of Christ giving his body broken, and his blood shed for us, hold communion, or declare our fellowship, with Christ? Both these senses seem agreeable to the scope of the apostle, and the first infers the second.

[15] Ver. 17. Ὅτι εἷς ἄρτος, ἓν σῶμα οἱ πολλοί ἐσμεν, Because the bread is one, we being many are one body.] These words, the bread which we break, the loaf or bread is one, and we all partake of one loaf, and therefore are one body, shew how grossly the church of Rome hath varied from Christ's institution, in distributing to the communicants severally an unbroken wafer, so that they neither are partakers of one bread, or loaf, or of bread broken, as the custom both of Jews and Christians was to do. It also deserves to be noted from the testimonies of Jamblichus* and Laertius,† that anciently this was a token of friendship; and that Pythagoras forbade his scholars ἄρτον καταγνύειν to break their bread, because that was not to be broken which made friendship.

[16] Ver. 18. Κοινωνοὶ τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου, Partakers of the altar.] i. e. Do they not by partaking of the gift consecrated by the altar, and of which one part is consumed upon it, partake with the altar, and own that they communicate with and worship that God, at whose altar or table the meat was offered in honour of him? (Mal. i. 7.) For as swearing by the altar, is swearing also by him whose altar it is, (Matt. xxiii. 20.) so, having communion with the altar, is having communion with him whose altar it is. To illustrate this let it be noted, (1.) that, in these שלמים or peace-offerings, there was a threefold participation; 1. God had his part offered him upon his altar, viz. the blood and the entrails; part was given to the priest, viz. the breast and shoulder; and part to the offerer, viz. the skin and the rest of the flesh; and this in token, say the Jews, of friendship and communion of the party offering them, with God and the priest: and he, by eating the remainder, and feasting on it in the temple, or the holy city, became partaker with the altar, or with God, who had received his share upon the altar. Note, (2.) that these peace-offerings were offered either by way of thanksgiving for mercies obtained, or by way of vow or of free devotion; for this division of peace-offerings, we find, Lev. vii. Moreover, these being offered to the God of Israel, signified the owning him as that God from whom they received and expected all their mercies.

[17] Ver. 20. Δαιμονίοις, To devils.] Here Mr. Clerc saith, the word δαιμόνιοι doth not necessarily signify devils or evil spirits; for the heathens did not always sacrifice to evil spirits, if we consider what were their true thoughts. But the wisdom of God did not think fit to consider the speculations of some of their philosophers; but what was indeed their practice, and what the objects and directors of their worship were, and who was gratified by it: they pretended to own a supreme Deity; but the spirits which spake in the oracles they consulted, which moved their idols, and resided in them, and set up and promoted their whole idolatrous worship, were doubtless evil spirits; and so the primitive Christians engaged to force them to confess themselves to be,* even before them who paid homage to them. The pulling down of this idolatrous worship is, in our Saviour's language, the casting out of the prince of this world, John xii. 31. and xvi. 11. the converting the gentiles from this idolatry to the worship of the true God, is, the turning them from the power of Satan unto God, Acts xxvi. 18. the delivering them from the power of darkness, Col. i. 13. who before walked according to the prince of the power of darkness; Eph. ii. 2. and were led captive by Satan at his will, 2 Tim. ii. 26. The Psalmist, according to the Septuagint, saith, ὅτι πάντες οἱ θεοὶ ἐθνῶν δαιμόνια, that all the gods of the heathens are devils: (Psal. xcvi. 5.) and of the Jews who sacrificed to them it is said, they sacrificed to devils, and not to God, leshaddem, to evil, wasting, and destroying spirits. The Jews said the same of the gentiles, that they were θύσαντες δαιμονίοις sacrificing to devils and not to God, Baruch iv. 7. and so they are also styled, 2 Chron. xi. 15. Rev. ix. 20.: and so all Christians ever did expound this place, and with good reason, it being absurd to think St. Paul is here dissuading Christians from having fellowship with good angels.

[18] Ver. 21. Καὶ τραπέζης δαιμονίων, And of the table of devils.] This being the design of the apostle, to shew that the Corinthians could not partake of the idol-sacrifices in the idol-temples without being κοινωνοὶ τῶν δαιμονίων, men who held communion with devils; and the proof of this being taken from the practice of Christians in partaking of the eucharist, and of the Jews in partaking of sacrifices offered at the altar; it is evident that the sixteenth verse must be interpreted suitably to this design, and so as to be a fit medium to prove this conclusion. It is therefore evident,

First, That κοινωνία, communion, cannot here signify the real and substantial communication of the body and blood of Christ, since that sense renders the apostle's argument infirm: for how doth it hence follow, that because Christians eat substantially the body, and drink the blood, of Christ, therefore they who eat of the idol-sacrifices are guilty of idolatry, and hold communion with devils. Moreover, the eating of things offered to idols, could not in this sense make them that did it communicators of the devils, for surely they did not eat of the substance of the devils: this therefore cannot be the import of the words. Nor,

Secondly, Can the sense of them be to this effect: The cup and bread communicate to us the spiritual effects of Christ's broken body, or his blood shed for us; though this be in itself a certain truth. For,

1. These spiritual effects cannot be shared among believers, so that every one shall have a part of them only; but the same benefits are wholly communicated to every due receiver. (See note on ver. 16.)

2. The apostle here attempts to prove, not that the Corinthians, by eating things offered to idols in the idol-temple, received any spiritual influence from devils, but only that, by that action, they did partake of what was offered to them, and was a solemn part of their religious worship, as the eating these sacrifices was still reputed; so that by it they must own themselves the worshippers of idols, and then, by parity of reason, he must, by the example of the eucharist, intend to prove, not that the Christian did partake of the spiritual effects of our Lord's passion, but that he did partake of what was consecrated in honour of him, and received as a solemn act of religious worship and communion with him. And this appears yet farther from the words which the apostle useth, as the close of this argument, and as the thing which answers to the two preceding instances: for they do not run thus, By the things which the gentiles offer they receive spiritual influences from evil spirits; but thus, This I say, to complete this argument, and to render the sacrifice offered to idols parallel to those of Christians and of Jews; that as these are offered to the honour of Christ and of the God of Israel, so the things which the gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils, and I would not that ye should be partakers with devils; viz. by feasting of the sacrifices thus offered to them, and of which the devils had a part: and that it was by the act of eating and drinking of these idol-sacrifices, that they became partakers of the cup and table of devils, and thereby guilty of idolatry, as the fathers declare,* so is it evident from these words,

* "Quicquid dæmonum coitis, victi dolore, quid sunt eloquuntur, ipsis testibus esse eos dæmones de se verum confitentibus credite." Minotius, p. 31. Tertull. Apol. cap. 23. Cyp. ad Don. 4. de Van. Idol. p. 14.

* "Quæ autem animam simul et corpus polluunt: participare dæmonum mensæ, hoc est, immolata degustare, et si quid aliud est quod dæmonibus oblatum est." Clem. lib. iv. §. 36.

ye cannot drink of the cup of the Lord, and of the cup of devils; ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and the table of devils; it was therefore by these actions that they held communion with them, and committed idolatry: the eating of the feast made of things offered to idols in the idol-temple being as much a federal rite, as was the eating peace-offerings of the Jews, eaten in the temple, or the holy city, or the sacramental bread eaten in the church by Christians, whence the oblations made there were styled σπονδαὶ ἐν τιμῇ δαιμόνων, oblations in honour of our demons.

[19] Ver. 27. Πᾶν τὸ παρατιθέμενον ὑμῖν ἐσθίετε, Whatsoever is set before you, eat.] The apostle had before discoursed of eating things offered to idols in the idol-temple, and shewed, (1.) the scandal it might give to the weak gentile Christian; and (2.) that it was indeed an idolatrous action: here he begins his discourse of eating at all things offered to idols, with respect chiefly to the weak Jewish convert. And (1.) whereas by their canons * an idol, and all things appertaining to it, and whatever was offered to it, were wholly forbidden, the rabbins pronouncing the eating, or possessing any thing of it forbidden, in these words, Thou shalt not bring an abomination into thine house; (Deut. vii. 26.) the apostle relieves the conscience of the Christian in this case, letting him know that he might eat these things, when sold in shambles, without scruple of conscience, ver. 25. (2.) Whereas their canons teach, that † if a heathen make a banquet for his son or daughter, a Jew is forbidden to eat of his meat, because he is forbidden, if called, to eat of his sacrifice; (Exod. xxxiv. 15.) the apostle exempts the conscience of the Christian from this obligation also, ver. 27.

[20] Ver. 30. Τί βλασφημοῦμαι; Why am I evil spoken of?] This is the exposition of all the Greek scholiasts, and it is confirmed by the parallel place, Let not your good be evil spoken of, Rom. xiv. 16. i. e. let not your faith, or the liberty you take by reason of it, be used so as to minister occasion to others to speak evil of that faith, as the Jews did of Christianity upon occasion of this liberty; for they held the eating of things offered to idols to be idolatry,‡ and pronounced all idolaters to be apostates from the law and the prophets: and this was one of their great objections against Christians, that they did eat things offered to idols, and thought not themselves defiled by doing so; though in truth this was done chiefly by the heretics of those times, the Nicolaitans,§ the gnostics,‖ and the followers of Basilides; but the true Christians (saith Justin Martyr¶) will rather suffer death than be guilty of idolatry, or eating things offered to idols.

[21] Ver. 31. Πάντα εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ ποιεῖτε, Do all to the glory of God.] In things capable of honouring God positively, or proper to give glory to him, have always a general intention of glorifying God in the doing of them, that in the virtue of that intention you may proceed to particular actions.

In things not capable of honouring God positively, be careful that you act so, that the name of God be not blasphemed, or his doctrine evil thought or evil spoken of, by reason of your actions: yea, do and abstain from all things so, as to satisfy your own conscience, and discover to others, that the honour of God and the advancement of the interests of his kingdom, are much dearer to you than any gratifications of your carnal appetites, or any temporal concern.

[22] Ver. 32. No offence:] As, by thus eating things offered to idols in the idol-temple, or elsewhere, being thus admonished of it, (ver. 28.) you are like to do: for the Jews will be apt hence to conclude, that Christianity renders you enemies to the law and the prophets; the gentiles, that your professed abhorrence of idols is not real, and that the practice, in which you comply with them, is not sinful; and the weak Christian will be tempted, by your example, to eat these things with conscience of the idol, (viii. 7.) or to fly off from the Christian faith.

CHAP. XI.

BE ye (therefore) followers of me (in this condescension for the good of others), as I also am of Christ (in it, Rom. xv. 2, 3. Gal. vi. 2. Phil. ii. 5, 6. 2 Cor. viii. 9.)

2. Now I praise you, brethren, that you remember me in all things (I have taught you), [1] and keep the ordinances (Gr. traditions), as I delivered them to you.

3. But (I must farther advertise you of some things which I had no occasion, when present, to take notice of, and therefore) I would have you know, that the head of every man is Christ; and the head of the woman is the man; and [2] the head of Christ is God: (and so, as Christ, as mediator, acts in subordination to the Father, so must the woman act in subordination to the man.)

4. Every man (therefore) praying or prophesying [3] (in the church), having his head covered, dishonoureth [4] his head (Christ, as acting unsuitably to that relation which he bears to God and Christ; for man ought not to cover his head, because he is the image and glory of God, ver. 17.)

5. But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth [5] with her head uncovered dishonoureth (the man) her head (whose glory she is, as being put in subjection to him): for that is even all one as if she were shaven (and so had removed the token of subjection to the man which nature gave her).

6. For if the woman be not covered, let her also be shorn: but if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be covered. (See note on ver. 5.)

7. For a man indeed ought not to cover his head (as a sign of subjection), forasmuch as he is [6] the image and glory of God (as having the government of the world committed by God to him): but the woman (ought to cover her head, forasmuch as she) is the glory of the man (as being taken from, made for, and put into subjection to him).

8. For the man is not of the woman; but the woman of the man.

9. Neither was the man created for the woman; but the woman for the man.

11. Nevertheless, neither is the man without the woman, nor the woman without the man, in the (wisdom of the) Lord (ordaining that one should come out of the other).

12. For as the woman is (taken out) of the man, even so is the man also (propagated) by the woman; but all (these) things (are) of God (who made woman out of the man, and by his benediction increaseth men by the woman).

13. Judge in yourselves: is it comely that a woman pray (publicly) to God uncovered (when God himself hath given her a covering by nature, to intimate to her that she should be veiled)?

14. [8] Doth not even nature itself (which hath made man the image and glory of God, created him before the woman, and given him dominion over her,) teach you, that, if a man have long hair (the covering and token of subjection in the other sex), it is a shame to him? (See note on ver. 5.)

15. But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her (she being fitted by it to represent the condition of her sex): for her hair is given her for a covering (i. e. in token of subjection to her husband).

16. But if (after what hath been thus said) any man seem (still) to be contentious, (I shall add only this, that) we have no such custom, [9] neither the churches of God, (it being only customary in the assemblies of heathens for women to pay their devotions to the gods thus. See note on ver. 5.)

17. Now in this (other thing) that I (am about to) declare unto you I praise you not, (viz.) that you come together (so as is) not for the better, but for the worse.

18. For first of all, when you come together in the church, I hear that there be [10] divisions (Gr. schisms) among you; and I partly believe it (or, I believe it true κατὰ μέρος τι, of some part of you).

19. [11] For (according to our Lord's saying, Matt. xviii. 7.) there must be also heresies (or sects) among you (the flesh, the world, and the devil, tempting to it, and the wisdom of God permitting it), that they who are approved (of him) may be made manifest among you.

20. When you come together therefore (thus) into one place, this is not (acting as if you came) to eat the Lord's supper (the feast of Christian charity and communion).

21. For in (your way of) eating [12] every one taketh before (the) other his own supper, (not tarrying for, or regarding, others, ver. 23.) and (so it falls out, that) one (who had nothing to bring) is (still) hungry, [13] and another (with his plenty) is drunken.

22. What! have ye not houses to eat and to drink in? (if need be before you come, ver. 34.) or despise ye (those poor Christians who are members of) the church of God (as well as you), and (put to) shame them that have not (what to eat or drink)? What shall I say to you? shall I praise you in doing this? I praise you not.

23. (To come together thus, I say, is not to come as they ought to do, who assemble to eat the Lord's supper;) for I have received of the Lord that which also I (as I received) delivered unto you, That the Lord Jesus the same night in which he was betrayed [14] took bread:

24. And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said (to them all), [15] Take, eat: this is my body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me (giving my body to be broken for you all).

25. After the same manner he took [16] the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup (i. e. the wine contained in it) is the (memorial of the) new testament (or covenant ratified) in my blood: this do ye, as often as you drink it, in remembrance of me (confirming this covenant with my blood).

26. For as often as you eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do [17] shew (by this memorial of it) the Lord's death till he come (to judgment).

27. Wherefore whosoever shall eat this bread, and (or) [18] drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily (as they must do who, by this practice, thwart the great design of this institution, which was to shew his equal love to all to whom he equally gave these elements, and to oblige us to live in continual remembrance of it), shall be guilty of (violating the sacrament of) the body and blood of the Lord.

28. But [19] let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup.

29. For he that eateth and drinketh [20] unworthily (as they who make those divisions and distinctions, and commit these disorders, when they come together to eat the Lord's supper do), eateth and drinketh [21] damnation (Gr. judgment) to himself, not discerning the Lord's body, (to be given as an indication of his equal kindness to all his members, without any difference or distinction, and as a symbol of their mutual communion with one another, x. 16, 17.)

30. For this cause (the not discerning the Lord's body, it is, that) many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep.

31. For if we would (thus) judge (and discern) ourselves, we should not be judged (or, thus punished by God).

32. But when (neglecting this) we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world (but awakened by those chastisements to reform those evil practices which render us obnoxious to condemnation).

33. Wherefore, my brethren (that this miscarriage may be rectified), when ye come together to eat (the Lord's supper), tarry one for another (that ye may all eat of that and your love-feasts together).

34. And if any man (pretend to do this out of) hunger, let him eat at home (before he come); that ye come not together to condemnation. And the rest will I set in order when I come (or, as for the other things relating to this ordinance, or your letter, I will set them in order when I come).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XI.

[1] Ver. 2. Ὅτι καθὼς παρέδωκα ὑμῖν, τὰς παραδόσεις κατέχετε, That you keep the traditions, as I delivered them to you.] This commendation must be restrained to the generality, or sounder part of the church of Corinth, or must be understood as such general expressions used to be, ὡς ἐπὶ τὸ πολὺ, as for the most part, or excepting those few things in which afterward I find reason to complain of your neglect, xv. 3. and here, ver. 23.

Vain is the note of Esthius on this text, that it makes plainly for unwritten traditions: for (1.) the word tradition is common to things written and unwritten, to things delivered by word and by epistle; (2 Thess. ii. 15.) the whole Christian faith is a tradition; (Jude 3.) the doctrine of Christ's death, burial, and resurrection, is a tradition; παρέδωκα γὰρ, for I delivered to you these doctrines, saith St. Paul; (1 Cor. xv. 13.) and will the Romanists say, that these things are not written in the New Testament? (2.) To prove traditions extra-scriptural, it is not sufficient to cite a passage out of Scripture, speaking of traditions not then written by one apostle; but it must be proved that these traditions were neither then, when mentioned, in writing, nor afterward committed to writing by himself, or any other inspired person. (3.) The traditions mentioned here, and 2 Thess. ii. 15. were traditions immediately delivered to those churches from the mouth of an apostle; and, when the Romanists can make this good from like authentic testimony of any of their fardle of traditions, we shall be ready to receive them.

[2] Ver. 3. Κεφαλὴ δὲ Χριστοῦ ὁ Θεὸς, And the head of Christ is God.] We are hence taught (saith Schlictingius) that the head of Christ is God; whereas the most high God can have no head above him, so that Christ, who hath this head above him, cannot be most high.

Ans. To this some of the fathers answer, That God is here said to be the head of Christ, as being the Father* of the Son, and so the cause of him; but yet, as the woman is of the same nature with the man who is her head, so is Christ of the same nature with God the Father: they also add, that the word head is here used as a note of principality,† or causalty in the Father, but not of subjection in the Son, which wholly enervates the argument of Crellius from this place. And, though the schools seem not to allow of this language, yet it was used by Irenæus in these words, The Father is above all things, and he is the head of Christ; the Word is through all things, and he is the head of the church.‡

Others answer, That the Father is here styled the head of Christ, considered as Mediator, in which relation he received his kingdom and dominion from him, (John xvii. 2. 1 Cor. xv. 27. Heb. ii. 8.) and exercises it wholly to his glory: (Phil. ii. 9—11.) in which sense the Father may be styled his head, because he doth all things according to his Father's will, to his glory, and by authority derived from him: and this interpretation is confirmed from these words, The head of every man is Christ; he being man's head by virtue of the power and dominion given him over all flesh, (xv. 27. John xvii. 2. Eph. i. 19. 22.) and that power being given to the man Christ Jesus.

[3] Ver. 4. In the church.] For that the apostle speaks not of prophesying at home, as Mr. Clerc imagines, but in the church, is evident from the apostle's argument, ver. 16. against this practice, in these words, We have no such custom, neither the churches of God. His argument to the contrary is answered in the note on ver. 6.

[4] Τὴν κεφαλὴν αὐτοῦ, His head.] That is, *Christ; for (1.) he is the head of the man, ver. 3. (2.) This seemeth most agreeable to the reason assigned, why he should be uncovered when he doth service in the church, viz. because he is the image, and the glory of God. And, (3.) did he dishonour his own head by covering it, he ought never to be covered; whereas if this only respects his head, Christ, whom he represents in praying and prophesying in the church, it is sufficient that he is uncovered, when he thus acteth as his minister. Lastly, The head the woman dishonoureth, is the man, styled her head; and so the head the man dishonoureth is Christ, styled his head, ver. 3.

[5] Ver. 5. Κατὰ κεφαλῆς ἔχων, With his head covered, ἀκατακαλύπτῳ τῇ κεφαλῇ, with her head uncovered.] For explication of these words, let it be noted from Theodoret,† That the men of Corinth, according to the custom of the Greeks, both wore long hair, and prayed to God with their heads covered in the public assemblies. So also, saith Plutarch,‡ did the Romans; so, saith Lightfoot,§ did the Jews; so did, saith Servius,‖ all that sacrificed to any god excepting Saturn. But the heathen woman paid her devotion to the gods, "resoluta comas, seu capillos," with her hair loose and hanging down; or, in the language of the poets, Crine jacente, aut demisso. Note,

Secondly, That the Jews judged it τὸ αἰσχρὸν, a shameful and indecent thing for a woman to be shaved, and permitted this only in the case of whoredom,¶ as a token of their shame. And among the heathens it was "indicium ultimi luctûs," a token of the highest grief.—It is customary (saith Plutarch ) for men to be shorn, and for women to wear long hair; and therefore, in times of mourning, the men let their hair grow, and the women are shaved, this being contrary to custom among the Greeks and Romans. It was also customary for the Jewish women to go veiled.†† Note,

Thirdly, That the apostle doth not here approve of the woman's praying or prophesying in the church, as is evident from 1 Cor. xiv. 34. 1 Tim. ii. 11, 12. though he here says nothing to the contrary, as intending to rectify that disorder, when he spoke of other disorders in the case of prophesying, xiv. 34.

[6] Ver. 7. Εἰκὼν καὶ δόξα Θεοῦ, The image and glory of God.] True here is the note of Theodoret, that man is here styled the image and glory of God, neither as to his body, nor as to his soul; for, in respect of the soul, the woman is equally the glory of God, as to spirituality and immortality, and so is equally said to be made after his image, Gen. ii. 27. but κατὰ μόνον τὸ ἀρχικὸν, only as to rule and government, which is the proper glory of a man, according to the Psalmist's words, Thou hast crowned him δόξῃ καὶ τιμῇ with glory and honour, and hast set him over the work of thy hands, and hast put all things in subjection under his feet. (Psal. viii. 5, 6.)

[7] Ver. 10. Ἐξουσίαν ἔχειν ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς, διὰ τοὺς ἀγγέλους, A veil upon her head, because of the angels.] Here let it be noted, (1.) that all the ancient interpreters agree in this, that ἐξουσία, which we render power, doth signify a veil or covering, which, being put over her head, compels her to hang down her eyelids; and it is here, say they, called power, as being τῆς τοῦ ἀνδρὸς ἐξουσίας καὶ κυριότητος ἐνδεικτικὸν, the token of the power and dominion of the man over her. Note,

Secondly, That the reading διὰ τῆς ἀγγελίας, by reason of her revelations, as Mr. Clerc doth, instead of διὰ τοὺς ἀγγέλους, without consent of any copy or version, is not to be endured. Moreover, διὰ τῆς ἀγγελίας signifies barely by message, not by reason of her revelations, that being properly in Greek διὰ τῆς ἀγγελίας τῆς παρ' αὐτῆς.

Thirdly, That evil angels are absolutely styled angels, in these words of this Epistle, Know ye not that ye shall judge angels? 1 Cor. vi. 3. and elsewhere, the angels that sinned, 2 Pet. ii. 4. or, that kept not their first station, Jude 6. Note,

Fourthly, That among the nine maledictions of the woman, which the Jews reckon up, this is one, That she is to have "caput velatum instar lugentis,"* her head covered like one that mourneth, and this, they say, she is to wear, not so much as a token of subjection, as of shame; whence Philo calls the τὸ ἐπίκρανον, † cover of the woman's head, τὸ τῆς αἰδοῦς σύμβολον, the symbol of her shame; and this shame, say they, is due to her, because she brought the first sin into the world. ‡—It is with her (say they) as when one transgresseth and is ashamed, and therefore she comes forth with her head covered.—She ought (saith Tertullian §) by her habit to resemble Eve, a mourner and a penitent, "ob ignominiam primi delicti," for the shame of the first sin: hence he often interprets this text of evil angels. ‖

Moreover, in the judgment both of Jews and Christians, the serpent, which deceived Eve, acted by the suggestion of the devil,¶ or of Sammael, whom the Jews style the prince of devils. That therefore these words may be interpreted as in the paraphrase, is evident, not only from those observations, but especially from a place parallel to this, Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection. For I suffer not a woman to usurp authority: for Adam was first formed, then Eve; (as here, ver. 8, 9.) and Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression, 1 Tim. ii. 11—13. where the same reason is assigned for her subjection, which I offer for explication of these words.

Others interpret the words thus: The woman ought to act decently in the church, and therefore to be covered, because of the angels, who are present in the assemblies of the saints; it being the opinion, both of Jews* and Christians, that the ministering angels are there present.

[8] Ver. 14. Ἡ οὐδὲ αὐτὴ ἡ φύσις, Doth not even nature itself?] The exposition given in the paraphrase is so natural, and so well founded on the words and argument of the apostle, and so agreeable to the sentiments of all the ancient commentators on the place, that we seem not here to need the industry and learning the critics have so liberally spent upon this place: the apostle here by nature understanding not any inward principle implanted in the heart and reason of a man, but the first rise and constitution which man and woman have received from the God of nature. It is against nature, say the fathers, for a man to wear long hair, for by it he assumes the habit of a woman, καὶ ἄρχειν ταχθεὶς τὸ τῆς ὑποταγῆς σύμβολον παραδέχεται, and being made by God to rule, he takes upon him the symbol of subjection. Of the criticisms upon the word κομᾶν they say not a word.

[9] Ver. 16. Οὐδὲ ἐκκλησίαι τοῦ Θεοῦ, Nor the churches of God.] Hence it is manifest, (1.) that the apostle here cannot be thought to have respect only to the custom of the Greeks, as Mr. Le Clerc imagines, for then why doth he plead the custom of all the churches of God against this practice?

Secondly, Hence note, that in things only respecting decency, and in conforming to which there is no violation of the command of God, the custom of the church should be our rule, it being an argument of pride and a contentious spirit, in matters of so little moment, to be singular, and to create disturbance to the church of God.

[10] Ver. 18. Σχίσματα, Schisms.] Here the word schisms is not used of men separating from the church, but of them coming together in the church, but yet eating the Lord's supper separately, and so as not to join with the whole assembly in that ordinance: so the word also is used i. 10. not of a separation from the unity of the catholic church (saith Esthius), but of sects and divisions in the church.

[11] Ver. 19. Δεῖ γὰρ αἱρέσεις εἶναι, For there must be heresies, &c.] This necessity of heresies is not absolute, or of God's making, but only on supposition of the pride and vain-glory, strife, envyings, and contentions, which were already in the church of Corinth, (1 Cor. iii. 3.) and God's permission that men, so affected, should act according to the corrupt affections and dispositions of their hearts; as the necessity of diseases in the body arises from men's intemperance. Nor is the reason here assigned of them properly causal, as if the wisdom of God designed there should be heresies for this end, that they who were approved of him might be made manifest, but rather eventual;† as if the apostle had said, Whence it will come to pass, that they who are approved will be made manifest.

[12] Ver. 21. Ἕκαστος τὸ ἴδιον δεῖπνον προλαμβάνει, Every one takes before his own supper.] It is the opinion of Dr. Lightfoot, that the apostle speaks not here of the agapæ, or love-feasts, which accompanied the eucharist, as the tradition of the ancient church supposed; but of the paschal supper, which these Judaizers did eat before the eucharist, as thinking that the eucharist, which our Lord instituted after that supper, was only an appendix of it; and that it was not instituted in commemoration of the death of Christ, but as a new form of their commemoration of their deliverance out of Egypt: and that on this account the apostle here repeats the institution of that sacrament by our Lord, and so oft tells them, that Christ appointed this supper for the commemoration of his death, and that we might shew it forth till he comes; and charges them with not discerning it to be the Lord's body, (ver. 29.) But he seems to be mistaken in both these conjectures. For,

First, It is very unlikely they should mistake the Lord's supper, celebrated then every week at least, for that paschal supper, which was only to be celebrated once a year, and was then rather to be celebrated at home, in every man's family, than in the church; and which, according to the Jewish canons, could not be observed at all in Corinth, or out of Judea, whilst the temple stood.

Secondly, Those words of the apostle in the preceding chapter, viz. The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? and those that follow, Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils; ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the table of devils, do plainly shew that the apostle there supposes, they well knew that in that supper they were partakers of the cup and table of the Lord, and had communion with his body and blood.

Dr. Lightfoot adds, That those words one is hungry, and another is drunken, refer not to the poor and the rich, but to the gentile who came fasting to the Lord's supper; whereas the Judaizing Christian, according to his custom, drank freely at his paschal supper; and he concludes, that the apostle doth not here reprehend their manner of coming to these suppers, but that he reprehends them for the very use of them. But here again he seems much mistaken. For,

First, It is evident the apostle reprehends them not for the supper itself, i. e. the eating and the drinking, but because they did προλαμβάνειν take their meat and their drink before others, not staying till they came, (ver. 21. 33.) Hence, for a remedy for this disorder, he saith not, Abstain from these suppers, but only, when ye come together, tarry one for another.

Secondly, That the hungry here were the gentile converts, who chose to eat the eucharist fasting, is very improbable, not only because it was then generally received at night, but because the apostle, both here and ver. 34. allows all to eat and drink before they come, not taking notice of any that scrupled the doing this. Moreover, the οἱ μὴ ἔχοντες, the hungry here, are not men who have no houses, but who have nothing to eat or drink: for they were put to shame by this, that they had nothing to eat or drink, as others had, nor were thought worthy to partake with them that had, in the assembly of which they were a part; it being not the place where they assembled, which is called the church of God, but the persons who assembled; for by the same action was the church despised, and they that had nothing put to shame: now it is not easy to conceive how, by this separate meeting in a church, they should despise a church, whereas, by denying their poor brethren any share in their banquet, they visibly despised them.

And with that agrees the note of St. Chrysostom, on the place, that an assembly is called, οὐχ ἵνα διῃρημένοι ὦσι, οἱ συνελθόντες, ἀλλ' ἵνα οἱ διῃρημένοι, συνημμένοι, not that they who came together might be divided, but that they, who are at home divided, may join together.
